HALL, J. Plaintiff Coghlan brought suit against Weisman Bros., as the contractor, and Salvatore Quartararo, as the owner, to recover a balance unpaid him, as subcontractor, for lathing and plastering a building constructed by Weisman Bros. for said Quartararo. The other plaintiffs joined in bringing a similar action against the same defendants, the Swett-Davenport Lumber Company seeking to recover for lumber furnished the contractor for said building, and Lettich-Fain Company seeking to recover for the plumbing of said building. Weisman Bros. defaulted and never appeared. The actions were consolidated and were tried together as one action. Findings of fact were made and judgments entered for the several plaintiffs as prayed for against the contractors, Weisman Bros., and the amounts thereof adjudged to be a lien against the premises of Quartararo, with the usual decree of foreclosure to satisfy the same. Defendant Quartararo appealed both from the judgment and from the order denying his motion for a new trial, and brought both appeals up on the same record, consisting of the judgment roll and a bill of exceptions settled before the hearing upon the motion. It appears that the notice of intention to move for a new trial was not served upon appellant's codefendants, Weisman Bros., and it is insisted by respondent that it was for that reason properly denied. Inasmuch as we think that the motion was properly denied on its merits, we do not deem it necessary to decide this point.

[1] A large portion of appellant's brief is devoted to discussing matters that can only be considered under the head of insufficiency of the evidence to support the findings; but, as there is no specification in the bill of exceptions of the particulars in which it is claimed that the evidence is insufficient to support the findings, we are precluded from reviewing the sufficiency of the evidence, and must accept the findings of fact made by the court as correct. Section 648, Code Civ. Proc.; Estate of Page, 57 Cal. 238; Snell v. Payne, 115 Cal. 218, 46 Pac. 1069.

The bill of exceptions does show that appellant requested the court to rule that the several plaintiffs had failed to prove their several causes of action, and that said motions were denied. This, however, was before the court had made any findings of fact. The findings of fact were subsequently signed and filed, and the bill of exceptions subsequently settled and used upon the motion for a new trial in no way refers to any of said findings of fact, and much less does it specify any particulars in which the evidence is insufficient to support any of said findings. This is essential before this court can review the sufficiency of the evidence to support the findings, either upon the appeal from the judgment or from the order denying the motion for a new trial. Sections 648 and 659, Code Civ. Proc.; Estate of Page, supra; Snell v. Payne, supra.

[2] Before the commencement of the trial, defendant demanded that the consolidated actions be tried before a jury. This demand was denied, and he then requested that certain issues of fact be submitted to a jury. This was likewise denied. The court did not err in refusing a jury trial, either upon the whole case or upon any special issue. An action to foreclose a mechanic's, subcontractor's, or materialman's lien is a suit in equity, and the defendant, sued simply as the owner of the property against which it is sought to foreclose the lien, is not entitled to a jury trial. Curnow v. Blue Gravel Co., 68 Cal. 262, 9 Pac. 149. In the case at bar the only judgment sought or obtained as against appellant was that of foreclosure of the lien. No personal judgment against appellant was sought or obtained. The action, as against appellant, was similar to an action to foreclose a mortgage, in which action it has been held that a jury trial is properly denied, though the answer present the legal defense of nonexecution of the note and mortgage sued on. Downing v. Le Du, 82 Cal. 471, 23 Pac. 202. It has also been held that the equitable nature of the action to quiet title cannot be changed so as to entitle a defendant to a jury trial, though defendant, being out of possession, file a cross-complaint in ejectment. Angus v. Craven, 132 Cal. 691, 64 Pac. 1091; McNeil v. Morgan, 157 Cal. 373, 108 Pac. 69. From the principles laid down by the above-cited authorities, it is clear that the court did not err in refusing appellant's demand for a jury trial.

[3] Evidence was introduced to the effect that various claimants, including the plaintiffs, had served notices on appellant that they had severally performed labor for and furnished materials to Weisman Bros., the original contractors, to the aggregate amount of about $3,900, and that thereupon appellant objected to plaintiffs' proceeding with the trial, and requested the court to rule that he was "justified in refusing to pay plaintiffs anything until there was an accounting and apportioning among the several claimants." The court refused to so rule, and such ruling is assigned as error. The contracts between appellant and Weisman Bros. were void. There were two contracts. The first was for the erection of a two-story building, and the second for the addition of a third story thereto. Each contract provided that the work should be done in conformity with the plans, drawings, and specifications "which are signed by the parties hereto," etc., and each was for over $1,000. As to the first contract, it appeared that the plans and specifications were not signed, and, as to the second, that "no plans or specifications therein referred to were filed therewith." Both contracts were therefore void (West Coast Lumber Co. v. Knapp, 122 Cal. 79, 54 Pac. 533; Donnelly v. Adams, 115 Cal. 130, 46 Pac. 916; Willamette, etc., Co. v. Los Angeles College Co., 94 Cal. 229, 29 Pac. 629). Consequently plaintiffs were entitled to a lien for the value of the materials and labor furnished and put into the building, without regard to the price named in the original contract between appellant and his contractors or the balance remaining unpaid in the owner's hands. Kellogg v. Howes, 81 Cal. 170, 22 Pac. 509, 6 L. R. A. 588. The court in its ruling, therefore, did not err. What we have said concerning the contracts between appellant and Weisman Bros. being void also disposes of the special defenses set up for the purpose of reducing the amount due from appellant to the contractors. The contracts being void, the plaintiffs were not affected or concerned with the amount due from appellant to his contractors.

[4] In this connection, however, appellant urges that plaintiff Coghlan in his complaint set up a valid and properly filed contract between the owner and the contractor; and insists that he therefore cannot take advantage of the fact that the contract was void for noncompliance with the statute. But the other plaintiffs set up that the contracts were never filed, and the court so found. The actions being consolidated, any of the plaintiffs could tender an issue as to the validity of the contracts, and the finding thereon would bind all the parties to the action. As was said in Union Lumber Co. v. Simon, 150 Cal. 751, 89 Pac. 1077, 1081: "This issue affected the rights of each of the plaintiffs, and its presentation in any of the original complaints became an issue in the consolidated action, and the finding and judgment thereon operated in favor of all the plaintiffs." See, also, Willamette Steam Mills, etc., Co. v. Los Angeles College Co., 94 Cal. 229, 29 Pac. 629.

[5] The point also seems to be made that Coghlan should have sued for the value of his work, and not on the agreed price. But it has been decided that an allegation of the agreed price, both in the claim of lien and in the complaint, is a sufficient prima facie allegation of value, and is sufficient in the absence of a demurrer for uncertainty. Bringham v. Knox, 127 Cal. 40, 44, 59 Pac. 198.

[6] At the close of the testimony introduced on behalf of the Swett-Davenport Lumber Company, appellant requested the court "to rule and decide that said Swett-Davenport Lumber Company had failed in proof of its case, in that the claim of lien filed was not made by said corporation and was insufficient, and that said corporation had not proved the value of the materials or the mill work claimed to have been furnished, and that the law applying the payments made by Weisman Bros. on said account showed that there was nothing due said Swett-Davenport Lumber Company for labor or materials furnished to, or for, or charged to, this building; and also that there was no evidence that said labor and materials were actually used in the construction of this building." This request was refused, and appellant excepted. The claim of lien of said plaintiff purports on its face to be the claim of the Swett-Davenport Lumber Company, a corporation, and is in all respects in proper form. It is signed "Swett-Davenport Lbr. Co. By W. E. Code," and verified by W. E. Code, and was introduced in evidence without objection. The evidence shows that W. E. Code had full charge of the business of the corporation—substantially that he was the general manager thereof. It was competent for him to make and file the claim for the corporation and to verify it. Park & Lacy Co. v. Inter Nos, etc., Co., 147 Cal. 490, 82 Pac. 51; Greig v. Riordan, 99 Cal. 316, 33 Pac. 913. The testimony of Code and Weisman, one of the contractors, fully meets the other objections to the sufficiency of the case made by said plaintiff. The request of appellant should probably be treated as a motion for a nonsuit, though not so denominated in the motion, and as such it was properly denied. Similar motions were made for similar rulings as to the other plaintiffs, but the grounds of the motions were not stated, except generally that the particular plaintiff had failed to prove his case, and that "a corporation as a subcontractor had no lien under the law."

[7] The general statement that plaintiff had failed to prove its case is wholly insufficient as a statement of grounds for nonsuit, and in such case the motion must be denied (Miller v. Luco, 80 Cal. 257, 22 Pac. 195); and the statute gives a lien to subcontractors (Macomber v. Bigelow, 126 Cal. 9, 58 Pac. 312). The other motions were therefore properly denied.

[8] Appellant's contention that the court erred in allowing interest on the amount due the Swett-Davenport Lumber Company prior to the judgment must be sustained. This plaintiffs sold at the market rates, which changed from time to time, and were the subject of proof at the trial. The amount due was unliquidated, and was not capable of being made certain by calculation. It only became certain when fixed by the judgment. Interest in such a case cannot be allowed prior to judgment. Burnett v. Glas, 154 Cal. 249, 97 Pac. 423.

In all other respects the judgment is supported by the findings.

The various objections made that go to the sufficiency of the evidence to support the findings cannot be considered for want of any specification of such insufficiency, as we before pointed out. The only error we find in the record is the one allowing interest before judgment to Swett-Davenport Lumber Company.

The order denying the motion for a new trial is affirmed. The judgment is modified by striking from that part awarding judgment to Swett-Davenport Lumber Company the words and figures following, to wit: "With interest thereon at the rate of seven per cent. per annum from the 1st day of August, 1907, amounting to $176.00 and as so modified the judgment is affirmed as of the date thereof. Appellant is to recover of plaintiff Swett-Davenport Lumber Company one-third his costs of this appeal.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

(159 Cal. 716)

DIEPENBROCK v. LUIZ. (Sac. 1,782.)
(Supreme Court of California. May 2, 1911.)

1. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 95*)—LEASES—TERMINATION—CONSTRUCTION.

The provision in a lease that "whenever sold this lease shall cease and be at an end, provided that the party of the first part shall then pay to the party of the second part, for all improvements," etc., is a condition, and not a covenant, and may or may not be exercised at the option of the lessor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. § 300; Dec. Dig. § 95.*]

2. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 199½*)—RENT—LIABILITY THEREFOR.

Where a tenant under a lease providing that "whenever sold this lease shall cease and be at an end, provided that the party of the first part shall then pay to the party of the second part, for all improvements," etc., held possession under the lease up to and past the time when the rent became due, he was liable for the rent, even though the premises were sold before the rent became due, and he was not offered compensation for his improvements.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. §§ 741, 742; Dec. Dig. § 199½.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Peter J. Shields, Judge.

Action by M. H. Diepenbrock against Frank J. Luiz. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appealed to the District Court of Appeals, and a rehearing was granted. Judgment affirmed.

J. Frank Brown and C. E. McLaughlin, for appellant. R. Platnauer, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. This cause was decided by the District Court of Appeal of the Third Appellate District, and a rehearing was granted in order that we might further examine the authorities applicable to the lease involved in the litigation. After careful examination of the authorities cited and of the arguments of counsel presented in their briefs, we have adopted the opinion of the District Court of Appeal, written by Mr. Justice Burnett, which is as follows:

"The action, based upon a lease of agricultural lands from one R. W. Brown to defendant, is to recover the rental which under the terms of said lease became due on November 15, 1906. The lease was executed on November 11, 1905, and on November 10, 1906, Brown conveyed the premises together with 'the reversion and reversions, remainder and remainders, rents, issues and profits thereof,' to plaintiff.

[1] "The main controversy is over the proper construction of the following clause in said lease: 'It is agreed by and between the parties hereto that the party of the first part may sell the demised premises at any time during the said term. Whenever sold this lease shall cease and be at an end, provided that the party of the first part shall then pay to the party of the second part, for all improvements placed upon the demised premises to the time of such sale, including the cost of all ditches, built thereon by the latter and all crops then growing thereon, the value thereof to be agreed upon by the parties hereto, and if they do not agree the value thereof shall be fixed by two disinterested persons selected for that purpose, by the parties hereto, and if they fail to agree by a third person selected by them for that purpose, and a majority of the three shall fix the value of such improvement, and the cost of such ditches, and the value of such crops, and as so fixed shall be paid by the party of the first part to the party of the second part.' It is the contention of appellant that the lease was terminated the instant a bona fide sale was effected by the lessor, while respondent claims that the termination was subject to the further condition of payment of the value of the improvements. In other words, the parties differ as to whether the clause providing for said payment constitutes a covenant or a condition. Appellant insists that, in harmony with the rule of construction that every word is to be understood in its ordinary and popular sense, we may adopt any of the following definitions of 'provided' as given by Webster, to wit: 'On condition'; 'by stipulation'; 'with the understanding.' Substituting these various definitions for 'provided' he argues that 'with the understanding' harmonizes perfectly with the text. 'It creates no discord, and does not limit the meaning and effect of that which precedes or succeeds it, much less nullify and render meaningless, important portions of the paragraph in which it is found. On the other hand, the substitution of the definition 'upon condition' creates inconsistency, inharmony and discord. It practically eliminates succeeding sentences where careful provision is made for the ascertainment and payment of the amount while its effect on the preceding sentence 'whenever sold this lease shall cease and be at an end' is to convert an absolute, positive and emphatic declaration into a qualified statement, the effect of which depends upon the will of one of the parties jointly making it.'

"It is undoubtedly true, as claimed by appellant, that stipulations in a contract are not construed as conditions precedent unless that construction is made necessary by the terms of the contract. Deacon v. Blodgett, 111 Cal. 418, 44 Pac. 159; Antonelle v. Lumber Co., 140 Cal. 318, 73 Pac. 966. There are also well-considered cases holding that 'provided' does not necessarily impose a condition. In Hartung v. Witte, 59 Wis. 285, 18 N. W. 177, it is said: 'But the words, "upon the express condition" as here used, or the words "if it shall so happen" or "provided however" and the like do not always make a condition, and it is often a nice question to determine whether it is a condition or a covenant and courts always construe similar clauses in a deed as covenants rather than as conditions, if they can reasonably do so.' 2 Washb. Real Property, 4. In Stanley v. Colt, 72 U. S. 119, 18 L. Ed. 502, it is declared that 'the word "provided," though an appropriate word to constitute a common-law condition, does not invariably and of necessity do so. On the contrary, it may give way to the intent of the party as gathered from an examination of the whole instrument, and be taken as expressing a limitation in trust.' Similarly in Woodruff v. Woodruff, 44 N. J. Eq. 353, 16 Atl. 6, 1 L. R. A. 380, it is said: 'While the words "provided nevertheless" and "upon the following conditions" are appropriate words to create a condition, they do not of necessity create such an estate. They and similar words will give way when the intention of the grantor as manifested by the whole deed is otherwise, and they have frequently been explained and applied as expressing simply a covenant or a limitation in trust.' Indeed, the decisions are uniform to the point that, while ordinarily the word 'provided' indicates that a condition follows, as expressed in Boston S. & D. v. Thomas, 59 Kan. 470, 53 Pac. 472, 'there is no magic in the term, and the clause in a contract is to be construed from the words employed and from the purpose of the parties, gathered from the whole instrument.'

"Respondent, on the contrary, quotes from Rich v. Hotchkiss, 16 Conn. 409, Robertson v. Caw, 3 Barb. (N. Y.) 410, and De Vitt v. Kaufman, 27 Tex. Civ. App. 332, 66 S. W. 224, to the effect that the word 'provided' means 'on condition,' and is the appropriate word for creating a condition precedent. It is admitted by appellant that it is an apt word for that purpose, but he contends that to so interpret it would be against the evident intention of the parties.

"Reflecting, however, that the lease was for the term of five years, and that valuable improvements were likely to be made by the lessee, and that the lessor wanted to be in a position to avail himself of any favorable opportunity to sell the premises to advantage, what is more reasonable than the conclusion that the lessor desired to retain the option to terminate the lease if the would-be purchaser should demand that the premises be conveyed free from incumbrance? Of course, it is only in view of such a contingency that there would be any reason for leaving the lessor a choice as to the payment for the improvements. It would hardly be supposed that he was so generous as to choose to pay unless the exigency of a profitable sale made it to his advantage to do so.

On the other hand, the lessee would hardly be willing to have his valuable leasehold interest destroyed at any time by a sale without at least some protection for his outlay on the property. And he might, quite naturally, desire more security than the mere personal covenant of the lessor to pay him for his improvements. He would, therefore, as a reasonable man, insist that, if the lessor is to have the privilege of selling the property at any time and desires thereby to terminate the lease, it must be upon the condition that he pay for the improvements. It would immediately occur to the parties, however, that, in case the improvements are to be paid for, some question might arise as to their value and for the purpose of determining this the judgment of two—and in case of their disagreement—of three arbitrators, it might be considered expedient to invoke. If the parties had these conditions in mind, would they not with sufficient accuracy express their intention by declaring that 'the lessor may sell the demised premises at any time during said term. Whenever sold the lease shall cease and be at an end, provided that the party of the first part shall then pay to the party of the second part the value of the improvements placed thereon by said party of the second part to be agreed upon by said parties and if they cannot agree, said value to be determined by two disinterested parties and in case of their disagreement a third party shall be selected and a majority of the three shall fix the value of the improvements to be paid by said party of the first part.' This is substantially the language used, and, to adopt the construction of appellant, we must depart from the primary meaning of the word 'provided' and hold that the parties used it in a secondary sense. The argument of appellant is interesting and ingenious, but it cannot change the fact that, attributing the usual and ordinary signification to the language of the parties, a condition is found in the provision in question. Nor, if we bear in mind the contingency already suggested and implied in the terms employed, does the conclusion of the learned trial judge derogate from the force of the seemingly positive promise to pay for the improvements.

[2] "But, accepting appellant's interpretation, how does the case appear? If the lease was terminated by the sale, it was the duty of defendant to surrender the premises. It is, indeed, so provided in these words: 'At the end of said term or early ending of this lease the party of the second part shall surrender possession of the demised premises in good order and condition.' It was the duty of the lessor to pay for the improvements. The lessor failed to pay and the lessee continued in possession. It is admitted that the lessor's covenant was a personal one, it was not made subject to a lien upon the land, nor upon appellant's theory was the lessee authorized to remain in possession until he was paid for the improvements. The lessee's redress, therefore, for the violation of the lessor's promise, is a personal action against the latter for the value of the improvements. The lessee occupied and used the premises to his profit by virtue of no other right than that created by the lease until after the payment of the rent became due—indeed, until the end of the year. It is true that another lease was executed by plaintiff to defendant and his son, but this was on November 17th—two days after said rent was due—and it was not to take effect until December 1st. There can be no doubt, then, that defendant, having occupied the premises for the whole year, was burdened with the obligation to pay for the use thereof. The only question that could arise would be whether he should pay the rent prescribed in the lease, or what the use of the premises was reasonably worth. This we need not determine, as, in another view, assuming the termination of the lease by the sale, it would seem that defendant cannot escape the payment of the rent. As already seen, the said sale occurred only five days before the rental was to be paid, and less than a month before the expiration of one year of occupancy by said lessee. This $1,500 was the balance of the annual rental, and since there was no agreement as to any apportionment or abatement of rent, in the absence of any statutory provision, in case of termination of the lease before the rent was due, the rule would be as stated in section 389 of Taylor's Landlord and Tenant: 'It is well settled that in all cases of periodical payments, accruing at intervals, and not de die in diem, there can be no apportionment, for rent will not be apportioned in respect of time, unless by force of a statute or of some special provision of the lease.' But section 1935 of the Civil Code provides the rule in this state as follows: 'When the hiring of a thing is terminated before the time originally agreed upon, the hirer must pay the due proportion of the hire for such use as he has actually made of the thing, unless such use is merely nominal and of no benefit to him.' As has already appeared, the defendant actually had use of the property for the entire year under the original lease, but, if the computation should be limited to the date of the sale, it amounts practically to the same thing, and, under the evidence, it cannot be said that the use was merely nominal or of no value to defendant.

"It was rightly held, we think, that the claim for the rent was transferred to plaintiff, and therefore he was the proper party to institute the action. Indeed, the evidence shows that defendant did not object to paying the rent to plaintiff, but he insisted that he should be reimbursed by the said plaintiff for the value of the improvements. But this cannot be urged as an offset to plaintiff's claim since plaintiff did not undertake to pay therefor. If there be anything due for said improvements, it must be from the original lessor.

"The judgment is affirmed."

We concur: SLOSS, J.; LORIGAN, J.

SHAW, J. [1] I concur in the judgment of affirmance and I agree with the conclusion of Justice Burnett that the provision in the lease of 1905, requiring the ending of the term upon a sale of the premises by the lessor, is a condition and not a mere covenant. I do not think, however, that the opinion fully states the grounds upon which the judgment must rest. The provision for the termination of the lease upon a sale of the premises was solely for the benefit of the lessor. Foley v. Constantino, 43 Misc. Rep. 91, 86 N. Y. Supp. 780. He could undoubtedly waive the benefit thereof and, without terminating the lease, he could sell and convey the premises subject to the lease. The grantee, if the lessor did not act in the matter prior to the conveyance, could also waive the right and continue the lease in force. In that case the lessee would have no right to declare the lease terminated and demand payment for his improvements. The part of the provision which was for his benefit was that which gave him the right to demand payment for his improvements as a condition concurrent with the exercise by the lessor or his grantee of the option to terminate the lease. If either attempted to exercise the option, the lessor could demand payment for his improvements and the lease would not terminate until such payment was made. The evidence shows that the grantee, Diepenbrock, refused to pay for the improvements when the sale to him was made. As neither he nor Brown, the original lessor, paid or offered to pay the lessee for the improvements, the right which they had to terminate the lease upon that sale was thereby waived and the lease continued in force unaffected by the sale. The lessee had the right to continue in possession of the premises for the full term of five years. Instead of doing so, however, the lessee voluntarily executed another lease on November 17, 1906, seven days after the sale and two days after the rent in question became due, whereby he and his son became lessees of the premises upon different terms of rent for the period of one year beginning December 1, 1906. This transaction abrogated the previous lease for all that part of the original term subsequent to the beginning of the new lease. [2] But it did not relieve the lessee from the obligation to pay the rent already accrued under the old lease at the time the new lease was made, nor did it preserve to him the right to demand payment for his improvements. The making of this new lease may have been unwise, but there is no claim that it was not voluntarily and intelligently made. The lessee must take the consequences of the condition in which he has voluntarily placed himself and pay the rent accrued under the old lease in accordance with his contract to do so.

We concur: HENSHAW, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.

15 Cal. App. 702

PIERCE et al. v. CITY OF LOS ANGELES et al. (Civ. 816.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. March 24, 1911.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 294*)—OPENING STREETS—NOTICE—STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

Under Street Opening Act of 1903 (St. 1903, p. 376) § 3, providing that the street superintendent shall cause notices of the passage of an ordinance for opening a street, to be posted along all streets and parts of streets within the assessment district described in the ordinance, at not more than 300 feet apart, and not less than three in all, evidence held insufficient to sustain the findings of the trial court that notices of the improvement and of the ordinance were properly posted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 294.*]

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 538*)—IMPROVEMENTS—ASSESSMENTS—RESERVATION IN LOWER COURT.

Where plaintiffs did not complain in the trial court of the assessment of damages and benefits in the opening of a street, that certain property, was appraised in excess of its market value, they are estopped to do so on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1253; Dec. Dig. § 538.*]

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 444*)—ASSESSMENTS OF BENEFITS—EFFECT OF FAILURE TO GIVE NOTICE.

Where a street superintendent failed to give the required notice under the street opening act, the city council was without jurisdiction to open the street; hence assessments levied for that purpose were void.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1064; Dec. Dig. § 444.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Curtis D. Wilbur, Judge.

Action by H. A. Pierce and another against City of Los Angeles and others. From a judgment for defendants and from an order denying a new trial, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

H. A. Pierce and Ingall W. Bull, for appellants. Leslie R. Hewitt and Emmet H. Wilson, for respondents.

JAMES, J. This action was brought for the purpose of securing an injunction restraining defendants from causing to be sold certain real property belonging to plaintiffs. The sale of the property was proposed to be had because of nonpayment of assessments levied against it for the purpose of satisfying costs and expenses in connection with the opening of Forty-Third street in the city of Los Angeles. The proceedings for the opening of said street were taken under the provisions of the street opening act of 1903 (Stats. 1903, p. 376).

It is alleged in plaintiffs' complaint as one of the causes of action that notices were not posted within the assessment district, as required by section 3 of the act mentioned. That section provides in part as follows: "The street superintendent shall thereupon cause to be conspicuously posted along all streets and parts of streets within the assessment district described in said ordinance, at not more than three hundred feet in distance apart, notices (not less than three in all) of the passage of said ordinance." The ordinance referred to is the ordinance of intention required to be passed by the city council, declaring it the intention of said council to cause the particular improvement in contemplation to be made, and specifying the boundaries of the assessment district. It appears from the evidence that within the assessment district as determined by the ordinance of intention were included a short street called Forty-Second street, a portion of Central avenue, and a portion of Forty-Third street. Central avenue extended across the assessment district from north to south, and Forty-Third street extended from the westerly line of Central avenue, and at right angles thereto, westerly. The distance from the northwesterly corner of Central avenue and Forty-Third street along the westerly line of Central avenue north to the point where said westerly line of Central avenue intersected the northerly line of the assessment district was 135 feet, and from the southwesterly corner of Central avenue and Forty-Third street to the southerly boundary of the assessment district, where it intersected with the westerly line of Central avenue, was the same distance. Forty-Third street is 60 feet in width; Forty-Second street extended from Central avenue 90 feet north from Forty-Third street at right angles to Central avenue and easterly; the northerly boundary of the assessment district being coincident with the northerly boundary of Forty-Second street. It was proposed by the proceedings mentioned to open Forty-Third street from the easterly line of Central avenue easterly, and so make a continuous street of the same across and to the east of Central avenue. From the evidence set out in the bill of exceptions, it appears that no notices of the proposed work were posted on any portion of Forty-Third street within the assessment district. A notice was posted on Central avenue and at a point which would correspond to the corner of Central avenue and Forty-Third street, if the same was opened as contemplated by the proceedings. At the time of the posting of the notices, Forty-Third street did not extend across Central avenue, and notices posted on the easterly side of Central avenue could not be considered as notices posted on that portion of Forty-Third street within the assessment district. The statute requires the street superintendent to post his notices "along all streets and parts of streets within the assessment district," and this requirement was not satisfied by the posting of notices in the manner in which they were posted in the proceedings for the opening of Forty-Third street. Evidently, from the testimony of the witness who made the posting, there was a lack of understanding as to what was required to be done by him in that regard, for it appears that after posting Forty-Second street and placing two, or possibly three, notices on Central avenue, he proceeded down the line of the street proposed to be opened and posted notices there also. He failed, however, to cover any portion of Forty-Third street as the same was included within the assessment district, and for that reason the subsequent proceedings were invalid.

[1] We think that the evidence does not sustain the finding of the court, wherein it is determined that notices of the improvement and of the passage of the ordinance of intention referred to in the complaint were posted in the manner and form required by law.

[2] The second ground of complaint urged by plaintiffs, to wit, that in the matter of the adjustment of damages and benefits certain property within the assessment district along the line of Central avenue was appraised at a price greatly in excess of the market value thereof, is not now available as a ground upon which to ask the relief prayed for. The matters embraced within that cause of complaint were all matters which should have been urged during the course of the proceedings, and the failure of plaintiffs to seasonably make complaint thereof estopped them from objecting thereafter.

[3] Because of the failure of the street superintendent to cause the notices of the passage of the ordinance of intention to be posted in the manner required by the street opening act under which the proceedings were had, there was no jurisdiction given the city council to take further action toward the opening of the street as proposed, and the assessments as levied were therefore invalid. It follows from this conclusion that the judgment and order denying plaintiffs' motion for a new trial must be reversed, and it is so ordered.

We concur: ALLEN, J.; SHAW, J.

15 Cal. App. 738

BEDOLLA v. WILLIAMS. (Civ. 864.)
(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. March 31, 1911.)

1. PLEADING (§ 193*)—DEMURRER—COMPLAINT.

A complaint alleged that plaintiff and defendant made a partnership agreement to carry on a dairying business, by which defendant was to furnish everything, except one-half the hogs necessary to properly conduct the business, that plaintiff was to furnish the labor, that they were to share equally the products and profits, except that the calves should belong one-fourth to plaintiff and three-fourths to defendant, both parties reserving the right to terminate the partnership on notice, that six months afterwards defendant terminated the partnership, assumed exclusive possession of all the property, withdrew the same and refused to account therefor, etc., wherefore plaintiff alleged that the value of his share of the assets was $2,085, and prayed for an accounting and division. Held, that since the complaint showed plaintiff to be entitled to some remedy, either legal or equitable, it was not demurrable for failure to establish a partnership or other relation from which the right to an accounting would arise; the court being required by Code Civ. Proc. § 580, after answer filed, to grant plaintiff any relief consistent with the case made and embraced within the issues.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 429, 439; Dec. Dig. § 193.*]

2. JOINT ADVENTURES (§ 5*)—ACCOUNTING—DEMAND.

Where, in a suit for an accounting arising out of a joint adventure, defendant pleaded a settlement and payment of everything due plaintiff, no demand for an accounting was necessary to plaintiff's right of action.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Joint Adventures, Dec. Dig. § 5.*]

3. JOINT ADVENTURES (§ 5*)—ACCOUNTING—REQUISITES—FINDINGS.

Where, in a suit between parties to a joint adventure for an accounting, the court found that they entered into a business venture, the products and profits of which were to be divided between them in certain proportions, that defendant took possession of the property jointly owned by the parties, and that his plea of settlement and payment was untrue, and found the value of plaintiff's interest, it was not essential to plaintiff's right to recover that the court should also have found that plaintiff and defendant were partners.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Joint Adventures, Dec. Dig. § 5.*]

4. JOINT ADVENTURES (§ 4*)—ACCOUNTING.

Where plaintiff and defendant agreed to conduct a dairying business, plaintiff agreeing to perform all the labor in consideration of a certain proportion of the products and profits, the relation being terminable at the will of either party, plaintiff was not entitled in a suit for an accounting to an allowance for labor in harvesting hay on the farm, because of defendant's termination of the arrangement after the hay was harvested, and before it could be consumed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Joint Adventures, Dec. Dig. § 4.*]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 936*)—PRESUMPTIONS.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1033, provides that a party in whose favor a judgment is rendered, and who claims his costs, must deliver to the clerk and serve on the adverse party, within five days after the verdict or notice of the decision, or if the entry of the judgment on the verdict or decision be stayed, then before such entry is made, a memorandum of costs, and that by "decision" is meant the signing and filing of the findings of fact and conclusions of law. A special verdict was filed January 21, 1909, and on May 3d the court directed entry of judgment according to the verdict, which was done, but on June 7th the judgment, on plaintiff's motion, was set aside as inadvertent. Before this was done, on June 8th, plaintiff filed a first cost bill, which defendant moved to strike as not having been filed within five days after the verdict. This motion being denied, the court, on August 5th, filed findings of fact and conclusions of law and ordered judgment for plaintiff, which was entered August 7th, and on that date plaintiff served a second cost bill, identical in items and amount with the first, which defendant also moved to strike on the same ground. Held, that since in an action at law the cost bill must be filed within five days after verdict, unless the entry of judgment is stayed or the court orders the case reserved, in which case it may be filed prior to the entry of judgment, as provided by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 628, 664, it would be presumed that the case was in fact reserved or the entry of judgment stayed, in the absence of an affirmative showing to the contrary, under the rule that all intendments are in favor of the regularity of the action of the court, and that the cost bill was therefore properly filed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3782, 3787; Dec. Dig. § 936.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Monterey County; B. V. Sargent, Judge.

Action by Charles Bedolla against Matt Williams. From an order denying defendant's motion to strike out plaintiff's cross-bill, and from a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendant prosecutes separate appeals. Modified and affirmed.

Wallace M. Pence, for appellant. Sargent & Bardin, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. In this case there are two appeals, one from the judgment against the defendant, taken upon the judgment roll, and the other from the order denying defendant's motion to strike out plaintiff's cost bill, brought to this court upon a bill of exceptions. As both appeals are included in one transcript, and are argued in one set of briefs, we will dispose of both matters in one opinion.

First, as to the appeal from the judgment.

The complaint alleges that the parties hereto, on May 1, 1907, entered into a partnership agreement for the purpose of engaging in the dairying business; that the defendant was to furnish "all the horses and farming implements, lands, buildings, cows, dairy and dairying fixtures, and one-half the hogs, necessary to properly conduct said business," and the plaintiff was to keep the property in good condition and to do all the labor necessary to carry on said business; that the parties were to share equally in the products and profits thereof, except that it was agreed that all calves, the offspring of cows furnished the partnership by the defendant, born during the existence of the partnership, were to be deemed the joint property of the parties in the proportion of one-quarter to said plaintiff and three-quarters to said defendant. They were to raise hogs in connection with and as a part of the dairying business, "each party to furnish one-half of said hogs; the hogs and the increase thereof, and all profits realized thereby," were to be shared equally. The complaint further alleges that "the duration of said partnership was not designated by said agreement; both parties thereto reserving the right to terminate said partnership upon notice to the other party." That on the 11th day of November, 1907, six months after the commencement of the business, the defendant by notice terminated and dissolved said partnership, and took sole and exclusive possession of all of the property of said partnership, and withdrew the property theretofore supplied by him for the purpose of conducting said business. That the property of said partnership consists of about 63 calves, about 105 hogs, and about 50 suckling pigs. That the defendant refuses to account to plaintiff for the partnership property, and has converted the same to his own use, and after demand has refused to account to plaintiff for, or pay or transfer to him, his share of the assets of the business. That the plaintiff, in pursuance of the contract, performed labor, in cutting, curing, and stacking hay grown on the premises used for the conduct of the business, the advantage of which labor has been lost to plaintiff by reason of the termination of said partnership. The complaint then alleges that the value of plaintiff's share of said assets is the sum of $2,085, and prays for an accounting and a division of the net assets, and that he have judgment for said sum of $2,085.

The defendant demurred to the complaint, both generally and specifically, on the grounds of uncertainty and ambiguity. The demurrer was overruled, and such ruling is now assigned as error.

Appellant's position on this point is that the action is one for an accounting, and that the allegations of the complaint fail to establish a partnership, or any other relationship from which the right to an accounting would arise, and that therefore the complaint fails to state a cause of action.

[1] We think it unnecessary in this case to decide whether or not the agreement between the parties constituted them copartners, or provided for such a joint venture as would entitle either of them to an accounting from the other, because the allegations of the complaint show that the plaintiff is entitled to some remedy, either legal or equitable. In such a case, where, as here, an answer has been filed, the court may grant plaintiff any relief consistent with the case made out by him and embraced within the issues. Code Civ. Proc. § 580. In the case of Walsh v. McKeen, 75 Cal. 522, 17 Pac. 674, the rule is stated as follows: "An action does not now, as formerly, fail because the plaintiff has made a mistake as to the form of his remedy. If the case which he states entitles him to any relief, either legal or equitable, his complaint is not to be dismissed because he has prayed for a judgment to which he is not entitled. 'Legal and equitable relief are administered in the same forum, and according to the same general plan. A party cannot be sent out of court, merely because his facts do not entitle him to relief at law, or merely because he is not entitled to relief in equity, as the case may be. He can be sent out of court only when, upon his facts, he is entitled to no relief, either at law or in equity.'

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

We have no doubt the complaint was good as against the general demurrer. As to the special grounds urged, viz., uncertainty and ambiguity, the statement of plaintiff's cause of action is not as clear and satisfactory as it might be; but it does not appear that plaintiff's rights have been prejudiced by the court's action in overruling his demurrer based upon those grounds, and we would not be justified in reversing the case, because the defendant was required to go to trial on the complaint as filed. Code Civ. Proc. § 475. The court committed no prejudicial error in overruling the demurrer.

Defendant filed his answer, denying that he entered into a partnership with plaintiff, and alleged in that behalf that he entered into an agreement with plaintiff for the conduct of the said dairy business under the terms of which the plaintiff was to perform all the labor in conducting said business, and that he was to receive as full compensation therefor a certain proportion of the products of said business. The answer further alleged that the plaintiff had defaulted in several respects in the performance on his part of said agreement; that he had agreed with defendant to terminate their said agreement, and that a settlement had been had between them. The answer admitted that the defendant had taken and retained possession of the property belonging to said dairy business.

The cause was tried with a jury. A general verdict being waived, the jury found, in answer to special issues submitted by the parties, that the plaintiff duly performed his part of the agreement; that the value of plaintiff's interest in the partnership property was $473.31, and that the value of the labor performed by plaintiff in cutting and stacking hay was $90.

After the return of this special verdict, the defendant introduced further evidence, and the cause was submitted to the court for decision. Subsequently the court filed findings of fact and conclusions of law. It found generally in accordance with the allegations of the complaint, and against those of the answer, and adopted the special findings of the jury, and rendered judgment in favor of plaintiff for the sum of $555.31, being the aggregate of the two sums above mentioned, less $8, about which deduction no question is raised.

[2] This judgment is attacked by the defendant as not supported by the findings, or by the verdict. Appellant's argument is that there is no finding of a partnership, nor of a conversion by defendant, nor of a demand by plaintiff for possession. Leaving out of consideration for the moment the item of $90 included in the judgment as the value of plaintiff's labor in cutting and stacking hay, the defendant in his answer expressly admits that upon the termination of the agreement he took possession of all the property of the dairy business, and alleges that he made a cash settlement with the plaintiff of all his demands arising out of the said agreement. In view of this allegation, the question of a demand was an immaterial issue, since the position taken by defendant was that he had settled with plaintiff and paid him everything due.

[3] Nor was it necessary for the court to find specifically that the plaintiff and defendant were partners. It found that the parties entered into a business venture, the products and profits of which were to be divided between them in certain proportions; that the defendant took possession of the property jointly owned by the parties, and that the allegation in his answer that he had settled with the plaintiff was untrue, and found the value of plaintiff's interest in such property.

[4] We think the only respect in which the judgment is not supported by the findings is as to the item of $90, the value of plaintiff's labor in cutting and stacking hay. The court found as a fact that under the agreement between the parties it was plaintiff's duty to perform all the labor required in the business, and that his compensation for such labor was a certain proportion of the products and profits. Plaintiff therefore was not entitled to an extra allowance for the labor in question. The court seems to have taken the view that, because the hay upon which this labor was expended had not been consumed at the termination of the agreement, it was only equitable to allow this sum to plaintiff as the value of such labor. But almost necessarily in the conduct of such an undertaking as was here entered upon there would be on hand at its termination property produced by the labor of one or other of the parties; and, in the absence of any fraudulent or oppressive conduct on the part of one of the parties in terminating the contract, there seems to be no reason why the labor performed in producing this property should not be deemed compensated by the share in the products and profits allotted to the party performing it. We conclude that the judgment is not supported by the findings to the extent of this item of $90.

[5] 2. As to the appeal from the order denying defendant's motion to strike out plaintiff's cost bill. In considering this point, it will be necessary to refer to the dates of the various proceedings in the trial court. The special verdict of the jury hereinbefore referred to was given and filed January 21, 1909. On May 3d following the court directed the clerk to enter judgment in accordance with the special verdict, which was done, but subsequently, on June 7th, this judgment was, on motion of the plaintiff, set aside as having been inadvertently entered. Before this was done, however, to wit, on May 8th, the plaintiff filed a first cost bill. Defendant made a motion to strike this cost bill out, on the ground that it had not been filed within five days after the verdict. This motion was denied, and no appeal is taken from such order. On August 5th the court filed its findings of fact and conclusions of law, and ordered judgment for the plaintiff, as we have seen, which was entered on August 7th, the appeal from which judgment we have already considered. On said last-mentioned date plaintiff served and filed a second cost bill, identical as to items and amount with the first. Thereafter defendant moved to strike out this cost bill, on the same ground that he had moved to strike out the first, viz., that it was not filed within five days after the special verdict of the jury. The court denied this motion, and it is from such order that the defendant has appealed.

Section 1033 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that a party in whose favor a judgment is rendered, and who claims his costs, must deliver to the clerk and serve on the adverse party, within five days after the verdict or notice of the decision, or, if the entry of the judgment on the verdict or decision be stayed, then before such entry is made, a memorandum of costs, and that by "decision" is meant the signing and filing of the findings of fact and conclusions of law.

It is appellant's contention that the action was an action at law, and that the cost bill should have been filed within five days after the verdict of the jury. Considering, for the purpose of the argument, that the action is one at law, then the cost bill should have been filed within the time stated by appellant, unless it appears that the entry of the judgment was stayed, or unless the court ordered the case reserved for argument or further consideration, in which case, if filed prior to the entry of the judgment, it would be in time. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 628, 664. But it appears from the record, satisfactorily we think, that the case was in fact reserved for argument by briefs. Even if that were not true, and the record were silent as to the cause of the delay in the entry of the judgment, we would have to assume, in the absence of an affirmative showing to the contrary, that the court had followed the plain terms of the Code. All intendments are in favor of the regularity of the action of the court; and it is incumbent on the appellant to show error affirmatively. McLennan v. Wilcox, 126 Cal. 51, 58 Pac. 305; People v.

Holmes, 118 Cal. 444, 50 Pac. 675. And we would also assume, for the purpose of sustaining the order of the court, that while, as seen from the above-mentioned dates, the cost bill was filed on the same day that the judgment appealed from was entered, yet that in point of actual time the filing of the cost bill preceded the said entry. On the other hand, if this be considered as a case in equity, the cost bill having been filed within five days after the decision, it was unquestionably in time. The court did not err in denying said motion.

The judgment is modified by striking out therefrom the sum of $90, and as thus modified it shall stand affirmed; the order denying defendant's motion to strike out plaintiff's cost bill is affirmed; appellant to recover costs of this appeal.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; HALL, J.

15 Cal. App. 724

ROYAL et al. v. LANGE et al. (Civ. 903.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. March 24, 1911.)

CANCELLATION OF INSTRUMENTS (§ 53*)—FINDINGS—SUFFICIENCY.

A finding that a contract to purchase land was induced solely through false representations was sufficient, without a finding that plaintiffs' consent would not have been given but for such representations.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Cancellation of Instruments, Cent. Dig. §§ 109-111; Dec. Dig. § 53.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Curtis D. Wilbur, Judge.

Action by Nannie Royal and another against Charles Lange and others. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant Mrs. Anna Sievert appeals. Affirmed.

Roland G. Swaffield and Swaffield & Hood-enpyl, for appellant. Tom C. Thornton and T. R. Archer, for respondents.

JAMES, J. This action was brought by plaintiffs to enforce the rescission of a contract made for the purchase of real property. It was alleged in the complaint that the consent of plaintiffs to the execution of the contract was obtained by means of false and fraudulent representations and pretenses. Findings and judgment were against the defendants, and from the judgment the defendant Anna Sievert has appealed.

The only point relied upon by appellant is stated by her counsel in his brief as follows: "There is no finding that the misrepresentations were material, or that the consent of plaintiffs would not have been given, had such representations not been made. * * * It is the contention of appellant that, inasmuch as there is no finding in terms or in substance that the consent of plaintiffs would not have been given, had it not been for the representations, the representations found cannot, under the law of this state, be held material. In short, that in order to recover the plaintiffs must allege and prove, and the court must find, that the consent of the plaintiffs to the contract in question would not have been given, had it not been for the misrepresentations."

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

We do not agree with the construction given to the findings of the trial court by appellant's counsel. The court did find that the plaintiffs believed and relied upon the false representations, and that, induced solely thereby, they gave their consent to the contract. It was not necessary that the findings in terms should recite that the consent of plaintiffs would not have been given, had the false representations not been made; a finding that the plaintiffs were induced solely by reason of the false representations to execute or make the contract is an equivalent statement of the ultimate fact, and altogether sufficient.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; SHAW, J.

15 Cal. App. 614

SHEPPARD v. SHEPPARD. (Civ. 913.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. March 15, 1911. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court May 12, 1911.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 938*)—EXTENDING TIME FOR FILING—PRESUMPTIONS.

Since, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1054, the statutory time fixed for settling and allowing a bill of exceptions may be extended by the court, the presumption is, in the absence of anything in the record to the contrary, that it was extended by stipulation or order of court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3795-3803; Dec. Dig. § 938.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 227*)—PRESENTATION OF QUESTIONS BELOW—OBJECTIONS TO BILL OF EXCEPTIONS.

Where no objection was made in the trial court to the settling of the bill of exceptions, a contention on appeal that it was not settled within the time allowed by law cannot be considered.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 227.*]

3. EXCEPTIONS, BILL OF (§ 45*)—PREPARATION AND SETTLING—RULES.

The rule in respect to the preparation and settling of bills of exception is similar to that which prevails with reference to statements on appeal and on motion for new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Exceptions, Bill of, Dec. Dig. § 45.*]

4. DIVORCE (§ 184*)—APPEAL—ERROR NOT AFFECTING RESULT.

Where a judgment in a divorce action did not adjudicate the character of the estate owned by the parties, and no divorce was granted either party, a finding that certain property is not separate, but community, property, is harmless error, as it could not affect the judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Dec. Dig. § 184.*]

5. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 283*)—SEPARATE MAINTENANCE—DUTY TO SUPPORT WIFE LIVING APART FROM HUSBAND.

While the law does not impose upon a husband the duty of supporting a wife who lives separate and apart from him against his will and consent, where, on his part, and notwithstanding past offenses, he offers to fulfill the marriage contract and give her a home with him, such offer must be made in good faith, in order to constitute a defense to the wife's claim for separate maintenance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Dec. Dig. § 283.*]

6. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1008*)—REVIEW—QUESTION OF FACT.

In a wife's action against her husband for separate maintenance, the question whether the husband in offering to fulfill the marriage contract and to give the wife a home with him, notwithstanding her past misconduct, was made in good faith so as to constitute a defense, was a question of fact for the determination of the trial court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3955-3969; Dec. Dig. § 1008.*]

7. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 663*)—EXCEPTIONS—FINDINGS OF COURT—MATTERS NOT SHOWN BY THE RECORD.

While a finding might be construed as a recital by the court of a fact, which, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, could be deemed prima facie proof of its existence, where a bill of exceptions states that it contains all the matters and things occurring at the trial, and it discloses an absence of everything touching the question, it overcomes the presumption arising from such recital.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2853-2855; Dec. Dig. § 663.*]

8. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 714*)—RECORD—MATTERS FORMING PART OF.

A transcript of proceedings presented by respondent and certified by the stenographic reporter as being correct, from which it appears that respondent's attorney stated to the court that a certain stipulation had been made, and, in reply to an inquiry of the court as to whether or not there was a record of such stipulation, replied, "Yes, sir; it was entered in the minutes of the court at that time," was not entitled to consideration as a part of the bill of exceptions or otherwise.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2958-2963; Dec. Dig. § 714.*]

9. STIPULATIONS (§ 9*)—RECORD—INCORPORATION OF STIPULATION.

Since Code Civ. Proc. § 283, provides that a stipulation, to be effective, must be evidenced by an agreement filed with the clerk or entered upon the minutes of the court, and not otherwise, a recital in a transcript of proceedings presented by respondent that respondent's attorney informed the court that a certain stipulation had been made, and had been entered in the minutes of the court, was insufficient to support an order of the court allowing counsel fees in alleged conformity to the provisions of the stipulation which were not otherwise shown by the record.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Stipulations, Cent. Dig. §§ 16-21; Dec. Dig. § 9.*]

10. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 671*)—RECORD—MATTERS PRESENTED FOR REVIEW.

In a suit by a husband against his wife for divorce, in which the wife filed a cross-complaint for separate maintenance, a recital in the bill of exceptions on appeal by the husband from a decree in favor of the wife on the cross-complaint that the court "ordered that within 35 days plaintiff pay to defendant to enable her to defend this action the sum of $50, it being stipulated in open court that all other matters concerned in this application shall be considered at the trial hereof and that any order proper in the judgment of the court shall then be made herein, with same effect as though made at this time," was insufficient to show the existence of a stipulation which would support an order of the court allowing defendant $150 as attorney's fees after the trial of the cause; the stipulation or any evidence of its contents not otherwise appearing in the record.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 671.*]

11. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1140*)—REVERSAL—REMITTITUR.

Where a portion of a judgment predicated on an erroneous finding is clearly ascertainable, and the proceedings as disclosed by the record are correct in other particulars, a new trial should not be ordered, provided such excess is remitted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4462-4478; Dec. Dig. § 1140.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Leon F. Moss, Judge.

Action for divorce by Samuel Sheppard against Lucinda Sheppard, in which defendant files a cross-complaint for support and maintenance. From a judgment in favor of defendant awarding her permanent support and maintenance, plaintiff appeals. Modified and affirmed.

E. B. Drake, for appellant. Gray, Barker, Bowen, Allen, Van Dyke & Jutten, and P. E. Greer, for respondent.

SHAW, J. In addition to a statement of the grounds upon which the action was based, the complaint alleged that all the property owned by plaintiff was his separate estate, and that there was no estate belonging to the marital community. By answer defendant denied all these allegations and filed a cross-complaint, whereby, upon sufficient facts therein alleged, and without asking for a decree of divorce, she asked for permanent support and maintenance. Plaintiff answered the cross-complaint, denying the allegations contained therein. The issues thus tendered by the answers to the complaint and cross-complaint were all found in favor of defendant; whereupon judgment was rendered against plaintiff and in favor of defendant, awarding her permanent support and maintenance of $50 per month, and giving her a lien upon certain real estate therein described as security for the payment of same, and also awarding her $150 as attorney's fees. Plaintiff appeals from this judgment upon a bill of exceptions.

Notice of the entry of the judgment was served upon plaintiff on December 17, 1909, and a copy of the bill of exceptions was served upon respondent on January 18, 1910, and the same was settled and allowed by the court on January 29, 1910. Respondent for the first time in this court interposes an objection to a consideration of the bill of exceptions for the alleged reason that it was not settled and allowed in time.

[1] Under section 1054 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the statutory time fixed for the performance of the act may be extended by the court, and, as every intendment is in favor of the regularity of the action of the court, we must presume, in the absence of anything to the contrary, that the time was extended by stipulation or order of the court.

[2] Moreover, there is nothing in the transcript to show that any objection was made below to the settling of the bill of exceptions, and hence, even if a valid objection might have been interposed, the failure so to do must be deemed a waiver of such right. Patrick v. Morse, 64 Cal. 462, 2 Pac. 49; Higgins v. Mahoney, 50 Cal. 444; Churchill v. Flournoy, 127 Cal. 356, 59 Pac. 791.

[3] The rule in respect to the preparation and settling of bills of exception is similar to that which prevails with reference to statements on appeal and on motion for new trial. Section 145, Hayne on New Trial and Appeal.

Appellant attacks the finding of the court to the effect that the property described in the pleadings was not the separate estate of plaintiff, but the same was community estate of the husband and wife.

[4] The judgment does not purport to adjudicate or establish the character of the estate owned by the parties, or either of them. As no divorce was granted either party, there was no occasion for making findings touching their property rights. Had the court found the estate to be the separate property of plaintiff, as insisted upon by appellant, such fact could not affect the judgment rendered. Hence, conceding the finding not justified by the evidence, nevertheless, inasmuch as it was not necessary in support of the judgment, the error must be disregarded as immaterial.

In his answer to the cross-complaint, plaintiff alleged that he had "urged defendant to return to his place of residence and reside with him and resume the relation of man and wife." The court found this allegation to be untrue. Appellant insists that such finding is not justified by the evidence.

[5, 6] Conceding, as we do, that the law does not impose upon a husband the duty of supporting a wife who lives separate and apart from him against his will and consent, where on his part, and notwithstanding past offenses, he offers to fulfill the marriage contract and give her a home with him, such offer must be made in good faith, and the question of good faith is one of fact to be determined by the trial court. McMullin v. McMullin, 123 Cal. 653, 56 Pac. 554. From an examination of the evidence, as disclosed by the record, we cannot say that the trial court erred in concluding that there was a lack of good faith on the part of the plaintiff in making such offer. The action was instituted while plaintiff and defendant were living together. There is no evidence that he offered to dismiss or discontinue the action instituted against defendant. We may suggest, however, that under the provisions of section 137, Civil Code, it is at any time within the power of the court, in its discretion, to vary, alter, or revoke the order awarding separate support and maintenance to the wife. We doubt not that upon a proper application for a modification or revocation of the order, accompanied by an offer on the part of the husband to furnish his wife with a suitable home within his means, and a proposal made in good faith to treat her with conjugal kindness, the court would lend its aid in effecting a reconciliation that would enable these parties during the short remaining years of life to continue not only in name, but in fact the relation, with all that it implies, of husband and wife, entered upon 55 years ago.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[7] The court found "that it was stipulated between counsel for the respective parties in open court, when application was made heretofore and before the trial of this cause for an allowance for attorney's fees in behalf of defendant and cross-complainant, that the amount thereof should be fixed by the court at the time of the trial." Upon this finding the court adjudged "that defendant Lucinda Sheppard have and recover of the plaintiff the sum of one hundred and fifty dollars, allowed as attorney's fees." It is conceded that, in the absence of such stipulation, the court was without authority to make such order after trial, for the reason that it was not necessary to enable the wife to prosecute or defend the action. Loveren v. Loveren, 100 Cal. 493, 35 Pac. 87. The bill of exceptions certified by the trial judge as being correct states that it contains all the evidence introduced at the trial, and "contains all the matters and things that occurred upon the trial of the same," but it is silent as to any evidence whatsoever in support of the finding upon which this order is based. Assuming that the finding might be construed as a recital by the court of a fact which, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, could be deemed prima facie proof of its existence, nevertheless, the bill of exceptions containing all that occurred at the trial, and disclosing an absence of anything touching the question, overcomes the presumption arising from such recital.

[8] Recognizing this fact, respondent has presented a transcript of proceedings, certified by the stenographic reporter as being correct, from which it appears that respondent's attorney stated to the court that such stipulation had been made, and, in reply to an inquiry of the court as to whether or not there was a record of such stipulation, replied: "Yes, sir; it was entered in the minutes of the court at that time." We are referred to no authority, statutory or otherwise, which would entitle this document to consideration as a part of the bill of exceptions, or for any purpose whatsoever.

[9] Conceding, however, that it is entitled to consideration, the only fact thereby established is that the attorney for respondent, it not being made to appear that appellant's counsel was present, stated that such stipulation had been made and entered in the minutes of the court. Neither the stipulation nor minute entry thereof was offered in evidence, and no proof was offered that such stipulation had been made. To be effective, a stipulation made by counsel must be evidenced by an agreement filed with the clerk, or entered upon the minutes of the court, and not otherwise. Section 283, Code Civ. Proc.

[10] Upon the suggestion of a diminution of the record, counsel for respondent has filed herein a certified copy of a minute entry made by the trial court, as follows: "Ordered that within thirty-five days plaintiff pay to defendant, to enable her to defend this action, the sum of fifty dollars, it being stipulated in open court that all other matters concerned in this application shall be considered at the trial hereof, and that any order proper in the judgment of the court shall then be made herein with same effect as though made at this time." Waiving all question of the irregularity of the mode of presenting evidence touching the question at issue, and considering the entry as though incorporated in the bill of exceptions, all that appears therefrom is that all other matters concerned in the application should be considered at the trial. What the other matters were, if any, is not made to appear. Nothing is disclosed by this minute entry which tends to show that the parties entered into any stipulation relating to attorney's fees, or the postponement of the fixing of the same to the time of trial.

For the reasons given, it appears that the court erred in adjudging that respondent should have and recover from appellant $150 as attorney's fees.

[11] Inasmuch, however, as that portion of the judgment predicated upon this erroneous finding is clearly ascertainable, and the proceedings as disclosed by the record are correct in other particulars, a new trial should not be ordered, provided such excess be remitted. Salstrom v. Orleans, etc., Mining Co., 153 Cal. 551, 96 Pac. 292; Curran v. Hubbard, 114 Pac. 81. It is therefore ordered that if respondent, within 30 days from the filing hereof, files with the clerk of this court her written consent that the judgment of the superior court be modified by striking therefrom the provision adjudging payment to her of said sum of $150 attorney's fees, said judgment shall be and is modified accordingly, and the judgment affirmed. Otherwise, and in case respondent fails to file such consent in writing, the judgment is reversed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; JAMES, J.

15 Cal. App. 705

FAIR v. HOME GAS & ELECTRIC CO.
(Civ. 842.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. March 24, 1911.)

1. EVIDENCE (§ 67*)—PRESUMPTIONS—CONTINUANCE OF FACT OR CONDITION.

Where a gas pipe or main in front of certain premises is shown to have once existed, it will be presumed, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, to have continued, in the absence of evidence of change.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 87, 88, 103; Dec. Dig. § 67.*]

2. GAS (§ 22*)—REFUSAL TO SUPPLY CONSUMER—ACTION FOR DAMAGES—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

In an action by a consumer against a gas company to recover the penalty provided by Civ. Code, § 629, for neglect to supply gas, required by his written contract, evidence held sufficient to support a finding that the plaintiff was, at the time he made application, an occupant of the building and premises referred to in his complaint, and that the same was not more than 100 feet from defendant's gas main, and that defendant's exaction of a cash deposit or bond as a condition to supplying plaintiff with gas was an arbitrary discrimination against plaintiff.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Gas, Cent. Dig. § 18; Dec. Dig. § 22.*]

3. GAS (§ 22*)—REFUSAL TO SUPPLY CONSUMER—ACTION FOR DAMAGES—COMPLAINT.

A complaint based upon Civ. Code, § 629, requiring a gas company, on application of an owner or occupant of a building not more than 100 feet from one of its mains, to supply gas therefor, and authorizing recovery of damages for its failure for 10 days to do so, which alleges a demand in writing upon defendant to supply plaintiff with gas for use in and about said house and premises, and defendant's refusal to comply therewith unless a bond was given, and that for a stated period plaintiff was without the use of any heating or illuminating gas, sufficiently avers, in the absence of anything other than a general demurrer, that the defendant refused to supply plaintiff with gas for lighting.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Gas, Cent. Dig. § 18; Dec. Dig. § 22.*]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 173*)—PRESENTATION OF GROUNDS FOR REVIEW.

Where defendant, in an action for damages for failure to supply gas to plaintiff, as required by Civ. Code, § 629, raises no question before the trial as to the purposes for which the gas was to be used, and in its answer alleges that it had been at all times and was then willing to furnish gas to plaintiff, and offers to connect its pipes on plaintiff's premises for furnishing gas to plaintiff on compliance with defendant's request for bond, defendant cannot, on appeal, raise for the first time the question as to the purposes for which the gas was required.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1079-1120; Dec. Dig. § 173.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Benjamin F. Bledsoe, Judge.

Action by Peter Fair against the Home

Gas & Electric Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and from a general order granting defendant's motion for a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

See, also, 13 Cal. App. 589, 110 Pac. 347.

E. C. Campbell, for appellant. P. H. Moore, Halsey W. Allen, and Campbell & Moore, for respondent.

SHAW, J. The suit was instituted to recover the statutory penalty provided by section 629 of the Civil Code, which is as follows: "Upon the application in writing of the owner or occupant of any building or premises distant not more than one hundred feet from any main, or direct or primary wire, of the corporation, and payment by the applicant of all money due from him, the corporation must supply gas or electricity as required for such building or premises, and cannot refuse on the ground of any indebtedness of any former owner or occupant thereof, unless the applicant has undertaken to pay the same. If, for the space of ten days after such application, the corporation refuses or neglects to supply the gas or electricity required, it must pay to the applicant the sum of fifty dollars as liquidated damages, and five dollars per day as liquidated damages for every day such refusal or neglect continues thereafter."

By appropriate allegations plaintiff brings the case within the provisions of the section, it being alleged, among other things, that plaintiff occupied a house and premises in the city of Redlands, known and designated as No. 536 Chestnut avenue, which house and premises were during the times in question distant not over 100 feet from one of the gas mains owned and operated by defendant, a corporation engaged in the manufacture and distribution of gas to the inhabitants of said city; that on July 29, August 14, and August 24, 1908, plaintiff made demand in writing upon defendant that it supply him with gas for use in and about said house and premises, but defendant refused to comply with such demand, unless plaintiff should give a satisfactory indemnity bond or make a cash deposit to protect defendant from any loss which it might be subjected to in connection with the gas service, and to insure the preservation of the meter; that such exaction as a condition of supplying gas to plaintiff was an arbitrary discrimination against him; that for the period extending from June 26, 1908, to the time of the filing of the complaint, plaintiff was without the use of any heating or illuminating gas. In its answer defendant, among other things, denied that said building so occupied by plaintiff was at any of the times mentioned in the complaint distant not more than 100 feet from its gas main, but made no denial of the alleged fact that the premises were within 100 feet therefrom; admitted the making of a demand for a bond or cash deposit as alleged, but denied that the making of such demand was an arbitrary discrimination against plaintiff; denied that plaintiff had been without gas for illuminating or heating purposes subsequent to June 26, 1908; and further answering alleged: That it had at all times been ready and willing to supply plaintiff with gas as demanded at his said premises and residence, through the service pipes belonging to defendant, and connecting said gas main with said residence and premises, provided plaintiff would make a cash deposit or give a bond indemnifying defendant against any liability for loss of its property. As to all of said issues, the court found in favor of plaintiff.

The motion for a new trial was made upon a statement of the case which, among other alleged errors, specified the insufficiency of the evidence to justify the finding to the effect that the plaintiff was, at the times when he applied for gas, an occupant of the building and premises known as No. 536 Chestnut avenue, in the city of Redlands, and that the same were at said times distant not more than 100 feet from defendant's gas main. As heretofore stated, defendant made no denial as to the alleged distance of its gas main from plaintiff's premises, but limited its answer in this regard to a denial that the building was within 100 feet of its gas main. Assuming that proof was necessary for the purpose of establishing the fact that both the building and premises were distant not more than 100 feet from the main, plaintiff testified at the trial had on April 27, 1909, as follows: "I couldn't say exactly how long the gas main of the defendant has been in front of my place; I remember when it was put there; it must have been several years ago." The application for gas was made less than one year before the trial. Plaintiff, however, was not questioned with reference to the distance; but his testimony, in the absence of contradiction, is sufficient to establish the fact that defendant's pipe or main was laid in the street upon which his premises and building fronted at a time prior to the making of his application.

[1] As no evidence whatever was introduced to the contrary, it will be presumed that no change was made in the location of the main, but that its position as laid continued up to the time of the trial. Section 1963, Code Civ. Proc.; Eltzroth v. Ryan, 89 Cal. 135, 26 Pac. 647. For the purpose of showing the distance intervening between the property of plaintiff and the gas main, Isaac Ford, a civil engineer, was called as a witness. His testimony, in connection with a plat introduced in evidence, and upon which the points in question were marked and delineated, clearly and conclusively established the fact that at the time of the trial the distance from the gas main to the point where the defendant's service pipe entered the rear part of plaintiff's building was 92 feet, and that both the building and premises were well within 100 feet from the gas main. Conceding that the evidence of Ford was directed to the status and condition existing at or immediately preceding the time of the trial, nevertheless, it being shown that the pipe or main was laid several years before this time, then, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary—and there is none—it will be presumed that no change in the location thereof was made during the period intervening between the date of laying the same and the time when Ford made the measurements of distance.

[2] Inasmuch as the main was laid several years before the date of the trial, and no change was made therein, it must follow that evidence as to its location with relation to plaintiff's building and premises shown to exist at the time of the trial sufficiently proves such location at the time when application for gas was made. We are therefore of the opinion that the evidence justifies the finding in this regard made by the court.

The finding that exacting from plaintiff a cash deposit or bond as a condition of supplying him with gas was an arbitrary discrimination against plaintiff is fully justified by the evidence. Indeed, such fact was admitted both by defendant's answer and the testimony of its secretary, who stated that defendant had no rules or regulations, pursuant to which the exaction of a deposit or bond was made a condition of supplying gas to its consumers.

[3] It is also claimed that the evidence was insufficient to justify the finding that plaintiff made application for gas for lighting purposes upon the premises, or that defendant refused to supply him with gas for use thereon for lighting purposes. It is sufficient to say that the court did not make such finding. In this regard the finding is in the language of the complaint, which alleges that plaintiff demanded gas for "said building and premises." In a former appeal (Fair v. Home Gas, etc., Co., 13 Cal. App. 589, 110 Pac. 347), we held the complaint good as against a general demurrer, and we adhere to that opinion.

[4] When the demand was made upon defendant for gas, it raised no question as to the purposes for which it was to be used, but offered to furnish it, provided plaintiff would comply with the conditions imposed upon him alone, and in its answer alleges: "That defendant at all times has been and is now willing to furnish gas to plaintiff, and does hereby offer to connect its said service pipes now on premises of plaintiff, for furnishing gas to plaintiff, provided plaintiff complies with said conditions." Assuming, as claimed by defendant, that the statute has reference alone to the supplying of gas for lighting purposes, nevertheless, since up to the trial of the case no question appears to have been properly raised as to the purposes for which the gas was to be used, defendant should not now for the first time be permitted to urge such objection. Moreover, the court found (and the finding is not attacked) that at the time when the demands were made plaintiff was without illuminating gas.

A careful examination of the errors of law specified as occurring at the trial discloses no error in the rulings of the court upon the admission and exclusion of evidence.

For the reasons given, we have reached the conclusion that the court erred in granting the motion for a new trial, and the ruling of the court in this regard is reversed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; JAMES, J.

15 Cal. App. 620

PEOPLE v. OVERACKER. (Cr. 173.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. March 17, 1911.)

1. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 53*)—REQUISITES—NAMES OF WITNESSES.

Under Pen. Code, § 943, requiring the state's witness to be listed on the indictment, the names of the state's witnesses need not be indorsed on an information; Pen. Code, § 988, providing for arraignment by reading and delivering a copy of the indictment or information, "including the list of witnesses," being limited to indictments, so far as it refers to such list.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. § 162; Dec. Dig. § 53.*]

2. HOMICIDE (§ 170*)—EVIDENCE—EXPLAINING ACCUSED'S PRESENCE.

One accused of murder committed while opening an obstruction on decedent's land which caused surface water to back up on accused's adjoining land could show the natural course of drainage at the place, since, if decedent maintained a nuisance, accused had the right under Civ. Code, § 3502, to abate it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Dec. Dig. § 170.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1170*)—HARMLESS ERROR—EXCLUSION OF EVIDENCE.

Error in excluding testimony for accused was harmless, where he gave uncontradicted testimony on the same point.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3145-3153; Dec. Dig. § 1170.*]

4. WITNESSES (§ 286*)—EXAMINING WITNESSES—REFRESHING MEMORY.

Accused's witness having testified that decedent's reputation was bad, and, on cross-examination, that he discussed decedent's reputation with a particular person, but, on redirect, that he could not repeat even the substance of what that person said, it was not error to exclude a question asked by accused, "In order to refresh your memory, did he say anything about" decedent's "having any trouble with other people?"

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 930, 994-999; Dec. Dig. § 286.*]

5. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1166½*)—HARMLESS ERROR—MISCONDUCT BY JUDGE.

The trial judge's inadvertent misconduct in stating that testimony was of a very light class if witness talked with others, and could not remember their names, was harmless error, where he at once admonished the jury not to consider statements not embodied in the instructions.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 3125; Dec. Dig. § 1166½.*]

6. HOMICIDE (§ 188*)—EVIDENCE—DECEDENT'S REPUTATION.

Testimony as to decedent's reputation was properly stricken where witness talked with no one concerning it until after the homicide.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 391-397; Dec. Dig. § 188.*]

7. HOMICIDE (§ 190*)—EXAMINING WITNESS—DECEDENT'S REPUTATION.

An affirmative answer by accused to a question whether any of the threats made by decedent were communicated to him was properly excluded; the question being too broad.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Dec. Dig. § 190.*]

8. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 696*)—EVIDENCE—EXPLAINING ACCUSED'S ACTS.

In a murder trial, it was error to strike out from the answer of defendant, when asked why he shot deceased, the words, "I thought he was ready to start in on the extermination."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 696.*]

9. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 481*)—OPINION EVIDENCE.

The question whether proffered witnesses to accused's insanity were sufficiently acquainted with him was a matter for the discretion of the trial judge.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1070; Dec. Dig. § 481.*]

10. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 829*)—HARMLESS ERROR—INSTRUCTIONS.

In a trial for murder committed while opening an obstruction on decedent's land to permit the passage of surface water flowing from accused's adjoining land, error in refusing to instruct on accused's rights as an upper proprietor was cured by an instruction that, regardless of other facts, if accused shot under fear of threatened death or great bodily harm, he should be acquitted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2011; Dec. Dig. § 829.*]

11. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 815*)—INSTRUCTIONS.

Instructions ignoring the requirement by Civ. Code, § 3502, that one must act without committing a breach of the peace in abating a private nuisance, were properly refused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1922, 1986; Dec. Dig. § 815.*]

12. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 475*)—EXPERT TESTIMONY—DECEDENT'S POSITION.

Description of the position of decedent's body when he was shot is not a proper subject for expert opinion to contradict testimony of eyewitnesses.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1063; Dec. Dig. § 475.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; Z. B. West, Judge.

S. H. Overacker was convicted of murder, and he appeals. Reversed.

Montgomery & Tarver and Lecompte Davis, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and George Beebe, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

JAMES, J. Defendant was convicted of the crime of murder, and the jury, in the exercise of the discretion left to it, fixed his punishment at imprisonment in the state prison for life. Judgment followed accordingly. Defendant appeals from the judgment, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

On the morning of January 13, 1910, defendant fired upon Gustavus A. Winn, a neighbor, with a rifle, inflicting wounds from the effects of which Winn died almost immediately. For a number of years prior to the tragedy the two men lived on adjoining ranches. That of defendant was above the land of Winn and the natural grade or fall was from the land of the former toward and upon the land of the latter. A depression, called by many of the witnesses a "slough," marked a water course extending upon and through the land of Winn, into which some portion at least of the surface and storm waters from the land of defendant had been accustomed to flow. It is difficult to ascertain from the record just what the course of this slough or drain was, as many of the witnesses referred to a map or diagram when testifying before the jury, and the points, lines, and directions indicated by them are not shown in any way in the transcript of the testimony. Sufficient is shown, however, to make it clear that the topography of the ground was as has been stated. At the time of the killing of Winn, the feeling existing between the defendant and the former was not friendly. The men had not been friends for several years prior thereto. Their causes of difference were several, but the chief dispute was over the refusal of Winn to allow the storm and surface waters coming southward over the defendant's land to continue their flow down through the natural depression there located. This dispute was the immediate cause of the fatal affray which occurred on the morning of January 13th. For a long time prior thereto, Winn had maintained banks inside of the line dividing his land from defendant's, and these obstructions during the rainy season especially so impeded the course of the water as to cause it to become impounded and "back up" over and upon defendant's land. On the day upon which Winn was killed, Overacker, the defendant, had gone across onto the deceased's land near the dividing line, and with a shovel had made an opening in a bank situated thereon, in order to allow the water which was impounded to escape. Winn discovered him in the act of cutting the bank, and drove him off from his (Winn's) land. While driving him away, Winn struck at him with a shovel, but did not succeed in hitting him. Defendant tripped and fell into the water as he was being struck at by Winn, and upon regaining his feet went on to his own house, and Winn retired from the scene after replacing the earth that defendant had removed from the bank or dyke. Upon reaching his house, defendant immediately prepared to return to the place where he had been at work. He got his rifle to take with him, and to his wife, who endeavored to dissuade him from his purpose, said that he was going to "protect himself." He returned to the line fence, where he laid his rifle down, and then crossed to the dyke with his shovel, and commenced to throw out the earth again to make an opening for the passage of the water. His wife had followed him, and remained a short distance away, a silent witness to the tragedy which followed. Soon after the defendant had resumed his shoveling on the dyke, Winn, the deceased, coming from the direction of his house, which was located farther to the south, started toward him. Up to this point there is no material conflict in the evidence as to the events occurring on that morning. Winn advanced toward and approached to within about 75 or 80 feet of the place where defendant was at work. Both defendant and his wife testified that Winn carried a gun. The wife of the deceased and his 17 year old daughter testified that, after the difficulty occurring earlier in the morning when Winn struck at Overacker with a shovel, the former had come to the house, and told them that Overacker had gone after a gun, and for them to come out and witness that he did have a gun. They testified that deceased carried no gun, but that he carried a shovel. Other witnesses who observed the affray from distant points saw no gun in the hands of Winn. When Winn reached the point of nearness to Overacker as indicated, the defendant stopped digging, stepped over to where his rifle lay, picked up the firearm, and opened fire upon Winn. After the first shot Winn turned partially or wholly about, and started back toward his barn. One or two shots followed, when Winn dropped to the ground and died. Defendant then returned to his house, and instructed his wife to telephone for a doctor and the sheriff. To the latter officer he shortly surrendered himself. The testimony of both defendant and his wife was that the deceased had a gun in his hands at the time he approached defendant, and that he drew this gun upon defendant before any shots were fired. Whether or not Winn had a gun and did aim at defendant was a question for the jury to determine. The contention of defendant was that he killed Winn in necessary self-defense. There was testimony to the effect that Winn had said that he was going to keep after the "crackerjacks," meaning defendant's family, until he had exterminated them. Defendant testified that, when Winn drew the gun on him, he remembered the threat of Winn to exterminate his family, and believed that he was about to be shot. On behalf of defendant evidence was also introduced for the purpose of showing that Overacker was insane at the time he fired the fatal shot.

Defendant has assigned as errors a great number of the rulings of the trial court made during the course of the proceedings which resulted in his conviction. The points urged will be considered in the order in which they are presented.

[1] 1. There was no error committed in denying the motion of defendant to set aside the information filed against him, on the ground that the names of the witnesses for the prosecution were not indorsed thereon. Section 988 of the Penal Code provides that an arraignment is made by "reading the indictment or information to the defendant and delivering to him a true copy thereof, and of the endorsements thereon, including the list of witnesses." This provision must be construed to mean that, if the charge made is contained in an indictment, then the list of witnesses whose names are by section 943 of the Penal Code required to be attached to an indictment shall be furnished to the defendant. The names of witnesses for the prosecution are not required to be indorsed upon an information. Our Supreme Court has so held in the case of People v. Neary, 104 Cal. 377, 37 Pac. 943.

[2] 2. Error is assigned because of the ruling made sustaining the objection of the prosecution to a question asked of a witness as to the natural course of drainage of the lands at and about the place where the shooting occurred. Samuel Talbert was called as a witness by defendant and asked to point out on a map the course of the surface drainage, and replied (evidently pointing to the map): "There is a natural slough running right down here across Mr. Winn's place to the county road. It comes right down back of Mr. Winn's. It comes clear out to the county road." This question was then asked: "Q. How long have you known that natural drainage to be there?" An objection to the question was sustained by the court. Later, and while the same witness was under examination, counsel for defendant offered to show "that the natural drainage of the surface waters which fall upon the lands of Mr. Holyland, and particularly upon the land of the defendant, is in a southerly direction, and that there is a natural drain from the defendant's land upon and through the lands of Mr. G. A. Winn (the deceased), and we offer to show that Mr. Winn built an embankment so as to stop the natural drainage of the water, and that the stoppage of that natural drainage impounded the water upon Mr. Overacker's, the defendant's, land, and caused the same to be overflowed and his crops drowned out and perished." Upon objection again being made by the district attorney, the defendant was refused by the court leave to introduce this testimony. The testimony offered was competent and material. The defendant in his effort to show that he acted in self-defense was entitled to have the whole situation as it tended to furnish a reason for his act in going upon the land of Winn on the morning of January 13th, or his right so to do, shown to the jury. As to which of the two men was the aggressor would depend, in some measure at least, upon the right possessed by each to be in the place where he was, at the time the encounter took place. If Winn was maintaining an unauthorized embankment upon his property which so obstructed the surface water as to prevent it from flowing in a natural way off from the land of his neighbor, and to cause it to become impounded and to overflow the defendant's land, the result of his act would amount to a private nuisance, which defendant would have the right to abate. "A person injured by a private nuisance may abate it by removing, or, if necessary, destroying the thing which constitutes the nuisance, without committing a breach of the peace, or doing unnecessary injury." Civ. Code, § 3502. The refusal of the court to allow defendant to show the things offered to be shown by the witness Talbert was error.

[3] And this error would appear to be of a highly prejudicial character, had not other testimony illustrating the physical contour of the same lands been allowed to be introduced and no evidence having been offered by the prosecution in contradiction thereof. The defendant himself was allowed to testify very fully as to the course of the natural drainage from his land and through Winn's. Witness Charles R. Schenck, a surveyor, was also allowed to testify upon the same subject. It cannot, therefore, be said that the defendant was prejudiced by this ruling of the court.

[4] 3. An objection was sustained to a question asked by defendant's counsel of the witness Samuel Talbert on redirect examination. The question was this: "Q. In order that I may refresh your memory, did he say anything about Mr. Winn's having any trouble with other people?" The witness was here called to testify as to the general reputation of deceased for peace and quiet in the neighborhood in which he lived. He had testified that that reputation was bad. On cross-examination he stated that he had discussed Winn's reputation with a Mr. Farnsworth, who told him of different troubles Winn had had regarding water. On redirect examination he testified that he could not repeat, even in substance, what Farnsworth had said, and the question which was objected to then followed. There was no error in sustaining this objection. The witness had answered as fully as he was able, and had said that he could not, in substance even, tell what Farnsworth had said.

[5] In a discussion occurring between the respective counsel and the court upon the objection last made, the trial judge remarked: "If the witness has talked to others and cannot remember the names, it seems to me it is a very light class of evidence." Exception was taken by defendant to the language of the court. No doubt the remark which in effect was an expression of the opinion of the court as to the weight of the testimony, and therefore improper to be made, was inadvertently uttered, for the trial judge immediately admonished the jury that they were not to consider any remarks of counsel or the court, or any statement of the judge not given in the final instructions. This admonition we must assume was heeded by the members of the jury, and was effective to clear their minds of any prejudicial effect that the court's words might otherwise have had.

[6] 4. There was no error in striking out the testimony of the witness Page as to the general reputation of the deceased for peace and quiet. This witness stated that he had talked with no one until after the tragedy regarding the reputation of Winn for the traits mentioned.

[7] Neither was it error to strike out the affirmative answer of the defendant Overacker to the following question: "Q. Were any of the threats made by Winn communicated to you?" The question included too much. The witness might have been asked properly what threats were communicated to him, and defendant might have followed this testimony up, or preceded it, by showing that such threats were actually made by Winn. Moreover, the defendant was allowed to testify at other points in his examination as to threats shown to have been uttered by Winn which were communicated to him.

[8] It was error for the court to strike out from the answer of defendant, when asked why he shot deceased, the words, "I thought he was ready to start in on the extermination." The entire answer of the witness was as follows: "A. Because he drew his gun on me, and I had in mind his threat to exterminate my family and I thought he was ready to start in on the extermination." Defendant was entitled to tell the jury what his state of mind was at the time he shot deceased. If he believed that he stood in grave danger of suffering death or great bodily injury at the hands of the deceased, and that fear was a reasonable one under all of the circumstances of the case, his plea of necessary self-defense would have been clearly sustained. The jury could get no picture of the operations of defendant's mind unless he told them of his fears, his beliefs, and his mental anxiety, and the reasons for them. Knowing all of these things, then the jury would have furnished them various of the qualities which it was their duty to weigh in determining whether the defendant acted as a reasonable man might have acted under all the circumstances of the case. But by referring to other testimony given by defendant sufficient is found to relieve the action of the court in striking out this testimony of prejudicial effect. The defendant in telling the story of the shooting in the first instance, and speaking of the action of Winn, said: "He [Winn] raised his gun on me, jerked it up quick. Then, of course, I supposed he meant to shoot me." By this answer he sufficiently told the jury what his state of mind was, and in that view the portion of the answer referred to which was stricken out by the court would be merely cumulative.

[9] 5. Prejudice to the substantial rights of defendant is claimed by reason of a number of other rulings of the trial judge on the admissibility of evidence as to the mental condition of the defendant. In all of the instances where testimony as to the opinion of witnesses was asked to be given on the question of the sanity of the defendant and ruled out, whatever may be our opinion as to the competency of such testimony as judged from the written record, it is sufficient to say that the trial judge had the discretion to determine whether the witnesses were intimate acquaintances of defendant or not, and that no plain abuse of that discretion is shown. Estate of Carpenter, 94 Cal. 416, 29 Pac. 1101; People v. Barthleman, 120 Cal. 14, 52 Pac. 112; People v. Lane, 101 Cal. 516, 36 Pac. 16; People v. Schmitt, 106 Cal. 52, 39 Pac. 204. Admitting it to be allowable and competent for witnesses not intimate acquaintances to describe the appearances, actions, and conduct generally of a person whose sanity is questioned, no prejudicial error resulted from the refusal of the court to allow the testimony touching such matters, and found mainly in the depositions of witnesses residing in other counties, to be introduced. These witnesses had known defendant at varying times during 10 to 20 years prior to the date of the shooting of Winn. They had not known him for a long series of years immediately prior to the tragedy. The court had discretion to exclude testimony which was remote in point of time from the date of the homicide. People v. Cord, 157 Cal. 565, 108 Pac. 511.

Other alleged errors occasioned by the admission or rejection of testimony are assigned, but a close and careful examination of the record does not disclose any prejudice to have been worked defendant by reason of any of these rulings, and they may be thus briefly dismissed. There are two remaining questions, however, demanding serious consideration. They are: First. The failure of the court to instruct the jury as to the right of a landowner to have surface water falling upon his land follow its natural course in escaping, even though it run upon and over the land of his neighbor. Second. The ruling of the court in admitting, over the objection of defendant, testimony of a physician wherein the witness said that at the time the first shot was fired the deceased was standing with his left side toward the person shooting at him and with his left hand by his side.

[10] 6. The court refused to give to the jury the following instruction offered by defendant: "You are instructed that when two fields, or pieces of land, are adjacent, and one is lower than the other, the owner of the upper field has a natural easement to have the water that falls upon his land to flow off from the same upon the field below, which is charged with a corresponding servitude, and if you believe from the evidence that the land occupied by or belonging to Gustavus A. Winn, deceased, was adjacent to and lower than the land of the defendant, Overacker, then you are instructed that the land belonging to or occupied by Winn was subject to all the natural flow of water from the land of the defendant, and that the deceased Winn had no legal right to erect embankments, dykes, dams, or levees, whereby the natural flow of the surface water from the land of defendant would be stopped, or in any way to obstruct the flow of said water from the land of the defendant." This instruction correctly stated the law defining the rights of adjacent landowners on the subject of which it treated. It might well have been given. As to whether or not its refusal was rendered harmless depends altogether upon the scope of other instructions which the court did submit to the jury. Among other instructions given by the court was the following: "If you find that at the time the defendant fired the fatal shot that killed the deceased he was being violently attacked by the deceased, and that the circumstances were sufficient to excite the fears of a reasonable man that he was about to suffer death or great bodily harm at the hands of the deceased, and that the defendant acted under the influence of such fears alone, then you must acquit the defendant." By this instruction the jury was told, in effect, that, however they might resolve the circumstances of the case, whatever their finding might be upon the questions of fact, that, if they believed that defendant feared at the time he fired the fatal shots that he was about to suffer death or great bodily injury at the hands of Winn, he was justified in killing him as he did. This instruction assigned to defendant all of the rights he would be entitled to claim, assuming that he went upon the land of Winn on the morning of the tragedy rightfully. The giving of it seems to save the refusal of the court to give the first instruction quoted from having a prejudicial effect. It would have been better, however, after evidence had been admitted showing the course of the storm water upon the lands of the defendant and the deceased, and the various obstructions placed in its way by deceased, to have told the jury what the rights of the respective land owners were, so that the jury might have had a measure to which to apply the evidence in making up their conclusions on the question as to whether or not defendant acted in necessary self-defense.

[11] The view we have taken is adopted with less reluctance than it would have been had the instructions offered by defendant following that which we have first quoted made a complete and correct definition of defendant's rights under the facts therein assumed. Instructions numbered 72 and 73 were to the effect that if Winn, the deceased, erected embankments which caused the surface water falling upon defendant's land to become obstructed and prevented it from flowing away, and that defendant at the time of the deadly encounter was endeavoring to remove the obstruction, he was acting within his legal rights. These instructions omitted the important qualification found in section 3502 of the Civil Code, which gives the right to a person affected by a private nuisance to abate it, where he can do so "without committing a breach of the peace." The defendant should have furnished instructions correct and complete in their declaration of the law. Otherwise he cannot complain of their rejection.

[12] 7. The court erred to the prejudice of the rights of the defendant in admitting testimony given by Dr. Charles D. Ball. This witness, a physician, had seen nothing of the encounter between Overacker and Winn. He performed a post mortem examination upon the body of Winn, and traced the course of the several bullets which entered it. Defendant and his wife had both testified that deceased had a gun, and that he drew it upon defendant before defendant opened fire upon him. Dr. Ball was asked by the district attorney the following question: "Q. I will ask you, doctor, what position must G. A. Winn have been in in relation to the one who fired the shot when he was shot through the left arm and side?" This question touched a matter vital to defendant under his plea of self-defense. It called for a description of the position of the deceased's body when the shot was fired which entered his left arm, and was not a proper subject of expert testimony. Against an objection of defendant, the witness was allowed to answer the question, which he did, saying: "A. Mr. Winn had his left side toward Mr. Overacker, with his left hand by his side, when he received the bullet that struck him first." There was no motion to strike out any portion of the answer. The latter portion thereof, to wit, "the bullet that struck him first," may not have been directly responsive and by the failure of defendant to move to strike it out he waived complaint of that statement. Not so, however, as to those portions which were responsive to the question. The witness' reply was directly responsive when he said: "Mr. Winn had his left side toward Mr. Overacker, with his left hand by his side." That the matter upon which the witness was being examined was not proper to be proved by opinion evidence is established in the following cases: People v. Westlake, 62 Cal. 309; People v. Farley, 124 Cal. 594, 57 Pac.

571; People v. Milner, 122 Cal. 181, 54 Pac. 833. In the case of People v. Durrant, 116 Cal. 217, 48 Pac. 85, it is said: "Where the ultimate conclusion is one to be reached by the jury itself from the facts before it, and the so-called expert evidence is allowed which presents to a jury a conclusion other than that to which they might have arrived, the admission of this improper evidence is tantamount to a declaration by the court that they may set aside their exclusive right of judging and accept the judgment of the expert." In the case under consideration, the autopsy developed the fact that the bullet which entered the left arm and side so entered the left arm midway between the elbow and shoulder joint, passed forward and a little upward, thence out of the arm near the armpit, and across and through the muscles of the left side of the chest and upward into the pectoral muscles. The question proposed to the expert comprehended an inquiry into the position of his body and its members at the time deceased was shot. The evidence as to what the autopsy revealed might have been received by the jury as confirmatory of defendant's statement that, when the first shot was fired, Winn had his gun drawn and aimed. It is possible that the left arm so employed might have received a bullet which would in its course have proceeded as in the manner shown by the autopsy, and the jury might have been warranted in so concluding. The admission of the so-called expert evidence upon the question was, as said in the Durrant Case, tantamount to a declaration by the court that the jury might accept such opinion to the exclusion of their own convictions based upon the evidentiary facts, and therein, in our opinion, lies the prejudicial character of the error.

Upon a retrial, the court will doubtless be careful to see that the defendant's rights under his plea to the charge, especially in the particulars noticed in this opinion, are fully guarded and defined to the jury. While prejudice is not imputed because of several rulings made, we cannot refrain from suggesting that it would be better to avoid the ground for objection altogether by permitting the theories under which defendant sought to have his defense established to be given full illustration to the jury, both by the evidence and in the instructions.

The judgment and order are reversed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; SHAW, J.

15 Cal. App. 728

ANDREEN v. ANDREEN. (Civ. 786.)
(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. March 28, 1911.)

1. DIVORCE (§ 161*)—INTERLOCUTORY DECREE—RIGHT TO SET ASIDE—NOTICE—HEARING.
Under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, authorizing the court to relieve a party from a default judgment, a valid interlocutory decree of divorce rendered on publication of summons, defendant not appearing, cannot be set aside by order made without notice and hearing.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Dec. Dig. § 161.*]

2. DIVORCE (§ 181*)—DECREE—APPEAL—TIME FOR TAKING.

The time to appeal from a decree of divorce runs from the date of its entry.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Dec. Dig. § 181.*]

3. DIVORCE (§ 161*)—INTERLOCUTORY DECREE—TIME FOR APPLICATION TO SET ASIDE.

The time for making a motion under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, authorizing the vacation of judgments, to vacate a default interlocutory decree of divorce, runs from the date of its entry; and, where no motion is made within one year from its entry to vacate it, a final decree entered must be permitted to stand; the right to such a final decree having become absolute at the end of the year.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Dec. Dig. § 161.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; M. H. Hyland, Judge.

Action by Emil F. Andreen against Mary C. Andreen. From an order denying a motion to vacate a final decree, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Karl F. Kennedy, for appellant. Wm. F. James, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal from an order denying a motion to vacate a final decree in an action for divorce.

The plaintiff brought an action against the defendant for a divorce. Jurisdiction of the defendant was acquired by publication of the summons, and, having failed to appear or answer within the time allowed by law, her default was entered, and subsequently, to wit, on October 11, 1907, after trial, the court found that the plaintiff was entitled to a divorce from the defendant, and accordingly on that day an interlocutory decree in his favor was regularly entered.

In April, 1908, defendant learned of the entry of this decree, and, desiring to resist the divorce proceedings, she employed an attorney for that purpose in the month of September following. Immediately prior to October 7, 1908, it appears that defendant's attorney prepared an affidavit of merits and a notice of motion to permit the defendant to answer to the complaint, but that, upon applying for an order shortening the time for the service of such notice of motion, he was advised, it seems, by the trial judge that no showing of merits or notice of motion was necessary to enable the defendant to answer. The attorney, acting upon this advice, failed to serve or file his notice of motion, but instead took a minute order on said 7th day of October, purporting to permit defendant to answer; and on that day an answer, denying the material allegations of the complaint, was in fact served and filed. On October 19, 1908, more than a year having elapsed since the entry of the interlocutory decree, the court, disregarding the answer on file, granted the plaintiff a final decree of divorce.

Subsequently, on December 31, 1908, the defendant moved to set aside the final decree on the ground that she "was surprised by the action of the court in granting the final decree, and upon the ground that the final decree was void for the reason that the interlocutory decree had been set aside and vacated." Delay and carelessness characterize all defendant's conduct in this proceeding. According to an affidavit filed on behalf of plaintiff, the defendant knew of the pendency of the action immediately after it was commenced, and was fully advised at that time by her former attorney concerning her rights in the matter. According to her own showing, she knew of the entry of the interlocutory decree in the month of April, about six months after the entry thereof, and failed to seek the aid of counsel until the following September, and she made no proper motion for any purpose until December 31, 1908, more than a month after the final decree was granted and regularly entered. Moreover, the trial judge denied, at least by implication, that he had advised defendant's attorney that no notice of motion to be permitted to file an answer was necessary.

In view of this showing, it might well be held that the defendant was guilty of laches, and therefore not entitled to the benefit of the clause of section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure hereinafter quoted. Hoffman v. Superior Court, 151 Cal. 386, 90 Pac. 939; Zobel v. Zobel, 151 Cal. 98, 90 Pac. 191. But we will pass this point without deciding it.

Coming now to the last ground of the motion, namely, that the final decree was void for the reason that the interlocutory decree had been set aside and vacated, this interlocutory decree was never in terms set aside. [1] But, even if it be conceded that the filing of an answer with the permission of the court was in effect tantamount to an order vacating this decree, still such order would be void, having been made without notice to the plaintiff. Certain it is that a decree valid on its face cannot be set aside without notice and a hearing. Section 473, Code Civ. Proc.; Vallejo v. Green, 16 Cal. 160; Reilly v. Ruddock, 41 Cal. 312; Sutton v. McMillan, 72 N. C. 102; Lyon v. McMillan, 72 N. C. 392; Irvine v. Davy, 88 Cal. 495, 26 Pac. 506.

The other ground of defendant's motion is equally untenable. One of the clauses of section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides as follows: "When from any cause the summons in an action has not been personally served on the defendant, the court may allow, on such terms as may be just, such defendant * * * at any time within one year after the rendition of any judgment in such action, to answer to the merits of the original action." It has been held that, in making a motion under this provision, a showing of mistake, surprise, inadvertence, or excusable neglect is unnecessary. Gray v. Lawlor, 151 Cal. 352, 90 Pac. 691; Holiness Church v. Metropolitan Ass'n, 12 Cal. App. 445, 107 Pac. 633. And defendant would seem to claim that, as the service of summons in this case was constructive, she had one year from the entry of the interlocutory decree within which to move to set it aside; and that, as she failed through an inadvertence to make such a motion in season, she should be entitled to have the final decree vacated, and to file her answer to the complaint. A mere statement of her position seems destructive of her contention. However, we will briefly consider it.

[2, 3] The time for taking an appeal from a decree of divorce, or for making a motion under the provisions of said section 473 to vacate the same, runs from the date of its entry. Claudius v. Melvin, 146 Cal. 257, 79 Pac. 897; Deyoe v. Superior Court, 140 Cal. 476, 74 Pac. 28, 98 Am. St. Rep. 73; Reed v. Reed, 9 Cal. App. 748, 100 Pac. 897; Pereira v. Pereira, 156 Cal. 1, 103 Pac. 488, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 880, 134 Am. St. Rep. 107. In this case no motion was made at all, or within one year from the entry of the interlocutory decree, to vacate the same; hence the final decree must be permitted to stand. But in conclusion, assuming that the final decree was entered against the defendant through her excusable neglect, still the setting of it aside would serve no purpose; for the year from the entry of the interlocutory decree having run, and no motion having been made to vacate it, the plaintiff would be absolutely entitled to the final decree. Section 473 provides the circumstances and the time within which a party, having suffered a judgment of default to be entered against him, may have such judgment vacated and be permitted to answer. Here the defendant utterly failed to bring her case within the provisions of that section, and the trial court committed no error in denying her motion.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; HALL, J.

HAGERTY v. CONLAN. (Civ. 820.)

15 Cal. App. 643

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. March 21, 1911.)

1. ELECTIONS (§ 280*)—CONTEST—JURISDICTION—SERVICE OF CITATION—ALIAS CITATION.

The superior court having, by the filing of a statement of an election contest, acquired jurisdiction of the subject-matter, had power to acquire jurisdiction of contestee's person by the issuance and service of an alias citation, where the original citation was not properly served on him.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Elections, Cent. Dig. § 264; Dec. Dig. § 280.*]

2. ELECTIONS (§ 276*)—CONTEST—PROCEEDINGS—HEARING—TIME—ISSUANCE OF ORDER—“THEREUPON.”

Code Civ. Proc. § 1118, providing that within five days after the time for filing statements in election contests the county clerk must notify the superior court of statements filed, and it shall “thereupon” order a special session on a day not less than 10 nor more than 20 days from the date of the order, is not mandatory in the sense that the order must be issued upon the same day the court is notified of the contest, the word “thereupon” not necessarily meaning “immediately”; so that, where the sheriff failed to serve citation upon contestee as prescribed by statute, the court could vacate the original order calling a special session and make another, designating a day for hearing the contest after issuance of an alias citation; Code Civ. Proc. § 1121, giving it all powers necessary to a determination of the contest.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Elections, Cent. Dig. § 304; Dec. Dig. § 276.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 8, pp. 6953-6955.]

3. ELECTIONS (§ 278*)—CONTEST—CONTINUANCE OF PROCEEDINGS.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1118, provides that within five days after the time for filing statements in election contests the county clerk must notify the superior court of statements filed, when it shall thereupon order a special session to be held on a day not less than 10 nor more than 20 days from the date of the order. January 3d was designated as the date for hearing an election contest, and on January 6th an order was made continuing the hearing to January 7th, after which the hearing was suspended pending the determination by the appellate court of the trial court's power to proceed, and, after the appellate court's decision, the only matters considered before the judgment of dismissal was rendered on January 24th were the motion to dismiss and contestant's application for an alias citation. Held, that the fact that such matters were finally decided after the expiration of 20 days from the date set for hearing did not operate as a continuance of the contest beyond the time fixed by the statute; since neither the failure of the sheriff to properly serve citation nor the inaction of the court can deprive contestant of the right to be heard.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Elections, Dec. Dig. § 278.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank J. Murasky, Judge.

Election contest by William R. Hagerty against Charles T. Conlan. From a judgment dismissing the proceeding, contestant appeals. Reversed for further proceedings.

C. L. Dam, George Appell, E. F. Moran, A. L. O'Grady, and Geo. F. Snyder, for appellant. Edward Lande, for respondent.

LENNON, P. J. This is an appeal upon a bill of exceptions from a judgment of dismissal.

Charles T. Conlan, the respondent herein, was on the 22d day of November, 1909, declared to have been elected judge of the police court of the city and county of San Francisco. On the 1st day of December, 1909, the appellant, an elector of said city and county, instituted proceedings in the superior court, under the provisions of part 3, tit. 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure, contesting the right of respondent to the office. The court thereupon designated the 3d day of January, 1910, as the time for a special session of the court to hear and determine the contest. On the 27th day of December, 1909, the clerk of the court issued a citation, directed to respondent, commanding him to appear at the special session of the court on the day designated, and answer appellant's statement of contest. This citation was delivered to the sheriff of the city and county of San Francisco, and it was returned as having been served upon respondent by leaving a copy thereof at his last known place of residence. On January 3, 1910, the day previously designated by the court for the holding of a special session, respondent, without submitting to the jurisdiction of the court, appeared specially, and in open court filed a written notice of motion to dismiss the proceedings, upon the ground that the citation had not been served in the manner required by section 1119 of the Code of Civil Procedure. On the 6th day of January, 1910, the motion to dismiss was heard, and the trial court found that “the service was not in conformity with that section of the Code providing for a citation” in cases of this character. The court, however, was of the opinion that the citation required by section 1119 of the Code of Civil Procedure was in the nature of a subpoena rather than a summons, and, as the contestee was personally present in court, no further citation was necessary. The motion to dismiss was denied, and the hearing of the contest was formally continued to the following day, January 7, 1910. Thereupon respondent applied to this court for and received an alternative writ of prohibition, directed to the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, commanding it to show cause on a day certain why it should not be prohibited from hearing said cause. Pending the hearing and determination of the alternative writ of prohibition, all proceedings in the matter of the contest were stayed by order of this court, upon the theory that the failure of the sheriff to serve the citation in the manner and within the time required by law divested the superior court of jurisdiction to hear and determine the contest, or make any further order in the premises.

There was pending in the said superior court at the same time the contest in question was instituted another contest between Fred L. Hilmer et al. and Thomas P. O'Dowd for the office of supervisor of the city and county of San Francisco. The service of the citation in this latter contest, as in the case at bar, was by the trial court declared to be fatally defective. Both contests had been consolidated, and were to be heard together, when O'Dowd made application to this court for an alternative writ of prohibition directed to said superior court, which was granted; and later, on January 18, 1910, the said superior court was peremptorily prohibited by this court from proceeding in the contest against him for precisely the same reasons given in the case of Conlan upon the issuance of the alternative writ of prohibition therein. On January 18, 1910, Charles T. Conlan, the respondent herein, orally moved the said superior court to vacate the order of January 6, 1910, denying his motion to dismiss the contest against him, and in lieu thereof, to enter an order granting a dismissal of said contest. This oral motion was made and based upon the opinion of this court, rendered in the O'Dowd Case, that the trial court did not have jurisdiction to entertain the proceedings, and upon all of the grounds theretofore specified in the written notice of motion to dismiss. This motion to vacate and then dismiss was resisted by appellant, and at the same time appellant requested the court to issue an alias citation. The motion was submitted to the court for decision on the date of its making, and thereafter on January 24, 1910, the following order was entered upon the minutes of the court: "In this action it is ordered by the court that the order heretofore made, denying motion to dismiss proceedings, be and the same is hereby set aside. It is further ordered that the motion to dismiss proceedings be, and the same is hereby, granted, and that judgment of dismissal be entered." On the 25th day of January, 1910, the trial court denied appellant's application for an order directing the issuance of an alias citation, "upon the ground that the issuance and service of an alias citation would necessitate a continuance of said proceeding, and that said court had no jurisdiction or authority to grant a further continuance of said proceeding." In the judgment which was subsequently entered upon this minute order, it is recited that "Charles T. Conlan * * * having moved this court in writing to dismiss the above-entitled proceeding upon the grounds enumerated in said written motion, and among others because of the want of jurisdiction of this court in the premises; * * * and the court having taken said motion under advisement and thereafter denied the same, and in the meantime the District Court of Appeal in and for the First Appellate District having pronounced the law in election contest cases with respect to the nature and mode of service of citation in election contests; and * * * the attorneys for said Charles T. Conlan having thereafter moved this court * * * to vacate and set aside the said order denying said motion to dismiss, and to grant said respondent's motion upon all of the grounds, affidavits, and records and showing upon which said motion to dismiss had first been made, as aforesaid, * * * and now being fully advised in the premises—it is by the court ordered that said motion to vacate and set aside said order denying said motion first made herein be granted; * * * that said proceeding be dismissed, and the said motion to dismiss the same is hereby granted. * * *

On the 18th day of March, 1910, upon the petition of Hilmer, the contestant in the O'Dowd Case, the proceedings in that case had in this court, wherein a peremptory writ of prohibition was granted, were transferred for rehearing and decision to the Supreme Court of the state. Upon the rehearing there O'Dowd's application for a writ of prohibition was denied on October 28, 1910.

On this rehearing of the O'Dowd Case it was held and finally decided by the Supreme Court that the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco acquired jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the contest by the filing of the statement of contest within the prescribed statutory time; that the provisions of section 1119, Code of Civil Procedure, are simply directory, and therefore could not be construed as a limitation upon the jurisdiction of the trial court; that, under the provisions of section 1121 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the trial court was invested with jurisdiction when it appeared that, without any fault on the part of the contestant, there had been a failure to serve the citation in the manner and within the time prescribed by law, to continue the hearing of the contest for a period not further than twenty days from the date designated by the court for the hearing of the contest, and order another citation to issue for service upon the contestee; and, finally, that "a reasonable construction of the provisions relative to contests of election requires the conclusion that mere failure of the sheriff to serve the citation on the party whose office is contested in due form or at all before the day fixed for the hearing did not affect the jurisdiction of the court to further entertain the contest against petitioner." O'Dowd v. Superior Court, 111 Pac. 751.

The question of law arising out of the facts of this case, as to the jurisdiction of the lower court to proceed with the contest, and now presented to this court upon appeal from the judgment of dismissal is precisely the same as that decided by the Supreme Court upon, substantially, a similar state of facts in the O'Dowd Case on application there for a writ of prohibition.

[1] The decision of the Supreme Court of the question of jurisdiction involved in the O'Dowd Case is decisive of the principal question presented here; and we therefore are compelled to hold that the lower court, having acquired jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the contest upon the filing of appellant's statement of contest, was invested with the power to acquire jurisdiction of the person of the contestee by the issuance and service of an alias citation, notwithstanding the failure of the sheriff to properly serve the original citation. Upon the hearing of the O'Dowd Case, the Supreme Court declined to discuss or decide the effect of the lower court's failure to make, on the day when it first met in special session, or at any time thereafter, an order for the continuance of the proceeding and the issuance of an alias citation, upon the ground that the action of the lower court in that behalf was not involved in the petition for a writ of prohibition and could not be reviewed in that proceeding. The same question, however, is presented upon this appeal, and must be here decided.

The trial court, in refusing the request of appellant for an alias citation, evidently acted in the belief that section 1118 of the Code of Civil Procedure, with reference to the order fixing a day for the special session, was mandatory rather than directory; that, having once made an order fixing a day for the hearing of the contest, such order could not be changed or superseded by a second order designating another day for the hearing, and the order of dismissal having been made at a period of time more than 20 days distant from January 3, 1910, the day originally set, jurisdiction to hear and determine the contest was exhausted.

Section 1118 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that within five days after the end of the time allowed for filing statements in election contests "the county clerk must notify the superior court of the county or city and county of all statements filed. The court shall thereupon order a special session to be held on some day to be named by it, not less than ten nor more than twenty days from the date of such order. * * *

[2] Notwithstanding the use of the word "thereupon," the requirements of this section, with reference to the time of making the order designating a special session of the court, are not mandatory. "This word 'thereupon' does not of necessity mean 'immediately.'" Cal. Academy of Sciences v. Fletcher, 99 Cal. 210, 33 Pac. 855. As said by the Supreme Court of this state in Porphyry Par. Co. v. Ancker, 104 Cal. 342, 37 Pac. 1052, where the court was considering a section of the street law, in which it is provided that the superintendent of streets shall thereupon cause certain posting to be done, the word refers to the order of time in which the act shall be done, and is not a mandatory regulation requiring immediate performance; that it should follow within a reasonable time is the most that should be claimed." Dudley v. Superior Court, 13 Cal. App. 271, 110 Pac. 146.

The scope and spirit of the reasoning of the Supreme Court in its decision of the O'Dowd Case warrants the conclusion that the failure of the sheriff to serve the original citation in conformity with section 1119 of the Code of Civil Procedure affected only the trial court's power to proceed with the contest upon the day originally designated for the special session of the court, and that the provisions of section 1118 of the Code of Civil Procedure, requiring the court to order a special session, are not mandatory in the sense that such order shall be made upon the same day that the court is notified by the clerk of the institution of the contest. This being so, and the trial court having met in special session, at the time and place originally designated, to hear the contest, it had "all the powers necessary to a determination thereof" (Code Civ. Proc. 1121); and respondent, being a necessary party to a complete determination of the controversy, and not being before the court, could and should have been brought in by an alias citation. For this purpose it would have been competent and proper for the trial court to have vacated the original order calling for a special session, and in lieu thereof made another order designating another day, not less than 10 nor more than 20 days from the date of the second order, when the court would again sit in special session to hear and determine the contest. Thomas v. Van Zandt, 56 Wash. 595, 106 Pac. 141.

As far as the record here discloses, but one order for the continuance of the contest itself was made and entered by the trial court. This was the order made on January 6, 1910, after the motion to dismiss was first heard and determined, continuing the hearing of the contest to the next day, January 7, 1910. From this date on it is apparent that the hearing of the contest upon its merits was suspended pending the determination by this court of the trial court's power to proceed in the premises. After the decision of that question by this court, and until the judgment of dismissal was finally made and entered by the trial court, on January 24, 1910, the only matters considered and continued from day to day by the trial court were the motion to dismiss and appellant's application for an alias citation.

[3] The fact that the trial court continued these matters from time to time for hearing, and finally decided them after the expiration of 20 days from the date originally set for the special session of the court did not operate as a continuance of the contest itself beyond the time prescribed by the statute. The disposition of respondent's motion for a dismissal of the action and appellant's application for an alias citation was exclusively within the control of the trial court. When appellant filed his statement of contest in accordance with the provisions of section 1115 of the Code of Civil Procedure, he had done all that was required of him by the statute; and neither the nonfeasance of the sheriff nor the inaction of the court can avail to deprive appellant of the right to be heard upon his statement of contest.

It will be noted that but one motion to dismiss the proceeding for lack of jurisdiction was made by respondent, and that this motion was presented to the trial court on January 3, 1910, the date originally set for the special session of the court, and this motion was disposed of on January 6, 1910. Thereafter, on January 18, 1910, upon the oral motion of respondent, the trial court vacated and set aside its order of January 6, 1910, denying the motion to dismiss, and thereupon the attorneys for respondent moved the trial court "to grant said respondent's motion (to dismiss) upon all of the grounds, affidavits, records and showing upon which said motion to dismiss had been first made. * * *" On January 24, 1910, the trial court ordered "that said proceeding be dismissed and the said motion to dismiss the same is hereby granted." It is but fair to assume from all that was said and done in the premises that it was the intent and purpose of the trial court and of the parties to the proceeding that the order of dismissal, although made and entered on January 24, 1910, should relate back to and be considered as having been made on January 3, 1910. This interpretation of the situation restores the parties to their original standing before the trial court, and leaves the cause in a position to be proceeded with, upon the court acquiring jurisdiction of the person of respondent, as if the judgment of dismissal had not been rendered.

The judgment is reversed, and the trial court directed to designate another day for a special session of the court; to thereupon issue an alias citation for service upon respondent, and upon a return thereof showing a service in the manner and within the time required by law, to hear and determine the contest.

We concur: KERRIGAN, J.; HALL, J.

15 Cal. App. 726

WALKER et al. v. BEAUMONT LAND & WATER CO. (Civ. 920.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. March 24, 1911.)

1. CARRIERS (§ 316*)—PASSENGERS—NEGLIGENCE—PRESUMPTION.

The presumption of negligence which attaches when a passenger is injured through the use of the carrier's instrumentalities requires defendant to prove that the injury was without negligence on his part by showing an inevitable accident.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 1261, 1262, 1283-1294; Dec. Dig. § 316.*]

2. NEW TRIAL (§ 72*)—INSUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE—DUTY OF TRIAL COURT.

If the trial court believes that a verdict is clearly against the weight of the evidence, it should set it aside, and grant a new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 146-148; Dec. Dig. § 72.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 977*)—NEW TRIAL (§ 6*)—DISCRETION OF TRIAL COURT—GRANTING A NEW TRIAL.

The trial court has a wide discretion in passing on a motion for a new trial, and its ruling will not be disturbed in absence of clear abuse thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3860-3865; Dec. Dig. § 977;* New Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 9, 10; Dec. Dig. § 6.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Riverside County; F. E. Densmore, Judge.

Action by Thomas F. Walker and another against the Beaumont Land & Water Company. From an order setting aside a verdict for plaintiffs and granting a new trial, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Jones & Drake and E. B. Drake, for appellants. Byron Waters, for respondent.

ALLEN, P. J. The action was one by a passenger for damages on account of personal injuries alleged to have been occasioned through the negligence of a common carrier. Upon the trial a verdict resulted in plaintiffs' favor, and the trial court, upon a motion duly made, set aside such verdict and granted a new trial, from which order plaintiffs appeal.

[1] The presumption of negligence which attaches when a passenger is injured through the use of instrumentalities employed by the carrier and under his care requires the defendant to prove that the injury was without negligence on defendant's part, and that the damage or injury has been occasioned by inevitable casualty or by some cause which human foresight could not prevent. Kline v. Santa Barbara, etc., Ry. Co., 150 Cal. 745, 90 Pac. 125. Defendant undertook to perform this duty, and evidence is in the record tending to show that the accident was occasioned by the team, which was drawing the coach in which plaintiff was a passenger, becoming frightened at a loose horse in the highway, and, becoming unmanageable, the coach was upset and the injury resulted. There was evidence further tending to show that the team used by defendant was safe and gentle, the driver competent, experienced, and careful, and the vehicle used fit and proper for the purposes intended. Further, that the driver did all a prudent and careful man would or could do to avert the accident. The trial court in an opinion delivered in connection with the order appealed from, and which is set out in respondent's points and authorities, states as his conclusion that these facts were established and no negligence upon defendant's part was shown.

[2] It is said in Bates v. Howard, 105 Cal. 178, 38 Pac. 715: "The court having heard the evidence, and having had ample opportunity to judge as to the demeanor, manner, and credibility of the witnesses, may, if he is dissatisfied with the verdict, and is of opinion that it is clearly against the weight of evidence, set it aside and grant a new trial." This he may do, even though there be a substantial conflict in the evidence.

[3] A wide discretion reposes in the trial judge in such matters, and, except an abuse is apparent, his judgment will not be disturbed. An examination of the entire record presented upon this appeal convinces us that the trial judge was fully warranted in his conclusion, and his judgment should be affirmed. It is so ordered.

We concur: JAMES, J.; SHAW, J.

159 Cal. 723

KAST v. MILLER & LUX. (Sac. 1,845.)
(Supreme Court of California. May 11, 1911.)

1. ATTORNEY AND CLIENT (§ 72*)—AUTHORITY OF ATTORNEY—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

Evidence in an action by a detective for services held sufficient to show that the authority of defendant's attorney was not limited by Code Civ. Proc. § 283, but that in the prosecution of criminal cases it extended to the employment of the plaintiff as a detective.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Attorney and Client, Dec. Dig. § 72.*]

2. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT (§§ 21, 121*)—CREATION OF RELATION—EVIDENCE OF AGENCY—TESTIMONY OF AGENT.

The fact of agency when it rests in parol may be established by the testimony of the agent himself, and his testimony is admissible and competent to prove the agency and the nature and scope of his authority, and to bind his principal thereby.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Agent, Cent. Dig. §§ 39, 402; Dec. Dig. §§ 21, 121.*]

3. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT (§ 22*)—CREATION OF RELATION—EVIDENCE OF AGENCY—DECLARATIONS OF AGENT.

Declarations in pais by one assuming to act as agent are incompetent to establish the fact of agency.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Agent, Cent. Dig. § 40; Dec. Dig. § 22.*]

4. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT (§ 22*)—AUTHORITY—EMPLOYMENT OF DETECTIVE—ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE.

In an action by a detective for services, an instruction by defendant's attorney on engaging plaintiff to show the evidence he obtained to certain persons, is admissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Agent, Dec. Dig. § 22.*]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1050*)—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

Evidence that defendant's attorney when engaging plaintiff, a detective, and instructing him whom to report to, had stated that he had employed the persons to whom plaintiff was to report, held harmless.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 1050.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Madera County; W. M. Conley, Judge.

Action by C. S. Kast against Miller & Lux. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

F. A. Fee and E. F. Treadwell, for appellant. Robert L. Hargrove and George W. Mordecai, Jr., for respondent.

LORIGAN, J. In an action brought by plaintiff for personal services rendered defendant and for money expended at its special instance and request, a verdict for plaintiff was rendered, and from the judgment entered thereon defendant appeals on a bill of exceptions. Certain cases were being prosecuted in Madera county for the alleged larceny of horses belonging to the defendant Miller & Lux, and that corporation retained Judge Ostrander as an attorney to assist the district attorney of Madera county in the prosecution of these larceny cases. In April, 1908, Judge Ostrander engaged the plaintiff as a detective to gather evidence in behalf of the prosecution in the cases referred to, and to report the results of his efforts to other special counsel likewise employed by Miller & Lux in such cases. The agreement of Ostrander with plaintiff was to pay the latter $5 per day and necessary incidental expenses, and to further pay him the sum of $250 for each conviction secured. The business agent of the defendant, one Shannon, was present when this agreement was made by Ostrander with the plaintiff, though he took no part in making the contract. No claim was made in the answer of defendant that plaintiff had not performed the services for which suit was brought, the defense being that he had not been employed by defendant or by any one authorized by it to make the contract with him upon which he sued. In support of his claim that Judge Ostrander was empowered to make the contract of employment plaintiff called Judge Ostrander himself as a witness, who testified: "I was employed by Henry Miller in person in connection with these grand larceny cases. I knew that he was president and manager of the corporation. * * * As attorney my duties were to take such measures as I deemed expedient for the purpose of legitimately assuming the prosecution of the case." It was further shown that Judge Ostrander paid the plaintiff $20 on account of his employment for which the business agent of the defendant Shannon, reimbursed him, and that Shannon himself paid plaintiff on account of such employment the further sum of $55. It also appeared in the evidence that about the time the contract was made by Ostrander with plaintiff an effort was made by the former to have the employment of plaintiff nominally made by the district attorney of the county of Madera, the services of plaintiff to be paid by Miller & Lux; this employment was suggested to avoid criticism or attack on the plaintiff before the jury as a detective in the special employment of Miller & Lux. In addition to this there was testimony brought out during the presentation of the case of plaintiff tending to show that the only authority given to Ostrander by defendant to employ anybody was limited to the employment of a shorthand reporter. This was practically all the evidence bearing on the authority of Ostrander as agent of Miller & Lux to make the contract with plaintiff and bind the corporation thereby. No evidence at all was offered on behalf of the defendant, it resting its case on the evidence offered by plaintiff.

One of the principal points made by appellant is that the evidence was insufficient to warrant the jury in finding (as they necessarily did by their verdict against defendant) that Ostrander was authorized by defendant to employ the plaintiff, it being insisted that as the evidence showed that Ostrander was simply employed as an attorney for defendant, his power was limited by section 283 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provides that an attorney can only bind his client in any steps of an action by his agreement filed with the clerk or entered in the minutes of the court and not otherwise, and that in order to bind the defendant by contract it was essential for plaintiff to show direct authority conferred on Ostrander to do so, and such authority does not exist where the evidence merely shows the relationship of attorney and client.

[1] But from Judge Ostrander's statement of the purpose of his employment in these cases, and of the authority conferred on him by defendant and his conduct in the matter, we are satisfied that the jury had a right to conclude that such authority embraced the power to employ the plaintiff as a detective. Ostrander's position was something more than that of an attorney representing his client in a single suit in court. He was employed to assist in the prosecution of several criminal cases in which the defendant was interested with a view to securing the conviction of the offenders, and he was invested with authority to take such measures as he deemed expedient "in assuming the prosecution" of these criminal cases. This involved something more than appearing in court as an assistant to the district attorney. It involved on behalf of his clients the taking of all legitimate and proper measures to make the prosecution successful, including, among others, the employment of a detective to seek and obtain evidence, interview witnesses, and take their statements, so that full presentation of the case of the prosecution might be made on the trial. It must, of course, be conceded that the employment of the detective for such a purpose is legitimate, proper, and expedient, and the jury were warranted in finding that under the general discretionary power vested in Ostrander to take such means as he deemed expedient, he had authority to employ the plaintiff as a detective as a measure of expediency.

As bearing, too, on the question whether the employment of plaintiff came within the scope of the authority conferred by defendant on Ostrander according to the latter's statement of the authority conferred on him, is the circumstance that both Ostrander and the business agent of defendant, Shannon, paid plaintiff money under his contract of employment, the payment made by Ostrander being refunded to him by the agent of defendant. It is hardly probable that Ostrander or Shannon would make payment to the plaintiff out of their own funds. On the contrary, the circumstances surrounding the payment would warrant the jury in inferring that they were made from the funds of the defendant. It is to be observed also that while an unsuccessful effort was made on the cross-examination of the witnesses of plaintiff to show that the contract employing plaintiff was entered into at the suggestion of Ostrander with the county of Madera, the payment for the services of plaintiff to be made by Miller & Lux, still the fact that this effort was made by Ostrander to have Madera county contract and Miller & Lux pay, was likewise a circumstance bearing on the claim of plaintiff that authority was conferred on Ostrander in his employment as attorney to bind Miller & Lux in the employment of a detective. Of course, these are not controlling circumstances, but they were proper to be taken into consideration by the jury in determining what in fact was the extent of Ostrander's authority under his own statement of it and illustrated by his conduct. In this view there was certainly evidence presented by plaintiff tending to support his claim of the agency of Ostrander and its sufficiency was a matter for the jury. Aside from this point of the insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict the appellant insists that the court erred in the admission of testimony. As far as this claim involves the proposition that the testimony of Ostrander himself was inadmissible to prove the fact of plaintiff's agency it is untenable.

[2] The rule is well established that the fact of agency when it rests in parol may be established on the trial by the testimony of the agent himself. His testimony is admissible and competent to prove the agency and the nature and scope of his authority and to bind his principal thereby. This is the general, and it may be said, the universal rule. Mechem on Agency, § 101; Parker v. Pond, 121 Ala. 529, 25 South. 898; O'Leary v. German A. Ins. Co., 100 Iowa, 390, 69 N. W. 686; Brown v. Cone, 80 App. Div. 413, 81 N. Y. Supp. 89; Lawall v. Gorman, 180 Pa. 532, 37 Atl. 98, 57 Am. St. Rep. 662; Garber v. Blatchley, 51 W. Va. 147, 41 S. E. 222; New Home S. M. Co. v. Seago, 128 N. C. 158, 38 S. E. 805; Union Hosiery Co. v. Hodgson, 72 N. H. 427, 57 Atl. 384; Nostrum v. Halliday, 39 Neb. 829, 58 N. W. 429, and a host of other authorities that might be cited. It follows therefore that the testimony of Ostrander given on the trial upon the matter of his authority was properly admitted.

[3] While the rule is well established that the testimony of an agent sworn as a witness in a case when the question of his agency is involved is competent to establish it and its extent and nature, as any other witness, it is equally as well established that extrajudicial statements or declarations in pais of one assuming to act as agent are inadmissible and incompetent to establish the fact of agency. To this proposition it is only necessary to cite our own authorities on the subject. People v. Dye, 75 Cal. 108, 16 Pac. 537; Hubback v. Ross, 96 Cal. 426, 31 Pac.

353; Bergtholdt v. Porter Bros., 114 Cal. 681, 46 Pac. 738; Ferris v. Baker, 127 Cal. 520, 59 Pac. 937; Petterson v. Stockton, 134 Cal. 244, 66 Pac. 304.

[4] It is claimed by appellant that this latter rule was violated in the admission of certain testimony. The only testimony to which it is claimed it could apply (because the other testimony of plaintiff the admission of which is complained of in the briefs of appellant appears to have been stricken out by the court on motion of appellant) is the statement of plaintiff that "Mr. Ostrander and Mr. Larew both told me the night they hired me that Mr. Ostrander had hired Mr. Fee and Mr. Larew, and whatever evidence I gathered to show it to them. Those were the instructions." Judge Ostrander lived in Merced county. Mr. Larew and Mr. Fee were attorneys at law, the former residing in Madera county where the prosecutions were pending and where plaintiff also resided. This testimony as far as it relates to the instructions given by Ostrander to plaintiff that he report the result of his investigations to Larew and Fee is open to no objection. In fact, as far as Larew is concerned, the witness had previously testified to the same effect without objection.

[5] But assuming that the rule invoked by appellant was violated in permitting the witness to testify to the further statement of Ostrander that he had employed these persons to whom plaintiff was to report, we do not think that the error was of such a prejudicial character as to warrant a reversal of the cause.

There is nothing further presented on the appeal requiring consideration.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SHAW, J.; MELVIN, J.; SLOSS, J.; HENSHAW, J.

159 Cal. 735

ROGERS DEVELOPMENT CO. v. SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA REAL ESTATE INV. CO. (L. A. 2,633.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 12, 1911.)

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§§ 54, 209, 254*)—EQUITABLE INTERESTS.

A contract purchaser, though in default in payments, had an equitable interest which he could convey, and hence can enforce an agreement by the vendor to repurchase, and assert a lien for the agreed repurchase price.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 85, 425-427, 627-651; Dec. Dig. §§ 54, 209, 254.*]

2. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 187*)—DEFAULT BY PURCHASER—WAIVER.

A contract vendor waived the purchaser's default in payments by agreeing to repurchase.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 374, 375; Dec. Dig. § 187.*]

3. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 209*)—CONTRACT TO REPURCHASE—CONSIDERATION.

A contract purchaser's surrender of possession acquired under the agreement, and his placing a deed in escrow sustain the vendor's agreement to repurchase.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Dec. Dig. § 209.*]

4. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 259*)—VENDOR'S LIEN—WHAT ESTATES AFFECTED.

A vendor's lien is limited to the estate or interest conveyed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 658-663; Dec. Dig. § 259.*]

5. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 274*)—LIEN—FORECLOSURE—COUNTERCLAIM.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 437, authorizing inclusion of a counterclaim in an answer, and under section 438, describing a counterclaim as a cause of action arising from the transaction sued on, in a suit by a contract vendor to foreclose, the purchaser can counterclaim on the vendor's agreement to repurchase and enforce a lien for the repurchase price.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Dec. Dig. § 274.*]

6. JUDGMENT (§ 252*)—CONFORMITY TO PRAYER.

A prayer for general relief entitles one to any relief appropriate to the facts pleaded.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 441, 442; Dec. Dig. § 252.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Riverside County; F. E. Densmore, Judge.

Action by Rogers Development Company against the Southern California Real Estate Investment Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Elmer R. McDowell, E. Earl Crandall, and William Hazlett, for appellant. Purington & Adair, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Plaintiff sued to foreclose agreements for the sale of certain parcels of land, and to recover possession thereof and quiet title thereto, and obtained judgment as prayed for. The defendant appeals from the judgment and from an order denying its motion for a new trial. On September 14, 1906, the plaintiff and defendant executed six separate written agreements constituting parts of one transaction, whereby plaintiff sold to defendant a number of tracts of land containing, in all, 1,154.45 acres, at prices aggregating $154,837.50. The agreements contemplated the subdivision of the land, the sale thereof in smaller parcels by defendant to third persons and the conveyance of such parcels by the plaintiff directly to such purchasers. It was stipulated that certain parts of the purchase money on such sales should be paid to the plaintiff as a condition precedent to such conveyance, and should be credited to the defendant on the prices to be paid by it. The sum of $5,000 was to be paid in cash by the defendant and the balance of the respective prices for the several parcels was to be paid in annual installments thereafter on September 14th of each year. Each of the first five agreements related to a different parcel of land, specifying the price and terms on which it was sold. The sixth agreement applied to the others generally and provided that if defendant paid the $5,000 in cash, and at least $5,000 each year thereafter for five years, and also paid to plaintiff upon the sale of any subdivisions, as contemplated, the portions of the purchase price called for by the particular agreement covering it, so far as the aggregate of such sales exceeded $5,000 annually, then the total price should be reduced to $125,000 and defendant was to have 10 years thereafter to pay the balance of $95,000 out of sales to third persons as provided in the several agreements. The cash payment of $5,000 was made. On September 18, 1906, a parcel was sold for $7,500, all of which was paid to plaintiff, and, by a special agreement, was credited solely on the amounts to become due on the second, third, fourth and fifth agreements. The amounts due thereon, annually, according to the terms of the respective agreements, amounted in all to $7,825. The first agreement required an annual payment of $5,000. It will thus be seen that the $7,500 received by plaintiff was not sufficient to pay the amounts due on the last four agreements on September 14, 1907. Defendant claims that, under the general reduction of price and annual payments provided in the sixth agreement, these sums were proportionally reduced, and that on that basis only $5,000 a year was to be paid on all the agreements and only $3,057.07 annually on the last four agreements, and that therefore the $7,500 was sufficient to pay the amounts due on those agreements for the years 1907 and 1908, and $1,385.86 of the payment for 1909. But, by the terms of the sixth agreement, this reduction was made conditional, and was not to continue in force unless defendant paid the minimum sum of $5,000 on all the agreements, at the expiration of each year. Therefore, since the $3,057.07 of the $7,500 was to be credited only on the annual payments of 1907 on the last four agreements and the balance of that fund was to be reserved for payments of 1908 thereon, the first agreement would be unprovided for. There should have been paid on that agreement the sum of $1,942.93 to make up the $5,000 payment of September 14, 1907, in order to entitle the defendant to the reduction in payments and price provided for. This payment was not made. Two payments, amounting to $115, were made in 1906, on account of sales of small lots. No other payments have ever been made. Consequently, the defendant did not comply with the conditions upon which the reduction in payments depended and thereby it forfeited its rights to such reduction and became bound to pay the full prices agreed on upon all the agreements.

Under these circumstances, the plaintiff and defendant, in July, 1908, entered into a contract whereby plaintiff agreed to purchase of the defendant all the right, title, and interest of the defendant in and to all of the said lands, and to pay therefor the sum of $1,500 as soon as the abstracts of title thereto were satisfactory and a proper deed was made and delivered. The plaintiff was to see that the abstracts of title were satisfactory and the defendant was to execute the deed and place it in escrow with the Citizens' National Bank, to be delivered upon payment of the $1,500. The deed was executed accordingly, its form was approved by plaintiff, and it was delivered in escrow as directed. It is not claimed that the defendant had placed any incumbrance on the land, or that it had parted with any interest it had therein, or otherwise affected the title, but the plaintiff did not have the abstracts of title brought down to date. Plaintiff claims that this devolved on the defendant, but the evidence in the record shows that the plaintiff agreed to attend to it. The defendant alleged the making of this contract and the tender of performance, in its answer and cross-complaint, and prayed judgment for the $1,500, and for general relief. The court found that the answer and cross-complaint in that respect were true. Plaintiff refused to pay the $1,500, or to take the deed. It still remains in escrow for delivery to plaintiff.

[1] Defendant contends that, upon these facts, the court should not have made an absolute decree quieting plaintiff's title, but should have adjudged that defendant was entitled to recover the $1,500, and to have a lien on the lands therefor. We are of the opinion that the defendant was entitled to this relief. It had, under the aforesaid agreements, at the time it made said deed, an equitable interest in the land, which it had the right to convey. We may concede that defendant was then in default in its payments and that the plaintiff might have declared the defendant's interest forfeited by reason of such default. [2] Such default and forfeiture could be waived by plaintiff. The execution of the contract to buy the interest of defendant for $1,500 was a sufficient waiver of the right of plaintiff to declare the forfeiture. [3] There is no merit in the claim that the contract was without consideration. The defendant was in possession of the greater part of the land, holding under the agreements aforesaid. In consequence of this contract of plaintiff to repurchase, defendant gave the possession to plaintiff, and it has ever since retained possession of all the lands. The yielding of possession constituted a sufficient consideration for the contract. Indeed, the mutual stipulations of the parties, that is, the actual conveyance in escrow by one, and the promise by the other to pay the price, both being valid, constituted a sufficient consideration. Siddall v. Clark, 89 Cal. 321, 26 Pac. 829; Van Loben Sels v. Bunnell, 120 Cal. 680, 53 Pac. 266; Rodgers v. Wittenmyer, 88 Cal. 553, 26 Pac. 369; Gallagher v. Equitable, etc., Co., 141 Cal. 707, 75 Pac. 329; 9 Cyc. 323; 6 Am.

& Eng. Ency. of Law, 727. The contract of each in this particular was valid. The agreement of plaintiff to take the interest of the defendant in the land and pay $1,500 therefor was in writing, and the defendant's conveyance, having been duly executed and delivered in escrow, without power of withdrawal by the grantor, was effectual to pass title upon the performance of the conditions by the grantee. Bury v. Young, 98 Cal. 446, 33 Pac. 338, 35 Am. St. Rep. 186; Wittenbrock v. Cass, 110 Cal. 1, 42 Pac. 300; Wilhoit v. Salmon, 146 Cal. 444, 80 Pac. 705; 1 Devlin on Deeds, §§ 321, 327, 328, 333.

[4] The transaction was, in effect, an agreement to rescind the previously executed agreements of sale and to limit and settle the amount to be restored to the defendant as a consequence of such rescission. It also constituted a sale by the defendant of its interest in the land for a price which has not been paid. It is therefore entitled to a vendor's lien for the price on the interest conveyed. Burchard v. Record (Tex.) 17 S. W. 241; Warren v. Fenn, 28 Barb. (N. Y.) 333; Anderson v. Spencer, 51 Miss. 871; White v. Blakemore, 8 Lea (Tenn.) 65; Fry v. Prewett, 56 Miss. 783. These cases and many others hold that the vendor's lien attaches when real property is sold, although the interest sold may be only an equitable estate, or merely a leasehold estate. The lien of a vendor is founded upon the just principle that the vendee ought not to be allowed to keep land unless he pays the price. It follows from this that it attaches only to the estate or interest for which the price was to be paid. If the sale is of an equitable interest, only, and is made to one who already has the legal title, the lien will not attach to the legal estate in fee, but only to the equitable interest or estate which was the subject of the sale. This lien, in the present instance, may not be of much value to the defendant, since the result of its enforcement by foreclosure sale would not be a sale of the fee, but only a sale of the rights which the defendant had under the agreements at the time of the resale, rights which required the payment of large sums of money as a condition of obtaining any benefit. But the lien is not destroyed by the precarious nature of the estate on which it is imposed.

[5, 6] It is also clear that the defendant had the right, under sections 437 and 438, Code of Civil Procedure, to allege this debt and lien as a counterclaim against the plaintiff in this action. The complaint alleges the making of the six agreements, the breach thereof by defendant, and consequent forfeiture of defendant's interest and right in the land. The prayer was for a foreclosure of defendant's rights, for the quieting of plaintiff's title, and for the recovery of possession of the land. Section 438 describes a counterclaim as a cause of action arising out of the transaction set forth in the complaint as the foundation of the plaintiff's claim, or connected with the subject of the action. This claim for the $1,500 and the lien therefor arose out of the previous sale, set forth in the complaint, and the breach of said agreements, alleged therein. It was connected with the subject of the action, being a lien on an interest in the land in controversy. It was not, as defendant claims, a complete bar to the plaintiff's action, but it entitled the defendant to some relief which would qualify to some extent the relief to which plaintiff would otherwise be entitled. The plaintiff is entitled to a decree declaring it to be the owner of the land free from all claim or right of the defendant, except a lien in favor of defendant for $1,500, and interest, upon the equitable estate held by the defendant at the time of the execution of the escrow deed. The defendant is entitled to a personal judgment for the $1,500 and a decree declaring it a lien as aforesaid. It does not pray for any foreclosure of such lien, but the prayer for general relief is a sufficient foundation for any relief appropriate to the facts stated. Doubtless no foreclosure sale will be necessary. There seems to be no necessity for a retrial. The material facts are not in dispute, and they are sufficiently found in the written decision of the court.

The judgment is reversed and the cause is remanded with directions to enter judgment on the findings in accordance with this opinion.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SLOSS, J.

159 Cal. 749

CITY OF MADERA v. MADERA CANAL & IRRIGATION CO. (Sac. 1,801.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 12, 1911.)

1. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 244*)—BRIDGES—CONSTRUCTION—LIABILITIES.

In the absence of statute, a canal constructed across a highway must not interfere with the use of the highway, and a highway constructed across a canal may not interfere with the use of the canal, and hence the public, in the latter case, must bear the expense of building the bridge; the reason being that the acquisition of a subsequent easement does not carry with it the right to injure or destroy a prior one.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Dec. Dig. § 244.*]

2. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 244*)—BRIDGES—CONSTRUCTION—LIABILITIES—STATUTE—"MAINTAIN."

Civ. Code, § 551, which provides that no canal can be laid out, constructed, or maintained so as to obstruct any public highway, and that the one so maintaining or using such a canal must repair the bridges, etc., was enacted in its present form in 1905. Before that it provided that every water or canal corporation must construct and keep in good repair at all times for public use across their canal, flume, etc., all the bridges that the county may require. This section was based on prior statutory provisions, passed nearly half a century before. Pol. Code, § 2694, provides that when highways are laid across canals on public lands those using the canals must prepare them so that the highway may cross without danger, and section 2737, providing penalties for obstructing or injuring highways, contains provisions for bridging ditches which cross pre-existing highways. Held that, in view of these provisions the original act did not impose upon the owners of canals the duty of bridging them whenever the public should lay out a road over them, and that the present section does not impose that duty, for the word "maintain," which is the basis of the claim, should be construed merely as a prohibition against maintaining a canal in such a way that it would injure an existing highway.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Dec. Dig. § 244.*

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 5, pp. 4277-4281; vol. 8, p. 7712.]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Madera County; W. M. Conley, Judge.

Action by the City of Madera against the Madera Canal & Irrigation Company. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

R. E. Rhodes and Francis A. Fee, for appellant. W. H. Davis, Robert L. Hargrove, and George W. Mordecai, Jr., for respondent. Frank H. Short and E. E. Keech, amici curiæ.

SLOSS, J. The city of Madera commenced this action against the defendant to recover the sum of $500, the cost of constructing a bridge across a ditch or canal of said defendant. A demurrer to the complaint was sustained, and judgment entered in favor of the defendant. From this judgment plaintiff appeals.

The complaint shows that since March, 1907, the plaintiff has been a municipal corporation of the sixth class; that the defendant, since 1888, has been a corporation organized under the laws of this state, and during all this time it has been the owner and in the possession of certain canals and ditches and engaged in the business of furnishing through said canals and ditches waters for domestic and other useful purposes. Yosemite avenue, a public street of the city of Madera, crosses one of the main canals or ditches of the defendant at a point within the city limits. The avenue in question "was dedicated, opened and laid out through and across said ditch of said defendant corporation subsequent to the construction of said canal or ditch." It is further alleged that in September, 1907, the board of trustees of the plaintiff ordered and directed that a bridge be constructed on said Yosemite avenue over and across defendant's canal or ditch at a point where the said canal crosses said Yosemite avenue; that the plaintiff made a written demand upon defendant to construct said bridge; that the defendant failed and refused for more than seven days, and ever since has failed and refused to construct said bridge, whereupon the plaintiff constructed a suitable bridge, necessarily expending therefor the sum of $500. The prayer is for judgment against the defendant for said sum of $500.

The plaintiff seeks to support its claim by the provisions of section 551 of the Civil Code. That section reads as follows: "No canal, flume, or other appliance for the conducting of water must be so laid, constructed, or maintained as to obstruct any public highway; and every person or corporation owning, maintaining, operating, or using any such canal, flume, or appliance, crossing or running along any public highway, must construct, maintain, and keep in repair such bridges across the same as may be necessary to the safe and convenient use of such highway by the public; and, on failure so to do, the board of supervisors of the county, after seven days' notice in writing to said person or corporation, may construct or repair such bridge or bridges, and recover of such person or corporation the amount of the expenditure made in so doing."

The principal question presented upon this appeal, and the only one which we find it necessary to consider, is whether or not this section was intended to impose upon the owners of canals, flumes, or other appliances for the conducting of water the duty of constructing and maintaining bridges across the same upon the line of streets or highways laid out and opened after the construction of the canal, flume, or other appliance. The complaint raises this question squarely, and was no doubt framed with the intent of so doing, for it avers ex industria that Yosemite avenue was not laid out until after the construction of the canal or ditch by the defendant.

[1] If there were no statutory provision at all, it would be the duty of one running a canal or a ditch across an existing highway to so construct and maintain such canal or ditch as not to interfere with the use of the highway. The acquisition of a subsequent easement does not carry with it the right to destroy or hamper the exercise of the prior one. But a different situation is presented where, after the construction of a canal or a ditch, the public seeks to lay out roads or streets across or along the line of the ditch. In such cases, the duty of constructing the roads or streets and of overcoming such obstructions as may be found in their path would normally fall upon the public for whose convenience and use the roads or streets are laid out. If a natural water course is encountered and a bridge becomes necessary, the cost of the bridge must be borne by the governmental subdivision charged with the duty of constructing and maintaining the road. Even though the surface of the ground may have been changed from its natural condition, the expense of constructing a road through the land so altered is not, without a statutory provision to that end, thrown upon the owner of the land or the one who has lawfully and properly changed its original condition. City of Denver v. Mullen, 7 Colo. 345, 3 Pac. 693.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Whether or not the Legislature may constitutionally impose upon those who have acquired the right to so conduct water the burden of constructing and maintaining across their ditch or other conduit suitable bridges or other crossings over public roads that may be subsequently established is a question much discussed in the briefs. Most of the cases cited on either side deal with regulations requiring railroads to provide suitable crossings wherever public highways may intersect the right of way. The decided weight of authority favors the view that such requirements may, in the exercise of the police power, be applied to highways established after the construction of the railway. State v. Dist. Ct., 42 Minn. 247, 44 N. W. 7, 7 L. R. A. 121; State v. St. Paul, etc., Co., 98 Minn. 380, 108 N. W. 261, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 298, 120 Am. St. Rep. 581, and cases cited. There is no such perfect analogy between a railroad and a water conduit that considerations affecting the one can for all purposes be safely applied to the other. Whether a statute having the effect which the appellant attributes to section 551 would be valid is a question that is not necessarily answered by a reference to the rulings on enactments governing railroad crossings. But, as we have intimated, our view of the meaning of this section is such as to make it unnecessary to consider this question.

Before passing to a discussion of the interpretation of section 551, we may remark that we shall not here review the various decisions to which we have been cited on the proper construction of statutes requiring railroad or canal companies to construct crossings where the railroad or canal intersects a public highway. Most of the cases dealing with railroads lend some support to the appellant's contention. On the other hand, statutes relating to canals have more often been read as referring only to highways existing when the canal was constructed. This may be due in part to the difference in the subject-matter. Whatever may be the just view of the relation between public highways and railroads, there would seem to be, in natural justice and equity, no compelling reason why the owners of canals or ditches should be burdened with the obligation of constructing bridges to enable the public to cross on the line of a road or street that may, at any future time, be laid out. However this may be, so much depends upon the peculiar phraseology employed in each case that we cannot, in reading our own statute, derive much help from the views expressed by other courts in dealing with different statutes.

[2] Section 551 provides that no canal must be laid out, constructed or maintained

as to obstruct any public highway; and every person or corporation owning, maintaining, operating or using any such canal, crossing or running along any public highway, must construct, maintain, and keep in repair such bridges across the same as may be necessary to the safe and convenient use of such highway by the public. If the first part of the section did not contain the word "maintain"—that is to say, if it provided that no canal must be so laid out or constructed as to obstruct any public highway—there would seem to be little room for the contention that the Legislature intended to impose upon the owner of the canal or other appliance for conducting water, the duty of bridging highways subsequently laid out. We do not think the use of the word "maintain" is sufficient to justify a change in this construction. This word can be given complete effectiveness by making it refer to the duty of the owners with regard to highways existing at the time the canal was constructed. A canal might, in the first instance, be so laid out as not to obstruct an existing highway. It might thereafter, however, get into such condition as to obstruct a highway crossing it. For example, the flow of water might leave deposits in the bed of the canal and so raise the surface of the water so as to impede the use of the highway. The flow of water might be increased so as to make necessary a bridge over a canal or ditch which could theretofore have been forded without danger or inconvenience. The banks of the ditch might be allowed to fall into disrepair. In such cases the public would not be protected in the use of its highway by a mere requirement that the ditch should not be laid or constructed so as to obstruct the highway. The prohibition against "maintaining" it in such manner as not to create an obstruction is necessary to protect the public in the possession of the rights which it enjoyed when the ditch was originally laid out. So limiting the operation of the section to existing highways, a natural and reasonable construction is given to its terms, and every provision contained in it is given due effect.

Section 551 was amended and enacted in its present form in 1905. Theretofore, it read "every water or canal corporation must construct and keep in good repair, at all times, for public use, across their canal, flume or water pipe, all of the bridges that the board of supervisors of the county in which such canal is situated may require, the bridges being on the lines of public highways and necessary for public uses in connection with such highways." This section, which was a part of the original Code, was based upon various prior statutory provisions (St. 1862, p. 541; St. 1869, 1870, p. 660; St. 1871, 1872, p. 732). It is argued by the appellant that these prior enactments plainly showed an intent to require corporations owning ditches, etc., to construct bridges over the same on the line of public highways, whether the highways existed at the time the ditch was laid out or were thereafter opened, and that it is not to be presumed that the Legislature intended to change a policy that had existed for almost half a century. But we think the argument is based upon insufficient premises. It is by no means clear, and it has never been held, that the prior statutes should be so construed as to apply to highways not in existence at the time of the construction of the ditch or canal, and there are strong reasons for holding that they should not be so construed. This view of the meaning of section 551 and its predecessors is fortified by a consideration of other Code provisions. Section 2694 of the Political Code provides that "whenever highways are laid out to cross railroads, canals, or ditches, on public lands, the owners or corporations using the same must, at their own expense, so prepare their roads, canals, or ditches that the public highway may cross the same without danger or delay. And when the right of way for a public highway is obtained through the judgment of any court over any railroad, canal, or ditch, no damages must be awarded for the simple right to cross the same." Here is an enactment dealing specifically with highways laid out after the construction of a canal, ditch, etc. The first sentence of this section has reference only to crossings upon public lands, and its operation and effect have only an incidental bearing upon the present discussion. The second sentence, however, is not so limited, and the plain implication from the language used is that while the railroad, canal, or ditch is subject to crossing by a public road without any compensation for the mere right to cross, the further burden of constructing a bridge or other necessary crossing is not imposed upon the owner of such railroad, canal or ditch, but rests upon the public agency constructing the highway. Section 2737 of the Political Code, too, is in point. See County of Fresno v. Canal Co., 68 Cal. 359, 9 Pac. 309. It contains provisions for bridging ditches which cross public highways, and puts the expense of such bridges upon the person constructing the ditches. The language of this part of the section seems to have reference only to ditches constructed across pre-existing highways, and even in such cases the supervisors are given authority, with the consent of the owners of ditches, to declare such bridges to be public property of the county, and to maintain them at the expense of the county. Reading all these sections together, we think the respondent is right in its contention that the Legislature did not intend to impose upon the owners of ditches or other artificial conduits of water the duty of bridging the same whenever the public, after the construction of the canal, ditch or other conduit, should undertake to lay out a new road across the water conduit. This being so, the complaint stated no cause of action, and the demurrer was rightly sustained.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; MELVIN, J.; LORIGAN, J.; HENSHAW, J.

15 Cal. App. 766

EGAN v. SOUTHERN PAC. CO. (Civ. 924.)
(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. April 3, 1911. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court June 2, 1911.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1001*)—REVIEW—VERDICT—CONCLUSIVENESS.

A verdict will not be disturbed on appeal if there is any evidence to support it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3928; Dec. Dig. § 1001.*]

2. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 137*)—INJURIES TO EMPLOYEES ON TRACK—LOOKOUT.

Where laborers were working on a railroad track, it was negligence for those in charge of a train which was upon a grade above them where it was impossible for the engineer or fireman to see the track to let it down by force of gravity upon the laborers without warning and without a lookout on the rear.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 274; Dec. Dig. § 137.*]

3. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 236*)—INJURIES TO EMPLOYEE ON TRACK—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

Where a laborer on a railroad right of way, upon seeing that a train, which had passed, had stopped some distance away, went back to work, standing outside the rails and not looking at the train again, he was not guilty of contributory negligence, precluding recovery for injuries occasioned by the negligence of those in charge of the train in backing it down upon him without warning, as he had a right to assume that the train would not be backed without warning.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 739, 740; Dec. Dig. § 236.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; W. R. Hervey, Judge.

Action by Martin Egan against the Southern Pacific Company. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

J. W. McKinley and D. C. McGarvin, for appellant. Morton, Riddle & Hollzer, for respondent.

ALLEN, P. J. The action was one by a laborer in defendant's employ for the recovery of damages on account of personal injuries. The plaintiff, an old and experienced track laborer, was employed by defendant and engaged at the time of the accident as a member of a gang repairing defendant's roadbed at a point near a siding. Upon the siding at the time of the accident was a gravel train. A water train of 10 or 12 cars approached the siding, and, when some 400 feet therefrom, the water train was cut in two, and the engine and five or six cars were run up above the point where the siding intersected the main track. The main track was constructed on a 1 per cent. grade from the point where the water train first stopped to and above the siding. The engineer in charge of the water train, when moving up the grade, noticed and saw the men engaged in work upon the track. After the engine with these cars had proceeded up the track to a point above the intersection of the switch with the main track, one of the water cars was detached and under the charge of a brakeman was run down by gravity below the point of the switch, where it was taken up by the engine of the gravel train and attached thereto. While this car was being disposed of, plaintiff discontinued his work upon the track. After the car was taken up by the gravel train engine, plaintiff looked up the track and saw the engine with the four or five remaining cars standing motionless, no one being in sight, except the fireman, who was sitting in the cab door with his feet upon the steps. Plaintiff then resumed his work, standing outside the main track, but with a pick endeavoring to remove stones and earth supporting the ties upon which the rails were laid. While thus engaged in work those in charge of the engine and water cars above plaintiff, without any warning or signal, backed the same down the track, and by reason of the grade no indication of their approach was observed by plaintiff, and no one was upon the rear end of the train thus being backed down to give any warning, nor was any warning given by any one of the approach of the train by bell, whistle, or otherwise. The result was that plaintiff was struck by the rear car thus being backed down and seriously injured. Had plaintiff been apprised of the approach of the train, a single step backward would have removed him from the place of danger. Evidence is in the record tending to establish all of the foregoing facts. A verdict was returned in favor of plaintiff and a judgment rendered thereon, from which judgment and an order denying a new trial defendant appeals.

But two questions are presented by appellant.

[1] The first is a contention that the testimony shows no negligence on defendant's part; and, second, that contributory negligence is shown on the part of plaintiff sufficient to preclude his recovery. Both of these matters were of necessity resolved against appellant by the jury in reaching its verdict, and both are questions of fact, and should not be disturbed if there is any evidence in their support. We are of opinion that under the circumstances connected with the operation of this train negligence was clearly shown. [2] It cannot be said that one in charge of the operation of a railroad train, with knowledge that persons are employed and engaged in work upon the track, is warranted in backing a train, as was done in this instance, without warning and without having any one upon the rear end to observe necessity for warning where, as in this case, it was not possible for the engineer or fireman to see who or what was upon the track over which they were seeking to back the train. It was a negligent operation of the train approaching wantonness.

[3] Nor do we believe that the record discloses contributory negligence upon the part of plaintiff. It cannot be disputed that one familiar with the dangers connected with an employment as a general rule assumes the risks incident thereto, and that a railroad track upon which trains are run is itself a warning to persons of discretion and intelligence of its dangerous character and the necessity for the exercise of care in its use. Applying these rules to plaintiff, however, it is clearly shown that he did look and saw a motionless train a distance from him upon the main track. There was nothing to indicate an intention of immediate action upon the part of those in charge. Plaintiff was there to work, and to this work it was his duty to give attention. Having first exercised his sense of sight and no imminent danger being evident, it was his duty to resume work, and he was rightfully upon the track. If it be said that it is the duty of one thus employed to be constantly exercising his sense of sight, it is the equivalent of saying that he must not work when a train is standing upon the track above him, for he could not work and at the same time observe the approach of the train. One thus employed upon the track occupies a very different position from the pedestrian or stranger entering upon the track and using the same as a thoroughfare or seeking to cross the same. In both instances care and the exercise of the senses are required before entering upon the place of danger, but the duty which devolves upon the one to continue the exercise of his sense of sight should not be held to devolve with the same strictness upon the other employed by the railroad company to work upon such track. Plaintiff, being rightfully upon the track and in the performance of a duty enjoined upon him by the defendant in the exercise of an employment upon said track, had a right to assume that the train would not be backed down upon him without warning, and it should not be said that he contributed to his own injury in the doing of that which his employment required that he should do. Morgan v. Robinson Co., 157 Cal. 348, 107 Pac. 695. The evidence supported the findings implied by the verdict, and we see no error in the action of the court denying a new trial.

Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: JAMES, J.; SHAW, J.

16 Cal. App. 1

SHAW v. CALDWELL et al. (Civ. 807.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 3, 1911. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court June 1, 1911.)

1. MINES AND MINERALS (§ 55*)—CONVEYANCE—DEED—CONSTRUCTION—"MAY."

A bargain and sale deed to a half interest in a mine in consideration of $1 and the doing of necessary assessment work to hold the claim at the grantees' expense also provided that the grantees might work and develop the mine at their own cost, and that all gold or proceeds taken therefrom for 20 years should be divided equally among the parties; that is, each to have one-third thereof. Held, that the provision for working the mine apart from the doing of the assessment work was a mere license to be exercised by the grantees, or not, at their election; the word "may" not being construed to mean "must."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mines and Minerals, Cent. Dig. § 160; Dec. Dig. § 55.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 5, pp. 4418-4447; vol. 8, p. 7719.]

2. MINES AND MINERALS (§ 55*)—CONVEYANCE—CONSTRUCTION—CONDUCT OF PARTIES.

The conduct of the parties to a conveyance of an interest in a mine treating a provision of the deed as an optional license to the grantees to work the mine on shares and not as obliging them to do so will be given effect by the courts in construing the provision in the deed, the terms of which indicate such intention.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mines and Minerals, Cent. Dig. § 160; Dec. Dig. § 55.*]

3. MINES AND MINERALS (§ 55*)—CONVEYANCES—LIMITATIONS—CONDITION SUBSEQUENT.

A conveyance of an interest in a mining claim provided that the grantor did grant, bargain, and sell unto the grantees an undivided half interest in the premises for a consideration of $1, and the required assessment work to be done by the grantees at their own expense. Held, that a subsequent provision that the grantees might work the mine at their own expense, the grantor and grantees sharing equally in the proceeds, was neither a condition subsequent, being no part of the consideration for the deed, nor a limitation on the grantees' estate in the premises.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mines and Minerals, Cent. Dig. §§ 159-161; Dec. Dig. § 55.*]

4. LICENSES (§ 44*)—WHAT CONSTITUTES—"LEASE" DISTINGUISHED.

A license in respect to real estate is an authority to do a particular act or series of acts on the land of another without possessing an estate therein. The test to determine whether an agreement for the use of real estate is a license or a lease is whether the contract gives exclusive use of the premises against all the world, including the owner, in which case it is a lease, or whether it merely confers a privilege to occupy under the owner, in which case it is a license, the question to be determined by a construction of the instrument.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Licenses, Cent. Dig. § 98; Dec. Dig. § 44.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 5, pp. 4043-4049; vol. 8, pp. 7702, 7703; vol. 5, pp. 4133-4141; vol. 8, p. 7706.]

5. MINES AND MINERALS (§ 84*)—LICENSE—REVOCATION.

Where a deed to an interest in a mine contained a provision that the grantees might work the mine on shares, the grantor was entitled to his share of the proceeds in case the grantees elected to work the mine under their license, which, so far as the grantor's remaining interest was concerned, was revocable at his pleasure, being a mere personal privilege, and not a covenant running with the land.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mines and Minerals, Cent. Dig. § 213; Dec. Dig. § 84.*]

6. LICENSES (§ 58*)—CREATION—REVOCATION.

A license, being a mere personal privilege, is revocable at the will of the licensor, whether created by deed or other written instrument.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Licenses, Cent. Dig. §§ 116-120; Dec. Dig. § 58.*]

7. MINES AND MINERALS (§ 84*)—LICENSE—REVOCATION—CONVEYANCE TO ANOTHER.

Where the owner of a mine conveyed an interest therein and provided in the deed that the grantees might work the mine on shares at their option, the license so acquired by the grantees in so far as the owner's remaining interest in the mine was concerned, being a personal privilege, was revoked by a subsequent conveyance of such remaining interest to another.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mines and Minerals, Cent. Dig. § 213; Dec. Dig. § 84.*]

8. ESTOPPEL (§ 23*)—DEED—WARRANTY AGAINST INCUMBRANCE—EFFECT.

Where the owner of a mine having conveyed a half interest therein conveyed his remaining interest, and warranted by his deed that he had not conveyed any interest in his part of the property to any one and had not suffered any incumbrance to attach thereto, he could not thereafter claim that he had previously given the grantees in his first deed the right to the exclusive possession of the whole mine for a term of 20 years by a provision in their deed authorizing them to work the mine on shares.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Estoppel, Cent. Dig. §§ 52-60; Dec. Dig. § 23.*]

9. ESTOPPEL (§ 23*)—DEED—RESERVATION—RIGHTS OF GRANTOR.

Where a mineowner conveyed his remaining interest by a warranty deed reciting that he did grant, etc., all his interest, the same being a one-half undivided interest in and to the property, but, in addition, specified that it included all the dips, spurs, and angles, and all the metals, ores, gold and silver bearing rock and earth therein, and all rights, privileges, and franchises thereto belonging, and the rents, issues, and profits thereof, he could not thereafter assert that he was still the owner of an interest in the property by an alleged reservation in a former deed to the other half of the property by which the grantees in that deed were authorized to work the mine on shares.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Estoppel, Cent. Dig. §§ 52-60; Dec. Dig. § 23.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Tuolumne County; G. W. Nicol, Judge.

Action by Herbert Shaw against E. F. Caldwell and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants E. F. Caldwell and Martha Caldwell appeal. Reversed.

J. C. Webster, for appellants. J. B. Curtin, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. On February 5, 1904, plaintiff was the owner of the Hunter Creek mine. On said date, by a grant, bargain, and sale deed, he conveyed to E. Caldwell and E. F. Caldwell "an undivided one-half interest in and to" said mine. It is recited in said deed that it was "for and in consideration of one dollar to him in hand paid by the parties of the second part," and also "it being one of the considerations of this conveyance that said parties of the second part will, during the period in which the party of the first part shall be the owner of the remaining one-half of said mine, do and perform at their own cost and expense all work required to be done upon said mine in order to comply with the provisions of section 2324 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and, should they fail at any time so to do, then the party of the first part shall be entitled to have said one-half interest in said mine as hereby conveyed, reconveyed to him, and the parties of the second part shall thereafter have no interest in said mine." The deed likewise contained this clause: "It is furthermore agreed that the parties of the second part may work and develop said mine at their own cost and expense and all gold or proceeds taken therefrom for a period of twenty years from date hereof shall be divided equally among the parties hereto, that is to say, each party hereto shall have one-third of said proceeds." On the 24th day of January, 1906, for a consideration of $100, plaintiff sold and conveyed to one Thomas Armstrong "all of his right, title and interest, same being a one-half undivided interest, of, in and to" said mine, and, prior to the beginning of this action defendant, D. J. Sutton, by mesne conveyances, had succeeded to this interest. On the 28th day of July, 1906, the said E. Caldwell conveyed all of his interest in said property to defendant Martha Caldwell. No gold was taken out of the mine until after the conveyance by plaintiff to Armstrong as aforesaid, and the action was brought to recover one-third of the proceeds of the development of the mine from and subsequent to July 30, 1906. The court found that the said agreement as to the division of the proceeds of the mine is still in full force and effect, and that "plaintiff is entitled to have paid over to him by defendants E. F. Caldwell and Martha Caldwell one-third of all gold and proceeds derived from operating and working the mine for a period of 20 years from and after the 5th day of February, 1904," and, upon an account taken, it was determined that at the time of the trial there was due, under this agreement, the sum of $72.30, for which amount judgment was entered for plaintiff. From this judgment, the appeal is taken by defendants E. F. Caldwell and Martha Caldwell.

[1] The decisive factor in the case is the construction of said agreement as to the development of the mine and the division of the proceeds. By appellants it is contended that this constitutes a mere permission or license to work the property at their own expense, which might be exercised or not by the Caldwells, and which was in fact never exercised until it was revoked by the plaintiff when he executed the said conveyance to Armstrong. This seems to be in entire accord with the natural and ordinary signification of the terms employed. It is to be observed that the agreement is "that the parties of the second part may work and develop said mine at their own cost and expense." More apt words could hardly have been selected to empower the parties of the second part to exercise a choice in the matter. It is not made imperative, and there is no agreement on their part that they will work the mine at their own expense. The only obligation imposed upon them is that concerning the division of the proceeds as aforesaid in case they exercise their discretion to so develop the mine. It is true that "may" is sometimes construed as "must," but this is only for the purpose of effectuating the intention of the parties. There does not appear to be any reason why we should depart here from the ordinary meaning of the terms employed.

[2] On the other hand, several circumstances seem to concur in support of the natural interpretation of the language found in said agreement. One of these circumstances is the conduct of the parties themselves. Admittedly for two years no effect was given to this provision. Plaintiff worked the mine, in connection with the other parties to the agreement, and there seems to have been no contention that the latter were required to operate it at their own expense. In other words, the parties, by their actions, interpreted the contract as permissive merely. Again, the only other possible view of the provision is that it was intended as a part of the consideration for the conveyance of one-half of the mine to said parties, or that it constitutes a limitation upon the estate conveyed to the latter.

[3] As to the former contention, it may be said that there is nothing in the deed itself to show that it was a part of the consideration, and it seems unreasonable to conclude that it should be so held. Indeed, the consideration is mentioned expressly as $1 and the assessment work to be done by the grantees. Thereby, in accordance with a familiar rule of construction, must the provision before us be deemed no part of the consideration for said conveyance. Furthermore, it may be urged that the performance of the assessment work seems to have been sufficient compensation for one-half of the mine, and it may be added that, since the grantees were entitled to one-half of the proceeds by virtue of the said conveyance, the additional award of one-sixth could hardly have been considered more than sufficient to reimburse them for the labor and expense of the development of plaintiff's portion of the mine.

Likewise, we fail to see anything in the language used or the surrounding circumstances to indicate any purpose to impose any condition upon the estate conveyed to the grantees. By the formal terms employed in the granting clause, plaintiff did "grant, bargain and sell" to said grantees an undivided one-half interest in said premises, "together with all and singular the tenements and appurtenances thereto belonging or otherwise appertaining." The fee thereby conveyed could only be reduced or qualified by language equally plain. Nothing of the kind is found. Indeed, if the agreement in controversy be regarded as a part of the consideration, it cannot be deemed as creating a condition subsequent or modifying in any degree the estate conveyed. In Hartman v. Reed, 50 Cal. 485, it is held that "if one conveys to another a tract of land, part of a Mexican grant, in consideration of an agreement by the other to prosecute the claim before the courts for final confirmation, and the grantee fails to fulfill his agreement, the title vests absolutely and the remedy of the grantor for the breach of the agreement is an action for damages."

In Lawrence v. Gayetty, 78 Cal. 126, 20 Pac. 382, 12 Am. St. Rep. 29, the consideration was the promise to make valuable improvements, and the court said: "It must be borne in mind that the plaintiff did not contract to convey upon the performance of the contract on the part of the defendants. Therefore his promise was not dependent upon theirs, nor was there anything appearing in the deed, or in the contract under which it was made, showing or tending to show that a compliance with their promise was regarded as a condition subsequent, or that a failure to perform on their part should in any way affect the title conveyed to them. The case is precisely in principle the same as if the plaintiff had conveyed and taken a note for the purchase money, and the defendants had failed to pay the same." In Cullen v. Sprigg, 83 Cal. 56, 23 Pac. 222, it is held that "the recital in a deed that it is in consideration of a certain sum and that the grantee is to do certain things is not an estate upon condition, not being in terms upon condition, nor containing a clause of re-entry or forfeiture." To the same effect is Behlow v. Southern Pac. R. R. Co., 130 Cal. 16, 62 Pac. 295, wherein the familiar doctrine is asserted that "conditions subsequent, especially when relied on to work a forfeiture, must be created by express terms or clear implication and are to be construed strictly against a forfeiture which is not favored in law." It is held, further, that "a provision in the deed by which the railway company agrees, as a further consideration of the grant, to place two stations at a location to be selected by the grantor, at which all trains must stop, is not a condition upon which the estate is granted and is not available to defeat the estate created by the grant, but is merely a personal covenant on the part of the grantee."

[4] The situation is clearly brought within the definition of a license in respect to real estate, which is an authority to do a particular act or series of acts upon the land of another without possessing an estate therein. 25 Cyc. 640. The test to determine whether an agreement for the use of real estate is a license or a lease is whether the contract gives exclusive possession of the premises against all the world, including the owner, in which case it is a lease, or whether it merely confers a privilege to occupy under the owner, in which case it is a license, and this is a question of law arising out of the construction of the instrument. Id.

It is said in Wheeler et al. v. West et al., 71 Cal. 126, 11 Pac. 871: "There is a broad distinction between a lease of a mine, under which the lessee enters into possession and takes an estate in the property, and a license to work the same mine. In the latter case the licensee has no permanent interest in the property, or estate in the land itself, but only in the proceeds, and in such proceeds, not as realty but as personal property; and his possession, like that of an individual under a contract with the owner of land to cut timber or harvest a crop of potatoes thereon for a share of the proceeds, is the possession of the owner." This license granted to the said parties affected, of course, only the one-half interest belonging to plaintiff, as their ownership of the other half carried with it necessarily the right of possession and development.

[5] As to the plaintiff, his right under the provision in question was to insist upon one-third of the proceeds of the mine in case the licensees exercised their option, and it was his privilege to revoke the license at his pleasure. The license was in fact revoked by his said conveyance to Armstrong. This necessarily follows from the nature of a license. It being a mere personal privilege, it is not, of course, a covenant running with the land, it does not bind, therefore, the successors in interest of the parties, and it would be manifestly inequitable to allow the plaintiff to enjoy the benefits of the agreement when he had deprived the other parties of the reciprocal privilege conferred by said provision.

[6] "A license is founded upon personal confidences, a mere personal privilege extending to the person to whom it is given, and is therefore not assignable and an attempt to assign terminates the privilege." "A mere license, which is nothing more than a personal privilege, is revocable at the pleasure of the licensor, and the fact that the license was created by a written instrument, or even conferred by deed, does not affect the rule of revocability at the option of the licensor." 25 Cyc. 644. "A license may be revoked by a sale and conveyance of the land without reserving the privilege to the licensee or by a lease or mortgage of the same, for a mere license cannot work a breach of the warranty of title." 25 Cyc. 650.

[7] The foregoing is undoubtedly the view of the situation taken by plaintiff when he executed said deed to Armstrong. The following covenants were therein implied: "(1) That previous to the time of the execution of such conveyance the grantor has not conveyed the same estate, or any right, title, or interest therein, to any person other than the grantee. (2) That such estate is at the time of the execution of such conveyance free from incumbrance done, made, or suffered by the grantor, or any person claiming under him." Section 1113, Civ. Code. According to respondent's theory of the case, he had previously conferred upon said grantees the right to the exclusive possession of the whole of said land for the term of twenty years and he comes into court insisting that they now have such right.

[8] He cannot do this in the face of his warranty that he had not conveyed any interest in his part of the property to any one, and had not suffered any incumbrance to attach to it. But it is insisted that Armstrong had notice of the previous conveyance, and therefore he took the estate subject to the previously imposed burden.

[9] Manifestly this would be of material significance if the former grantees were asserting some interest in the estate apparently conveyed by plaintiff to Armstrong, but it would require a long search to find an authority holding that the grantor of such a conveyance would be heard to assert that he was still the owner of an interest by virtue of a reservation in a former deed. By the said conveyance, the plaintiff does not only "grant, bargain, sell, remise, release, and forever quitclaim unto the said party of the second part, and to his heirs and assigns, all of his right, title and interest, same being a one-half undivided interest in and to" said property, but he specifies "together with all the dips, spurs and angles and also all the metals, ores, gold and silver bearing rock, quartz rock and earth therein; and all the rights, privileges and franchises thereto incident, appendant and appurtenant or therewith usually had and enjoyed, and also all and singular the tenements, hereditaments and appurtenances thereto belonging or in any wise appertaining, and the rents, issues and profits thereof." It is needless to add that, in view of the foregoing recitals, it is a conclusive presumption against the plaintiff that he was at the time the absolute owner of an undivided one-half interest in said mine. Subdivision 2, § 1962, Code Civ. Proc.

Nor can it be claimed that this is a circumstance of no concern to appellants. They have recognized the said provision as conferring simply a personal privilege, and therefore, considering it revoked by the said deed from plaintiff to Armstrong, they cannot consistently dispute the right of Armstrong's grantee to one-half of the proceeds of the mine. Under respondent's contention, they must unquestionably yield to him two-thirds of the balance, and be content with one-sixth of what the mine yields.

The case upon which respondent principally relies is Downing v. Rademacher, 133 Cal. 220, 65 Pac. 385, 85 Am. St. Rep. 160. Therein it is held, as stated in the syllabus, that "where the owner of a mine deeded two-thirds thereof, the sole consideration of which was a contemporaneous written agreement reciting its execution and agreeing that the grantee should have the exclusive right to work the mine, and should mill and reduce all ores taken therefrom, and deliver one-third of all minerals to the grantor, the deed and agreement constitute one instrument as between the parties and grantees with notice, and must be read as though each referred to the other and incorporated its terms; and the deed is in effect subject to the conditions set forth in the agreement." It is to be observed as to that case that the contract entered into was the sole consideration for the deed, there was an entire failure of such consideration, and the court held that the circumstances showed that the grant of the mine was conditional. From another standpoint the conclusion of the court is shown to be just and equitable. Downing brought suit to quiet his title. This, as well settled, is an equitable action. The circumstances of the case made peculiarly applicable the maxim that "he who seeks equity must do equity." It is indeed strange that it should be contended that a plaintiff declining to pay any part of the consideration or to meet his obligation imposed thereby could obtain from a court of equity a decree establishing his title without being required, as a condition precedent, to perform his promise, by virtue of which the conveyance to him had been made. As stated in the Downing Case by the late Mr. Justice Temple: "As between the parties, at least, there is no such magic in a conveyance of a title in fee which can be used to do an owner out of his property."

The cases from other jurisdictions cited by the court in the Downing Case also exhibit a situation totally different from what we have here. For instance, in Richter v. Richter, 111 Ind. 456, 12 N. E. 698, the real consideration was a contemporaneous agreement in writing by the terms of which the son agreed to support his father so long as he should live. A few months afterwards the son refused to perform this contract. The father brought suit for a reconveyance. The defense was that the consideration for the deed was the agreement, and the only remedy the father had was to sue upon it. But the court, applying the familiar doctrine that, "in the construction of deeds as in construing other writings, courts seek to ascertain and give effect to the real intention of the parties as such intention may be gathered from the language of the whole instrument," reached the just conclusion that the parties intended that the estate should be held and enjoyed on condition that the grantee perform the acts specified and therefore that it was a conditional estate. So in Manning v. Frazier, 96 Ill. 279, the defendant entered into a written contract with John R. Squire and O. D. Payne by which he, in consideration of $1 and the agreements contained in the contract, bargained, sold, and conveyed to them, their heirs and assigns, all of the coal, limestone, iron ore, rock oil, and other minerals in, upon, or under a certain farm or tract of land which was particularly described, and contains 700 acres. The deed granted to them the right to enter upon and search for such minerals, and to dig, mine, explore, and occupy with necessary structures and buildings, and to mine and remove the coal, limestone, etc. And the parties of the second part were bound to enter upon and make search for coal, etc., within two years from that date. They were also bound to have preparations made for taking out coal for market within two years, and they were to pay to the party of the first part 12 cents for each ton of coal and limestone mined and removed from the land, and for ore 10 cents per ton, payments to be made quarterly. The only questions decided were that the transaction amounted to a sale of real estate and that the grantor had a vendor's lien on the coal, etc., in the entire mine for the whole of the purchase price, the court saying: "The minerals were sold, the purchase money was not paid, and, as complainant did nothing manifesting an intention to waive his vendor's lien, equity will hold that it attached and must be enforced for the amount of purchase money due and unpaid." It must be apparent that none of the foregoing cases involved the question of license and each of them possessed features appealing irresistibly to the conscience and compelling the decision that was rendered.

To summarize: It appears reasonably certain: (1) That a mere license was created by the agreement in controversy and not a condition subsequent. (2) That it operated neither to convey nor to reserve any estate in any part of the mine to which it related. Indeed, this is implied in the finding of the court "that on the 5th day of February, 1904, the plaintiff executed to one E. Caldwell and defendant E. F. Caldwell an instrument in writing wherein and whereby the said plaintiff did sell and convey unto said E. Caldwell and defendant E. F. Caldwell the individual one-half of the Hunter Creek mine," and "that on the 24th day of January, 1904, the plaintiff sold and conveyed the remaining one-half of said Hunter Creek mine to one Thomas Armstrong by deed and conveyance in the words and figures following." (3) That the payment by said licensees to plaintiff of one-third of the proceeds in case the mine was operated by the former at their expense implied the reciprocal duty on the part of plaintiff not to interfere with their possession of the whole of said mine. (4) That said license was revocable at the pleasure of the licensor, and it was actually revoked by said conveyance to Armstrong.

These views necessarily lead to a decision different from that reached by the learned trial judge, and the judgment and order are therefore reversed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

15 Cal. App. 710

CITY OF SANTA MONICA v. LOS ANGELES COUNTY. (Civ. 917.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. March 24, 1911. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court May 23, 1911.)

1. LIENS (§ 18*)—STATUTORY LIENS—PROCEEDINGS TO PERFECT.

A lien declared by statute is not dependent for its existence on a subsequent act, though such act may be necessary to its enforcement, but when such an act is done it relates back to the time of the accrual of the lien.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Liens, Dec. Dig. § 18.*]

2. TAXATION (§ 109*)—LIABILITY FOR TAXES—TIME OF ACCRUAL.

The liability of real property for taxes accrues on the first taxation Monday in March in each year, though the tax is not levied and assessed till later, and hence an omission or irregularity in subsequent proceedings affecting the levy and assessment does not destroy the liability, which, under Pol. Code, § 3806, may be corrected in a subsequent year and the liability enforced.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. § 142; Dec. Dig. § 109.*]

3. TAXATION (§ 183*)—PROPERTY LIABLE TO—PURCHASE BY MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

A city acquiring real estate after the first Monday in March, but before a levy and assessment of a tax by the county, authorized to levy taxes for specified purposes, is liable for the tax; the acquisition of the premises by the city not carrying with it any interest in the lien created by the tax for county purposes.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. § 295; Dec. Dig. § 183.*]

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 54*)—COUNTIES (§ 1*)—NATURE OF ORGANIZATION.

A municipal corporation is but a branch of the state government established to aid the Legislature in providing for the wants and welfare of the public within the territory for which it is organized, and the Legislature may determine the extent to which it will confer on it any power, and this is true as to counties and their government.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 142; Dec. Dig. § 54;* Counties, Cent. Dig. § 1; Dec. Dig. § 1.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; N. P. Conrey, Judge.

Action by the City of Santa Monica against Los Angeles County. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Rehearing denied by Supreme Court; Beatty, C. J., dissenting.

J. D. Fredericks and Hartley Shaw, for appellant. H. W. Taft and Tanner, Taft & Odell, for respondent.

ALLEN, P. J. This action was brought by the city of Santa Monica against the county of Los Angeles to recover the amount of taxes levied and assessed in September, 1903, against certain real property acquired by said city after March 1st of that year, but before such assessment was levied. The city paid such taxes under protest and judgment was rendered in its favor against the county for the recovery of the amount so paid, from which judgment the county appeals.

[1] The sole question involved is as to the operative effect of such levy of taxes made under the circumstances of this case. It is appellant's contention that the lien for the taxes of 1903 attached on the first Monday of March of that year, and the subsequent fixation of the amount, through levy and assessment, was but a step necessary for the enforcement of the already established lien. This upon the authority of Couts v. Cornell, 147 Cal. 564, 82 Pac. 194, 109 Am. St. Rep. 168, and cases there cited. In a construction of section 2884, Civil Code, which provides that a lien may be created by contract to take immediate effect as security for an obligation not then in existence, our Supreme Court, in Tapia v. Demartini, 77 Cal. 386, 19 Pac. 641, 11 Am. St. Rep. 288, has said that a mortgage covering future advancements, as against subsequent incumbrancers, becomes a lien for the whole sum advanced from the time of its execution, although the right to enforce the collection thereof can only arise upon each advancement being made. The analogy lies in this, that a lien declared by positive statute is not dependent for its existence upon subsequent acts requisite to its enforcement. When these acts are performed they, by relation, become part of the established lien and are secured thereby.

[2] In the matter of taxation, the obligation imposed upon the property is such as to render it liable for the tax thereafter levied and assessed, which is an immediate liability created, even though there be an omission or irregularity in subsequent proceedings affecting the levy and assessment. These may in a subsequent year be corrected and the liability enforced. Section 3806, Pol. Code.

[3] In our opinion, the city in the case under consideration occupies no position different from that which it would have occupied had it acquired the property after the levy and assessment had been made and equalized, in which event the property so acquired was subject to the lien on account of the taxes levied and unpaid, unless there is merit in respondent's contention that the lien of the county and state merged in the title acquired by the municipality, which is an integral part of the state government.

[4] "A municipal corporation is but a branch of the state government, and is established for the purpose of aiding the Legislature in making provision for the wants and welfare of the public within the territory for which it is organized, and it is for the Legislature to determine the extent to which it will confer upon such corporation any power to aid it in the discharge of the obligation which the Constitution has imposed upon itself." Chico H. S. Board v. Supervisors, 118 Cal. 120, 50 Pac. 275. This is true as to counties and their government. Under the law counties are authorized to levy taxes for certain school and county purposes, and when collected the taxes are so applied. With reference to such matters the city may not exercise any right. Plaintiff by its organization as a part of the state government has not been vested with power to aid the state in connection with county government or school government under the control of the county authorities. The taxes so levied upon the property were levied and assessed by the county for purposes within its jurisdiction. The bare acquisition of the premises upon which the tax levy attached did not carry with it any interest or estate in the lien therein created for county purposes. There was, therefore, no vesting of any lesser estate, held in the same right or otherwise, through which a merger could be said to result. The plaintiff, when it acquired this land, took it subject to the lien for county purposes to the same extent as would a private purchaser.

The question presented as to the inability of the city to prevent a sale through payment of the taxes need not be considered, in view of the fact that in this case the funds have been provided and a sale thereby obviated.

The judgment should be reversed, and it is so ordered.

We concur: JAMES, J.; SHAW, J.

15 Cal. App. 714

EVALINA GOLD MINING CO. v. YOSEMITE GOLD MIN. & MILL CO. et al.

(Civ. 797.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California, March 24, 1911. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court May 23, 1911.)

1. MINES AND MINERALS (§ 23*)—ASSESSMENT WORK—DELINQUENT INTERESTS—NOTICE.

Rev. St. U. S. § 2324 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1426), provides that, on the failure of any one of several co-owners to contribute his proportion of the expenditure for assessment work on a mining claim for any year, the co-owners who have performed the labor or made the improvements at the expiration of the year may give the delinquents personal notice in writing that, if the delinquent fails or refuses to contribute his proportion required within ninety days after the notice, his interest will become the property of his co-owners who have made the required expenditures. Held, that where notice to contribute for annual assessment work was addressed personally to the individuals supposed to be the co-owners in default and was personally served on them, and was delivered immediately to their grantee under a prior unrecorded deed, it was sufficient to forfeit the rights of their grantee; the co-owners serving the notice having neither actual nor constructive notice of the conveyance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mines and Minerals, Cent. Dig. §§ 51-59, 114; Dec. Dig. § 23.*]

2. MINES AND MINERALS (§ 23*)—"ASSESSMENT WORK"—DRAINAGE.

Work done on a mining claim to withdraw water from the mine so that it could be examined by a prospective purchaser, not operating to develop or improve the mine, or to enable the co-owners performing the work to work the mine, was not assessment work required by Rev. St. U. S. § 2324 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1426), to preserve the co-owners' right to the claim.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mines and Minerals, Cent. Dig. §§ 51-59, 114; Dec. Dig. § 23.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Tuolumne County; G. W. Nicol, Judge.

Action by the Evalina Gold Mining Company against the Yosemite Gold Mining & Milling Company and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Will M. Beggs, W. C. Kennedy, and F. W. Street, for appellants. J. P. O'Brien and Crittenden Hampton, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. This is an action to quiet the title to a certain mining claim known as the Slap Jack mine, situated in Tuolumne county. The original complaint was filed in 1899, and its object was to quiet the title of all the alleged owners as against the adverse claims of one R. S. McWhirter. The case, in some of its phases, has been twice before the Supreme Court, once before this court and once before the United States Supreme Court on writ of error. Emerson v. McWhirter, 133 Cal. 510, 65 Pac. 1036; Emerson v. Yosemite Gold Mining & Milling Co., 149 Cal. 50, 85 Pac. 122; Wemple v. Yosemite Gold Mining Co., 4 Cal. App. 78, 87 Pac. 250; Yosemite G. M. & M. Co. v. Emerson, 208 U. S. 31, 28 Sup. Ct. 196, 52 L. Ed. 374. At the first trial, E. L. Emerson, Mrs. A. L. Emerson, F. F. Britton, and Jacob Miller (predecessors in estate of plaintiff) and Harry Argall and F. L. Argall (predecessors in estate of defendant, Yosemite Gold Mining and Milling Company) were owners of the said mine, the former group owning eleven-twentieths and the Argalls nine-twentieths. The results of prior litigation, as found by the court (finding 5), settled "all questions involved in this case, except the question of the ownership of the nine-twentieths interest, which was formerly owned by the defendants, Harry Argall and F. L. Argall," now claimed by plaintiff company and defendant company, as against each other. So far as the conveyances of the disputed nine-twentieths affect the questions now here, the court found the facts as follows: The Argalls executed and delivered to Yosemite Gold Mining Company their deed on May 31, 1899, but it was not recorded until January 12, 1900. On May 30, 1900, the Yosemite Gold Mining Company executed and delivered to the Yosemite Gold Mining & Milling Company (defendant) its deed to the Argall interest, which was recorded September 28, 1900. On February 15, 1904, the Emersons, Britton, and Miller executed and delivered their deed to plaintiff conveying all their interest in said mine, which said deed was recorded February 29, 1904.

Two issues of fact were presented and the findings thereon constitute the basis of the judgment in plaintiff's favor, from which and from the order denying their motion for a new trial, defendants appeal. These two issues of fact were: First, that the Argall interest passed to the Emerson group of co-owners by reason of their having done the assessment work on the mine for the year 1898 and the failure of the Argalls to contribute their share thereof, in consequence of which they were "advertised out" under the act of Congress (Revised Statutes, § 2324 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1426], and hence passed to plaintiff by virtue of the deed to it executed February 4, 1904; and, second, that the Argall interest was foreclosed under mortgage sale and plaintiff redeemed the property and thus became the owner.

First. The court found that the Emersons, Britton, and Miller performed the annual labor upon said mine for the year 1898, as required by the acts of Congress and the laws of this state (finding 7); and that the Argalls failed to perform any labor on the mine during that year and failed to contribute or pay to their co-owners their proportion of the said annual labor. (Finding 8.) The court further found that "after the expiration of the year 1898, and on or about December 20, 1899," the Emersons, Britton, and Miller, plaintiff's predecessors in interest, "gave the said defendants Harry Argall and F. L. Argall, and each of them, personal notice in writing requiring them, and each of them, to contribute and pay to the said" Emersons, Britton, and Miller, "within the time required by law, their proportion of the expenditure made by said" Emersons, Britton, and Miller, "and notifying them and each of them that if they, or either of them failed or refused, within the time required by law, to contribute and pay to the predecessors in interest of the plaintiff herein, their or either of their proportion of such expenditures, that then, and in that event, their interest in said Slap Jack mining claim, or the interest of the one so failing or refusing to contribute and pay his proportion of such expenditures, would thereupon belong to and become the property of their co-owners, the said" Emersons, Britton, and Miller. (Finding 9.) The court next finds (finding 10) that "immediately after said notice was served upon said defendants Harry Argall and F. L. Argall, and on or about December 20, 1899, they delivered the same to the officers, agents, and representatives of the Yosemite Gold Mining Company, and also to the officers, agents, and representatives of the Yosemite Gold Mining & Milling Company, and that at all times thereafter each of said companies had full and actual knowledge of the contents of said notice" and full and actual knowledge that the Emersons, Britton, and Miller had performed the annual labor upon said mine in 1898, as aforesaid, and that the Argalls had not performed their part of said labor, and had not contributed to its cost as above stated, and said companies also had full and actual knowledge that the Argall interest would be forfeited to the co-owners who had paid for said labor. It is next found that neither of the Argalls nor either of said companies ever contributed towards said expenditures, "and that by reason thereof and of the statute in such cases made and provided the said" Argalls and said companies "forfeited to the said" Emersons, Britton, and Miller, plaintiffs' predecessors, "all of their and each of their right, title and interest of, in and to the said Slap Jack mining claim, and the nine-twentieths interest therein which was formerly owned by the said" Argalls, "and the same is now the property of plaintiff herein." (Finding 11.) The court also found that the Emersons, Britton, and Miller "did not know and had no notice, constructive or otherwise, of the execution or delivery of the deed which was made by the defendants Harry Argall and F. L. Argall to the Yosemite Gold Mining Company, or of the deed to the Yosemite Gold Mining and Milling Company, until the said deeds were recorded."

[1] The section of the Revised Statutes, supra, among other things, provides as follows: "Upon the failure of any one of several co-owners to contribute his proportion of the expenditure required thereby, the co-owners who have performed the labor or made the improvements may, at the expiration of the year, give such delinquent co-owners personal notice in writing or notice by publication in the newspaper published nearest the claim, for at least once a week for ninety days, and if at the expiration of ninety days after such notice in writing or by publication, such delinquent shall fail or refuse to contribute his proportion of the expenditure required by this section, his interest in the claim shall become the property of his co-owners who have made the required expenditures." In the present case the notice was directed—"To Harry Argall and F. L. Argall." In all other respects it is conceded to have been sufficient. The claim of defendants is stated in their brief as follows: "The circumstance that the notice was in fact delivered to the officers of the Yosemite Company does not alter the case. It was not such a notice as would require the Yosemite Company to pay any attention to it. It was not addressed to the then holder of the nine-twentieths interest, nor was it addressed to the assigns of the former holder, and this we take to be a fatal defect."

It is claimed, and may at once be conceded, that the statute must be strictly construed, being one imposing a forfeiture. The statute does not prescribe the form of the notice or how the persons to whom it is addressed, or whom it is intended to notify, should be designated. The courts have dealt with the question in cases of publication in a newspaper. In Elder v. Horseshoe Min. & Mill. Co., 149 U. S. 248, 24 Sup. Ct. 643, 48 L. Ed. 960, the notice was addressed "To Rufus Wilsey, his heirs, administrators, and to all whom it may concern." Wilsey was dead, and there was no administrator. It was contended that the heirs should have been named. It was held that, where by the local law title vested in the heirs and the administrator has but a lien on the real estate for administrative purposes, "it was not necessary that the notice should specifically name the heirs of the deceased owner."

In the case here, the notice was addressed to the Argalls and no others, and was served on them December 20, 1899, and by them immediately turned over to the Yosemite Gold Mining Company. It is true that on May 31, 1899, the Argalls had conveyed their interest to this company, but the court found, and the evidence was, that the co-owners did not know this fact, and the deed was not recorded, so as to give constructive notice until January 12, 1900; and it was in the following May that this company deeded the Argall interest to defendant company, which latter deed was not recorded until the following September. It seems to us that the service of notice by the Emerson group of co-owners upon the Argalls who had for a long time been their co-owners, and whom they still believed to be their co-owners and knew nothing to the contrary, was sufficient. If the notice had been made by publication there would be some reason in holding, as the cases seem to hold, that, in order to bind unknown owners, the notice should not only be directed to the ostensible or supposed co-owners, but to their heirs, administrators, and assigns. But, where the notice is addressed to and personally served upon the only known co-owners, it would be idle to further address the notice, for there would be no known persons upon whom to serve it.

So far as the Yosemite Gold Mining & Milling Company is concerned, it had no interest in the property until in May, 1900, and it is immaterial whether it was served. As to the Yosemite Gold Mining Company, it was served with the notice, for the evidence is that the Argalls passed it over immediately to the president of that company, and it therefore had, as the court found, full knowledge of its grantors' delinquency and that, unless their proportion of the assessment work for 1898 was paid, their interest would be forfeited to their co-owners. Before we could sustain defendants' contention, we should have to hold that a co-owner, who has done all the assessment work for a given year, could not "advertise out" his apparent co-owner by serving upon him the required written notice, but he must also give notice by publication addressed in the manner above pointed out in order to forfeit any interest some unknown person might have through an unrecorded deed from such co-owner. We cannot believe that the statute requires such course to be taken. However this may be, the co-owner did, in fact, receive the notice by which every fact required by the statute to be given in the notice was made known to it. The Yosemite Gold Mining Company thus had the opportunity to protect itself from the forfeiture, and cannot now be heard to complain of consequences produced by its own neglect.

Of the general purpose of the law of Congress, the Supreme Court said, in the case cited: "We are of opinion that the publication of notice was sufficient, although there was no administrator at the time of publication. It is unnecessary under this statute to publish notice to lienors. We agree with the Supreme Court of the state that the evident purpose and object of the law section 2324) was to encourage the exploration and development of the mineral lands of the United States, and the sale of the same, and that all the provisions of the law having been framed with that object in view, if the required work is not performed, after the expiration of the year, and notice of contribution properly served or sufficiently published, the rights of delinquents are absolutely cut off, though the failure to do the work may have been caused by the death of the locator or locators during the year. When a notice has been rightfully published under the statute, it becomes effective in cutting off the claims of all parties, and the title is thus kept clear and free from uncertainty and doubt."

Appellants claim that the Yosemite Gold Mining Company was in possession of the mine in 1899, and did a large amount of work on it, and that in October of that year it mortgaged the Argall interest which had been conveyed to it, and that from these facts it must be inferred that the Emersons had notice of the company's interest. The fact is that the possession of the company, whatever it was, was based upon the title claimed by McWhirter on what he called the Jim Blaine mine, which was McWhirter's attempted relocation of the property afterwards determined to be without validity. The history of that litigation appears in former appeals, but does not appear in this record; neither does it here appear that the Yosemite Company, in 1899, did the work now claimed. It appeared without conflict that the Emersons knew nothing of any transfer by the Argalls to the Yosemite Company, or that it claimed under them, until the deed was recorded.

[2] It is also contended that the Argalls did more than their proportion of work on the mine in 1899. It appears from the testimony of the Argalls that the work done by them was for the sole purpose of unwatering the mine, so that it could be examined by a prospective purchaser. This work was not done for the development or improvement of the mine, nor was it done to enable the Argalls to perform work on the mine. They testified that it was not done as assessment work, nor was it intended to be so considered. Under such circumstances, we are satisfied that the work was not such as is contemplated by the United States statute.

Second. It appeared from the findings that on October 25, 1899, the Yosemite Gold Mining Company mortgaged certain mining property, "including among others the said undivided nine-twentieths interest of, in, and to the Slap Jack mining claim aforesaid to one Marsden to secure the payment of a certain promissory note"; that on December 9, 1901, Marsden assigned said note and mortgage to one Wemple; that on July 24, 1902, Wemple commenced an action to foreclose said mortgage, in which said action a decree of foreclosure was duly entered, and on September 17, 1906, an order of sale was made by the court and the interest of defendant in said nine-twentieths in said Slap Jack mine was sold to the assignee of plaintiff in the action, the said Wemple, for the sum of $4,000 and certificate of sale was duly issued to him; that within 12 months thereafter, to wit, on October 11, 1907, "the Evalina Gold Mining Company, plaintiff herein, as the successor in interest of the defendants and judgment debtors in said action, redeemed said nine-twentieths interest in said Slap Jack mining claim from said sale, and on said day tendered to and paid to the said Fred Sutton, commissioner, as aforesaid, the amount necessary to redeem said nine-twentieths interest in said Slap Jack mining claim from said sale, to wit, the sum of $4,480," and thereupon said commissioner delivered to plaintiff herein his certificate of redemption "showing said payment on redemption," and said commissioner thereupon paid said moneys received by him from the plaintiff upon said redemption to the said E. H. Wemple, who accepted and retained the same in full redemption of said nine-twentieths of said claim and "ratified and acquiesced in said redemption."

No question is made by defendants as to the regularity of these proceedings by which plaintiff redeemed from this foreclosure sale. Defendants' contention now is that, "unless the advertising-out process was good, plaintiff derived no benefit from the redemption"; that, under the decision in Wemple v. Yosemite Gold Mining Co., 4 Cal. App. 78, 87 Pac. 280, "when a redemption from a foreclosure sale is effected, its only operation is to discharge the mortgage debt, and leaves the property in the same status in which it stood before the mortgage was executed." Hence, it is claimed, as stated in the brief: "When the property was redeemed from the mortgage, the title reverted to the parties, just as it stood before the mortgage was given, so, in this case, if the Argalls had no interest in the property at the time the mortgage was given, when the property was redeemed from the foreclosure sale, the nineteenth interest in controversy reverted to the successors in interest of the Argalls."

Respondent contends that, as the successor in interest of the defendants in the Wemple foreclosure case, it redeemed said nineteenth interest from said sale, and paid said commissioner the sum of $4,480, and took an assignment of the certificate of purchase, and was thus subrogated to all the rights which Wemple acquired under the foreclosure sale, and respondents' right to redeem cannot now be questioned. Attention is called to numerous cases holding that, where redemption is made by one disqualified as a redemptioner, still, if the purchaser at the sale accepts redemption, he will not be heard to question it (White v. Costigan, 134 Cal. 37, 66 Pac. 78); that under section 700 of the Code of Civil Procedure the purchaser at the sale "is substituted to and acquires all the right, title, interest, and claim of the judgment debtor thereto," the effect of which is to pass "the legal title to the land, subject to defeasance by the happening of the condition subsequent"—i. e., the right of redemption by the mortgagor (Pollard v. Harlow, 138 Cal. 390, 71 Pac. 454, 648)—that the assignee of the purchaser stands in the latter's shoes, and, on failure of the judgment debtor to redeem within the statutory period, title passes without a sheriff's or commissioner's deed, which latter is but evidence of the title which vested by virtue of the sale, and that redemption is virtually a transfer of the certificate of sale. In short, it is contended that, the Yosemite Gold Mining Company having failed to redeem, respondent paid its indebtedness under the statutory provisions as to redemption, and now holds whatever title that company had in the mortgaged premises through the operation of section 700 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and is entitled to all the rights given by law to any redemptioner.

We have stated the respective claims of the parties upon this second proposition on which the lower court held with the plaintiff. But, as we are clearly of the opinion that the judgment may safely rest upon the first question discussed, we do not deem it necessary to express an opinion upon the second point.

Third. Certain two alleged errors in the rulings of the trial court are assigned as prejudicial. F. L. Argall was a witness for plaintiff. He testified: "I delivered the notice [the notice served by the Emersons] to Mr. Berg [president of the Yosemite company] the same evening it was delivered to me. It was at the residence of Mr. Beggs [attorney for the Yosemite company] and Mr. Berg in San Jose. Q. What, if anything, was said to you at the time about the notice?" Defendants objected as immaterial and irrelevant, and the objection was overruled. "A. Mr. Beggs paid no attention to it. Mr. Berg was present at that time." Later Mr. Beggs was called as a witness for defendants. He had testified that he had been attorney for the Yosemite Gold Mining Company and the other company also. "Immediately after the notice to contribute was served upon Dr. Argall in the latter part of December, 1899, Dr. Argall handed the notice to me. Q. What did he [Dr. Argall] say to you at the time he handed you the paper? Mr. O'Brien: I object on the ground that it is incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial. I submit any declaration made by Dr. Argall cannot be binding upon the other party. It would be a conversation between Dr. Argall and his own attorney." The court sustained the objection. There was no answer to the first question. If anything was said to Dr. Argall, he does not state it. The answer that Mr. Beggs paid no attention to it (the notice) would not justify inquiry as to what Argall said at the time. He was not one of the plaintiffs and could not bind the plaintiff by his declarations. Furthermore, it could not be said to be rebuttal of testimony given by Argall, for he did not answer the question. He merely said that Mr. Beggs paid no attention to the notice. We discover neither error nor prejudice in the rulings.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: HART, J.; BURNETT, J.

15 Cal. App. 751

PORTERS BAR DREDGING CO. v. BEAUDRY. (Civ. 790.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 3, 1911.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 954*)—INJUNCTION (§ 135*)—INJUNCTION PENDENTE LITE—DISCRETION—REVIEW.

Whether an injunction pendente lite should be granted or refused rests largely in the discretion of the trial court, which will not be interfered with on appeal, unless abuse of discretion is shown.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3818-3821; Dec. Dig. § 954.* Injunction, Cent. Dig. § 304; Dec. Dig. § 135.*]

2. INJUNCTION (§ 144*)—PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION—COMPLAINT—EVIDENCE.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 527, providing that an injunction may be granted before judgment on a verified complaint, or on affidavits if the complaint or affidavits show satisfactory and sufficient grounds therefor, the complaint alone, though alleging ultimate, as distinguished from evidentiary, facts sufficient to justify injunctive relief, may authorize the issuance of a preliminary injunction, though not supported by affidavit or other proof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Injunction, Cent. Dig. § 316; Dec. Dig. § 144.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 920*)—REVIEW—PRESUMPTIONS—PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION.

Where a preliminary injunction is granted by the trial court on a verified complaint alone, as authorized by Code Civ. Proc. § 527, it will be presumed on appeal from such order that it was satisfactorily shown to the court that grounds existed for such relief, and that in granting the same the court acted with due caution in regard to the rights of the opposing party.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3717; Dec. Dig. § 920.*]

4. INJUNCTION (§ 144*)—PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION—VERIFIED COMPLAINT.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 527, authorizing the granting of a preliminary injunction on a verified complaint alone, a complaint for injunctive relief need not allege evidentiary as distinguished from ultimate facts averred according to the ordinary rules of pleading.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Injunction, Cent. Dig. § 316; Dec. Dig. § 144.*]

5. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 85*)—DIVERSION—PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION.

A verified complaint to enjoin defendant's obstruction of a water course alleged complainant's right to use the water by appropriation and also as a riparian owner, that such use was necessary for its purposes in the prosecution of its mining enterprises, and that by reason of defendant's acts in diverting the water of the river and its tributaries at a point above complainant's riparian land, complainant had been deprived and would be deprived by the continuance of such diversion of the use of the water, and would be and had been compelled to suspend its mining operations whereby defendant had inflicted on complainant a serious injury, and that the continuance of defendant's diversion of the water and the consequent continued suspension of complainant's mining operations would cause complainant irreparable injury. Held, that the complaint, without more, stated facts justifying the issuance of an injunction pendente lite.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Cent. Dig. §§ 84-90; Dec. Dig. § 85.*]

6. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 87*)—DIVERSION—PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION—VERIFIED COMPLAINT—INCONSISTENT ALLEGATIONS.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 527, authorizing the issuance of an injunction pendente lite on a verified complaint, it was no objection to such an injunction in an action to restrain defendant from diverting the water of a stream that the complaint alleged that complainant was entitled to the unobstructed flow of the stream as the riparian owner, and also as an appropriator, in that such averments were inconsistent and contradictory; there being no fatal inconsistency between complainant's claim to a riparian right and the claim by appropriation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Cent. Dig. § 79; Dec. Dig. § 87.*]

7. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 78*)—RIPARIAN PROPRIETOR—USE OF WATER.

It was no defense to an action by a riparian owner using the water of a stream for mining purposes to restrain defendant from diverting the water above the point of complainant's use that such use was not a riparian use, the rights of a riparian proprietor not being tested by the use or uses to which he puts the water or whether he uses it at all; he being entitled to restrain the diversion by others than riparian owners of water which, if unobstructed, would flow past his land, though no injury might be done to his present use of the water.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Cent. Dig. §§ 67-69; Dec. Dig. § 78.*]

8. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 87*)—DIVERSION—INJUNCTION—COMPLAINT.

Where a complaint by a riparian proprietor to restrain defendant from diverting the water of a river by taking water from a creek above complainant's riparian lands alleged that the creek was a tributary of the river, and that defendant diverted from the creek 150 inches of water, thereby lessening the flow of water in the river and depriving complainant of the flow to which it was entitled as a riparianist, an injunction pendente lite issued on such complaint was not objectionable because it was not proved by other evidence that complainant was either entitled to the flow of the water of the creek in a natural and usual channel through complainant's land, and that its land was riparian to the water of the creek, or that complainant was an appropriator of a water right with the particulars as to the means and method of complainant's diversion or appropriation and continuance of its use.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Cent. Dig. § 79; Dec. Dig. § 87.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Siskiyou County; J. S. Beard, Judge.

Suit by the Porters Bar Dredging Company against Fred Beaudry. From an order granting complainant's application for a preliminary injunction, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Reed & Dozier and Jas. R. Tapscott, for appellant. O'Neill & Butler, Taylor & Tebbe, and A. R. Baldwin, for respondent.

HART, J. The plaintiff made an application to the court below for an injunction pendente lite in this action, and, after a hearing on an order to show cause why said application should not be allowed, an order granting a preliminary injunction was made by the court. From the order granting said injunction this appeal is presented.

The evidence upon which the order appealed from was made consisted of the verified complaint of the plaintiff and two affidavits, filed by defendant, in opposition to the application for the provisional relief asked for. The purpose of the action is to secure a decree adjudging the plaintiff the owner of the lands described in the complaint and that they are riparian to the South fork of Scott river, in Siskiyou county; that the plaintiff is the owner and entitled to the possession of 3,500 inches, measured under a 4-inch pressure, of the waters of the said South fork of Scott river and the tributaries thereof, etc.; that the defendant be perpetually enjoined "from erecting and maintaining or erecting or maintaining any dam in the South fork of Scott river, or any of the tributaries thereof above the lands of plaintiff and that he may be enjoined and restrained from interfering with the flow of the waters of the said South fork of Scott river and its tributaries above the lands of plaintiff in any manner when there is only thirty-five hundred inches or less of water therein measured under a four-inch pressure"; that defendant pending this suit be enjoined from interfering in any manner with the flow of the waters of said river or its tributaries, etc., above plaintiff's lands.

[1] Whether in a given case an injunction pendente lite should be granted or refused is a matter resting largely in the discretion of the trial court, to which the application for such an order is presented. This proposition is well settled in this state. In Raub v. Los Angeles T. Ry. Co., 103 Cal. 473, 37 Pac. 374, it is said: "The dissolution or continuance of a preliminary injunction is a matter largely within the discretion of the trial court, and, unless it appears from the records in the case that the discretion has been abused, the action of the court will not be disturbed on appeal"—citing the following cases: Rogers v. Tennant, 45 Cal. 184; Patterson v. Board of Supervisors, 50 Cal. 344; Parrott v. Floyd, 54 Cal. 534; White v. Nunan, 60 Cal. 406. In Marks v. Weinstock, Lubin & Co., 121 Cal. 53, 53 Pac. 362, the rule as thus stated is reaffirmed.

Again, in the comparatively late case of Miller & Lux v. Madera Canal, etc., Co., 155 Cal. 62, 99 Pac. 511, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 391, the court thus restated the rule: "This is an appeal from an order granting a temporary injunction. It would be superfluous to cite authorities to show that the granting or refusing of a preliminary injunction is a matter resting largely in the discretion of the trial court. Where there is a substantial conflict in the evidence regarding an issue which may affect the discretion of the court in passing upon the application for such injunction, the order will not on appeal be overthrown merely because there may be considerable or even preponderating evidence, which, if believed, would have led to a contrary conclusion. The granting or denial of a preliminary injunction does not amount to an adjudication of the ultimate rights in controversy. It merely determines that the court, balancing the respective equities of the parties, concludes that pending a trial on the merits the defendant should or that he should not be restrained from exercising the rights claimed by him. When the cause is finally tried, it may be found that the facts require a decision against the party prevailing on the preliminary injunction." Testing the record before us by the principles declared in the foregoing, we are unable to say that the trial court abused the discretion committed to it in a proceeding of this character by allowing the preliminary injunction.

The complaint avers that the plaintiff "is now, and for a period of three years or more last past has been, a corporation duly organized and existing under the laws of the state of New York, and has been, during said time, conducting a mining business and mining operations in the county of Siskiyou, state of California, and that it has fully complied with all the laws of said state so as to entitle it to exercise all its corporate functions therein"; that plaintiff "is now the owner, in possession of, and entitled to the possession of, and plaintiff and its predecessors in interest have been for a period of 25 years or more last past the owners of, in the possession of and entitled to the possession of, that certain real estate, in the county of Siskiyou, state of California, described as follows." Following this averment is a description of the lands from which, it is asserted, defendant has wrongfully so diverted the waters of Scott river and tributaries as to deprive plaintiff of the full flow or quantity of waters to which it is entitled, either as a riparianist or an appropriator. The complaint, in the first count thereof, then proceeds to allege: "That the South fork of Scott river is a natural stream of water which in its natural channels flows through the lands of plaintiff above described, and during all the times above mentioned has so flowed through and over said lands, except as hereinafter stated, and all of said lands are riparian to said South fork of Scott river; that on or about the 11th day of August, 1908, defendant wrongfully and unlawfully and against the will and without the consent of plaintiff, by means of a dam placed in Jackson creek which is tributary to said South fork of Scott river, diverted away from said tributary about 150 inches of the waters thereof, and carried the same away from said Jackson creek at a point above the said lands of plaintiff herein, and thereby deprived said lands of plaintiff of the natural flow of the said South fork of Scott river to the extent of 150 inches measured under a 4-inch pressure." In the second count of the complaint it is alleged: "That during all the time that plaintiff and its predecessors in interest have owned their said lands it has diverted, used, and appropriated 3,500 inches measured under a 4-inch pressure of the waters of the said South fork of Scott river when there was as much as 3,500 inches measured under a 4-inch pressure flowing in said stream, and it has appropriated, diverted and used all of the waters therein when there was less than 3,500 inches measured under a 4-inch pressure flowing therein, and during all of said times it and its predecessors in interest have, by means of ditches, conveyed said waters to said lands and there used the same for mining purposes; that the said lands of plaintiff hereinbefore described and all of said lands are placer mining lands and chiefly valuable for the deposits of gold contained therein, and, in order to profitably work and operate said lands as a mine, it is necessary to have 3,500 inches of water for mining purposes and said water is necessary therefor and beneficial for such purpose; that on or about the 11th day of August, 1908, and while plaintiff was engaged in its mining operations and at a time when there was not 3,500 inches of water measured under a 4-inch pressure flowing in the said South fork of Scott river and its tributaries, defendant wrongfully and unlawfully and without the consent of plaintiff, by means of a dam which he wrongfully and unlawfully placed in Jackson creek, which is a tributary of said South fork of Scott river, diverted away from said Jackson creek and away from said South fork of said Scott river about 150 inches of water measured under a 4-inch pressure; that said water so diverted by defendant was so used by him as to wholly deprive plaintiff thereof; that on or about the 16th day of August, 1908, plaintiff broke the dam of said defendant so erected in Jackson creek as aforesaid and restored the waters so that they would flow down said Jackson creek and into the South fork of Scott river, and thus be available for plaintiff's use, but said defendant ignoring plaintiff's right in the premises again constructed said dam and again diverted the waters of said Jackson creek away from said creek, and deprived plaintiff thereof, and defendant prevented by force the employees of plaintiff from removing said dam and restoring said waters again to their natural channel, and since said last-mentioned day has maintained said dam, diverted said waters, and threatens to continue so to do; that by reason of said acts of defendant and the diversion by him of said waters of the South fork of Scott river and its tributaries, plaintiff has been compelled to entirely suspend its mining operations and has thereby suffered great injury, and has been damaged in the sum of $4,500, and that such damage will continue at the rate of $300 for each and every day that defendant hereafter maintains said dam, diverts said waters, and deprives said plaintiff of the use thereof; that the said acts of defendant, if continued, will cause plaintiff irreparable injury, and tend to lessen the value of its said mining lands, and, unless restrained by order of this court, defendant will gain as against plaintiff herein a prescriptive right to the said waters of Jackson creek, the said tributary of said South fork of Scott river, and said waters will be wholly lost to plaintiff herein; that the use of plaintiff and its predecessors in interest of the said waters of the said South fork of Scott river and its tributaries during all the time they have used the same have been peaceable, quiet, open, notorious, continuous, and exclusive, except for the interference made by defendant as hereinbefore set forth and under a claim of right and title thereto and such use has been adverse to all the world."

It will be observed that the complaint declares upon two different and distinct claims of title to the use of the water flowing in said Scott river to which plaintiff alleges that it is entitled: (1) That the lands described in the complaint are riparian to said South fork of Scott river; (2) that plaintiff is entitled to the right to use the quantity of said waters stated in the complaint by appropriation.

The affidavit of the defendant himself consists largely of specific denials, in the language of the complaint itself, of the facts set forth in the latter. There are some allegations contained in said affidavit of a right, acquired by appropriation, in defendant to the use of the waters referred to in the complaint for mining, agricultural, domestic, and irrigation purposes. But most, if not all, these last-mentioned allegations involve, at best, only legal conclusions or conclusions of the affiant. It is unnecessary to reproduce these averments or the substance thereof here, for it is sufficient to say that, even if they involved the statement of probative facts, it would, under the authorities to which we have referred, still rest with the trial court to decide, upon the whole record as made upon the preliminary issue, whether an injunction pendente lite should or should not be granted.

The affidavit of one Hayden, filed on behalf of the defendant, merely declares "that the statements contained in the said affidavit of said defendant" concerning all the important matters respecting which said defendant deposes "are true and correct," and manifestly such an affidavit can have no greater force than to corroborate the conclusions contained in the defendant's affidavit.

[2] But it is objected that the complaint itself is insufficient, as evidence, to sustain the order of the court granting the injunction, since its averments are of ultimate rather than of probative facts. Section 527 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that "an injunction may be granted at any time before judgment upon a verified complaint, or upon affidavits, if the complaint in the one case, or the affidavits in the other, show satisfactorily that sufficient grounds exist therefor. * * * We are fully mindful of the general rules which are laid down for the guidance of the courts in the matter of applications for an injunction pending the litigation, and before the cause in which such temporary relief is sought is heard upon the merits. As is said by Mr. Joyce, in his work on Injunctions, "an injunction of this character [temporary] is said to be an act of extraordinary power on the part of the court, in behalf of either party to an action before trial, is always cautiously granted, and it must fairly appear upon all the papers presented, before such injunction is granted, that the plaintiff will suffer irreparable injury if it be not issued, or that it is necessary to preserve the estates of the parties, or some sufficient cause showing the need of hasty action exists." As seen, our Code provides that a preliminary injunction may be granted if it is satisfactorily shown by the complaint or the affidavits, if any be filed, that sufficient grounds exist therefor.

[3] Obviously the question whether it is satisfactorily shown by the verified complaint or the affidavits that grounds exist for the granting of an interlocutory injunction must be determined by the court to which such application is submitted in the first instance. If, as here, it be granted on the verified complaint alone, and the facts stated are sufficient to warrant the granting of the temporary relief so sought, and the same has been granted, this court is bound to assume that it has thus been satisfactorily shown to the court that grounds exist for such relief, and that in granting the same the court has acted with due caution and regard for the rights of the opposing party.

[4] Nor can this court say, merely because the complaint contains the statement of none but ultimate facts, that the trial court abused its discretion in granting the injunction. The statute, as seen, expressly provides that a preliminary injunction may be granted on a verified complaint, and it is not for a moment supposable that the Legislature intended that the complaint which may be used for that purpose should be any different, in the character of its averments, from any other complaint in a civil action, or from a complaint whose sole purpose is to subserve the office of a pleading. In other words, we do not understand the phrase, "verified complaint," as used in the section of the Code of Civil Procedure authorizing a court to grant a preliminary injunction upon the averments thereof, means that such complaint shall allege, for the purposes of the application for the order, probative as distinguished from ultimate facts. If the ultimate facts pleaded warrant the granting of the injunction, then, in the absence of such a countershowing as would fully overcome or impeach the effect of the averments of the complaint, or as would produce serious doubt whether the right to the temporary relief claimed by the complaint should be granted, it would be the duty of the court to grant such relief. And, as stated, whether the showing made by the complaint is sufficiently negatived by the opposite party to compel the refusal of the temporary injunction, is a matter the determination of which rests in the sound discretion of the trial court, and with which discretion interference by an appellate court is not justified unless it clearly appears, from the whole record, that there has been an abuse thereof.

Of course, the allegations of the complaint should disclose a clear right to an injunction pendente lite by showing that the plaintiff is entitled to the exclusive enjoyment as against defendant of the right with which it is alleged the defendant is wrongfully interfering and threatens to continue to so interfere. The allegations should, by appropriate averments, clearly show that irreparable injury to plaintiff would follow the refusal of the court to allow the temporary relief, and that such injury could not adequately be repaired or redressed by way of pecuniary compensation or damages.

[5] The complaint in this action, it will be observed, alleges plaintiff's right to use the waters in dispute by appropriation and the right to the same as a riparian owner; that the use of said waters is necessary for its purposes in the prosecution of its mining enterprises; that, by reason of the acts of defendant in diverting the waters of Scott river and its tributaries, at a point above the lands of plaintiff riparian to said river and its tributaries, and to a certain quantity of which waters plaintiff also claims the right by appropriation, the rights of said plaintiff, as a riparianist, have been and will be interfered with, and that, as an appropriator, it has been and will be deprived of the use of the waters of said streams necessary for its aforesaid purposes; that, by reason of the said acts of defendant in so diverting said waters, the plaintiff has been compelled and is still compelled to suspend its aforesaid mining operations, and that thereby the defendant has inflicted upon plaintiff serious injury, and that the continued diversion of said waters by defendant and the consequent continued suspension of such mining operations by plaintiff will cause plaintiff irreparable injury. Assuming that other points against the sufficiency of the complaint to justify the order granting the preliminary injunction, to which points we shall later refer, are without merit, the averments of the complaint, uncontradicted, are sufficient, in our opinion, to warrant and sustain the action of the court in granting the injunction. At any rate, said averments are of such a character as to justly forestall a declaration by this court that the court below abused its discretion in the matter. The question then arises whether the showing made by the defendant in rebuttal of the averments of the complaint is such as to so overcome the force of the latter as to warrant this court in declaring that the granting of the order was an abuse of the discretion vested in the trial court. It is obvious that we cannot so declare unless we are prepared to say that the court below should have accepted as true the denials and conclusions contained in the defendant's affidavits in preference to the averments of the complaint, or that the denials and allegations contained in said defendant's affidavits were of a character to create so much doubt as to plaintiff's showing or claim of right, either as a riparianist or an appropriator, to the temporary remedy granted as to make it clear to this court that the trial court exceeded the bounds of a sound discretion in allowing the order. We cannot say that the record presents such a situation to our minds.

As before stated, the statute contemplates and intends, of course, that the showing for a preliminary injunction must satisfy the court to which the application therefor is made and not a court of review. The latter can interfere only where it may be said from the record as a matter of law that the showing made is not sufficient to satisfy the court below that grounds for the injunction existed, or such as to clearly indicate that the action of the trial court in granting the injunction was arbitrary rather than the result of the exercise of a sound discretion. It is very clear that some power must be left to the trial judge to determine whether the countershowning made by the defendant is of sufficient force to overcome the effect of the affirmative showing by the plaintiff, and where, as here, the ultimate facts upon which plaintiff bases its claim for the protection and preservation of its alleged rights against the acts of defendant until the main question to be tried shall be finally adjudicated are met by a reply consisting likewise of the statement of ultimate facts, in so far as such reply undertakes to affirmatively disclose that the acts charged against the defendant are only in the exercise of his own rights, then we cannot perceive how a court of review may be justified in saying that the decision of the trial court on such a record involves an abuse of discretion, particularly when we keep in mind the fact that the Code expressly provides that a preliminary injunction may be granted on a verified complaint.

[6] But counsel point out some alleged inconsistencies and defects in the complaint which, it is contended, disclose such inherent weakness in the evidence as thus presented as to make it clearly appear that the court was wholly unwarranted in granting the application for the temporary injunction. In this regard, the point is first made that while, as a pleading, the complaint is not subject to criticism because there are united therein two separate and distinct causes of action for practically the same purpose, which causes of action are, in certain particulars, antagonistic to each other, yet, where, as here, the averments of such pleading are used as evidence or for the purpose of establishing the fact in issue, such averments must not be inconsistent or contradictory in any material respect, otherwise the effect of the averments of the one cause of action will be to impeach the averments of the other. Or, to adopt the language of the brief, "it would be unconscionable to permit the party to introduce contradictory evidence or proof upon any subject involved in the action. When evidence upon which the party relies is introduced, it must be harmonious and consistent throughout all its parts." We think there are several answers to the foregoing proposition. First, as we have seen, the plaintiff, having upon the filing of its complaint and upon an order to show cause why a temporary injunction should not be granted, was entitled to the temporary relief upon its verified complaint, assuming that the latter makes a proper case. Section 527, Code Civ. Proc.; Falkenburg v. Lucy, 35 Cal. 60, 95 Am. Dec. 76. If the complaint is sufficient as a pleading, it is then, by virtue of the provisions of the Code to which we have referred, sufficient as the predicate of an order granting the preliminary injunction or as evidence for that purpose. If there be united in the complaint two different causes of action, both seeking practically the attainment of the same ultimate object, it does not follow, merely because certain averments of the one cause of action so pleaded may be in some material particulars contradictory to or inconsistent with those of the other cause stated, that the temporary injunction should be refused, if either or both causes disclose a reason for the granting of such temporary relief.

Nor do we understand it to be or to have ever been the rule that evidence addressed to the proof of a particular fact, to be of any value, "must be harmonious and consistent throughout all its parts." The general rule is that it is for the trier of the facts to determine the value, the weight, and the effect of evidence, from whatever source it may come. Indeed, if it were the rule that a party could not prevail unless the evidence he produced to establish his case or his defense was "harmonious and consistent throughout all its parts," there could seldom ever be success in an attempt to prove an ultimate fact or to establish a defense.

But we can perceive no inconsistency, fatal to plaintiff's right, if it shows any at all, to the preliminary injunction, between its claim to a riparian right to the waters of the streams mentioned in the complaint and a claim to such waters by appropriation. We know of no reason why a party may not acquire by appropriation a right to the use of the water of a stream to which his lands are riparian. And, in such case, where another, without right, diverts the water of such stream at a point above the lands of such riparianist and appropriator and thus wrongfully so obstructs the customary flow of the stream as to deprive the latter of the full use of the water to which he is entitled, either as a riparian proprietor or an appropriator, then we can see no impropriety in the injured party pleading and proving, if he can, such wrongful interruption of his right to the water both as a riparianist and as an appropriator. Indeed, the proposition here we conceive to be practically no different from a case where a plaintiff might allege and so be allowed to prove a conventional title to land and at the same time allege and be allowed to show, if found necessary, that he had acquired title thereto by adverse possession. In the case here, it may happen that the plaintiff may utterly fail to establish in himself riparian ownership of the waters of the South fork of Scott river and its tributaries, yet may have ample proof to establish his right to use such waters as an appropriator, or vice versa. If, in either case, as is the charge, the defendant is wrongfully interrupting plaintiff in the full exercise of the right to the water from either source—i. e., either as a riparian owner or an appropriator—then certainly it would be entitled to the prohibitory relief for which it prays. In other words, the fact that plaintiff might not be able to sustain by proof one cause of action stated in the complaint would not constitute any reason for denying to it relief as to the other cause of action, if the latter be supported by sufficient evidence.

[7] As against the right of plaintiff to be protected in the enjoyment of its riparian rights, there is no merit in the suggestion that the complaint in the first alleged cause of action stated therein discloses that the purpose for which plaintiff has used and intends to use the water from the South fork of Scott river is and will not be a riparian use thereof, and that, therefore, said cause of action fails to show that plaintiff has been or will be injured by the alleged wrongful acts of defendant. The rights of a riparian proprietor as such are not to be tested by the use or uses to which he puts the riparian waters, or whether he uses them at all or not. If one's lands are riparian to a stream of water, the owner of the lands cannot be divested of his rights as a riparianist merely because he may either put the waters flowing in such stream to other than a riparian use or not use them for any purpose at all. Nor would a nonriparian owner of the waters of the same stream for such reason alone be permitted to divert the waters of such stream. The right of riparian proprietors, says the Supreme Court, in Huffner v. Sawday, 153 Cal. 91, 94 Pac. 426, "to restrain the diversion, by others than riparian owners, of water which would, if undisturbed, flow past their lands, does not rest upon the extent to which they have used the water, nor upon the injury which might be done to their present use. Even if these plaintiffs had never made any use of the water flowing past their land, they had the right to have it continue in its customary flow, subject to such diminution as might result from reasonable use by other riparian proprietors. This is a right of property, 'a part and parcel' of the land itself (Duckworth v. Watsonville W. & L. Co., 150 Cal. 520 [89 Pac. 338]), and plaintiffs are entitled to have restrained any act which would infringe upon this right."

[8] But it is further objected against the order appealed from that the averments of the complaint should have been fortified by evidence in the form of an affidavit that either the plaintiff "was entitled to the flow of the waters of Jackson creek through a usual or natural channel through plaintiff's land, and that the lands claimed to be owned by plaintiff were in some form riparian to the waters of Jackson creek, or such evidence should have been furnished by plaintiff showing or tending to show that plaintiff was an appropriator of the water right claimed by the complaint, together with the particulars as to the means and method of the diversion or appropriation by plaintiff and the continuation of its use and the necessity therefor." As seen, there was either one of two ways, pointed out by the Code, by which plaintiff was entitled to ask for and receive, if its showing was satisfactory to the court, the interlocutory injunction: (1) By and on the complaint; (2) by and on affidavits. Plaintiff adopted the first course, and, if the allegations of the complaint were sufficient, the court was authorized to grant the order on said complaint, in which it is alleged that Jackson creek is a tributary of the South fork of Scott river; that defendant diverted away from said Jackson creek 150 inches of water, thus and thereby lessening the flow of water in Scott river, and therefore necessarily depriving plaintiff of the flow in the latter to which it was entitled as a riparianist. These averments were sufficient to show plaintiff's riparian right to the flow of water in any creek or stream tributary to and emptying its waters into said river. It is hardly necessary to suggest that no one has a right to interfere with riparian rights by diverting the waters of a stream which is a tributary of the stream to which the lands of a party are riparian any more than to interfere with such rights by diverting the flow from the main stream itself. It would be only commonplace to say that interference with or diversion of the sources from which a creek or river obtains its supply of water is an interference with or diversion of the waters of the stream itself.

As to the objection to the complaint on the ground that it fails to state, or is unsupported by an affidavit that does state, the calticulars or the circumstances by which plaintiff acquired the water right claimed by it by appropriation, we need only repeat that the complaint itself is sufficient in this regard without an affidavit, and that the statute requires no affidavit where the application is made on the complaint. In such case, the application must stand or fall on the averment of ultimate facts. Whatever may be required in affidavits where they are used on such application—whether they must or must not state, as is usual in such documents, probative facts—the statute does not require the complaint in such a case to be more than a pleading. The pleading of the particular acts required to be done in order to acquire a water right by appropriation would amount to nothing less than the pleading of probative facts. If the Legislature had intended that, where an application for a preliminary injunction is made upon the complaint, the latter should, for that purpose, set forth probative facts, or that the complaint, for that purpose, should be in the nature of an affidavit or a deposition, or that it should be supported by an affidavit, it would certainly have said so in plain terms. The Legislature not having so declared, we take it that it was intended that the complaint upon which such an order might be made need be no more than a pleading, containing, of course, a sufficient statement of the ultimate facts to satisfy the court that there exist grounds for the temporary relief.

We cannot say from the record before us that the trial court abused its discretion in granting the order from which this appeal is prosecuted.

The order is therefore affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

15 Cal. App. 603

HOTCHKISS v. HANSBERGER et al.
(Civ. 760.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. March 15, 1911.)

1. TAXATION (§ 667*)—TAX SALES—SALE FOR EXCESSIVE AMOUNT—DEEDS—VALIDITY.

A tax deed which contains an itemized statement of the taxes, penalties, and costs, and which shows on its face that the amount for which the land was sold was in excess of the actual taxes, penalties, and costs due, is void, and this is true, though the excess is but $1.40.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. § 1350; Dec. Dig. § 667.*]

2. TAXATION (§ 667*)—TAX SALES—DEEDS—VALIDITY.

The maxim de minimis has no application to delinquent tax sales, but the law must be strictly followed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Dec. Dig. § 667.*]

3. TAXATION (§ 665*)—SPECIAL SCHOOL TAX—PENALTIES—COSTS.

A special school tax is a part of a tax levy, and cannot be included in penalties or costs accruing on the tax.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Dec. Dig. § 665.*]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1056*)—HARMLESS ERROR—ERRONEOUS EXCLUSION OF EVIDENCE.

In a suit to quiet title by the removal of a tax deed, which shows on its face a sale for a sum in excess of the amount actually due for taxes, penalties, and costs, the error, if any, in excluding the assessment book and delinquent list, not showing that the amount of the penalties and costs recited in the deed was legally computed, was not prejudicial to defendant claiming under the tax deed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 1056.*]

5. TAXATION (§ 800*)—TAX SALES—SUIT TO REMOVE VOID TAX DEED—TENDER OF TAXES AND PENALTIES.

An owner suing to quiet title by the removal of a tax deed void on its face need not as a condition precedent pay to defendant, claiming under the deed, the amount of the taxes, penalties, and costs paid by him for the property at the tax sale; the payment being voluntary.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. § 1586; Dec. Dig. § 800.*]

Burnett, J., dissenting in part.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; Geo. E. Church, Judge.

Action by O. E. Hotchkiss against L. J. Hansberger and others. From a judgment for plaintiff and from an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

S. L. Strother and J. R. Webb, for appellants. Snow & Freeman, for respondent.

HART, J. The object of this action is to secure a decree quieting plaintiff's title to certain property which is described in the complaint. The court awarded to plaintiff judgment as prayed for, and it is on an appeal from said judgment and also from the order refusing defendants a new trial that the cause is brought to this court.

The property involved in this controversy consists of a large number of town lots situated in the town of Selma and in additions thereto, in Fresno county. Defendants claim title to said lots through a sale thereof and a deed executed thereupon by the tax collector of Fresno county to satisfy the taxes levied on a mortgage subsisting on said lots. It was in fact stipulated by the parties "that the plaintiff was at the commencement of this action, and is now, the owner of the property in controversy, unless the title thereto was divested by a deed from the tax collector of Fresno county, dated the 18th day of July, 1900, to the state of California, and by a deed from the state of California, dated the 26th day of October, 1903, to the defendant herein, L. J. Hansberger."

There are but two important points discussed in the briefs and upon which the appellants insist that they are entitled to a decision by this court, viz.: (1) That the court erred in excluding as evidence the deed from the tax collector to the state and the deed from the state to the defendant, L. J. Hansberger. (2) That the plaintiff is obliged to refund the taxes paid by defendant as a condition precedent to his right to a decree quieting his title, and that, the plaintiff having failed to perform this equitable prerequisite, the judgment cannot therefore stand. On the 3d day of July, 1895, the property was sold by the tax collector to the state for taxes delinquent for the year 1894 on a mortgage subsisting thereon, and, no redemption having been made by the owner of the property within five years from the date of said sale to the state, the tax collector thereupon, in obedience to the terms of section 3785 of the Political Code, executed to the state a deed thereto. The ground upon which the court refused to receive in evidence the deed from the tax collector to the state was that said deed itself upon its face shows that it is illegal and void for the reason that it appears therefrom that the amount for which the lots were sold to the state is in excess of the amount of the taxes levied on and the penalties and costs which accrued thereon by reason of the default in the payment of said tax against said property. The rejection of the deed from the state to Hansberger was based upon the ground that the state, having no title, could, of course, convey none, and that said deed was therefore without any probative value. The last-stated proposition is obviously correct if the objection to the admission of the deed to the state be sound, to the consideration of which proposition we will now address ourselves.

[1] In the outset it may be stated that it is not contended by counsel for respondent that it is necessary for the tax collector to recite in tax deeds the items constituting the total of the penalties, costs, and charges. To the contrary, it is conceded by counsel that nothing more is required by the law in this regard than the insertion in such deeds of a statement of the total amount of the taxes, penalties, costs, etc. But it is claimed by respondent that where a tax deed does contain an itemized statement of the taxes, penalties, and costs—that is, a segregation of the several items, together with a designation of the amount of each, going to make up the total sum for which the property has been sold to satisfy the tax lien—and it therefrom appears that the amount for which the property has been sold is in excess of the actual taxes, penalties, and costs due thereon, such deed thus discloses upon its face that it is void under the authorities bearing upon that proposition. That this contention involves a correct view of the law is no longer an open question. Treadwell v. Patterson, 51 Cal. 639, and cases therein cited; Harper v. Rowe, 53 Cal. 233; Axtell v. Gerlach, 67 Cal. 483, 8 Pac. 34; Boston Tunnel Co. v. McKenzie, 67 Cal. 485, 8 Pac. 22; Knox v. Higby, 76 Cal.

264, 18 Pac. 381; Simmons v. McCarthy, 118 Cal. 622, 50 Pac. 761; Miller v. Williams, 135 Cal. 183, 67 Pac. 788. The deed to the state contains the following recital: "That the amount of the tax so levied on said property was the sum of $26.13 as follows: For county purposes the sum of $16.52; for state purposes, the sum of $9.61. That the amount of said tax was segregated into installments in accordance with law, and the costs and charges which have since accrued thereon amount to the further sum of $5.15." The property was therefore sold to the state for the total sum of $31.28. Section 3731 of the Political Code provides that "the auditor must compute, and enter in a separate money column in the assessment book, the respective sums, in dollars and cents, rejecting fractions of a cent, to be paid as a tax on the property therein enumerated, and segregate and place in the proper columns of the book the respective amounts due in installments. * * *" It is provided by section 3756 of said Code that, in case the first installment of the taxes is not paid on the last Monday in November of each year at 6 o'clock p. m., such taxes are delinquent, and that thereupon the tax collector must add to such taxes, and thereafter collect, for the use of the county, the sum of fifteen per cent. thereon, and, if such taxes be not paid "before the last Monday in April next succeeding, at 6 o'clock p. m.," there shall be collected by the tax collector an addition of 5 per cent. thereon. It is further provided by said section that, if the second installment of taxes is not paid on the last Monday in April, then 5 per cent. is added to such second installment.

Section 3770, Id., provides: "The tax collector must collect, in addition to the taxes due on the delinquent list, together with the penalties for delinquency, fifty cents on each lot, piece, or tract of land separately assessed," etc. Under the foregoing provisions of the Political Code, the amount which should have been added by the tax collector to the amount of the tax, $26.13, would be as follows, rejecting, as section 3731 of said Code authorizes to be done, fractions of a cent:

15 per cent. of first installment (one-half) of said tax.....	$ 1.95
5 per cent. of $13.06.....	.65
5 per cent. of second instalment, $13.06.....	.65
Amount required by section 3770, Political Code.....	.50
Total to be added to tax.....	$ 3.75
Add tax	26.13
Total, tax and penalties, etc.....	$29.88

The deed recites, it will be recalled, that the amount of the costs and charges added to the tax was the sum of $5.15, bringing the amount for which the land was sold up to the sum of $31.28, which sum is larger than the amount for which the tax collector was authorized to sell the property by the sum of $1.40. In other words, the difference between the amount of the costs and charges added to the tax by the tax collector and the amount which the law authorized him to add to said tax for costs and charges is the sum of $1.40.

[2] Under this showing the sale of the property involved to the state was void. In Simmons v. McCarthy, 118 Cal. 625, 50 Pac. 762, it is said: "It is not enough to say that the difference is trifling. The maxim 'de minimis' has no application in proceedings to transfer title by virtue of statutory proceedings for the enforcement of a tax." And all the cases heretofore cited so hold. The reason of the rule is that, where it is sought to divest a person of his title to property for delinquency in the payment of a tax in invitum imposed upon such property, the law authorizing the tax must be followed with substantial strictness, and in the sale of such property to satisfy the tax lien a more flagrant violation of the taxpayer's rights can hardly be imagined than in imposing upon his right of redemption a greater burden than the law anywhere authorizes. If the tax collector may be allowed to add an excess of $1.40 to the amount actually due for penalties and costs, he may, with equal reason, add a greater sum. The principle would be the same in both cases. But, as stated, he has no authority to add to the tax and sell the property for any sum, however small, in excess of the amount actually due. In the case of Simmons v. McCarthy, supra, the excess was only three cents, and the court held the sale void for that reason. It is very clear that the tax collector sold the property in the case at bar to the state for a larger sum than that to which the tax, penalties, and costs amounted, and that said sale was for that reason absolutely void. Said sale being void, the deed executed by the tax collector to Hansberger was of necessity without force and conveyed no title. Both instruments were therefore without the slightest probative value as supporting defendant's claim of title to the land in dispute, and it necessarily follows that the court's ruling excluding them as evidence for that purpose was proper.

[3] But the defendants contended in the court below and contend here that the assessment book and the delinquent list, if allowed in evidence, would have disclosed that the property sold for no more than the precise total amount of the taxes, penalties, costs, and charges, and that the court erred by its refusal to allow those records to be received in evidence. It appears from the assessment book that, in addition to the state and county taxes, amounting to $26.13, levied on the property, there was, at the same time, levied thereon a special school tax of $1.37. This last amount was evidently included in the sum of $5.15, which the deed recites constituted the "costs and charges which have since accrued" on the amount of the tax, $26.13.

Obviously the said special tax could not properly be counted as or included in the penalties, costs, etc., accruing on the tax. It constituted a part of the tax levy itself on the land, and therefore the amount of the tax for the year of 1894 on said land should have been, in lieu of the sum of $26.13, the sum of $27.50, on which basis the penalties, etc., should have been computed. And, computing the penalties and charges upon said sum of $27.50, it will be seen that the property was sold to the defendant for 14 cents less than the amount actually due, as the following will show:

First installment	$13.75
15 per cent. of said sum.....	2.06
5 per cent. of said sum.....	.68
Second installment	13.75
5 per cent. of said sum.....	.68
Costs50
Total, penalties, and costs.....	$ 3.92
Tax	27.50
Total tax, penalties, etc.....	$31.42
Property sold for.....	$31.28

[4] It is thus to be observed that from whatever viewpoint the assessment book may be considered there is not disclosed thereby any evidence tending to show that the amount of the penalties and costs, as recited in the deed, was legally made up or computed upon a legal basis. On the one hand, said book shows, if anything at all, that the amount of penalties, etc., as indicated by the deed, was erroneously computed by reason of the unauthorized inclusion therein of the item of $1.37 for the special school tax. As before stated, it was the plain duty of the auditor to have added the special tax to the general tax, and upon the total thereof the duty of the tax collector to make the computation of penalties, costs, etc. But, having without legal right included the special tax in the amount of costs and penalties, it follows that said tax was in legal effect entirely omitted from consideration for any purpose, thus leaving as the sole basis for the computation of penalties and costs the general tax in the sum of $26.13. And, as we have shown, the amount of the penalties and costs thus computed would be the sum of $3.75, in lieu of the sum of $5.15, as recited in the deed.

On the other hand, as seen, the assessment book discloses that, if the auditor had properly done his duty and so added to the general tax the item of $1.37 for the special school tax, the result of the computation of the penalties and costs accruing thereon would be an excess of 14 cents in the total for which the property should have been sold over the total for which it was sold. It is thus very plainly to be seen that the assessment book would not in any view have aided in the slightest degree in affording any legal justification for the excess in the amount of the penalties and costs, as recited in the deed, over the amount actually authorized on the amount of the tax as indicated by said deed. The ruling of the court rejecting the assessment book, and the delinquent list was therefore not erroneous—at any rate it was clearly without prejudice.

We may parenthetically observe that no authorities have come to our attention as to the precise legal effect upon the sale of property for less than the total amount of the tax and accruing costs and penalties. The Code requires that the sale shall be for the amount of the tax, penalties, and costs, and it is, of course, very clear that the tax collector has absolutely no more authority to sell it for less than for more than that amount. Upon principle, we should say, if it were necessary to decide the question here, that a sale for less than the total amount due the state for taxes, penalties, and costs would be void, since it would not be a sale according to law, and, besides, it is very clear that the state would thus be defrauded of its just dues.

[5] The point that the court erred in rendering judgment in favor of plaintiff without compelling the latter to first pay to defendant the amount of the taxes, penalties, and costs paid by him for the property in dispute at the tax sale cannot be maintained. In other words, defendant is not in a position to demand the application here of the equitable maxim that he who seeks aid from equity must do so prepared and willing to do equity. All the cases to which our attention has been called bearing upon this proposition, except that of Flannigan v. Towle, 8 Cal. App. 230, 96 Pac. 507, have been where the owner of the property has proceeded against the tax collector or other officer concerned with the levy of the assessment or the enforcement of the tax, and attempted to enjoin or otherwise invalidate the sale of the property for the taxes levied upon it. See Weber v. City of S. F., 1 Cal. 457; S. J. G. Co. v. January, 57 Cal. 614; County of Los Angeles v. Ballerino, 99 Cal. 597, 32 Pac. 581, 34 Pac. 329; Esterbrook v. O'Brien, 98 Cal. 673, 33 Pac. 765; Ellis v. Witmer, 134 Cal. 253, 66 Pac. 301; Couts v. Cornell, 147 Cal. 561, 82 Pac. 194, 109 Am. St. Rep. 168; Steele v. County of San Luis Obispo, 152 Cal. 785, 93 Pac. 1020; San Diego Realty Co. v. Cornell, 150 Cal. 637, 89 Pac. 603; San Diego Realty Co. v. Cornell, 151 Cal. 200, 90 Pac. 1130. In those cases it is held that the owner of the property is not entitled to equitable relief unless he comes prepared to do equity and so pay the taxes justly due against the property as to which he has asked relief. Of course, a more appropriate application of the equitable maxim in question could not be met with than in those cases where the owner of the property is attempting to have his property relieved from the lien of the tax, justly due the state whether properly levied or not, by some proceeding against the state or its fiscal agents. Every owner of property owes this debt to the state in any event. He must bear his just proportion of the burdens of government, and equity will not permit him to escape payment of his taxes, in a suit against the tax collector or assessor, by which he attempts to avoid it on account of the omission of some legal requisite in the proceedings leading to the assessment or sale or in the assessment or sale itself, even though such omission be sufficient to invalidate the assessment or sale.

The principle at the bottom of this proposition is that no one should be aided by a court of equity in an attempt to escape the consequences of a just and honest obligation, even if there exists some legal ground on which it could be avoided. The owner of the property, as stated, still owes the debt to the state whether the lien which attaches to his property to secure its payment has been legally so attached or not, and it would be contrary to every consideration of reason and justice to say that as against the state he could secure relief from a court of equity that would entirely release his property from the just and necessary burden of taxation, and he thus escape the performance of one of the most important duties resting upon a property owner. Indeed, in many cases this principle prevails and may be invoked as to transactions between private individuals, where one seeks equitable aid to be discharged from the consequences of a legal obligation, for some reason nonenforceable, as, for instance, in a case where there is a bar to a legal recovery by the statute of limitations, and, a fortiori, should the rule be applied in those cases wherein the owner of property seeks to prevent the state from collecting a just tax upon his property.

But, in cases by the owner of property against the purchaser at a void tax sale, obviously no such reason exists for the application of the equitable doctrine we are considering as applies and controls in the case wherein the owner of the property proceeds against the state. It may be that in a case where the sole claim of plaintiff is some irregularity in the proceedings leading to the sale or in the sale itself, and where there is no ground for holding the sale void, the defendant would be entitled to reimbursement before plaintiff would be entitled to a decree. And there is no doubt but that the Legislature could, as we understand has been done in some jurisdictions, require reimbursement under any circumstances in a case in which the owner asks for a decree quieting his title as against the tax title of the purchaser. But the case here, as seen, is not one wherein mere irregularity in the proceedings or the sale is charged, but is a case in which the sale was absolutely void, and therefore no title vested in the purchaser by reason thereof. Nor has our Legislature authorized reimbursement in a case of this character where the sale is void.

As is said in Campbell v. Canty (No. 758), the opinion in which has been filed this day, the policy of the state, as clearly indicated by its revenue legislation, is to give to a delinquent taxpayer every reasonable opportunity, compatible with the rights of the state in the premises, to redeem his property before it is finally sold by the state to an individual. The notice of such sale is addressed to the owner of the property as well as to the public. He is in effect then notified that, unless he comes forward and pays the taxes and accruing penalties and costs and so redeem his property by a certain designated time, the property will be sold for the purpose of satisfying the tax, etc. The purchaser appears at the tax sale hedged about by the doctrine of caveat emptor, and, thus buying the property and receiving the tax collector's deed, he is charged with notice of the defects, if any, in the title thus acquired. If the sale is void for any reason, he is not only charged with knowledge of that fact, but he thus acquires no rights to the property which either a court of law or of equity can enforce. Greenwood v. Adams, 80 Cal. 74, 21 Pac. 1134. In other words, if the sale is absolutely void, as here, "the payment of the tax by the purchaser stands on the footing of a voluntary payment, not made at the request of the owner of the land, and which he is under no obligation to refund." Harper v. Rowe, 53 Cal. 233, 238; Greenwood v. Adams, supra; Dranga v. Rowe, 127 Cal. 506, 59 Pac. 944; Preston v. Hirsch, 5 Cal. App. 485, 90 Pac. 965.

¹ Rehearing granted by Supreme Court.

The case of Flannigan v. Towle, supra, appears to hold a different view upon this proposition from that expressed here. But it is to be said with reference to that case that the briefs therein disclose that very little resistance was offered by appellants to the contention of respondent that they should have offered to do equity by reimbursing defendants for the money they expended in purchasing at the tax sale the property to which plaintiffs claimed title. In truth, no reply brief was filed by plaintiffs after the point was urged in the brief of respondents, and the proposition was practically not argued here except from the viewpoint of defendants. But we are constrained to here hold that, if there is anything in Flannigan v. Towle inconsistent with the views herein expressed upon the point under review, the same must be overruled.

Of course, it must be understood that plaintiff's immunity from reimbursing defendants does not relieve him of the duty of paying the taxes, penalties, etc., due the state. If, in other words, there is any legal way, either by virtue of section 3804 of the Political Code or otherwise, by which defendants may have restored to them the amount they have expended in purchasing the property and in the payment of the taxes on the same subsequently to the execution to them of a deed by the tax collector, and they should successfully assert their rights in that regard, the land would nevertheless still be subject to the lien of the state for such taxes, etc., since the action here is not against the state, and therefore its rights herein have not been adjudicated, and consequently cannot be concluded by the decree.

It may here properly be observed that the plaintiff, before the institution of this suit, offered to repay defendants the tax, penalties, and costs paid by them for the land, but that the latter refused the same. Their position with regard to the equity which they now demand is very little different from that of the defendant in Campbell v. Canty, supra. The only difference is that in the latter case the defendants not only refused to accept reimbursement before the suit was brought but failed to plead or demand the equity in their answer, while here the defendants have pleaded and thus demanded it. But we are of the opinion, founded both upon principle and authority, that, the sale being absolutely void, the defendants are not under any circumstances entitled to the equity here claimed by them.

For the reasons set forth herein, the judgment and order are affirmed.

CHIPMAN, P. J. I concur.

BURNETT, J. I concur in the judgment. Upon further reflection, I think that Flannigan v. Towle goes too far in the statement of the rule as to the reimbursement of the purchaser at a tax sale. As I conceive it now, where the tax is legally assessed and is justly due and the property is sold to a purchaser in good faith, and the deed is not void upon its face, the purchaser has a claim in equity for reimbursement. This should be presented, however, in his answer, if a suit be brought against him by the owner to quiet his title. In the case at bar, since the plaintiff offered to reimburse the purchaser, I can see no equity in requiring the former to pay the latter, as a condition precedent to judgment, something that the defendant declined to accept and thereby made it necessary for plaintiff to incur the expense of a trial. In other respects I agree with the opinion of Justice HART.

15 Cal. App. 634

COWELL et al. v. SNYDER et al. (Civ. 906.)
(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. March 20, 1911.)

1. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 200*)—HOLDING OVER—EFFECT.

Where a landlord seasonably notifies his tenant for years that the lease as to the rental will be changed if the tenant holds over, and the tenant does not refuse to be bound by such new terms, by his silence he will be deemed to have acquiesced in the changed contract and become bound by it; but otherwise if the tenant refuses to accept such new terms.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. §§ 794-797; Dec. Dig. § 200.*]

2. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 200*)—HOLDING OVER—TENANT AS TRESPASSER.

A tenant for years, holding over and refusing to pay an increased rental of which he was seasonably notified, becomes a trespasser, and liable for reasonable rental value as damages.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Dec. Dig. § 200.*]

3. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 114*)—HOLDING OVER—ACQUESCENCE BY LANDLORD.

By accepting rent after expiration of a term, though the tenants refused to pay an increased rental demanded by the landlord, the latter bound himself for another year.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. §§ 373-381; Dec. Dig. § 114.*]

4. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 55*)—ENJOYMENT OF PREMISES—QUARRIES.

Under Civ. Code, § 819, a tenant of agricultural lands for years or at will can work quarries opened, in the absence of contrary provision in the lease.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. §§ 136-150; Dec. Dig. § 55.*]

5. SALES (§ 75*)—PRICE—AGREEMENT UPON.

Sellers of lime, on being notified by the buyer that the account would be adjusted at a specified price, became bound by that price, where they made no objection thereto.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. § 204; Dec. Dig. § 75.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Leon F. Moss, Judge.

Action by Ernest V. Cowell and others against Ferd Snyder and another, partners as Ferd Snyder & Son, and as Snyder Lime Company. From a judgment for defendants, and from an order denying a new trial, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

Olney, Pringle & Mannon, for appellants.
Leonard B. Slosson, for respondents.

JAMES, J. Plaintiffs appeal from a judgment in favor of defendants entered against them for the principal sum of $1,673.30, and from an order denying their motion for a new trial.

In the year 1904 defendants leased from plaintiffs certain land situated at Tehachapi, in Kern county, for the term of one year, ending on the 1st day of December, 1905. The yearly rental stipulated to be paid therefor was the sum of $300. The lease was in writing, and further provided that the land was rented for farming purposes, but that the defendants were to have the right to quarry limerock on said lands for the purpose of manufacturing lime therefrom, for which privilege they were to pay an additional sum of five cents per barrel for all lime so manufactured from said rock. Defendants entered into possession of the land and manufactured lime from the rock taken therefrom up to the 1st day of December, 1907. Upon the expiration of the term during which the lease provided the defendants should hold and use the land, plaintiffs notified defendants that, if they continued thereon thereafter, and continued to quarry limerock from the land and manufacture lime, the annual rental would be the sum of $500, and that the additional sum to be paid for the limerock taken from the quarry would be 10 cents per barrel for all lime manufactured. Plaintiffs by their action sought to recover a balance of $3,613.80, alleged to be due them on account of rental and lime manufactured by defendants during the years 1906 and 1907, claiming that during these years the defendants held under the lease contract as modified, by which the compensation to be paid to plaintiffs was increased as before mentioned. Defendants by their answer denied that they ever acquiesced in or agreed to the changed terms of the lease contract, and asserted that during the time that they held possession of the land and used the same their holding was under the original lease and all the terms thereof, and not otherwise; and by way of counterclaim set up a cause of action for lime furnished to plaintiffs. The finding of the court was in favor of the contention of defendants that there had been no change made in the lease contract as to money to be paid by them for the use of the property. There was but slight controversy at the trial as to the quantity of lime furnished by defendants to plaintiffs, which was made the subject of the counterclaim; the dispute being, mainly, upon the question as to the amount to be paid by the plaintiffs therefor, plaintiffs contending that they were to pay $9 per ton f. o. b. Tehachapi for all of the lime so furnished, while defendants maintained, and the court found, that plaintiffs were liable for the reasonable value of all lime furnished in excess of three car loads. The amount of the judgment was arrived at by crediting upon the rental account, according to the terms of the original lease, the value of so much of the lime as was sufficient to extinguish that account, and providing that defendants should recover from plaintiffs the excess, which, as before stated, amounted to the sum of $1,673.30.

In the bill of exceptions is set out a great deal of the correspondence which was carried on between the plaintiffs and defendants during the years 1906 and 1907. In these letters, commencing early in the year 1906, were statements addressed to the defendants by plaintiffs, notifying the former that their lease on the Tehachapi ground had expired, and that if they wished to make arrangements for the ensuing year they should adjust their account for the preceding year, which was then overdue and upon which they were in arrears. In several of these letters written by the plaintiffs, defendants were distinctly notified not to take any more rock from the ground, and that, if they did so and continued in possession of the property, it would be at the new rate of compensation, to wit, $500 per year, and 10 cents per barrel for all lime manufactured. Notwithstanding these letters, the defendants continued in possession and manufactured lime, not only during the year 1906, but during 1907, also, and up to the 1st day of December of that year. It would appear that plaintiffs had great difficulty in procuring a settlement of their account held against the defendants, and as late as August, 1906, defendants were still in arrears on account of money provided to be paid under their lease, which should have been paid during the year 1905. It is the contention of plaintiffs that, after receiving notice of the changed terms of the lease, by continuing in possession of the land and working the quarry, defendants manifested their acquiescence in those new terms and became bound to make payment as compensation for the use of the real property and the limerock taken therefrom at the new rate. The court expressly found that defendants did not acquiesce in the proposal of plaintiffs to change the terms of the hiring of the property, and this finding is evidently made upon the testimony of the defendants, who testified that in 1906 they notified plaintiffs that they would not make payment according to the new rate as demanded.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r indexes

[1] The text-writers agree, and it seems to be settled by the authorities, that where a landlord seasonably gives notice to his tenant for years that the terms of the lease with respect to the amount of rental will be changed in the event the tenant continues to occupy the property beyond the expiration of his term, and the tenant does so continue to occupy the property, and does not manifest his refusal to be bound by such new terms, that by his silence he will be deemed to have acquiesced in the changed contract and become bound by it. But the cases also hold that where a tenant, holding over beyond the expiration of his term, announces that he will not accept the new terms proposed by his landlord, no agreement results, and therefore no contract by which the new terms become operative between the parties.

[2] In such a case, where the landlord does not receive the rental from the tenant, the tenant becomes, in effect, a trespasser and liable to the landlord for the reasonable rental value of the premises so occupied by him to be collected as damages. This is the general rule. "A tenant for years who holds over after the expiration of his term, without paying rent or otherwise acknowledging a continuance of the tenancy, becomes either a trespasser or a tenant, at the option of the landlord. Very slight acts on the part of the landlord, or a short lapse of time, are sufficient to conclude his election and make the occupant his tenant. But the tenant has no such election; his mere continuance in possession fixes him as tenant for another year, if the landlord so elects, although the tenant has refused to renew the lease and given notice that he has hired other premises. * * * He remains a trespasser, and can only become a tenant by mutual agreement. A holding over, after a notice from the landlord that if the tenant remains it will be at certain terms, is an acceptance of those terms. * * * Notice being given to the tenant that if he occupied beyond the subsisting term he must pay an increased rent, naming the sum, the tenant, although he held over, was held not bound to pay the increased rent unless he assented. But such assent may be inferred if he holds over and remains silent." Taylor's Landlord & Tenant, § 22. "The holding over may be upon a rent different from that before reserved, though otherwise the terms are the same. A contract for a different rent has been held to arise when the landlord notifies the tenant that if he holds over he must pay an increased rent, and the tenant makes no reply and does hold over; this being regarded as an acceptance of the landlord's proposition. If, however, the tenant protests against such increase, there can, by the cases generally, be no implication of assent by him, and no greater rent can be demanded than before. Occasional decisions and dicta to the effect that, even if the tenant objects to the payment of the increased rent, he will be liable therefor so long as he retains possession, are objectionable, as in effect imputing to the tenant an intention which he expressly disclaimed, and as enabling the landlord to fix a penalty of any amount for the wrongful holding over by the tenant. It might indeed be questioned whether, in the ordinary case, the tenant, by retaining possession even without objection to the proposed increase of rent, intends to indicate assent to such increase. The courts have, however, assumed that he does so intend." Tiffany on Landlord & Tenant, § 210; Jones on Landlord & Tenant, § 202, and cases cited therein.

[3] A statement of account set out in the bill of exceptions, which was furnished by the plaintiffs to the defendants in January, 1907, shows that at the close of the year 1905 defendants were indebted to plaintiffs in the sum of $1,165 on the old account, or the account for the year 1905. On February 2, 1906, the sum of $500 was credited to defendants, and on May 14th an additional sum of $500 was so credited, and on August 20th the sum of $1,000 was credited. It will be noticed, therefore, that a part of the sum of $1,000 paid by defendants on August 20th was made to apply upon the new account commencing December 1, 1905. The court having found that prior to that time the defendants had protested against the injection of any new terms into the contract of hiring, and there was some evidence upon which to found this finding, it then appears that plaintiffs accepted money which they applied on the rental account in the face of notice from defendants that they would not be bound by the proposed new terms in the lease contract. Up to this time, no doubt plaintiffs had the right to treat the defendants as trespassers, if they so elected to do, and oust them from the premises and recover from them the reasonable value of the use of the land during the period that the defendants had so held over. By the acceptance of money paid on account of rental, however, the plaintiffs must be held to have themselves elected to treat the defendants as tenants for the then current year, and, having once so elected, that election would bind them for the remainder of that term, or until the 1st day of December, 1906. The occupancy by defendants of the land during the year 1907 appears to have been had under similar circumstances. In December, 1906, defendants wrote to plaintiffs a letter containing the following paragraph: "Do you want to lease us your farming land at Tehachapi for the coming season? If so, how much do you want for it? The land is in good condition to plow now, and we are ready to begin plowing at once." On January 22d following, plaintiffs wrote to defendants as follows: "On December 27th we wrote you again and have received no reply. The same day you wrote us about leasing the land. We have not replied to this letter, as we have been waiting to hear from you in reply to our letter. We certainly could make no arrangements to lease the land until our pending matters are straightened up." No agreement was reached respecting the rental of the land for the year 1907, and in the letters written by defendants to plaintiffs there is a continued objection expressed to paying according to the new terms sought to be imposed by the plaintiffs. In a letter of August 10th, written by defendants to plaintiffs, is found this phrase: "No one knows better than yourselves that no man can pay you ten cents per barrel for your stone very long and live." Again, in a letter dated October 24th, defendants wrote: "Please tell us how we or any one else could afford to pay you ten cents per barrel for stone and live. * * * We are willing to pay you full value and as much as any one else will pay you for whatever business we do with you, but when you want more than that it is not in the cloth." It may be properly said that the conduct of defendants throughout their relations with the plaintiffs with respect to the leasing of this property and the payment of rental therefor was not such as deserves any particular commendation. The whole course of action on the part of defendants seems to have been in the direction of temporizing, and in the face of the continued and repeated notification to them by the plaintiffs to either vacate the property, stop taking limerock therefrom, or settle up their accounts, they continued to occupy and use the land, to manufacture lime therefrom, and dispose of it in the market. On the other hand, plaintiffs, had they so desired, could have ejected defendants under proper process from their ground, or brought an action at any time to recover the reasonable value of the use of their property. This they failed to do, but continued to accept money and lime, which they placed to the credit of the defendants, and by so doing they adopted defendants as continuing tenants and estopped themselves from asserting any change in the lease contract. The conclusion of the trial court upon that branch of the case, upon the record as presented to us, must be sustained. We cannot adopt the view, suggested by appellants, that the contract should not be treated as one for the leasing of lands, and therefore not subject to rules applicable to the relation of landlord and tenant.

[4] In the absence of a special limiting agreement, a lessee of lands for years or at will has the right to the product of the soil and also to work any quarries open at the commencement of his tenancy. Civ. Code, § 819. And the plaintiffs expressly alleged in their complaint that the land was leased for farming purposes, and that defendants were to have the right to quarry limerock on said lands. This latter right, so given defendants, was an incident to the main contract of leasing, and one which, under the Code provision cited, would have resulted in defendants' favor, even though the contract had been silent as to it.

[5] We think the court erred, however, in determining that a portion of the lime furnished by defendants to plaintiffs, and on which account the counterclaim is based, was to be paid for by plaintiffs according to the reasonable value thereof. This finding does not appear to be sustained by the evidence. It was admitted by all parties that, for the first three car loads furnished, the price was to be $9 per ton f. o. b. Tehachapi. Six other car loads of lime were furnished subsequently. After the first three had been furnished, plaintiffs wrote to defendants as follows: "We would request that you bill us the lime at $12, delivered San Francisco, instead of $9 f. o. b. Tehachapi. The reason for that is that it keeps our books straight, as we are charging you the freight and sending you the expense bill." Following this letter, and on March 22, 1907, a telegram was sent by plaintiffs to defendants worded as follows: "Send at least five car loads of lime at once. When will they be shipped?" Defendants replied that they would ship all the lime wanted, but it would be some time before they could ship much. In the course of this letter written by them they made the statement that they were offered $11 and $12 per ton for lime at Tehachapi, and that $10 per ton would govern until further notice. At the time a car load was shipped on April 20, 1907, to the plaintiffs, defendants wrote as follows: "We have been besieged with offers from San Francisco for the past two months for all the lime we can make at $12 per ton f. o. b. Tehachapi. We presume you will allow us the prevailing San Francisco price for our lime, viz., $12." To this letter plaintiffs made reply as follows: "Referring to your remarks about prices, beg to advise you to read our letter of January 31st, and to remember that you arranged with Mr. Cowell to ship us all your surplus output this season at $12 per ton delivered San Francisco. This we consider a contract, and shall adjust accounts accordingly." To this assertion as to the understanding had between the parties, defendants made no dissent, so far as the record discloses, either in the correspondence or in their oral testimony, and they proceeded to ship the lime to plaintiffs as requested. We think that defendants, when notified by plaintiffs that the account for lime furnished would be adjusted at the rate of $12 per ton delivered San Francisco (which was the same as $9 per ton f. o. b. Tehachapi, by deducting freight charges), and made no objection thereto or protest of any kind, became bound to accept payment at the rate stated.

For the reasons last given, the judgment and order must be reversed; and it is so ordered.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; SHAW, J.

15 Cal. App. 517

SHEEHAN v. LAPIQUE. (Civ. 954.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. March 1, 1911.)

APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 356*)—DISMISSAL.

A judgment was entered by default, and motions made to set aside the default and vacate the judgment, which motions were denied. Held, that an appeal from the judgment, made long after the lapse of time within which it could be made, would be dismissed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1926, 1927; Dec. Dig. § 356.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frederick W. Houser, Judge.

Action by Lizzie Sheehan against John Lapique. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Dismissed, and rehearing denied.

J. Lapique, in pro. per. H. H. Heath, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The record discloses that the judgment in this case was entered July 15, 1908; that thereafter motions were made to set aside default and vacate the judgment, which were finally denied June 13, 1910. The notice of appeal is from the judgment. While the order refusing to set aside the default and vacate the judgment is an appealable order, there was no appeal therefrom. The notice of appeal was from the judgment, made long after the lapse of time within which the same could be made.

Rehearing denied.

15 Cal. App. 746

BONDY v. AMERICAN TRANSFER CO.
(Civ. 914.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. April 1, 1911.)

1. TROVER AND CONVERSION (§ 32*)—COMPLAINT.

The complaint having set forth the facts, making it essentially one for conversion, notwithstanding unnecessary allegations as to the manner in which the property was acquired, which may be treated as surplusage, it was not error to refuse to strike out a paragraph thereof in terms alleging the wrongful conversion and disposal of the property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trover and Conversion, Dec. Dig. § 32.*]

2. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 210*)—ACTION—PARTIES.

The husband need not join his wife in her action for conversion of goods acquired for her business, the profits and risks thereof being, under her antenuptial agreement, her separate property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. §§ 774-782; Dec. Dig. § 210.*]

3. BAILMENT (§ 27*)—CONVERSION BY BAILEE—SETTING UP TITLE OF THIRD PERSON—ESTOPPEL.

The bailee sued by the bailor for conversion of the property cannot set up title of a third person thereto, except by authorization of that person.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bailment, Dec. Dig. § 27.*]

4. CORPORATIONS (§ 388*)—CORPORATE POWERS—ESTOPPEL.

A corporation authorized by its articles of association to do all acts necessary to carry into force and effect any of the purposes for which it was formed, having assumed that one of these acts was to take and receive on storage property then held by it as common carrier, is estopped, when sued for conversion of the property, to assert that such act of receiving property on storage was not so necessary.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1556-1567; Dec. Dig. § 388.*]

5. CARRIERS (§ 140*)—CARRIER AS WAREHOUSEMAN—CHANGE OF RELATION.

To change the relation of a corporation to a trunk, which it has transported and still holds under its contract of carriage, from that of carrier to that of one holding it on storage, it is enough that it contracts for storage thereof; delivery thereof by it under its first contract, and then redelivery to it under its second contract, not being necessary.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 609-616; Dec. Dig. § 140.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Monroe, Judge.

Action by Jennie Bondy against the American Transfer Company. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Frank W. Burnett, for appellant. H. T. Morrow, for respondent.

ALLEN, P. J. The action was brought on account of an alleged conversion by defendant of property belonging to plaintiff. It appears from the findings that defendant was a common carrier and in connection with such business carried on a storage business in the city of Los Angeles and kept and maintained a place used by it for the storage of goods for hire; that one Madam Yovin, engaged in business in New York, was the owner of certain robes and laces of great value; that she entered into a contract with plaintiff through which plaintiff was to take such goods to Los Angeles, open a place of business and sell the same, and out of the proceeds as sold to pay to Madam Yovin a stipulated price, and that all profits should be the property of plaintiff. Plaintiff at the time of making such contract was a married woman, the wife of one Leon Bondy, with whom, however, she had made an antenuptial contract, through which it was agreed that all earnings or profits earned by plaintiff in any occupation at any time during the marriage should be the property of plaintiff. Plaintiff pursuant to her agreement with Madam Yovin, accepted from the latter a trunk containing the robes, laces, etc., which trunk, with four others containing personal belongings of plaintiff and her husband, was carried by the railroads from New York to Los Angeles as baggage; that after the arrival of said trunks at Los Angeles plaintiff removed the four containing her personal belongings, but the trunk containing the property of Madam Yovin was stored with defendant for an indefinite time at a fixed compensation, payable upon delivery of the trunk. At the time of the storage plaintiff notified the defendant that the trunk was a business trunk and was very valuable; that after receiving said trunk in storage defendant, on the 23d day of May, 1908, and within five months after its receipt, without any notice of any kind or character to plaintiff, other than a published notice in a newspaper which was never seen by plaintiff, sold the trunk of plaintiff and the same was lost to plaintiff. At the time of such sale the trunk and contents were of the value of $2,794.78; that the contents of said trunk were not baggage nor perishable property. Defendant knew that said trunk contained merchandise and not baggage, and at the time of sale, the right to which defendant claimed on account of default in payment of storage charges, there were no storage charges due or payable under the terms of the contract of storage. Upon these facts the court rendered its judgment in favor of plaintiff, from which defendant appeals upon a bill of exceptions.

[1] We see no error in the first point made by appellant with reference to the refusal of the court to strike out paragraph 7 of the complaint. The complaint, having set forth the facts as narrated by the findings, alleged in terms by paragraph 7 the wrongful conversion and disposal of said trunk and its contents. We regard the complaint as essentially one for conversion. While it may be true that the complaint was more specific in its statement of facts than would be required in an ordinary action for conversion, these allegations with reference to the manner in which the property was acquired may be treated as surplusage.

[2] It is next claimed that plaintiff was not a proper party plaintiff, not being the real party in interest, and that the husband should have been made a party plaintiff. We do not recognize any merit in these contentions. Under the terms of the antenuptial contract, the profits and risks in this business venture were the separate property of plaintiff. Wren v. Wren, 100 Cal. 276, 34 Pac. 775, 38 Am. St. Rep. 287; Kaltschmidt v. Weber, 145 Cal. 596, 79 Pac. 272.

[3] That the plaintiff was a bailor is determined by the findings, which have support in the evidence, and in an action by a bailor against a bailee the latter cannot set up the title of a third person, except by authorization of that person (Palmtag v. Deutrick, 59 Cal. 168, 43 Am. Rep. 245; Dodge v. Meyer, 61 Cal. 423; Wetherly v. Straus, 93 Cal. 287, 28 Pac. 1045); and this estoppel applies as well to the title of the owner who had intrusted the goods to plaintiff, as to the husband on account of any community interest which he might have. Plaintiff as bailor had a special interest in this property as her own separate estate, and was therefore the real party in interest.

[4] We attach no importance whatever to the baggage checks given to the husband by the railroad company, or any acts of his in connection with their transportation to Los Angeles. Sufficient it is to say, that the contract with reference to storage, as distinguished from any liability as a common carrier, was a contract made between plaintiff and defendant and a contract which defendant had a right and authority to make. If its liability were to be tested by the authority given it under its articles of association, they provide in terms that the defendant is authorized to do all acts that may be necessary in order to carry into force and effect any of the purposes for which the corporation is formed. It assumed in this instance that one of these acts was to take and receive the property then held by it as a common carrier upon storage. Having made such contract, it should not be heard to say that such act was not necessary to carry into effect the purposes for which the corporation was formed.

[5] It is further claimed by appellant that the defendant never received possession of the trunk under the contract of storage, because it already held possession under a contract as a common carrier. It is not necessary in order to change the relation that there should be a physical delivery to plaintiff of the trunk then in their possession. This is recognized by section 2121 of the Civil Code, through which a common carrier, by giving notice after the arrival, can, without the acquiescence of the other party, change such relation and substitute others in the new relation. The contract for storage had the effect to change the relation as much as though the property had formally been delivered by defendant as a common carrier and then received independently as a warehouseman. The limitation of liability in the common carrier's receipt has nothing whatever to do with the liability which ensued by virtue of the independent contract as a warehouseman.

While the complaint did not disclose that plaintiff was a married woman, that fact was alleged in the answer, and under the evidence, it being established that plaintiff's special property in the converted goods was her separate estate, under section 370, Code of Civil Procedure, she is permitted to maintain the action without her husband being joined.

An examination of the record discloses no prejudicial error, and the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: JAMES, J.; SHAW, J.

16 Cal. App. 12

PEOPLE v. JONES. (Cr. 283.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. April 7, 1911.)

CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1130*)—APPEAL AND ERROR
—BRIEFS—AFFIRMANCE OR REVERSAL.

Where an examination of the record on appeal discloses no error, and defendant has filed no brief, the judgment will be affirmed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2965-2970; Dec. Dig. § 1130.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; E. J. Brown, Judge.

J. A. Jones was convicted of an offense, and he appeals. Affirmed.

J. J. Van Hovenberg, for appellant. Attorney General Webb, for the People.

LENNON, P. J. Defendant was convicted of the crime of rape, and, upon judgment being pronounced, took an appeal to this court.

The cause was upon the calendar of this court for argument last September, and was then continued for the term. It was again called for argument on January 23d of this year. No argument was made on behalf of appellant, and, there being no brief on file, appellant was given 20 days in which to file a brief. No brief has since been filed, and no extension of time has been asked. We have nevertheless examined the record, but have discovered no reason why the judgment and order should not be affirmed.

The judgment and order are therefore affirmed.

15 Cal. App. 732

PEOPLE v. WOLFROM. (Cr. 247.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. March 30, 1911. Rehearing Denied April 29, 1911; Denied by Supreme Court May 29, 1911.)

1. CHATTEL MORTGAGES (§ 230*)—CRIMINAL RESPONSIBILITY—INDICTMENT OR INFORMATION—STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

Pen. Code, § 538, provides that every person who, after mortgaging any of the property mentioned in Civ. Code, § 2955, during the existence of such mortgage, with intent to defraud the mortgagee, sells the mortgaged property, or any part thereof, is guilty of larceny, unless at the time of such sale the mortgagor informs the person to whom such sale is made of the existence of the prior mortgage, and also informs the prior mortgagee of the intended sale in writing, by giving the name and place of the residence of the party to whom the sale or incumbrance is made. Held, that the statute was intended not only to protect the mortgagee, but was designed to safeguard subsequent purchasers and hence whoever sells such mortgaged property without notifying the buyer of the existence of the mortgage is guilty of a violation of the statute.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Chattel Mortgages, Cent. Dig. §§ 489-493; Dec. Dig. § 230.*]

2. CHATTEL MORTGAGES (§ 232*)—CRIMINAL RESPONSIBILITY—INDICTMENT OR INFORMATION—SUFFICIENCY TO SUPPORT VERDICT—STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

Under Pen. Code, § 538, providing that every person who, after mortgaging any of the property mentioned in Civ. Code, § 2955, during the existence of such mortgage, with intent to defraud the mortgagee, sells the mortgaged property, or any part thereof, is guilty of larceny, unless at the time of such sale the mortgagor informs the person to whom such sale is made of the existence of the prior mortgage, and also informs the prior mortgagee of the intended sale in writing by giving the name and place of the residence of the party to whom the sale is made, an information charging that while a mortgage was unsatisfied, the defendant, with intent to defraud the mortgagee, sold an interest in the mortgaged property, without informing the purchaser of the existence of the mortgage and without informing the mortgagee of the sale in writing, by giving the name and place of residence of the purchaser, sufficiently charges the defendant with fraud as to the buyer as well as to the mortgagee.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Chattel Mortgages, Cent. Dig. §§ 484-487; Dec. Dig. § 232.*]

3. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§§ 125, 168*)—DUPLICITY—MATTERS TO BE PROVED.

Where a statute forbids several acts, and a commission of one or all of them constitutes the offense defined, it is permissible in one count of an information or indictment to charge all the acts, and the proof of any one of them will support a verdict of guilty.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. §§ 334-400, 534; Dec. Dig. §§ 125, 168.*]

4. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 110*)—ELEMENTS OF OFFENSE—INTENT.

Where the statute does not make the intent with which mortgaged chattels are sold an element of the offense, it is sufficient to charge the offense in the language of the statute, and it is not necessary to allege that the sale was done with intent to defraud the purchaser.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. §§ 289-294; Dec. Dig. § 110.*]

5. CHATTEL MORTGAGES (§ 230*)—CRIMINAL RESPONSIBILITY—STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

Pen. Code, § 538, provides that every person who, after mortgaging any of the property mentioned in Civ. Code, § 2955, with intent to defraud the mortgagee, takes or removes the mortgaged property, or any part thereof, from the county where it was situate when mortgaged, without the consent of the mortgagee, or who sells or incumbers the mortgaged property, is guilty of larceny, unless at or before the time of making such sale or incumbrance, such mortgagor informs the person to whom such sale or incumbrance is made, of the existence of the prior mortgage, and also informs the prior mortgagee of the intended sale or incumbrance in writing by giving the name and place of residence of the party to whom the sale or incumbrance is made. Held, that the words "with intent to defraud," found in the first part of section 538, apply and qualify that part of the section which forbids the removal of property but do not limit or qualify the other part of the section, and hence an intent to defraud is not an essential element of the offense of selling mortgaged property, and this conclusion finds support from the fact that the subject-matter of section 538 formerly constituted two sections of St. 1893, c. 102, one of which related to the sale of mortgaged chattels, and did not make intent an ingredient of the offense.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Chattel Mortgages, Cent. Dig. §§ 489-493; Dec. Dig. § 230.*]

6. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 24*) — ELEMENTS OF CRIME—INTENT—ALLEGATIONS AND PROOF.

When the intent is not made an affirmative element of a crime, the law imputes that the act knowingly done was with criminal intent, and it need not be alleged nor proven.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 26, 27; Dec. Dig. § 24.*]

7. CHATTEL MORTGAGES (§ 234*)—PROSECUTION FOR SALE OF MORTGAGED PROPERTY—VERDICT.

Pen. Code, § 538, makes it grand larceny for a mortgagor of chattels to remove the same from the county with intent to defraud the mortgagee, or to sell the mortgaged property without informing the purchaser that the property is mortgaged, and notifying the mortgagee of the intended sale, but does not make the latter offense dependent on the existence of an intent to defraud. An information charged that a mortgagor of chattels "willfully, unlawfully, feloniously, and with intent to defraud," sold the mortgaged chattels without informing the purchaser of the existence of the mortgage, and without notifying the mortgagee of the sale. The verdict found defendant guilty of "grand larceny, as defined by section 538 of Penal Code as charged in the information."

The court instructed the jury that there was no evidence showing that defendant intended to defraud the mortgagee, and that the allegation of intent in the information should be disregarded. There was no evidence that the property was removed from the county. Held, that a contention that the verdict was uncertain as to the offense for which defendant was found guilty was untenable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Chattel Mortgages, Cent. Dig. § 495; Dec. Dig. § 234.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George H. Cabaniss, Judge.

Fred D. Wolfrom was convicted of grand larceny, and he appeals. Affirmed.

H. C. McPike, Joseph P. Lucey, and Hiram G. Davis, for appellant. Attorney General Webb, for the People.

KERRIGAN, J. Defendant was convicted of grand larceny under the provisions of section 538 of the Penal Code. This is an appeal from the judgment and from an order denying him a new trial. The facts of the case are that, early in the year 1907, the defendant purchased about $5,000 worth of furniture from the Eastern Outfitting Company, a corporation, to furnish a large lodging house of which he had become the lessee. He paid $1,000 on account, and gave to the vendor a mortgage for the balance. Subsequently, with the oral consent of the mortgagee, he sold a one-fifth interest in the furniture and lodging-house business to one Matilda Bradford for $3,600. The only disputed question of fact in the case is as to whether the defendant had informed Matilda Bradford of the existence of the chattel mortgage at or prior to the sale to her of the said interest. As to this phase of the case it is sufficient to say, however, that the evidence fully supports the verdict.

The information was drawn under section 538 of the Penal Code, and charges that while the said mortgage "was in existence and unsatisfied" the defendant did "willfully, unlawfully, feloniously and with intent to defraud the said Eastern Outfitting Company * * * sell, transfer and cause to be sold and transferred an undivided one-fifth interest in and to the said personal property * * * to one Matilda Bradford, for and in consideration of the sum of thirty-six hundred dollars * * * without informing the said Matilda Bradford of the existence of said mortgage, and without informing the said Eastern Outfitting Company of the said sale and transfer of said one-fifth undivided interest in and to said personal property, or of any intended sale of same, in writing, by giving the name and place of residence of said Matilda Bradford, the person to whom the sale and transfer was made."

Section 538 of said Code reads as follows:

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

"Every person who, after mortgaging any of the property mentioned in section 2955 of the Civil Code * * * during the existence of such mortgage, with intent to defraud the mortgagee * * * takes, drives, carries away, or otherwise removes * * * the mortgaged property, or any part thereof, from the county where it was situate when mortgaged, without the written consent of the mortgagee, or who sells, transfers, or in any manner further incumbers the said mortgaged property, or any part thereof, * * * is guilty of larceny, and is punishable accordingly; unless at or before the time of making such sale, transfer or incumbrance, such mortgagor informs the person to whom such sale, transfer or incumbrance is made, of the existence of the prior mortgage, and also informs the prior mortgagee of the intended sale, transfer, or incumbrance, in writing, by giving the name and place of residence of the party to whom the sale, transfer, or incumbrance is to be made."

[1] It is not claimed here, nor was it contended at the trial of the case, that the defendant was guilty of any wrong so far as the mortgagee was concerned. The case was tried from the beginning to the end on the theory that a fraud had been practiced on Mrs. Bradford by the defendant. We do not doubt that section 538 was intended not only to protect the mortgagee of personal property, but, like the statutes in most of the states (Cobbey on Chattel Mortgages, vol. 2, § 797 et seq.; Jones on Mortgages, § 601 et seq.), was designed to safeguard subsequent purchasers, transferees and incumbrancers thereof; that therefore, whoever sells mortgaged property of the description covered by said section, without notifying the buyer at or before the sale of the existence of the mortgage, is guilty of a violation of the section.

[2, 3] We think also that the information sufficiently charged the commission of the act of which the defendant was convicted. From the allegations of the information it is not as clear as might be desired that the prosecution intended to charge the defendant with fraud as to the buyer as well as with fraud as to the mortgagee. Nevertheless, as no demurrer was interposed to the information, and as it does in so many words accuse the defendant with having violated the terms of section 538 so far as the buyer of the property was concerned, it must be held sufficient. It charges in one count that the defendant committed each of two of the acts forbidden by the section; and as this may be done, it follows that the information supports the judgment of conviction. Where a statute forbids, as this one does, several acts, and the commission of one or all of them constitutes the offense defined, it is permissible in one count of an information or indictment to charge all the acts, and the proof of any one of them will support a verdict of guilty. People v. Frank, 28 Cal. 507; Bishop's New Crim. Proc., § 336; People v. Leyshon, 108 Cal. 442, 41 Pac. 480.

[4, 5] This brings us to defendant's contention that the portion of the information relied upon is insufficient, in that it does not allege that the act complained of was done with the intent to defraud Mrs. Bradford. But this part of the section does not make the intent with which the act is done an indispensable element of the offense, and as it is sufficient to charge a violation of a statute in the language of the statute, it necessarily follows that there is no merit in defendant's contention in this behalf. The words "with intent to defraud" found in the first part of section 538 apply and qualify that part of the section which forbids the removal of property from the county where it was situated when the mortgage was given. They do not grammatically limit or qualify the other part of the section. This view finds support in the history of the section. Formerly the subject-matter of this section constituted two sections (Stats. 1893, p. 119), of which that part of section 538 which is the basis of the judgment here was one, and such section did not make the intent with which the act was done an essential ingredient of the offense.

[6] When the intent is not made an affirmative element of the crime the law imputes that the act knowingly done was with criminal intent, and it need not be alleged nor proven.

In People v. O'Brien, 96 Cal. 171, 31 Pac. 45, the defendant had altered a public record, apparently to make it speak the truth; in any event it was admitted by the Attorney General that the evidence failed to show any fraudulent intent on the part of the defendant. Nevertheless the court held that, inasmuch as the section defining the crime there in question did not make the intent with which the act was done an essential element of the crime, it was unnecessary to show that the defendant had acted with such intent. In that case the question is elaborately discussed, and a number of cases are cited and quoted from. The conclusion of the court on this point—which is correctly stated in the syllabus—is: "It is not necessary, in making out the offense of altering a public record, to prove any fraudulent intention upon the part of the defendant; nor is ignorance of the law and innocence of any intent to violate its terms any excuse for a violation thereof. When an act in general terms is made indictable, a criminal intent need not be shown, unless from the language or effects of the law a purpose to require the existence of such intent can be discovered." The court also quotes with approval the following language from the case of State v. McBrayer, 93 N. C. 623, 2 S. E. 756: "It is a mistaken notion that positive, willful intent to violate the criminal law is an essential ingredient in every criminal offense, and that where there is an absence of such intent there is no offense; this is especially so as to statutory offenses. When the statute plainly forbids an act to be done, and it is done by some person, the law implies conclusively the guilty intent, although the offender was honestly mistaken as to the meaning of the law he violates. When the language is plain and positive, and the offense is not made to depend upon the positive willful intent and purpose, nothing is left to interpretation."

In People v. Hartman, 130 Cal. 489, 62 Pac. 823, speaking to the facts of that case, the court said that the honest belief of the defendant that his first marriage was invalid was a matter of no consequence, because it was the act of marrying the second time that constituted the crime. So in Commonwealth v. Cutler, 153 Mass. 252, 26 N. E. 855, the defendant was charged with an offense similar to the one with which the defendant is charged here; and there it was held that it need not be shown that the sale of the mortgaged property was made with intent to defraud; that such an intent would be inferred from the mortgagor's intentional sale.

It is true that in those cases the question arose on the sufficiency of the evidence; but still they are in point, for if it is unnecessary to prove the fraudulent intent, it necessarily follows that it is not imperative to allege it.

Defendant complains of one of the court's instructions; but as his objection is based on the erroneous theory that the information does not charge an offense as to Mrs. Bradford, it must be held that the contention is without merit.

[7] The defendant also challenges the form of the verdict, but his position in this regard is also untenable. The court very carefully and fully instructed the jury that there was no evidence showing that the defendant intended to defraud the mortgagee, and told them "to ignore and disregard the allegation in the information" in this regard. There was no pretense that the property was removed from the city and county of San Francisco; so when the jury found the defendant guilty of "grand larceny as defined by section 538 of the Penal Code, as charged in the information," it is perfectly plain that they found him guilty of committing the particular act for which he was prosecuted; i. e., of having sold the one-fifth interest in the mortgaged property to Mrs. Bradford without having informed her at or prior to the sale of the existence of the mortgage.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; HALL, J.

15 Cal. App. 679

WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH CO. et al.
v. SUPERIOR COURT OF SACRAMENTO COUNTY et al. (Civ. 817.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. March 23, 1911. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court May 22, 1911.)

1. CORPORATIONS (§ 29*)—RIGHT TO DO BUSINESS—COLLATERAL ATTACK.

Where the existence of a corporation, whether de jure or de facto, appears, its right to transact business may not be inquired into or questioned except in a direct proceeding, in the nature of quo warranto, instituted and prosecuted by the state itself in which such corporation so attempts to do business.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 77-79; Dec. Dig. § 29.*]

2. TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES (§ 4*)—CONSTITUTIONAL AND STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

Rev. St. U. S. § 5263 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3579), provides that any telegraph company now or hereafter organized under the laws of any state may construct and operate telegraph lines through any portion of the public domain, or over any of the military or post roads, or over the navigable streams of the United States. Section 3964 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2707) provides that all railroads or parts thereof are post roads. Section 5266 (page 3580) provides that telegrams between the several departments of the government and their agents in transmission over the lines of any telegraph company to which has been given the right of way, etc., of the public domain, shall have priority over other business at rates to be annually fixed by the Postmaster General. Section 5268 (page 3581) provides that, before any telegraph company shall exercise any of the powers conferred by law, it shall file its written acceptance with the Postmaster General. Held, that the right of telegraph companies accepting the restrictions and obligations upon them prescribed by Congress is solely in the acts of Congress, and no state can exclude such corporations from carrying on business within the state, on public lands, military or post roads or navigable rivers.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Telegraphs and Telephones, Cent. Dig. § 2; Dec. Dig. § 4.*]

3. TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES (§ 7½*)—ESTABLISHMENT—CONSTITUTIONAL AND STATUTORY PROVISIONS—FOREIGN CORPORATIONS.

Civ. Code, § 291, provides that articles of incorporation of any telegraph organization must state the kind of telegraph to be constructed; the places where it is to run; the estimated length of the line; that at least 10 per cent. of the capital stock has been paid in. Section 293 provides that each such intended corporation before filing articles must have subscribed $100 per mile of lines. Section 294 provides that, before such articles of incorporation are filed, there must be paid to the treasurer 10 per cent. of the amount subscribed. Section 295 provides that, before the certificate is issued, there must be filed in the office of the Secretary of State an affidavit that the required amount of capital stock has been subscribed and 10 per cent. paid in. Held, that Const. art. 12, § 15, providing that no corporation organized outside the limits of this state shall be allowed to transact business in this state on more favorable conditions than are prescribed by law to similar corporations under the laws of this state, has no application to conditions required by the above sections, but refers solely to transactions of business after the corporation is established, and that under section 408 a foreign corporation may do business by filing with the Secretary of the State a certified copy of its articles or its charter or the statute creating it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Telegraphs and Telephones, Cent. Dig. §§ 1, 2; Dec. Dig. § 7½.*]

4. EMINENT DOMAIN (§ 10*)—RIGHT OF FOREIGN CORPORATION.

Civ. Code, § 407, added by Laws 1905, c. 471, provides that every railway or other corporation organized for carrying freight or passengers under the laws of the United States or of any state or territory may exercise the right of eminent domain. Section 1001, enacted in 1872, provides that any person may acquire private property for any use specified in Code Civ. Proc. § 1238, also enacted in 1872, which provides that the right of eminent domain may be exercised in behalf of telegraph and telephone lines. Held, that there was nothing in section 407 to show that the Legislature attempted or intended to deprive foreign telegraph companies, duly authorized to transact business in this state, of the power of eminent domain.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. § 36; Dec. Dig. § 10.*]

5. STATUTES (§ 178*)—CONSTRUCTION—STATUTORY RULES—"PERSONS."

Under Civ. Code, § 14, the word "person," as used in the statutes, includes a corporation as well as a natural person.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. § 257; Dec. Dig. § 178.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 6, pp. 5322-5335; vol. 8, p. 7752.]

6. EMINENT DOMAIN (§ 10*)—INTERFERENCE WITH FEDERAL LAW—FOREIGN CORPORATIONS.

If it was the intention of the Legislature to exclude from the right of condemning property under the power of eminent domain all other foreign corporations than those of the class mentioned therein, the statute in effect contravenes the laws of Congress with respect to foreign telegraph corporations, which have subscribed to the restrictions and obligations imposed upon such corporations by Congress, and therefore to the extent that it attempts to preclude such corporations authorized to carry on their business in this state from the exercise of such right is invalid.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Dec. Dig. § 10.*]

Prohibition by the Western Union Telegraph Company and others against the Superior Court of Sacramento County and Hon. C. N. Post, Judge thereof, to prevent further proceeding in an action by the Postal Telegraph-Cable Company to condemn lands. Writ discharged.

Transfer of cause for rehearing in the Supreme Court denied. 115 Pac. 1100.

Beverly L. Hodghead and W. H. Devlin, for petitioners. L. T. Hatfield and O. W. Powers, for respondents.

HART, J. The Postal Telegraph-Cable Company, a corporation organized and existing under and by authority of the laws of the state of New York, commenced an action in the superior court in and for the county of Sacramento on the 26th day of June, 1909, for the purpose of obtaining a judgment condemning a portion of the property of said petitioners, Southern Pacific Company and the Central Pacific Railway Company, situated in the county of Sacramento, "for the construction, maintenance and operation of a telegraph line, by the erection of poles and the stringing of telegraph wires thereon." Said company claims, as is manifest from the fact of having instituted said proceeding, that, under the laws of California, it has the right to exercise the power of eminent domain in this state.

Contending, however, that foreign telegraph corporations are not authorized by the laws of California to exercise the right of eminent domain, the petitioners have applied to this court for a writ of prohibition to prevent the respondents from taking further proceedings in said action and to compel them to refrain and desist from further entertaining the same. To the petition a demurrer and a return or answer have been interposed by the respondents, and in reviewing the questions presented we shall consider both said demurrer and return, if deemed necessary.

The specific contention of petitioners as to the alleged want of jurisdiction in respondents to hear and determine the issues raised by the complaint in said action is that if, as is the contention, there is no authority vested by the laws of California in foreign telegraph corporations to exercise the right of eminent domain, then a cause of action in behalf of said Postal Telegraph Company for the attainment of the object of said action could not, by any possibility, be stated, in which case the respondents could not, of course, acquire jurisdiction of an action instituted by said company for such purpose. Obviously the proposition thus stated is true if the premise of which it is predicated be sound.

With respect to the question as to the right of the Postal Company to exercise the power of eminent domain in California, the contention is that the right in foreign corporations to exercise that power in this state is limited, by the terms of section 407 of the Civil Code, passed by the Legislature of 1905 (St. 1905, p. 631), to "railway or other corporations organized for the purpose of carrying freight or passengers." In other words, the position of petitioners is that, having by said section expressly granted to such foreign corporations only as are engaged in the business of carrying freight or passengers, the Legislature intended to exclude all other foreign corporations not expressly named in said section from the right to exercise that power. This contention manifestly follows from the application to section 407 of the Civil Code of the familiar canon of construction, "Expressio unius est exclusio alterius."

The further contention is made by the petitioners that, because said Postal Company has not complied with sections 291, 293, 294, and 295 of the Civil Code of California, said corporation is doing business in this state in violation of section 15 of article 12 of the Constitution. Said section reads: "No corporation organized outside the limits of this state shall be allowed to transact business within this state on more favorable conditions than are prescribed by law to similar corporations under the laws of this state." The sections of the Civil Code referred to apply to "domestic corporations." The argument constructed around this proposition is that, if the statute of this state authorizing the condemnation of property for certain specified public uses is susceptible of being so construed as to permit foreign corporations to exercise the right of eminent domain, then said statute, in so far as it may apply to such corporations, is, in this case, violative of the Constitution, in that it would allow a foreign telegraph company "to transact business within the state of California on more favorable conditions" than is permitted to home or domestic corporations.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[1] It may be well to here say, in connection with this constitutional question, which involves, as we have shown, the right of the Postal Telegraph Company to transact business in California, that the point made by counsel for respondents that said question cannot be raised in a proceeding instituted for the purpose of condemning property for a public use possesses much force. Such a proceeding is in its nature collateral, so far as said question is concerned, and the rule is that where the existence of a corporation, whether de jure or de facto, appears, its right to transact business may not be inquired into or questioned except in a direct proceeding, in the nature of quo warranto, instituted and prosecuted by the state itself in which such corporation so attempts to do business. The Postal Telegraph Company is shown by the undenied averments of its complaint in the condemnation proceedings complained of here (said complaint appearing here as a part of the petition) to be at least a de facto corporation; and, if we preferred to rest our decision of the constitutional question raised here on that point, we should be inclined to hold that the position of respondents thereon is well taken. See Cook on Corporations (6th Ed.) § 637; Postal Tel., etc., Company v. Oregon, etc., R. R. Company, 23 Utah, 474, 65 Pac. 735, 90 Am. St. Rep. 705.

But the questions involving the merits of this controversy are of unusual importance and, to some extent, novel, and we agree with counsel on both sides that a decision involving the merits of the questions submitted for determination is to be preferred to an adjudication which would still leave undecided points of the most vital importance to foreign telegraph companies and particularly at this time to the Postal Telegraph Company.

It will perhaps be the more orderly to first consider and dispose of the question whether the Postal Telegraph Company is, as alleged, doing business in California without authority for doing so. Manifestly, if this proposition were maintainable, said corporation would have no right to institute and prosecute proceedings in our local courts for the condemnation of property in this state for its uses as a quasi public corporation. If we find, as we think we can show, that this point is untenable, we shall then take up for consideration and decision the question whether section 407 of the Civil Code is capable of the construction to which counsel for petitioners would subject it.

[2] As vitally bearing upon, and, we think, largely determinative of, all the questions which we are here called upon to consider, it may be well first to briefly inquire into and ascertain the status of telegraph companies with respect to their relation to the general government, and consequently the attitude which the state governments must bear toward them. This will, of course, necessitate a brief review of some of the congressional legislation pertaining to such corporations.

Section 5263 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3579) provides: "Any telegraph company now organized or which may hereafter be organized, under the laws of any state, shall have the right to construct, maintain, and operate lines of telegraph through and over any portion of the public domain of the United States, over and along any of the military or post roads of the United States which may have been or may hereafter be declared such by law, and over, under, or across the navigable streams or waters of the United States; but such lines of telegraph shall be so constructed and maintained as not to obstruct the navigation of such streams and waters, or interfere with the ordinary travel on such military or post roads." Section 3964 of said statutes (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2707) provides that "all railroads or parts of railroads which are now or may hereafter be in operation" are post roads. Section 5266, Id. (page 3580), provides: "Telegrams between the several departments of the government and their officers and agents, in their transmission over the lines of any telegraph company to which has been given the right of way, timber, or station demands from the public domain shall have priority over all other business, at such rates as the Postmaster General shall annually fix. * * *" Section 5268, Id. (page 3581), reads: "Before any telegraph company shall exercise any of the powers or privileges conferred by law such company shall file their written acceptance with the Postmaster General of the restrictions and obligations required by law." It is asserted and not denied here that the Postal Telegraph Company has filed with the Postmaster General its written acceptance, etc., as required by the foregoing section.

The effect and scope of the congressional legislation with respect to telegraph companies which have complied with section 5268 of the United States Revised Statutes are clearly and fully explained and expounded in the case of Pensacola Telegraph Company v. Western Union Telegraph Company, 96 U. S. 1, 24 L. Ed. 708. The principles enunciated in that case have never been, so far as has been disclosed by our examination of the federal cases on the subject, receded from or modified in the slightest particular in their application to the questions involved in said case and here. We therefore conceive that it will be sufficient to present here an excerpt from that case alone, without referring to or quoting from other cases, to illustrate the status of telegraph corporations to the federal government, where such corporations have accepted the restrictions and obligations imposed upon them by the laws of Congress. In that case the Pensacola Telegraph Company was granted by the Legislature of Florida "the sole and exclusive privilege and right of establishing and maintaining lines of electric telegraph in the counties of Escambia and Santa Rosa, either from different points within said counties, or connecting with lines coming into said counties, or either of them, from any point in this (Florida) or any other state." Said company was granted the further right to locate and erect its lines "along and upon any public road or highway, or across any water, or upon any railroad or private property for which permission shall first have been obtained from the proprietors thereof." In the year 1872, and after the granting of said rights and privileges, the Alabama & Florida Railroad Company, including its right of way and railroad, was transferred to the Pensacola & Louisville Railroad Company, and by an act passed in 1873 and amended in 1874 the Legislature authorized said telegraph company to construct, maintain, and operate a telegraph line "from the Bay of Pensacola along the line of the said railroad as now located, or as it may hereafter be located, and along connecting roads in said county to the boundary lines of the state of Alabama," etc. In June, 1874, said railroad company granted to the Western Union Telegraph Company "the right to erect a telegraph line upon its right of way, and also the rights and privileges conferred by the acts of February, 1873, and 1874." The Western Union Company thereupon commenced the erection of the line; but, before its completion, the Pensacola Company filed a bill in the United States Circuit Court for the purpose of enjoining said Western Union Company from continuing or completing the work or using said line, upon the ground of the alleged exclusive right of the Pensacola Company to maintain and operate a telegraph line on and over the right of way of said railroad company and the charter granted to said Pensacola Company by the Florida Legislature. Disavowing the power of a state to interfere with the right of a telegraph company that has accepted the restrictions and obligations imposed by the government on such corporations to do business within the borders of such state, in which there are military and post roads, the Supreme Court of the United States, speaking through Chief Justice Waite, says, inter alia: "Congress has power 'to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several states' (Const. art. 1, § 8, par. 3); and 'to establish post offices and post roads' (Const. art. 1, § 8, par. 7). The Constitution of the United States and the laws made in pursuance thereof are the supreme law of the land. Article 6, par. 2. A law of Congress made in pursuance of the Constitution suspends or overrides all state statutes with which it is in conflict. Since the case of Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 1, 6 L. Ed. 23, it has never been doubted that commercial intercourse is an element of commerce which comes within the regulating power of Congress. Post offices and post roads are established to facilitate the transmission of intelligence. Both commerce and the postal service are placed within the power of Congress, because, being national in their operation, they should be under the protecting care of the national government. The powers thus granted are not confined to the instrumentalities of commerce, or the postal service known or in use when the Constitution was adopted, but they keep pace with the progress of the country, and adapt themselves to the new developments of time and circumstances. They extend from the horse with its rider to the stagecoach, from the sailing vessel to the steamboat, from the coach and the steamboat to the railroad, and from the railroad to the telegraph, as these new agencies are successively brought into use to meet the demands of increasing population and wealth. They were intended for the government of the business to which they relate, at all times and under all circumstances. As they are intrusted to the general government for the good of the nation, it is not only the right, but the duty, of Congress to see to it that intercourse among the states and the transmission of intelligence are not obstructed or unnecessarily incumbered by state legislation. * * * It is not only important to the people, but to the government. By means of it the heads of the departments in Washington are kept in close communication with all their various agencies at home and abroad, and can know at almost any hour, by inquiry, what is transpiring anywhere that affects the interest they have in charge. Under such circumstances, it cannot for a moment be doubted that this powerful agency of commerce and intercommunication comes within the controlling power of Congress, certainly as against hostile state legislation. In fact, from the beginning, it seems to have been assumed that Congress might aid in developing the system; for the first telegraph line of any considerable extent ever erected was built between Washington and Baltimore, only a little more than 30 years ago, with money appropriated by Congress for that purpose (Act March 3, 1843, c. 84, 5 Stat. 618), and large donations of land and money have since been made to aid in the construction of other lines (Act July 1, 1862, c. 120, 12 Stat. 489; Act March 3, 1863, c. 98, 12 Stat. 772; Act July 2, 1864, c. 217, 13 Stat. 365; Act July 27, 1866, c. 278, 14 Stat. 292). It is not necessary now to inquire whether Congress may assume the telegraph as part of the postal service and exclude all others from its use. The present case is satisfied if we find that Congress has power, by appropriate legislation, to prevent the states from placing obstructions in the way of its usefulness. The government of the United States, within the scope of its powers, operates upon every foot of territory under its jurisdiction. It legislates for the whole nation, and is not embarrassed by state lines. Its peculiar duty is to protect one part of the country from encroachments by another upon the national rights which belong to all."

From the principles as thus affirmed, these incontrovertible propositions flow: (1) That telegraph corporations that have accepted the restrictions and obligations prescribed as to such corporations by Congress are not primarily beholden to any state for their right to transact a telegraph business therein; that the sole source of their authority to enter any of the states or territories of the United States, where there are military and post roads and government waterways, for the purpose of doing business therein is in the acts of the federal Congress. (2) That no state has the power, under the indicated circumstances, to exclude such corporations from the right or privilege of carrying on the business for which they are formed within its borders; that, while the state may impose upon such corporations, as it may upon all corporations of whatever kind or nature, organized and existing under the laws of another state, reasonable regulations, and to that end prescribe and require certain reasonable prerequisites to the exercise of the authority conferred on them by Congress to do business in such state, yet no state will be permitted, whether under the guise of regulation or otherwise, to enact any legislation the effect of which would or might practically be to prevent them from doing business in such state, or in effect result in an attempt on the part of such state to regulate commercial intercourse between its citizens and those of other states, or to control the transmission of all telegraphic correspondence within its own jurisdiction. In other words, any state legislation hostile to the right of such foreign telegraph corporations to do business in a state in which they are authorized to do business by Congress would be in direct conflict with the laws of Congress, and therefore void. By the light of these well-established propositions, we shall consider the questions submitted for determination by this proceeding.

[3] 1. As to the constitutional proposition urged upon us by the petitioners, we think that a brief examination here of the Code sections themselves, even unaided by the very few decisions involving a construction of the effect and scope of section 15 of article 12 of the Constitution to be found in our own reports, will be all that will be required to show the utter untenableness of the contention of counsel for petitioners. It may be remarked that, while the constitutional provision in question has been considered by our Supreme Court in some of the cases, there has not been cited by counsel on either side any case which may be said with strictness to be directly in point here; yet there are expressions in some of the opinions which, if bearing upon the precise question here at all, sustain the contention of the respondents. But, as stated, the Code sections themselves are in language which, it seems to us, clearly discloses that by no possible construction can the things therein required to be done be counted as among the functions of the corporations to which they refer. Section 290 points out in detail the matters which must be set forth in articles of incorporation. Section 291 provides that the articles of incorporation of any railroad, wagon road, or telegraph organization must state (1) the kind of road or telegraph intended to be constructed; (2) the place from and to which it is intended to be run, and all the intermediate branches; (3) the estimated length of the road or telegraph line; (4) that at least 10 per cent. of the capital stock subscribed has been paid in to the treasurer of the intended corporation. Section 293 reads: "Each intended corporation named in section two hundred and ninety-one, before filing articles of incorporation, must have actually subscribed to its capital stock, for each mile of the contemplated work, the following amounts, to wit: (1) One thousand dollars per mile of railroads; (2) one hundred dollars per mile of telegraph lines; (3) three hundred dollars per mile of wagon roads." Section 294 provides: "Before the articles of incorporation referred to in the preceding section are filed, there must be paid for the benefit of the corporation, to a treasurer elected by the subscribers, ten per cent. of the amount subscribed." By section 295 it is provided that "before the Secretary of State issues to any such corporation a certificate of the filing of articles of incorporation, there must be filed in his office an affidavit of the president, secretary, or treasurer named in the articles, that the required amount of the capital stock thereof has been actually subscribed, and ten per cent. thereof actually paid to a treasurer for the benefit of the corporation."

It is obvious that the foregoing sections are designed only to prescribe the requisites essential to the formation or organization of domestic corporations. In other words, it appears very plain that the sole purpose of said sections is to point out or prescribe the mode or manner of bringing into existence in this state, as creatures of our own laws, or as corporate entities, capable of performing corporate functions, the kinds of corporations to which said sections apply. Indeed, we do not understand counsel for petitioners to gainsay this proposition or to undertake to deny that the sole object of said sections is as we have declared it to be. This being true, it necessarily follows that, in order to justify us in sustaining the contention of the petitioners that said sections have the effect of imposing upon such corporations restrictions and obligations in the transaction of their business to which like foreign corporations doing business in this state are not subjected, or, in other words, that the effect of said sections is to permit certain foreign corporations to transact business in this state upon more favorable conditions than are thus accorded to similar domestic corporations, we are compelled to declare that the preliminary requisites which said sections prescribe shall be observed for the formation or organization of such domestic corporations constitute a part of the "business" of such corporations, within the meaning of that term as it is employed in section 15 of article 12 of the Constitution. It is very clear that we cannot so hold without doing violence to the plain, natural meaning of language. To say, with counsel for petitioners, as we must say if we would accept their interpretation of section 15 of article 12 of the Constitution, that the things required by said sections of the Civil Code to be done in order to legally form or organize any of the several classes of corporations to which those sections apply are a necessary part of the "business" or functions for the specific carrying on or execution of which such corporations may through said sections be brought into existence, would, of course, be to hold that such corporations may perform a part of their corporate functions before they have acquired legal capacity to do business at all.

Counsel for petitioners refer to the case of Gen'l Conf. of Free Baptists v. Berkey, reported in the 36th Cal. Dec. p. 330, wherein some expressions are used with regard to the scope of the section of the Constitution in question. There is nothing in the opinion of Mr. Justice Shaw in that case which lends the slightest support to the position of petitioners here. On the contrary, there is language in said opinion which upholds the proposition, contended for by respondents here, that the constitutional provision has no reference or application to the prerequisites prescribed by said sections of the Civil Code to be observed in the formation of the classes of corporations to which those sections apply. It is therein said, among other things: "Alabama has a similar constitutional provision, and this case comes within the rule adopted in that state, where the court holds that, in order to constitute a violation thereof, 'there must be a doing of some of the work, or an exercise of some of the functions for which the corporation was created'"—citing Beard v. Union, etc., Co., 71 Ala. 60, and International, etc., Co. v. Wheelock, 124 Ala. 367, 27 South. 517.

The said case of Free Baptists, etc., v. Berkey was subsequently reheard by the Supreme Court and the former judgment of that court was overruled; but in the later decision in that case by Mr. Justice Sloss (156 Cal. 466, 105 Pac. 411) there is nothing said indicating any different view by the court upon the general object and scope of the constitutional provision from that expressed by Judge Shaw in the original opinion or at variance with the view expressed in the Alabama cases referred to therein and mentioned here. The difference between the first and later decisions in that case was in the respective constructions given in the opinions therein of the effect of the holding by corporations organized for religious purposes of land on which to erect and maintain houses of worship and the selling of said land after there was no further use for it for such purpose by such corporations. By the first decision, it was held that thus holding and selling land by such corporations was doing or transacting business within the purview of the constitutional provision under consideration. By the later decision, the conclusion was reached that the holding and selling of land, as stated, by a corporation organized for religious purposes, constituted a mere incidental power of such corporation—i. e., that such holding and selling did not constitute "one of the ends for which it is organized, but merely a means to enable it to accomplish those ends." But, as before stated, by neither of those decisions is it intimated that the preliminary acts necessary to form or organize a corporation of any kind constitute any part of the business or functions for which such corporation may be organized. Indeed, it is very properly held in the later opinion that, even after corporations are formed for the purposes designated in their articles of incorporation, they may exercise a variety of powers in order to enable them to execute their main purpose. This is, of course, only a statement of the rule which necessarily applies in all cases of a grant of powers; that the body clothed with such powers may exercise, additionally, such implied or incidental powers as may be found necessary to enable it to execute its express powers, or, in other words, to properly and fully carry out its main purposes.

But the position of petitioners, if tenable, would in effect amount to a requirement that foreign telegraph companies reincorporate in California before they would be authorized to do business in this state. Clearly no such requirement or intention is contemplated by any provision of the law of California bearing upon the question of quasi public corporations of the class to which the Postal Company belongs. The Legislature could, of course, if it so elected, require corporations organized under the laws of another state or country to reincorporate under the laws of this state as a condition precedent to their right to do business here. But it has not done so, and, therefore those cases cited by counsel for petitioners from other jurisdictions, where reincorporation by foreign corporations under the local laws is required before they can do business within such jurisdictions, are not in point.

We have perhaps given the point under present review more consideration than it really deserves, for it appears to us that no proposition could be clearer than that the sections of the Civil Code, to whose provisions it is contended obedience by foreign corporations of the classes therein named should be compelled in order that they may not be amenable to the charge that they are, where allowed to do so, doing business in California on more favorable conditions than are permitted to similar domestic corporations, cannot by any conceivably reasonable construction be held to treat or deal with any of the functions or the elements of business for which such corporations may be formed. This we say deferentially to counsel for petitioners, to whom must be conceded the legal right to make and urge upon the courts any point which, in their judgment, may operate as a legal barrier or obstruction to the asserted right of the Postal Telegraph Company and other like foreign corporations to transact in California the business coming within the legitimate scope of the powers granted to them. But, the point having been made, it must, of course, be decided, and it seems to us (to briefly recapitulate and sum up the views heretofore expressed) that there is absolutely no escape from the conclusion that the section of the Constitution referred to has no application to conditions with which compliance is made necessary by those sections in order that an aggregation or association of individuals may constitute themselves a corporation in California, but refers solely (to borrow the language of one of the briefs) "to the transaction of business after the corporation is born," or, in other words, after a corporation of any one of the classes referred to by said sections is established through the instrumentality thereof; that a foreign corporation, to legally do business or maintain an office in California, is authorized to do so after filing with our Secretary of State "a certified copy of its articles of incorporation, or of its charter, or of the statute or statutes, or legislative or executive or governmental act or acts creating it, in cases where it had been created by charter, or statute, or legislative, or executive, or governmental act, duly certified by the Secretary of State, or other officer authorized by the law of the jurisdiction under which such corporation is formed to certify such copy," etc. Section 408, Civ. Code. It is admitted here that the Postal Telegraph-Cable Company has fully complied with said section of the Civil Code, and it therefore follows that it is authorized to transact within the limits of this state the business for which it was incorporated under and by the authority of the laws of the state of New York.

2. We are now brought to the consideration of the second question presented by this proceeding. This point, to restate it, involves the proposition whether, by the enactment of section 407 of the Civil Code, the Legislature intended to limit the right to the exercise of the power of eminent domain in this state by foreign corporations to "railway or other corporations organized for the purpose of carrying freight or passengers."

[4] As to this point, we may, without impropriety, in the outset of the consideration thereof, state that the conclusion at which we have arrived is: (1) That the Legislature did not, by the enactment of section 407 of the Civil Code, design or intend to exclude from the right to exercise the power of eminent domain all foreign corporations other than those of the class mentioned in said section; (2) that, if such was the intention of the Legislature or may be said would be the effect of the provision, if valid, said section, at least in so far as are concerned telegraph corporations that have accepted the restrictions and obligations imposed by Congress upon such corporations, is void, as being directly antagonistic to rights granted and guaranteed by the "supreme law of the land"—i. e., by the acts of Congress from which, as we have seen, telegraph corporations which have duly accepted the restrictions and obligations prescribed as to them by the general government derive their right to transact business within any of the states and territories of the Union over, in or through which traverse "post or military roads," within the meaning of that phrase as used in the act of Congress. Section 1001 of the Civil Code, enacted in the year 1872, reads: "Any person may, without further legislative action, acquire private property for any use specified in section twelve hundred and thirty-eight of the Code of Civil Procedure either by consent of the owner or by proceedings had under the provisions of title seven, part three, of the Code of Civil Procedure; and any person seeking to acquire property for any of the uses mentioned in such title is 'an agent of the state,' or a 'person in charge of such use,' within the meaning of those terms as used in such title. This section shall be in force from and after the fourth day of April, eighteen hundred and seventy-two." Section 1238 of the Code of Civil Procedure, among other provisions, contains the following: "Subject to the provisions of this title, the right of eminent domain may be exercised in behalf of the following uses: * * * Telegraph and telephone lines." That section, in so far as it relates to telegraph lines, was, like section 1001 of the Civil Code, enacted in the year 1872 at the time of the adoption of all our laws in codified form.

[5] It must be conceded that the word "person," as used in our state laws, "Includes a corporation as well as a natural person." Section 14, Civ. Code; Lux v. Haggin, 69 Cal. 255, 4 Pac. 919, 10 Pac. 674; Pasadena v. Stimson, 91 Cal. 238, 27 Pac. 604; City of Los Angeles v. Leavis, 119 Cal. 164, 51 Pac. 34; Robinson v. S. Cal. Ry. Co., 129 Cal. 8, 61 Pac. 947. Speaking of section 1238 of the Code of Civil Procedure, supra, the Supreme Court says: "A corporation, whether private or public, is a person. Civ. Code, § 14. It follows, therefore, that, under this general law—general in the widest and fullest sense of the term—any public or private corporation, or any natural person, may, for any of the uses defined in section 1238 of the Code of Civil Procedure acquire private property without the consent of the owner, by means of the proceedings prescribed in part 3, title 7, of said Code (sections 1237 to 1263)." Pasadena v. Stimson, supra. It will be noted that for over 30 years before the enactment of section 407 of the Civil Code section 1001 of said Code existed, in its present form, as a part of our local system of jurisprudence; and we apprehend that prior to the enactment of section 407 of the Civil Code by the Legislature of 1905 no one could be found who, for a moment, would undertake to maintain that any corporation, whether private or public, could not, under the terms of section 1001 of the Civil Code and the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure prescribing the remedy therefor, exercise the power of eminent domain for the uses for which such power is authorized by law to be invoked in this state.

The important questions here, then, as stated, are: Was it the intention of the Legislature that section 407 of the Civil Code should operate, except as to those corporations expressly named in said section, to abrogate the right of eminent domain with which all foreign corporations were undoubtedly invested by section 1001 of the Civil Code, and, if so, is not said section, to the extent that it was so designed to destroy that right, void? An examination of the statutes of 1905 (page 631 et seq.) will show that the Legislature, at the time it passed section 407, and by the same act, enacted sections 405, 406, 408, 409, and 410 of said Code. Each of these sections relates to corporations organized under the laws of other states, territories, and countries, and, with the exception of section 407, all involve mere regulations to which such corporations are required to conform in order to authorize them to do business in this state or to maintain or defend actions or suits in the courts of this state. In other words, section 407 is the only one of the several sections embraced within that act of the Legislature which purports to invest any particular class of foreign corporations with any substantive right. Said section reads: "Every railway or other corporation organized for the purpose of carrying freight or passengers under or by virtue of the laws of the United States, or of any state or territory thereof, may build railroads, exercise the right of eminent domain, and transact any other business which it might do if it were created and organized under or by virtue of the laws of this state, and has the same rights, privileges, and immunities, and is subject to the same laws, penalties, obligations, and burdens as if created or organized under and by virtue of the laws of this state. Nothing contained in this section shall be construed to exempt any corporation from any duty or liability imposed upon it by any of the provisions of this chapter."

It may be remarked that, if the act of 1905, embracing among others, said section 407, constituted the pioneer in legislation upon the subject of foreign corporations, the courts would doubtless be compelled to hold under the doctrine of construction, "Expressio unius est exclusio alterius," that, so far as a state Legislature would have the power to effect that result, the right to exercise the power of eminent domain was by said section 407 intended to be restricted to that class of foreign corporations expressly mentioned in said section. But, as we have shown, for a period of over 30 years antedating the enactment of said section 407, the established, accepted, unquestioned, and unquestionable rule in this state was that, subject to any reasonable regulations which the state might deem proper to prescribe to such corporations, any foreign corporation authorized to do business in this state was clothed equally like domestic corporations with the right to exercise, whenever necessary to do so for carrying on their legitimate business, the power of eminent domain. Now, it may be declared as a matter of common knowledge that the right in telegraph or other corporations organized for cognate purposes to exercise the power of eminent domain is absolutely, indeed, indispensably, essential to the carrying on of their business, for obviously, without such right, they could very easily be prevented from doing business at all. If, as may often happen and as perhaps has often happened, such corporations should be unable to secure, with the consent of the owner thereof, upon just compensation being offered therefor, rights of way over privately owned lands, it is very plain to be seen that, if petitioners' construction of section 407 be sound and the legislation therein, as so construed, the result only of a valid exercise of legislative power, they would thus be bereft of all power to extend their business as the exigencies thereof might require and thereby placed at the mercy of, if not in a position to be destroyed by, competing lines organized under the laws of our own state, and, besides, greatly impaired, if not destroyed, as governmental agencies.

In the ascertainment of the legislative intent at the base of a statute, the effect of which is, as would be the case here, if the theory of petitioners as to section 407 is supportable, to bring about a radical change in the matter of the enjoyment of substantive rights, we must search for and, if it can be discovered, look to the reason which appears to underlie or has inspired the amendment. We have in vain examined the provisions of section 407 to find some substantial reason why the Legislature should have attempted and intended to deprive foreign telegraph companies, duly authorized to transact business in California, of the exercise of a right without the enjoyment of which they might practically be prevented from doing business in the state at all. While the fact of the absence of any sound reason for the construction of the Code section claimed for it by petitioners may itself be counted as a reason why the Legislature did not intend by the enactment of said section to deny to foreign telegraph companies, lawfully prosecuting their business in this state the right, on appropriate occasions, to condemn property for their necessary uses as such corporations, still there are other considerations, significant and potent, which support the position that such was not the intention of the lawmaking department in the enactment of said section. The trend of modern legislation, both national and state, has been and is to discourage, and, indeed, to destroy, monopolies of every kind and description. The policy of our governments, if it has not always been, is certainly now to encourage and promote free and unhampered competition in all classes of business and in the sale of all sorts of commodities, particularly the necessities of life. To this end, there has been added to our statutes, federal and state, a variety of wholesome laws whose aim is to prevent or destroy and punish penally what have been colloquially, but in many instances justly, characterized as predatory trusts and combinations—in other words, monopolies which could control the markets of the world in their lines of activity, and thus impose upon the consumers the most outrageous and even unbearable burdens. At this deplorable condition, we say, modern legislation, sustained by a powerful and unmistakable common sentiment, has aimed its well-charged batteries. In view of these considerations, as well as others already and to be hereafter suggested, it is hardly conceivable that the Legislature of California, so late as the year 1905, would ingraft upon the statute books a law intended to so cripple foreign telegraph corporations authorized to do business in this state, and desiring manifestly to make transcontinental connections here, as to result in preventing them from carrying out, the most advantageously to the public and to our governments, the purposes for which they are formed. Again, it is highly probable that, the right in foreign telegraph corporations to condemn property under the power of eminent domain having existed for many years prior to the passage and approval of section 407, the Legislature, if it intended by said section to interdict that right, would therein have expressly so declared. Moreover, had it intended to take from such corporations the rights conferred upon them by section 1001 of the Civil Code, then it seems to us the act of 1905, within which section 407 is embraced, would have contained, as it does not contain, a clause repealing all laws then in existence in conflict with the terms of said section.

We do not know, nor have we, after viewing the statute from every conceivable angle, been able to discover, what precise reason prompted its enactment, for manifestly it confers on foreign railroad corporations, authorized to do business in this state, no greater rights than they already had or could have exercised prior to the passage of said section. This fact, it may be conceded, might itself furnish the foundation for a persuasive, if not conclusive, argument in support of the construction given the section by counsel for petitioners if we were to overlook the other considerations, to which we have referred, conclusively proving, we think, that such construction cannot be maintained upon any reasonable theory.

[6] But, as declared, if in fact it was the intention of the Legislature, by the enactment of said section, to exclude from the right of condemning property under the power of eminent domain all other foreign corporations than those of the class mentioned therein, the section in effect contravenes the laws of Congress with respect to foreign telegraph corporations which have subscribed to the restrictions and obligations imposed upon such corporations by Congress, and therefore to the extent that it attempts to preclude such corporations authorized to carry on their business in California from the exercise of such right, is invalid.

It is conceded that the property sought to be condemned by the Postal Telegraph-Cable Company in the proceeding pending before respondents is embraced within a "post road" as established and defined by the act of Congress. We have already seen that the right in telegraph corporations which have accepted the restrictions and obligations imposed upon them by the federal government to establish their lines within the limits of a state or territory where there exist "post roads" within the purview of the act of Congress establishing such "roads" comes, primarily, through the authority of Congress; that such right cannot be divested, nor interfered with, by state legislation.

Telegraph lines are now esteemed to be and are among the most potent agencies through which interstate communication and the highest welfare of our people and our governments, both federal and state, may be promoted and maintained. Indeed, they are, in our present civilization, absolutely essential to the full and proper transaction of the business of the general government. Such agencies therefore come within the proper, in truth, the peculiar, province of the federal government to foster and protect, in order that they may subserve the ends of said government. The acts of Congress with respect to such agencies of government are therefore paramount to state laws. The principle announced by Mr. Justice Harlan of the United States Supreme Court, in a very recent case (Chicago, Indianapolis & Louisville Ry. Co. v. United States, 219 U. S. 486, 31 Sup. Ct. 272, 55 L. Ed. —), is applicable here, that "no state enactment can be of any avail when the subject of such transactions has been covered by an act of Congress, acting within the limits of its constitutional powers." In other words, it is thoroughly established that, when "an act of the Legislature of a state prescribes a regulation of the subject repugnant to and inconsistent with the regulation of Congress, the state law must give way, and this without regard to the source of power whence the state Legislature derived its enactment." Sinnot v. Davenport, 22 How. 227, 16 L. Ed. 243; M., K. & T. R. Co. v. Haber, 169 U. S. 613, 626, 18 Sup. Ct. 488, 42 L. Ed. 878; Reid v. Colorado, 187 U. S. 137, 23 Sup. Ct. 92, 47 L. Ed. 108.

The legislation complained of here involves more than a mere regulation. It involves the substance of right. As before stated, the deprivation of the right in such corporations to condemn property for their uses, whenever necessary, might deprive them of the right to do business at all, as would, to a large extent, be the effect of a denial of that right in the present case. The legislation involved in said section is therefore hostile to the right guaranteed to such corporations by the federal government, and for this reason, if for no other, it cannot be sustained. The federal reports contain many cases sustaining this view. Counsel on both sides have, with commendable industry and ability, reviewed and analyzed those and many state cases in the elaborate briefs filed herein for our enlightenment upon the important questions involved in this controversy. It would be inconvenient—indeed, impossible—to review here all the cases cited without almost interminably extending this opinion. But it will be sufficient to say that we have carefully read the voluminous and instructive briefs filed in this cause and the cases therein cited, and we feel persuaded that the final conclusion at which we have arrived fully harmonizes with both principle and precedent.

It follows from the foregoing that the order to show cause or the alternative writ of prohibition herein issued must be discharged, and such is the order.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

15 Cal. App. 679

WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH CO. et al.
v. SUPERIOR COURT OF SACRAMENTO COUNTY et al. (Sac. 1913.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 22, 1911.)

PROHIBITION (§ 3*)—SCOPE OF REMEDY.

Prohibition will not lie to prevent the superior court from hearing an application by a foreign corporation to condemn private property for a public use upon the ground that the superior court has no jurisdiction to listen to such an application; the right of such corporation to exercise the power of eminent domain being a question of law within the jurisdiction of that court and properly reviewable by appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Prohibition, Cent. Dig. §§ 4-19; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

In Bank. On petition for rehearing. Rehearing denied.

For former opinion, see 115 Pac. 1091.

PER CURIAM. The petition for a transfer of this cause for rehearing in the Supreme Court after decision in the District Court of Appeal is denied without regard to the merits of the controversy between the real parties in interest, and upon the sole ground that in our opinion the remedy by prohibition is not available to the petitioners. It is sought by this proceeding to prohibit the superior court from hearing an application by a foreign corporation to condemn private property for a public use upon the ground that the superior court has no jurisdiction to listen to such an application by such a party.

It is true that the capacity of a foreign corporation to exercise the power of eminent domain in this state is purely a question of law, but it is a question as much within the jurisdiction of the superior court as other questions of law arising in similar cases which are held to be reviewable here only on appeal.

We have deemed it proper to make this explicit statement of our reasons for refusing to transfer the cause to this court for a further hearing, in order to guard against the assumption that the decision of the District Court of Appeal upon the questions therein so fully discussed is a precedent binding upon this court or the trial court; the question being one as to which we prefer to reserve our opinion until after more mature consideration than we have been able to give it.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r indexes

159 Cal. 783

PEOPLE v. BURK. (Cr. 1,639.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 24, 1911.)

HOMICIDE (§ 327*)—APPEAL AND ERROR—GROUNDS OF REVIEW—BRIEFS AND ARGUMENTS.

While it is its practice, in an appeal from a conviction for a capital offense, to search the record, even though no effort to point out any error has been made, and where defendant, after conviction for murder in the first degree, files no bill of exceptions, and presents no brief or oral argument, but files a transcript or copy of the judgment roll, as defined by Pen. Code, § 1207, the court, if it finds no error therein, will affirm the judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 695; Dec. Dig. § 327.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; T. L. Lewis, Judge.

William Burk was convicted of murder in the first degree, and he appeals. Affirmed.

W. R. Andrews and E. E. Capps, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Lewis R. Kirby, Dist. Atty., for the People.

SLOSS, J. Having been brought to trial in the superior court of San Diego county upon an information charging him with murder, the defendant was found guilty of murder in the first degree, and the penalty of death was imposed upon him by judgment rendered September 1, 1908. He took his appeal from this judgment on November 19, 1908. The record on appeal was not filed in this court until October 6, 1910. No brief has been presented on behalf of appellant, nor have counsel appeared to orally argue his appeal. In the absence of such appearance, the cause was continued until the calling of the calendar at Los Angeles in April last, and was then ordered submitted. In ordinary cases, an appeal which is not supported by oral or written argument will be given little or no attention by this court; but, where the judgment appealed from condemns a human being to death, we have always made it a practice to search the record to ascertain whether prejudicial error has been committed, even though no effort to point out any such error has been made.

The evidence is not brought up by means of a bill of exceptions or otherwise. The transcript consists simply of a copy of the judgment roll. Pen. Code, § 1207. A thorough scrutiny of the papers included in such roll has satisfied us that the proceedings against the defendant, in so far as they appear in the transcript, were regularly had in accordance with the requirements of law. The information is in proper form, and charges the offense of murder. The minutes show that the various steps leading up to the verdict of the jury were duly followed. The judgment was rendered as provided by our statutes. All of the instructions requested by the defendant were given, with the exception of one which the court rightly modified by striking out an incorrect and misleading clause, and one the substance of which was contained in the charge given by the court of its own motion. This charge, as a whole, defined with clearness and accuracy the propositions of law necessary for the guidance of the jury, and contained nothing which we can regard as error affecting the substantial rights of the appellant. We see no ground which would justify us in overturning the verdict and the judgment rendered thereon.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SHAW, J.; MELVIN, J.; LORIGAN, J.; HENSHAW, J.

CALIFORNIA REPORTER

116 PACIFIC REPORTER

(159 Cal. 785)

CONKLIN v. BENSON et al. (Sac. 1,804.)
(Supreme Court of California. May 24, 1911.
Rehearing Denied June 23, 1911.)

1. DEEDS (§ 68*)—VALIDITY—FORGERY—CHAR-ACTER OF INSTRUMENT—MISTAKE—PROCURE-MENT BY FRAUD.

Where complainant signed deeds and powers of attorney conveying forest reserve land, intending to convey her interest in the land, the papers to be deposited in escrow, so that lieu land applied for in exchange for the forest reserve land might be sold and the proceeds deposited in escrow for her benefit, and that of her cotenant, and the papers taken from escrow and the money paid over, but by the fraud of her attorney the conveyances were not deposited in escrow but were delivered to the grantee who was an agent for the sale of the lieu land, without payment of the price as intended, her failure to personally receive full payment for the lieu land by the default of her attorney could not make the papers forgeries.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Dec. Dig. § 68.*]

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

2. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT (§ 158*)—FRAUD OF AGENT.

Where a landowner holds out her agent as having full power to dispose of the property, either as owner or agent, holding the indicia of title, an innocent purchaser from such agent will be protected as against the agent's fraud, adversely affecting the rights of his principal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Agent, Cent. Dig. §§ 589-598; Dec. Dig. § 158.*]

3. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT (§ 158*)—FOREST RESERVE LAND—LIEU LAND—AUTHORITY TO SELL—ATTORNEY'S AGREEMENT—VIOLATION—INNOCENT PURCHASER.

Complainant, the owner of an undivided interest in forest reserve land with her co-owners, agreed to surrender the same to the United States in exchange for lieu land, and to sell the latter, and for this purpose complainant executed deeds of the forest reserve land to the United States with powers of attorney authorizing the attorney in fact to select and apply for lieu lands, or applications for such land and powers of attorney in fact to convey the lieu lands for such a sum as he deemed proper. These deeds and powers of attorney were executed on the belief that they were deeds to the agent to be placed in escrow by her attorney for delivery as the money was paid pursuant to an agreement between such attorney and the agent. Instead of this the attorney delivered the instruments directly to the agent and he recorded the deed to the forest reserve land and sold lieu lands obtained in exchange to innocent purchasers, and paid the money over to complainant's attorney who did not divide the proceeds between complainant and her co-owners as agreed. Held, that an innocent purchaser for value of the lieu land could not be deprived of his title thereto by the original owner; having purchased from the agent having all the indicia of title and authority to convey, under the rule that where one of two innocent persons must suffer by the fraud of a third person, he by whose negligence the fraud is made possible must suffer the loss.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Agent, Cent. Dig. §§ 589-598; Dec. Dig. § 158.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Modoc County; John E. Raker, Judge.

Suit by Mollie Conklin against John A. Benson and others. Decree for complainant, and defendant Thomas B. Walker and C. L. Hovey appeal. Reversed.

A. E. Bolton, for appellants. E. M. Gibson and N. E. Conklin, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, J. Plaintiff, claiming to be the owner of an undivided one-half interest in 200 acres of land situate in Modoc county, brought this action against defendants to obtain a decree adjudging that they have no interest therein, and adjudging that a certain deed and certain powers of attorney under which defendant Walker claims to be the owner of such land are void. This land has been granted by United States patent to plaintiff and the legal representatives of the estate of Patrick Reddy, deceased, in lieu of a portion of certain land owned by them situated within the limits of the Sierra Forest Reserve. Walker claims to have acquired in good faith and for a valuable consideration all of the interest of said patentees in said land by the deed and powers of attorney sought to be held of no effect, and also their interest in other parcels aggregating 1,760 acres selected in lieu of other lands owned by them and situate within said Forest Reserve. Findings and judgment were in favor of plaintiff upon the issues made by the pleadings, and we have before us an appeal by Walker and Hovey from the judgment, and an appeal by Walker from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

The plaintiff makes many general charges of fraud and conspiracy in the matter of the obtaining of the execution by her of instruments under which Walker claims, and in regard to some of these charges the testimony of plaintiff's witnesses was such that it cannot be held that there was not a substantial conflict in the evidence. But there is no conflict at all in the evidence as to certain facts, which, in our view of the law, establishes the right of Walker to prevail in this action.

In the year 1900 plaintiff was the owner of an undivided one-half of about 9,600 acres of land in Inyo and Tulare counties, known as the "Monache land," which had originally been acquired by her husband from the United States government. Patrick Reddy was the owner of the other undivided one-half which, on his death in the early part of the year 1900, passed, subject to administration, to his widow, Emily M. Reddy, and his brother, Edward A. Reddy. This land was all within the Sierra Forest Reserve, which had been set apart by the president of the United States prior to the year 1900. Under an act of Congress, the owners of the land so situated were authorized to relinquish the same to the government, and select in lieu thereof land open to settlement situated elsewhere. To accomplish such a substitution it was essential that the owners convey the reserve land, termed in such transactions the forest reserve base or base land, to the United States by a deed recorded in the proper county recorder's office, and file such deed, with an abstract of title showing title in the government, in the local land office, with an application for other specifically described land in lieu thereof, the land so selected being termed in such transactions lieu land. Under the law, if the land so selected is found to be open to location and the application is approved by the local land office, the papers are forwarded to the General Land Office, and, if there approved, a patent is issued to the original owner by the government for the selected or lieu land. Plaintiff and the Reddys were desirous of selling their Monache land. In July or August, 1900, a meeting was held in the private office of J. C. Campbell of the law firm of Campbell, Metson & Campbell, for the purpose of determining what should be done in the matter of these lands. There were present, among others, Mr. Campbell, Mr. John A. Benson, one of the defendants, plaintiff and Mrs. Reddy. Mr. Campbell was one of the attorneys for the Reddys, and, as must be assumed in view of the findings, he was also an attorney for Mrs. Conklin in this matter. She claims, and it is not susceptible of serious doubt, that he had her absolute trust and confidence. It was decided at this meeting that the land should be disposed of by sale. It was claimed by plaintiff and one of her witnesses who was present at the meeting that the parol understanding was that Benson should buy the base land outright for $3.80 per acre, and that deeds therefor were to be executed and placed in escrow, where or with whom or by whom not being expressly specified, but it appears to have been understood by plaintiff that Mr. Campbell was to see to this, and it was alleged in plaintiff's complaint that the agreement was that the deeds should be placed in escrow "under the supervision of plaintiff's said attorney, J. C. Campbell." It was further claimed that the understanding was that said deeds should be taken up from time to time as to various parcels thereof upon payment of the purchase price by Benson, all of the land to be so taken within 90 days. It is not disputed that it was contemplated by all parties that Benson was to obtain the money wherewith to pay for the land from persons to whom he should sell it. Subsequently, papers looking to the disposition of the land were prepared by Benson, and, through Mr. Campbell, submitted to plaintiff and the Reddys for execution. They consisted of deeds to the United States of the Monache lands, powers of attorney, authorizing the attorney in fact to select and apply for lieu lands or applications for such lieu lands, and powers of attorney authorizing the attorney in fact to convey the lieu land for such sum or price as he might deem proper. According to the evidence of plaintiff, these papers were sent from the office of Mr. Campbell to her for signature, and she, relying entirely upon him and believing that they were simply deeds to Benson, signed them and returned them to his office. There was no deposit in escrow of any of these papers, and they were apparently all placed in Benson's possession. The deeds to the United States of the base land were recorded in the proper counties. Benson thereupon proceeded in an endeavor to sell such land as might be selected as lieu land. Defendant Hovey was the agent of defendant Walker, who was making large investments in public lands. He had already had dealings with Benson in such transactions, and in the particular transactions as to Monache lands followed a very ordinary course of business in such matters, viz.: Selected lieu land as specified by his principal, Walker, indicated such selection to Benson, and upon the production by Benson of proof of the filing of a proper application for lieu lands in the local land office and the delivery of a power of attorney of the owners appointing him, Hovey, attorney in fact to convey the land, paid to Benson the agreed price, subsequently conveying to Walker the selected lands. The powers of attorney bore certificates of acknowledgment by the owners before a notary public, but plaintiff testified that she had never appeared before the notary or acknowledged any of the instruments. Both the other principals, Mrs. Reddy and Edward A. Reddy, and the notary public died prior to the trial. The evidence is sufficient to support the conclusion of the trial court that so far as the naming of an attorney in fact is concerned, the powers of attorney were blank at the time of the signing by the owner and the placing of the same in Benson's hands, and that Benson on making a sale would put in such blank the name of such person as attorney in fact as was desired by the purchaser. It is not claimed that the evidence warrants the inference that Hovey had any reason to suspect that Benson was not acting in all respects as authorized by the owners of the land, or any notice whatever as to any infirmity in the papers delivered to him, except that it is claimed that he knew that Benson filed in his, Hovey's, name, as the attorney in fact, in the power of attorney, after such instruments had been signed by the owners and placed in his possession, in other words, that he knew that the owners had executed the powers of attorney in blank so far as the name of the attorney in fact was concerned. It is unnecessary to consider what would be the effect of such knowledge on his part, for we are of the opinion that the evidence furnishes no foundation for any such claim. Fairly considered, the evidence is without conflict upon the proposition that all his knowledge upon the question was consistent with the conclusion that the various powers of attorney delivered to him in the matter of the purchase of plaintiff's lands were signed and acknowledged by the owners after his name had been inserted as attorney in fact, and was inconsistent with any other conclusion. Upon giving to Benson a description of the lieu land he desired to have selected, he would also instruct him as to the name of the person to be designated in the power of attorney as attorney in fact, and when some days or weeks thereafter Benson had obtained the proof of filing the necessary application in the land office and was ready to close the transaction, he delivered to Hovey a power of attorney complete in every respect, purporting to have been acknowledged by the owners thereof before a notary public. So far as we can understand from the record the powers of attorney delivered to Hovey indicated by the date of both instrument and certificate of acknowledgment that both signing and acknowledgment were subsequent to the time when he gave to

Benson a description of the lieu land desired and instructions to have himself specified as the attorney in fact. He had no other information than that afforded by the papers delivered to him by Benson. Walker had no notice of any kind except such as is imputed to him by reason of the knowledge of his agent, Hovey. Hovey paid to Benson from $3.62 to $3.75 per acre for 1,960 acres of land selected in lieu of so much of the Monache land, amounting to a little over $7,000. The price so paid by him was the price ordinarily paid by him for land of the character of that purchased, and was certainly a valuable consideration. The 200-acre tract involved in this action was a part of this. The tract was attempted to be conveyed by Hovey, as attorney in fact for the owners, to Walker, by deed dated December 10, 1901, and recorded in the county recorder's office of Modoc county upon December 12, 1901. It appears that nearly $11,000 has been paid by Benson to the owners on account of the Monache lands, $2,750 of which was received by plaintiff from Campbell, and over $8,000 by the Reddys, and this was much more than the price agreed upon for the 1,960 acres. So far as we can determine from the record, all moneys paid by Benson were delivered by him to Mr. Campbell. It is not shown by the record that any of the Monache land other than the 1,960 acres has been finally disposed of by Benson and thus placed beyond the reach of the owners. It is not shown by the record that the United States ever approved any of the selections of land in lieu of Monache lands except the selections made for Walker. Some time in 1903, plaintiff notified Walker that she revoked the power of attorney given to Hovey, and in the same year commenced a contest in the United States Land Office looking to a rejection of the claims of all persons claiming under papers signed by her. Having first offered to pay to Benson the sum of $2,750 which she had received, upon the restoration to her of her title to all of the Monache land formerly owned by her, plaintiff commenced this action on December 10, 1904. The owners of the other undivided one-half did not join in the action and were not made parties defendant.

[1] There is no foundation in the facts above set forth for the conclusion that the papers signed by plaintiff were forgeries, and absolutely ineffectual even to serve as a basis for the application of the doctrine of estoppel. The theory of the learned judge of the trial court appears to have been that all of these papers, including the deeds of the Monache lands to the United States, were in effect forgeries and absolutely void. The idea underlying this apparently was that plaintiff was so deceived in the matter of executing these instruments as to bring her within the doctrine of certain cases which substantially hold that where a person who has no intention of selling or incumbering his property is induced by some trick or device to sign a paper having such effect, believing that paper to be a substantially different instrument, the paper so signed is just as much a forgery as it would have been had the signature been forged. These decisions are not such as to sustain plaintiff's claim in this regard. The distinguishing feature between all such cases and the case at bar is that here plaintiff fully understood and believed that she was signing papers which, when delivered, would convey all her interest in the Monache lands. She intended to execute papers having this effect. The difference between the papers she thought she was signing, according to her evidence, and the papers she actually signed, was merely one of detail and in no degree material, one set of papers having precisely the ultimate effect of the other, the conveyance of her interest in this land. Her real and only complaint upon her own testimony was her failure to personally receive full payment for her land claimed to have been occasioned by reason of the failure of her agent to place the papers in escrow, to be taken up as payments were made, and the delivery thereof to Benson without payment first having been made. This failure could not make the papers "forgeries" in any sense of the word. She voluntarily and consciously signed papers effectually disposing of control of such land and delivered them to her attorney for the purpose of ultimate delivery to the purchasers upon payment of the purchase price. An example of the kind of case where an instrument actually signed by the defrauded party is held to be a forgery, notwithstanding the genuineness of the signature, is Marden v. Dorthy, 160 N. Y. 39, 54 N. E. 726, 46 L. R. A. 694, where the plaintiff had signed her name to a deed of her premises without any knowledge or information that it was an instrument which in any manner affected her interest therein, and without any intention to execute any instrument affecting such interest, and her signature had been obtained by some trick or device by which she was led to believe that she was signing a paper of altogether different character. Distinguishing the case from others relied on by the parties claiming against her, the court said: "The distinction between these cases and the one at bar is so broad and so plain that it is difficult to see how it could be supposed that they had any application. In all of them it will be seen that the party sought to be charged consciously and voluntarily executed a contract, obligation, or conveyance of some kind or character, and for some purpose. There was an intention to execute, and an actual execution of the instrument, in every case, followed by an actual delivery. There was the assent of the will to the use of the paper or the transfer, as the case may be, though that assent may have been induced by fraud, mistake, or misplaced confidence. In such cases when the obligation is put in circulation, or when some instrument which clothes another with the indicia of title to property is used by him, the equities of innocent parties must be considered." In Cornell v. Maltby, 165 N. Y. 557, 59 N. E. 291, 561, the same court holding that a transfer induced by fraud was not void but only voidable, distinguished the Marden Case, saying that it was there found that the signature of Mrs. Marden had been "obtained under circumstances which precluded the assumption that she had ever intended to sign a deed, so that its use for that purpose was in fact a forgery, and this, together with the fact that the alleged acknowledgment of the paper was equally fraudulent, rendered the instrument void ab initio." There is nothing in the law of this state which makes an acknowledgment by plaintiff or a certificate of such acknowledgment essential to the validity of any of the papers actually signed by plaintiff.

[2] Under such circumstances as are disclosed by the record in this case, the rule established by the overwhelming weight of authority is that the equities of innocent purchasers are protected, even if injury be done to the party who has been imposed upon or defrauded by her agent or original grantee. As originally said in McNeil v. Tenth Nat. Bank, 46 N. Y. 325, 7 Am. Rep. 341, and approvingly quoted in Woodsum v. Cole, 69 Cal. 142, 10 Pac. 331, and Dover v. Pittsburg Oil Co., 143 Cal. 501, 77 Pac. 405: "Where the true owner holds out another, or allows him to appear as the owner of or as having full power of disposition over the property, and innocent third parties are thus led into dealing with such apparent owner, they will be protected. Their rights in such cases do not depend upon the actual title or authority of the party with whom they deal directly, but are derived from the act of the real owner, which precludes him from disputing, as against them, the existence of the title or power, which through negligence, or mistaken confidence, he caused or allowed to appear to be vested in the party making the conveyance." The same general doctrine was applied in Schultz v. McLean, 93 Cal. 329, 356, 28 Pac. 1053, where the fraud occasioning injury was practiced by the plaintiffs' own agent in the matter of the delivery of a deed, the vendee being one in good faith and for value. This court there said: "'Where one of two innocent persons must suffer by the fraud or negligence of a third, whichever of the two has accredited him ought to bear the loss.' This principle is recognized by section 3543 of the Civil Code, which reads: 'Where one of two innocent persons must suffer by the act of a third, he, by whose negligence it happened, must be the sufferer.' * * * In this case, plaintiffs and defendant were both innocent. Neither knew that the fraud was being practiced; but if that fraud was productive of injury, the injury must result to the plaintiffs, for they placed it in the power of the wrongdoer to perpetrate the fraud. The vendee will not be compelled by a court of equity to lose the benefit of a bargain obtained in all fairness and honesty, because of a fraud practiced upon the vendors by their own agent. Under such circumstances they must bear the consequences; for the loss is chargeable to the trust reposed in their agent—in this case a trust so complete and entire as to cause them to disregard the dictates of ordinary prudence."

[3] In view of what we deem to be shown without conflict in this case, there can be no doubt of the propriety of the application of the doctrine just referred to, so far as Hovey and Walker are concerned. Hovey, who was in effect exclusively Walker's agent, found in the possession of Benson, a well-known agent for the purchase and sale of public lands, complete evidence of his full power of disposition of plaintiff's forest reserve base, and this evidence, consisting of various documents signed by her for the very purpose of enabling the disposition of her land to be made, had been placed in the possession of Benson by her trusted agent. There was in Benson's possession not only the deeds of plaintiff and her co-owners conveying the Monache lands to the United States, which alone would not, of course, apparently authorize any disposition by him of lieu lands, but in addition to these deeds, the only possible object of the execution of which was to obtain lands in lieu of the reserve land, the abstract of title essential to obtain lieu land, either applications for lieu lands executed by plaintiff and her co-owners or powers of attorney authorizing Benson, as their attorney in fact, to apply for such lieu lands, the proof of filing in the land office of the applications for the specific lieu land actually sought to be purchased by Walker, and a power of attorney apparently executed in complete form and acknowledged by plaintiff, authorizing Hovey, for a valuable consideration received from him, as her attorney, to convey the lieu land for such sum or price as he deemed proper. The evidence was without conflict upon the proposition that one of the ordinary methods of buying and selling forest reserve base was for the owner to deed to the United States the base land and obtain the approval by the government of lieu land selected by the purchaser, and give to the purchaser such a power of attorney as was given to Hovey, making the purchaser's agent or the purchaser himself the attorney in fact to make the conveyance. These documents, ready for delivery by Benson to Hovey, certainly made Benson to appear as having full power of disposition over plaintiff's property, and warranted Hovey in relying thereon to the extent of paying a valuable consideration for the land upon the delivery of the papers, including the executed power of attorney. There is absolutely nothing in the evidence to oppose the showing that Hovey acted in the highest good faith and without the slightest reason to suspect that Benson was not acting in the strictest accord with the arrangement between himself and the owners of the land, and we cannot see that he was at all negligent in so assuming. So acting, he paid a valuable consideration for the land. If injury resulted to plaintiff by reason of any departure by Campbell and Benson from the agreement as she understood it, it was due wholly to the trust reposed by her in her own agents. By reason of that trust, she held out Benson as having full power of disposition over her property, and she is precluded from disputing the execution of such power as against innocent third persons who were thus led into dealing with him.

In addition to this, so far as this record shows, there was no injury resulting to plaintiff by reason of any departure by her agents from the arrangement as she understood it, so far as the lands conveyed to Walker are concerned. We have already adverted to the condition of the record from which it must be assumed that the full agreed price of the lands conveyed to Walker, $3.80 per acre, was in fact paid by Benson to the agent of the owners. The money so paid to the agent was apparently all delivered to the owners, plaintiff acknowledging that she received from Campbell $2,750, and it being undisputed that the remainder was delivered to the Reddys. Why the money received was not equally divided by the common agent between the two sets of owners does not appear, but manifestly the receipt of the money by plaintiff's agent was, under the circumstances of this case, receipt by her so far as Walker is concerned. Even under plaintiff's understanding of the agreement, Benson was entitled to take any portion of the land upon payment of $3.80 per acre therefor, and the complaint and evidence both indicate that she contemplated that Campbell might receive for her moneys paid for the lands as the deeds were taken out of escrow. She alleged in her complaint that she had received "of said Benson, through her attorney, J. C. Campbell, the sum of $2,750," and that "she understood that said sum was in payment for lands, * * * the deeds for which had been taken out of escrow, and the said money paid into the escrow for the lands described therein." If she has been injured at all, such injury has been wholly caused by the failure of her own agent to pay over her portion of the money received from Benson. That is a matter solely between herself and her agent. So far as the record shows, there was no injury caused plaintiff in the matter of the disposition of the lands conveyed to Walker, by reason of any failure to follow the method of disposition that she claims was agreed upon. Her injury, if any, resulted from an entirely different cause, one in no degree affecting the right of Walker to retain the land.

In view of what we have said, it is unnecessary to discuss any other point made for reversal. Considering, however, that portions of this opinion may be alleged to imply that charges of fraud made by plaintiff against Mr. Campbell are well based, it is only fair to say that the only matters as to which there is any evidence at all to support the conclusion of a departure by him from the agreement as plaintiff understood it, aside from the apparently unequal division between plaintiff and the Reddys of the money received from Benson (a matter as to which the record furnishes no solution whatever), was in approving the papers, which were submitted to her for execution and which were different from those contemplated by her, submitting such papers to her for execution, and failing to place the executed papers in escrow for delivery as the money was paid. Even upon these matters the evidence was sharply conflicting. Wherever the truth lies as to these matters, there was absolutely nothing in the record upon which to found the conclusion that there was any design on Campbell's part to defraud plaintiff, or any collusion with any other party looking to that result, or that the course pursued by him resulted in obtaining any less money for the benefit of the owners than would have been obtained had the method understood by plaintiff to have been agreed upon been followed.

The judgment and order denying a new trial are reversed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.; MELVIN, J.; HENSHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.

159 Cal. 729

DOYLE v. HAMPTON et al. (L. A. 2,361.)
(Supreme Court of California. May 12, 1911.)

On Rehearing, June 10, 1911.)

1. PROCESS (§ 45*)—ALIAS WRITS—STATUTES—"IN THE SAME FORM AS THE ORIGINAL."

Code Civ. Proc. § 407, provides that a summons must be directed to the defendant, signed by the clerk and issued under the seal of the court, and must contain the names of the parties, etc., and section 408, providing for the issuance of alias summons, requires that it shall be "in the same form as the original." Held, that section 408 meant that the alias summons should conform to the requirement of section 407, and did not preclude the insertion therein of the name of a defendant, which through a clerical error had been omitted from the original summons.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Process, Cent. Dig. §§ 42-45; Dec. Dig. § 45.*]

2. JUDGMENT (§ 131*)—DEFAULT—ENTRY—PROCEEDINGS TO SUSTAIN JUDGMENT—PRESUMPTIONS.

Where the judgment roll does not show an issuance of an alias summons, but there is an affidavit of publication of an alias summons sufficient in form as to a party defendant and the judgment recites that proof of service upon all defendants has been duly shown, it will be presumed in support of the judgment, in the absence of anything to rebut the recital, that the alias summons in the form set forth in the affidavit of publication was issued prior to the publication.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 160, 245; Dec. Dig. § 131.*]

3. PROCESS (§ 45*)—ISSUANCE—ALIAS WRITS—AFFIDAVITS—MODE AND SUFFICIENCY OF PUBLICATION.

It is not necessary that an alias summons should issue prior to the making of the affidavits for publication, or prior to the making of the order for publication; but it is sufficient that such summons is issued at any time prior to the commencement of the publication service ordered.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Process, Cent. Dig. §§ 42-45; Dec. Dig. § 45.*]

4. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 239*)—BONA FIDE PURCHASER—RIGHTS ACQUIRED—JUDGMENT.

Where a purchaser acquires land upon the faith of a default judgment, valid on its face, without notice or knowledge of any fact tending to show fraud in obtaining the judgment, the owner of the land prior to the judgment is not entitled to relief as against the rights of the innocent purchaser.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 583-600; Dec. Dig. § 239.*]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1011*)—REVIEW—VERDICT AND FINDINGS—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Where findings are supported by evidence legally sufficient, although to some extent conflicting, an appellate court will accept the findings as correct.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3983-3989; Dec. Dig. § 1011.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; George H. Hutton, Judge.

Action by Thomas Doyle against Thomas J. Hampton, Emanuel Lewis, and another, in which Lewis and the other defendant failed to appear and took judgment by default, and from a judgment for defendant Hampton, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

H. E. Storrs and Munson & Barclay, for appellant. Schweitzer & Hutton, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This action was brought by plaintiff to have it adjudged that he is the owner of a lot of land in the Lewis tract, Los Angeles county; that the defendants Hampton, Lewis, and Rich have no interest therein; and that a certain judgment in favor of Lewis in an action brought by him against plaintiff and others, adjudging said Lewis to be the owner of said land, be declared void, because fraudulently obtained. The action is similar in character to that upheld in Parsons v. Weis, 144 Cal. 410, 77 Pac. 1007. The defendants Lewis and Rich were duly served with summons, but failed to appear, and their defaults were duly entered. Defendant Hampton served and filed an answer and a cross-complaint, which were treated in the court below and are treated on this appeal as sufficiently presenting the defense that he purchased the land from Lewis in good faith and without notice of any fraud in the matter of the obtaining of said judgment, after such judgment had become final, and paid a valuable consideration therefor. Hampton's answer has at all times been treated as sufficiently denying the allegations of fraud in the matter of obtaining such judgment. The findings of the trial court were in favor of Hampton, both upon the allegations of fraud and upon the defense of a purchase in good faith for a valuable consideration, and judgment went in his favor declaring him to be the owner of the land. This is an appeal by plaintiff from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

1. The judgment in the action brought by Lewis against Doyle, the plaintiff here, was not void on its face. That action was one to quiet title, commenced May 19, 1899, against Doyle and many other persons, Lewis alleging in the verified complaint therein that he was the owner of a tract of land, including the lot in controversy, and seeking a judgment accordingly. Summons therein was issued on May 19, 1899, but this summons was defective as to Doyle, for the reason that his name was omitted from the specification of persons to whom it was directed; it being directed to all of the defendants except Doyle. This summons was returned and filed in court on July 12, 1899, accompanied by affidavits showing personal service on a large number of defendants, and the inability of the deponents to find other defendants, including Doyle. Upon these affidavits, and also the affidavit of Lewis, made July 11, 1899, which made a sufficient case for an order for service of summons by publication as against Doyle and other defendants, the affidavit of Lewis being filed July 14, 1899, the judge of the trial court on July 14, 1899, made an order that service of summons be made upon Doyle and others by publication for the requisite time in a daily newspaper published in the city of Los Angeles. There was no direction for mailing as to Doyle; his residence not being known. The register of actions in such case shows that an alias summons was issued on July 14, 1899, but this summons is missing from the judgment roll and files. The judgment roll does contain an affidavit of publication in full accord with the order of the court of an alias summons, a printed copy of which alias summons is attached to such affidavit. This printed copy shows the name of Doyle among the names of the persons to whom the summons was directed. Doyle failed to appear, and his default was regularly entered. The judgment, given January 20, 1900, and entered February 1, 1900, recites that proof of service on all of the defendants was duly shown, and that the default of defendant Doyle and other defendants had been duly entered. By the judgment it is substantially decreed that Lewis is the owner of the land in controversy, and that his title is quieted as against all the defendants.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes.

The only points made in support of the claim that the judgment is void on its face relate to the defect in the original summons, the alleged want of showing of the issuance of an alias summons, the form of the alias summons if one is to be held to have been issued, and the time of the issuance of such alias summons.

[1] As to the defect in the original summons, viz., the omission of Doyle's name from the names of those to whom the summons was directed, and the form of the alias summons, a copy of which is attached to the affidavit of publication and shows the inclusion of Doyle's name as one of those to whom the summons was directed, the point is that the law in regard to the issuance of an alias summons (section 408, Code Civ. Proc.) provides that the same shall be "in the same form as the original." Section 407, Code Civ. Proc., provides what shall be the form and contents of a summons, viz., that it must be directed to the defendant, signed by the clerk and issued under the seal of the court, and must contain (1) the names of the parties, the court in which the action is brought, and the county in which the complaint is filed, (2) a direction that defendant appear and answer the complaint within a specified time, and (3) notice that, unless he does so appear and answer, plaintiff will take judgment for the money or damages demanded, or will apply to the court for any other relief demanded in the complaint. The provision of section 408, Code of Civil Procedure, as to the form of the alias summons, means no more than that it shall conform to the requirements of section 407, Code of Civil Procedure, and did not preclude the insertion therein of the name of a defendant, which, through clerical error, had been omitted from the original summons.

[2] As to the failure of the judgment roll to show the issuance of an alias summons, it must be assumed in support of the judgment, in view of the affidavit of publication of an alias summons sufficient in form as to Doyle and the recital in the judgment that proof of service upon all the defendants had been duly shown, and in the absence of anything in the judgment roll tending to rebut the recital of the judgment, that the alias summons, in the form set forth in the affidavit of publication, was issued prior to the publication. People v. Davis, 143 Cal. 673, 678, 77 Pac. 651.

[3] It was not necessary that such alias summons should have been issued prior to the making of the affidavits for publication, or prior to the making of the order for publication. It is certainly sufficient that such summons is issued at any time prior to the commencement of the publication service ordered.

2. There was never any personal service of summons on Doyle in the action against him by Lewis, and the decree against him is based exclusively on the constructive service already shown. Doyle never had any actual notice of such action or the judgment against him therein until some time in the month of June, 1906. He states in his complaint in this action facts tending to show not only that he was the absolute owner of the land in controversy at the time of the commencement of the action by Lewis against him to quiet title, and that he never had any notice or knowledge of the action, but also tending to show that Lewis in his verified complaint in that action, which constituted a part of his showing for an order for publication of summons, and also in his affidavit presented in support of his application for such order for publication, willfully and knowingly made false statements which were material, and that consequently he obtained such order for publication of summons by the practice of fraud. Plaintiff's complaint in this behalf clearly brings him within the doctrine of such cases as Dunlap v. Steere, 92 Cal. 344, 28 Pac. 563, 16 L. R. A. 361, 27 Am. St. Rep. 143, and Parsons v. Weis, 144 Cal. 419, 77 Pac. 1007, to the effect that an unconscionable judgment, based solely upon constructive service of process, obtained without any knowledge of the action on the part of the defendant and in such a way that no opportunity has ever been given him to be heard in his defense, will be annulled at the suit of such defendant in an action brought in a timely manner for that purpose, when it is made to appear that the plaintiff in such action knowingly and willfully made a false showing as to material facts for the purpose of obtaining the order for service of summons by publication. Such conduct on the part of the person so obtaining the judgment is held to be extrinsic fraud upon the court in procuring the judgment, and a judgment so obtained "is not within the rule declared in Pico v. Cohn, 91 Cal. 129, 25 Pac. 970, 27 Pac. 537, 13 L. R. A. 336, 25 Am. St. Rep. 159, and in similar cases where relief is sought from a judgment charged to have been obtained by false testimony upon a controverted issue, and where the parties have had an opportunity to meet and overcome such testimony. Parsons v. Weis, supra.

[4] But assuming that the findings of the trial court negating the charges of such fraud are not altogether sustained by the evidence, as is contended by learned counsel for plaintiff, the difficulty with their case is that the rule declared by the cases above cited and here invoked cannot be applied as against the rights of innocent third parties. See Hayden v. Hayden, 46 Cal. 332, 342. Whatever may be plaintiff's rights as against Lewis, we have here involved the rights of defendant Hampton, who is substantially found by the trial court to have acquired the property upon the faith of a judgment valid upon its face, for a valuable consideration, and without notice or knowledge of any fact tending to show fraud in the matter of obtaining the judgment.

[5] An examination of the record develops very clearly that there was evidence legally sufficient to sustain these findings; the best that can be said for plaintiff in this regard being that there is some conflict in the evidence. Under such circumstances, an appellate court must accept the conclusion of the trial court as correct. The judgment in the former action being valid on its face, those findings entirely dispose of plaintiff's case, and compel an affirmance of the action of the trial court.

The judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.

On Rehearing.

In Bank.

PER CURIAM. In response to the petition for rehearing, it is proper to say that we fully realize the apparent hardship of the case so far as the plaintiff is concerned. But so far as the defendant Hampton is concerned, we see no force in any of the points made by counsel for plaintiff, all of which are correctly decided in the department opinion. We do not hold that plaintiff is without remedy by way of damages as to defendant Lewis herein, whose default was regularly entered, and as to whom no judgment has been given. Whether or not such relief can now be awarded against him in this action is a question that has never been suggested by counsel either in the lower court or in this court.

The petition for rehearing is denied.

(159 Cal. 797)

GALVIN v. WHITE et al. (S. F. 5,334.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 25, 1911.)

1. ADVERSE POSSESSION (§ 114*)—EVIDENCE.

In an action to quiet title, evidence held to justify a finding that neither plaintiff nor his predecessor in interest acquired title by adverse possession, but that defendant and his predecessor in title acquired title by such possession.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Adverse Possession, Cent. Dig. §§ 682-690; Dec. Dig. § 114.*]

2. QUIETING TITLE (§ 10*)—TITLE OF PLAINTIFF—SUFFICIENCY.

Where one claiming title through an unrecorded deed to property within a military reservation relinquished by Act Cong. July 1, 1870, c. 197, 16 Stat. 186, to the city and county of San Francisco, in trust to convey to actual bona fide possessors, did not show the possession of his grantor, he did not show that his grantor was a beneficiary under the act of Congress, and he could not assert title as grantee and attack defendant's title or possession collaterally.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Quieting Title, Cent. Dig. §§ 36-42; Dec. Dig. § 10.*]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George H. Buck, Judge.

Action by E. M. Galvin against Julian Leroy White and others. From a judgment for defendant named and from an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

E. M. Galvin, in pro. per. Pringle & Pringle, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. Appeal from a judgment rendered in favor of the defendant White and from an order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial. The action was one to quiet title to a 50-vara lot in the city and county of San Francisco.

Plaintiff claimed title through an unrecorded deed from one Thomas Lea, purporting to have been made, executed, and delivered to said Galvin in 1891. The court found that this deed was destroyed by the fire of April 18, 1906. There were also findings that Thomas Lea never entered into possession of the property under claim of title founded upon a written instrument; that said Lea never protected the land by a substantial inclosure; that he never cultivated nor improved it; that neither the plaintiff nor his predecessor had continuously occupied said property for a period of five years; and that neither the plaintiff nor his grantor had paid all the taxes during a period of five years continuously or during any period of time. The court also found: "That the defendant and his predecessors and grantors were possessed of said property within the times required by the laws of the United States of America, the state of California, and the ordinances of the city and county of San Francisco, from the original location of J. H. Rickett in the year 1849 down to the year 1906"; that defendant had improved the property; had protected it by a substantial inclosure; and had paid all taxes upon said property from the year 1891 to the time of the commencement of the action.

In his motion for a new trial plaintiff introduced an affidavit whereby he asserted that he could prove by certain witnesses that Thomas Lea, his alleged grantor, was in possession of the property here in litigation from 1870 continuously down to the time of his own occupation. His principal excuse for failing to produce said witnesses at the trial was that he had understood the judge who tried the case to express himself as satisfied with the proof which the plaintiff had introduced. An examination of the language used by the court (which also appears by affidavit) convinces us that there was no basis for such belief by plaintiff. At the trial Mr. Pringle, attorney for defendant White, was asked to admit that certain absent persons, if brought into court, would testify substantially to the same facts stated by witnesses who had been examined theretofore in plain-tiff's behalf. This he declined to do, and the judge said: "By producing those witnesses and putting them on the stand you would be only accumulating those facts; you have established those facts." Obviously the court was merely calling plaintiff's attention to the circumstance that even if the requested stipulation were made it would have no original force, but would be merely in the nature of cumulative evidence.

Plaintiff's claim of title rests upon the following asserted facts: (1) That the 50-vara lot is within that area on Point San Jose or Black Point in the city and county of San Francisco reserved for public purposes by proclamation of the President of the United States dated November 6, 1850; (2) that when by act of Congress of July 1, 1870, c. 197, 16 Stat. 186, this land was relinquished to the city and county of San Francisco in trust to convey to actual bona fide possessors such parcels as were severally held by them, Thomas Lea was in such actual bona fide possession of the property here in dispute; and (3) that said Thomas Lea had held possession of such lot of land until plaintiff took it under a deed from Lea.

Defendant established a record title deaigned from the pre-emption claim of J. H. Rickett. His proof of title showed possession by Rickett on or about June 5, 1850, five months before the presidential proclamation upon which plaintiff depends. There was no formal finding that the property was not within the area covered by the said proclamation and the act of 1870 to which we have heretofore referred, but as the court accepted defendant White's proof of title, including certain maps, doubtless the conclusion reached was that the property lay outside of the former reservation by the United States government on Point San Jose and not within that area, as plaintiff attempted to prove, according to a map made by Mr. Riley who was not an engineer and who admitted that his drawing was made up from information gleaned from a certain "Spring Valley Water Company's Map." In admitting this diagram for what it was worth the court remarked that it had very little value.

[1] There was considerable testimony on both sides with reference to the alleged occupancy of the property by Lea and his widow. Without reviewing it we may simply say that in view of the conflict of testimony there was sufficient evidence to justify the court's conclusion that neither Lea nor his widow nor Galvin ever occupied this lot for a period of five years. For many of the years covered by the statements of the witnesses the streets in the vicinity of this tract were not definitely marked. Some of defendant White's witnesses testified that Lea occupied the 50-vara lot at the corner of Buchanan and Chestnut streets, and not the lot here in litigation which had frontages on Chestnut street and Magnolia avenue, its westerly line being 137 feet 6 inches west of Buchanan street. It may well have been that, owing to the lack of graded streets in the earlier years, some of the witnesses may have been misled as to the exact location with reference to Buchanan street of the lot upon which Lea's house stood. But whether such was the fact or not, certain it is that there was abundant testimony to justify the court's conclusion regarding the occupancy of the land in question. Thomas Haley testified that in the latter part of 1870 Lea lived on a 50-vara lot at the corner of Chestnut and Buchanan streets. True, this was after the act of Congress upon which plaintiff relies, but it is nevertheless significant. W. E. Haley testified that from 1868 to 1878, Mr. Lea lived on a 50-vara lot at the corner of Buchanan and Chestnut streets, his house being about 100 feet west of Buchanan street. C. D. Harper and E. S. Ring, whose recollections extended as far back as 1868, gave similar testimony. But the most significant evidence was that offered by defendant by which it was shown that the 50-vara lot on the southwest corner of Buchanan and Chestnut streets was conveyed to Thomas Lea by William Barber on March 13, 1863, and that the same William Barber on March 25, 1863, conveyed the adjoining lot, the one in controversy, to S. H. Dwinelle. This is part of the record title now resting in defendant White. It is hardly probable that two men should have bought from the same grantor adjoining property within a fortnight and that one should be maintaining possession of both lots. It was also shown that in 1868 Thomas Lea conveyed the corner lot to Anne Wilson (afterwards his wife). It may be and doubtless is true that Thomas Lea was for many years the only resident on the block of land upon which the lot in question is situated, but this did not constitute possession of the whole block. It was shown that defendant White by his agent contracted for and paid for the grading of the lot, fenced it, and for more than five years paid all the taxes levied upon it.

[2] Even if it were conceded that the property was in the Point San Jose Military Reservation, the plaintiff having failed, as the court found, to establish possession by Lea of the 50-vara lot west of the one occupied by him at the corner of Buchanan and Chestnut streets, it follows that Lea was not a beneficiary under the act of Congress of July 1, 1870. Plaintiff under assertion of title as his grantee cannot therefore attack defendant's title or possession collaterally. Palmer v. Galvin, 72 Cal. 186, 13 Pac. 476.

It follows from the foregoing that the judgment and order must be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

We concur: HENSHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.

(159 Cal. 778)

SHELDON v. LANDWEHR. (L. A. 2,531.)
(Supreme Court of California. May 20, 1911.)

1. CONTINUANCE (§ 7*)—APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 966*)—DISCRETION OF COURT.

An application for continuance because of the absence of witnesses is addressed to the sound discretion of the trial court, and its refusal is not ground for reversal, unless the trial court clearly abused its discretion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Continuance, Cent. Dig. §§ 17, 18; Dec. Dig. § 7; Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3837; Dec. Dig. § 966.*]

2. CONTINUANCE (§ 19*)—ABSENCE OF PARTY.

The unavoidable absence of a party to an action, who is also a witness, does not compel the trial court to grant a continuance, but it should be granted or refused according to the court's sound discretion with consideration to the good or bad faith of the application.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Continuance, Cent. Dig. §§ 41-48; Dec. Dig. § 19.*]

3. CONTINUANCE (§ 49*)—RIGHT TO A CONTINUANCE—CONDITIONS.

Where the defendant's physician made an affidavit that defendant would be unable to appear at the trial in less than a month, and the plaintiff had attached mining stock of the defendant in a company controlled by the defendant, and which stock was advertised to be sold within three weeks for failure to pay an assessment, and the plaintiff's attorney as well as the court agreed to a continuance if this sale was postponed, a concession which the defendant's attorney refused to make, a continuance was properly refused, though defendant was an important witness in his own behalf.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Continuance, Cent. Dig. §§ 143-145; Dec. Dig. § 49.*]

4. TRIAL (§ 6*)—NOTICE OF TRIAL—STATUTE.

Code Civ. Proc. § 594, providing that either party may bring an issue to trial in the absence of the other party, provided, if the issue be one of fact, proof must be made that the adverse party has had five days' notice of such trial, has reference to ex parte proceedings to secure defaults, and does not apply to those cases where both parties are represented when called for trial; and hence, where a defendant and his attorney had had sufficient notice for them to prepare for trial, it was not error for the court to proceed with the trial, though the defendant was not given formal notice of trial where the only reason for a continuance was that the defendant was absent, and necessarily would be for about a month.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 13-18; Dec. Dig. § 6.*]

5. APPEARANCE (§ 9*)—SPECIAL APPEARANCE—WAIVER.

Where an attorney appeared specially to apply for a continuance, and, on the motion for a continuance being overruled, remained and participated in the trial, he waived his special appearance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appearance, Cent. Dig. §§ 42-52; Dec. Dig. § 9.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; Z. B. West, Judge.

Action by R. B. Sheldon against H. A. Landwehr. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a motion for new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Chas. S. McKelvey, for appellant. Purington & Adair, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. Judgment went for the plaintiff in this action to recover the balance claimed to be due on four promissory notes. The defendant appeals from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

The only point made by the appellant is that the court erred in denying his motion for a continuance. It appears that, when the case was called for trial, the attorney for defendant stated to the court that he appeared specially to ask for a continuance on the ground of the inability of the defendant to be present on account of ill health. He supported his application by his own affidavit and by the oral testimony of a physician. The affidavit stated that the defendant, if present, would testify to certain facts material to his defense, and that the case could not be tried without his testimony. The physician's testimony was to the effect that the defendant's condition was such as to make it unsafe for him to appear at the trial, or to go to trial in less than a month.

The plaintiff, through his attorney, objected to a continuance on the ground that he had attached, as security for any judgment to be recovered, certain mining stock of defendant; that an assessment had been levied on said stock, and the same was advertised to be sold at delinquent sale within three weeks; and that such sale, if had before judgment, would destroy plaintiff's security. Declaring that the defendant was in full control of the mining company, and could postpone the sale, the plaintiff, in effect, offered to consent to a continuance of the trial, if defendant would postpone the delinquent sale for 30 days. The defendant's attorney stated that he could not consent to such postponement, and declared that the plaintiff had security for the notes, beyond the stock covered by his attachment. The plaintiff introduced evidence showing that he had no other security. After some discussion, the court continued the matter until the afternoon of the same day, when further testimony on the question of other security was given. Plaintiff's attorney then renewed his offer to consent to a continuance, on condition that the defendant would have the assessment sale postponed. Defendant's attorney, not questioning the statement that it was in defendant's power to have the sale postponed, simply declared that he was not willing to undertake to procure a postponement of the sale. Thereupon the court said: "I will continue this case until to-morrow, and, if that company does not pass proper resolutions and continue that sale, the case will go on to-morrow." Defendant's attorney stated that he could not and would not be present on the following day, whereupon the court directed that the trial proceed, and it did proceed, defendant's attorney participating.

[1] An application for continuance on the ground of the absence of a witness is addressed to the sound discretion of the trial court, and an order denying the application will not be deemed ground for reversal unless it is clear to the appellate court that the court below has abused its discretion. Musgrove v. Perkins, 9 Cal. 211; Kneebone v. Kneebone, 83 Cal. 647, 23 Pac. 1031.

[2] The circumstance that the witness who is unable to attend is at the same time one of the parties should no doubt be regarded as strengthening the showing in favor of a continuance (Jaffe v. Lilienthal, 101 Cal. 175, 35 Pac. 636), but it has never been held in this court that the unavoidable absence of a party necessarily compels the court to grant a continuance. Lynch v. Superior Court, 150 Cal. 123, 88 Pac. 708. In such cases, as in others, the court in granting or denying the application should be governed by a desire to take that course which, under all the circumstances disclosed, seems most likely to accomplish substantial justice. One of the questions that may be considered is that of the good or bad faith of the application. Barnes v. Barnes, 95 Cal. 171, 177, 30 Pac. 298, 16 L. R. A. 660.

[3] Upon the facts before it in the case at bar, the trial court certainly cannot be said to have abused its discretion in denying the defendant's motion. The plaintiff had shown that he would suffer loss by delay. Notwithstanding this, he expressed his willingness to have the trial continued if he were protected against such loss. The defendant had the power to afford such protection, but his attorney declined to take any step to that end. His position, as he stated it to the court, was that his client was "entitled to a continuance no matter what the result would be to the plaintiff." The court below took the contrary, and we think the correct view that its duty was to consider the interests of both parties. The showing before it fully justified the conclusion that injustice would be as likely to follow from the granting of the continuance as from its refusal. Furthermore, the attitude of defendant's attorney afforded warrant for the belief that the continuance was not asked in good faith to enable the defendant to make a meritorious defense, but that its real object was to hinder and delay the plaintiff in the enforcement of his rights.

[4] It is also claimed that the court erred in proceeding to trial because it was alleged in the affidavit of defendant's attorney that he had not had notice of the time of trial. Said attorney did in fact remain during the trial and participated therein. Section 594 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that "either party may bring an issue to trial or to a hearing, and, in the absence of the adverse party, unless the court, for good cause, otherwise direct, may proceed with his case, and take a dismissal of the action, or a verdict or judgment, as the case may require; provided, however, if the issue to be tried is an issue of fact, proof must first be made to the satisfaction of the court that the adverse party has had five days' notice of such trial." It is quite clear from a reading of this section that it has reference only to proceedings taken against a party in his absence. Where one party, the other being absent and unrepresented, calls a case for trial, and seeks, upon an ex parte showing, to secure a dismissal, a verdict, or a judgment, the section requires proof that the absent party has had such notice as would have enabled him to appear to prosecute or defend his case. A proceeding taken against him in his absence is in the nature of a default. The purpose of the Code section is to prevent the possibility of such default being taken against one who has, by reason of insufficient notice or no notice of the time of trial, been unable to appear. The provision has no application to cases in which both parties are represented when the case is called for trial. It is, of course, true that even in such cases the want of notice sufficient to have enabled one of the parties to prepare for trial would be good ground for continuance. But the statute does not fix any arbitrary period of five days for this purpose, nor does it require service of a formal notice. Where the party has actually known that the case was set for a certain time, and appears at that time, he is not entitled to a continuance in the absence of a claim and showing that he has not had such knowledge long enough to enable him to properly prepare. It is in each case a question for the discretion of the trial court.

In the case at bar, no claim was made that the defendant and his attorney had not known of the setting of the case long enough in advance to enable them to be ready. The affidavit of the attorney that he had received no notice must be taken to refer only to a formal service of notice in writing. Other averments in the same affidavit show by clear implication that he had knowledge, at least two days before the day of trial, that the case had been set for that day. That the defendant himself had such knowledge for a considerably longer period is shown by the testimony of his physician. The real ground upon which a continuance was asked was the illness of the defendant, and the period of postponement requested on this ground was 30 days. A continuance of five days was the utmost that could have been claimed for want of notice, even if the period defined in section 594 governed the case. But such continuance would not have put the defendant in any better position, so far as his personal presence and aid to his attorney were concerned. Under these circumstances, we think the court did not err in refusing to postpone the trial upon the mere ground that notice of the setting of the case had not been given.

[5] We attach no importance to the statement of defendant's attorney that he appeared specially to move for a continuance. He had already appeared generally by filing an answer. Assuming that he could thereafter limit his appearance to a special purpose, he certainly waived such limitation by remaining during the trial, cross-examining witnesses, making objections, and otherwise taking part in the proceedings on behalf of his client.

The judgment and the order denying a new trial are affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SHAW, J.

159 Cal. 765

BROADS et al. v. MEAD et al. (L. A. 2,639.)
(Supreme Court of California. May 18, 1911.)

1. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 123*)—RIGHTS OF TENANT—SIGN PRIVILEGE.

Where plaintiff leased the two upper stories of a business building in which to carry on a restaurant and for a residence, she was entitled to make a reasonable use of the front wall above the first story to advertise such business, and therefore was entitled to enjoin the tenant of the first story from placing signs on or against the wall which would obstruct or interfere with her use.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. § 436; Dec. Dig. § 123.*]

2. EVIDENCE (§§ 445*)—PAROL EVIDENCE—SUBSEQUENT AGREEMENT.

An oral agreement, not based on a consideration, between defendants, tenants of the first story of a business building, and E., the original lessee of the upper stories, and plaintiff's assignor, giving defendants the right to place signs on the upper front wall of the building, not executed prior to the transfer of his lease to plaintiff, was void as an attempt to alter a written contract by an executory oral agreement.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 2052-2065; Dec. Dig. § 445.*]

3. LICENSES (§§ 58, 62*)—REVOCATION—BY SALE OF PROPERTY.

An oral agreement between plaintiff's assignor and defendants that the latter might use the upper front wall of a building for sign purposes was a mere license, revocable at the pleasure of the licensor, and, not having been exercised prior to the assignment, was revoked thereby.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Licenses, Cent. Dig. §§ 116, 125; Dec. Dig. §§ 58, 62.*]

4. LICENSES (§ 49*)—USE OF BUILDING—ADVERTISING PURPOSES—EVIDENCE.

Evidence held insufficient to warrant a finding that the tenant of the upper stories of a building had consented to the use of the front wall above the first story by the tenant thereof for advertising purposes.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Licenses, Dec. Dig. § 49.*]

5. LICENSES (§ 58*)—EXECUTION—REVOCATION—LOSS.

A license to hang signs on the front wall of a building for advertising purposes, though executed, is revocable, if no substantial loss would be incurred through a removal of the signs.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Licenses, Cent. Dig. § 120; Dec. Dig. § 58.*]

6. NEW TRIAL (§ 97*)—ABSENT WITNESS—APPLICATION FOR CONTINUANCE—TIME OF DISCOVERY.

Where defendants knew before trial what an absent witness would testify, his evidence was not newly discovered so as to sustain an application for new trial, where the application did not show that an application had been made to postpone the trial to give defendants an opportunity to discover the absent witness.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. § 195; Dec. Dig. § 97.*]

7. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 523*)—RECORD—APPLICATION FOR NEW TRIAL—AFFIDAVIT OF WITNESS.

Where an affidavit of a witness alleged to have been newly discovered was not made a part of the statement used on a motion for a new trial, and it did not appear from the record that it was read or used in support of the motion, or otherwise presented to the court, it could not be considered in support of an appeal from an order denying the motion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 2388; Dec. Dig. § 528.*]

8. DAMAGES (§ 14*)—NOMINAL DAMAGES—AMOUNT.

Where the court found that plaintiff was entitled to a judgment for nominal damages, it was error to award $100 damages, and such judgment should be reduced to $1.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Cent. Dig. § 356; Dec. Dig. § 14.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank R. Willis, Judge.

Suit by Laura Broads and another against Mead and Cook. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Modified and affirmed.

Ray Howard, for appellants. Sparks, Finkenstein & Moore, H. C. Millsap, and Millsap & Sparks, for respondents.

SHAW, J. Plaintiff Laura Broads was the lessee of the second and third stories of a three-story building on Spring street, in Los Angeles; the lease being in writing for a two-year term. Defendants were lessees of the first story. Plaintiff carried on a restaurant in the second story, and occupied the third story as a place of residence. Defendants in the first story conducted a trunk store. One Boaz Duncan was the owner of the building, and leased the premises to the respective parties. Defendants placed signs, advertising their trunk business, against the outside front wall of the second and third stories. This action was to enjoin them from maintaining said signs thereon, and to recover the damages alleged to have been caused to plaintiff by the placing and maintaining of the same. Bernard Broads is the husband of Laura Broads, and joins as plaintiff solely because of that fact. The court found the facts as above stated, and also found that the signs were maintained on the front walls of the second and third stories for three months, that plaintiff was damaged thereby, but that said damages were only nominal. The judgment enjoined the further maintenance of the signs, and further declared that plaintiffs should recover of defendants $100 as damages.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[1] Plaintiff Laura Broads had leased the premises for the purpose of carrying on a restaurant therein. She had the right to make a reasonable use of the front wall for the purpose of advertising said business. This clearly implies the right to keep it free for such use and to prevent other persons from placing signs upon or against it which would obstruct or interfere with such use by her. Her right to prevent the defendants from occupying her wall space with signs relating to their own business seems indisputable. The injunction was properly given.

[2, 3] Defendants claim that there was an oral agreement between the defendants, Duncan, and one Bergman, the original lessee of the upper stories and the assignor of Laura Broads, giving defendants the privilege of placing their signs on the upper walls. The agreement was not carried out prior to the transfer by Bergman to Broads, and it was at that time void, being a mere attempt to alter a contract in writing by an executory oral agreement. It is not shown to have been based on any consideration whatever. Therefore, at most, it was nothing more than a license, revocable at the pleasure of the licensor.

[4] It is further claimed that the signs were placed on plaintiff's wall with her consent, and that thereby the license became executed and irrevocable. The evidence merely shows that Mrs. Broads was requested to allow defendants' men to go through her rooms to the front windows to enable them to place some signs in front of the building. She was not told that the signs were to be hung upon the wall of the second or third stories, and there is no evidence that she was aware of their intention in that respect. A few days afterwards she demanded that they be removed. The evidence is not such as to require a finding that she knowingly consented to have them placed above the first story. [5] Besides, there is no evidence that defendants were put to any expense in the matter. If they would suffer no substantial loss from the removal of the signs, the license was revocable, even if executed. Stoner v. Zucker, 143 Cal. 518, 83 Pac. 808, 113 Am. St. Rep. 301.

[6] On motion for new trial defendants filed an affidavit showing that Bergman, whose whereabouts defendants had been previously unable to learn, had been discovered since the trial and would testify that the oral agreement had been made as claimed, and that Mrs. Broads had been informed of it before she bought the lease of Bergman. The affidavit shows that defendants prior to the trial knew that Bergman would so testify. Hence it was not strictly newly discovered evidence. It is not shown or claimed that any application was made to postpone the trial so as to give an opportunity to discover Bergman and secure his attendance or deposition. A new trial was therefore properly refused. Scanlan v. San Francisco, 128 Cal. 589, 61 Pac. 271.

[7] The affidavit was not made part of the statement used on motion for new trial. It does not appear from the record that it was read or used in support of the motion or otherwise presented to the court below for its consideration. Hence it cannot be considered here in support of the appeal, even if it stated good grounds for a new trial.

[8] The judgment for damages is not supported by the facts found. The finding is that the damages caused to the plaintiff by the signs were merely nominal. The conclusion of law on that subject is that the plaintiff have judgment for $100 as damages, and judgment was given for that sum. A finding of nominal damages only does not warrant a judgment for $100. The law does not regard trifles, and, if the judgment were for a small sum avowedly as nominal damages, we might not be disposed to reverse or modify it. But $100 is a substantial recovery and does not come within the definition of nominal damages. Maher v. Wilson, 139 Cal. 520, 73 Pac. 418. One dollar is the amount usually adjudged where only nominal damages are allowed. Plaintiff was entitled to costs of suit. There is no merit in the motion for a new trial.

The order denying the motion for new trial is affirmed. The judgment is modified by reducing the money judgment to the sum of $1, and, as so modified, the judgment is affirmed. The defendants shall recover only one-half of the costs of appeal.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SLOSS, J.

(159 Cal. 755)

In re HINCHEON'S ESTATE. (S. F. 5,723.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 16, 1911.

On Rehearing in Bank, June 15, 1911.)

1. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 233*) —CLAIMS.

The court cannot relieve one of the consequences of his neglect to file a claim against an estate within the time limited by statute by directing the executors to pay the claim.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. § 831; Dec. Dig. § 233.*]

2. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 216*) —PRESERVATION OF ESTATE.

It being the duty of an administrator or executor to make such expenditures as are reasonably necessary to preserve the property pending administration, a devisee doing work on an unfinished house in order to protect the same could not recover from the estate; her payment being voluntary.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. § 757; Dec. Dig. § 216.*]

3. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 135*) —DUTIES—CONTRACTS.

While it is the duty of executors and administrators to perform valid and uncompleted contracts entered into by testator, they may not expend the estate's funds to do new work which testator was not bound to do; and hence, where testator devised a building "in course of construction," the executors were not bound to pay for the completion thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 551-556; Dec. Dig. § 135.*]

4. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 214*) —FUNERAL EXPENSES.

Money paid for funeral expenses by one not acting officiously, if reasonable, must be repaid by decedent's estate, and one paying such expenses, though in reliance on decedent's promise to leave her certain property, was entitled to a refundment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. § 755; Dec. Dig. § 214.*]

5. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 215*) —CLAIMS—BURIAL—REMOVAL OF REMAINS.

A claim for moving the remains of testator's mother and sister to a certain burial plot and erecting a monument over testator's grave, though pursuant to his request, was not binding on his executors; the will containing no directions in this regard.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. § 756; Dec. Dig. § 215.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Wm. S. Wells, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of John Hinchon, deceased. From the decree of distribution, Mary Hurley and another appeal. Reversed, with directions.

M. C. Hassett, for appellants. Vance McClymonds, Dudley Kinsell, and T. S. Gray, for respondents.

SLOSS, J. John Hinchon died April 1, 1909, leaving a will which was admitted to probate in the superior court of Alameda county on April 25, 1909. Letters testamentary were issued to Dudley Kinsell and Robert W. Inches, the executors named.

The will contained the following provisions:

"First. To Mary Hurley of San Francisco, California, I give, devise and bequeath that real property owned by me, and which is situate on the north side of East 27th street, East Oakland, Cal., and on which property is situate a cottage in course of construction.

"Second. Out of the balance of my estate I direct that all my just debts, funeral expenses, charges and expenses of last illness and of administration shall be paid; and out of such residue shall be paid the bequests hereinafter set out."

By the third, fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh, eighth, and ninth paragraphs the testator gave various cash legacies aggregating the sum of $2,250, and also certain furniture and pictures. The tenth paragraph was as follows: "If, after the payment of the legacies and bequests within mentioned, there shall be any residue, then such residue, if any there be, I give, devise and bequeath to my two nephews, John Sharkey, Jr., and Joseph C. Sharkey, share and share alike." The will bore the date of April 1, 1909, the day of Hinchon's death.

On April 21, 1910, the executors filed their final account with a petition for the distribution of the estate. Their account showed sufficient money on hand to pay all cash legacies, and also something over $500 to each of the residuary legatees. On the day on which the final account and petition for distribution were to come on for hearing, Mary Hurley, the devisee named in the first paragraph of the will, filed a petition "for construction of the will" and for payment to her of certain sums of money. In this petition she alleged that about a week before the death of Hinchon he had informed the petitioner that he intended to make a deed of gift to her of the lot mentioned in the will and the house thereon, and had stated that the house was practically completed; that upon the same occasion he had requested that, in case of his death, the petitioner would have his remains interred in a certain cemetery and provide for perpetual care thereof, and had also expressed a desire to have the remains of his deceased mother and sister interred in said cemetery, and a suitable monument erected at his grave. She further alleged that on the death of the decedent, and between the 2d and 6th days of April, she made the necessary arrangements for the burial of the decedent as requested by him, and paid out of her own money for that purpose the sum of $257. After the burial of the decedent she learned for the first time that the house was not completed, and, upon being advised by the executors that it was necessary that she should advance money to protect the house from injury, she paid out for lumber and work done on said building sums amounting to $148.32. She further alleged that one White had made a contract with the deceased to paint said house, and that a balance of $155 would be due on said contract when completed; that one William R. Stultz had made a contract with the deceased for doing the plumbing work of said house, and that a balance of $110 would be due on said contract when completed. The petitioner, as she avers, made herself personally liable to said White and Stultz for the payment of their contracts, the completion of said painting and plumbing work being necessary for the protection of the building, and said work was completed according to the contracts made with the decedent. It is alleged that after the payment of all of the work mentioned a further sum of $361 will have to be expended to complete the building, and that $220 will have to be expended to remove the remains of the decedent's mother and sister to the burial plot in which his body is interred and to erect a suitable monument at his grave.

The prayer of the petition is that the executors of the estate pay to the petitioner the sums expended by her for work done on the building and for the burial of the defendant; that they pay her the sum of $361 required to complete the building; that the court order the executors to pay to Stultz $110 for the plumbing work performed by him under his contract with the decedent; and that the executors be ordered to remove the remains of the decedent's mother and sister and bury the same in his burial plot and erect a monument there. At the same time Stultz filed his petition for payment out of the funds of the estate of the $110 remaining due on his contract.

The account, the petition for distribution, and the said petitions of Mary Hurley and W. R. Stultz came on for hearing, whereupon the court denied the petitions of Stultz and Hurley and settled the account as presented. A decree of distribution was entered distributing to Mary Hurley the real property described in the will, distributing the money legacies and the specific legacies to the respective legatees, and the residue to the residuary legatees named in the tenth paragraph. Mary Hurley and William R. Stultz appealed from the whole of the decree except that part which distributes to Mary Hurley the lot described in the decree.

(a) The prayer for payment to Stultz of the balance ($110) due on his account.

It appears from the bill of exceptions that, with the exception of the painting and plumbing work contracted for by the decedent with White and Stultz, the house in question was being constructed by Hinccheon by day labor. A claim for the balance due on his contract had been presented by White to the executors, and rejected by them. He had thereupon commenced an action upon his rejected claim, and recovered judgment payable in due course of administration. The final account shows that this judgment had been fully paid. Stultz had failed to present any claim, and the time for such presentation had expired at the time the account was filed. Under these circumstances, it seems clear that he, as an appellant herein, is not entitled to relief. The amount due on any contract made by the decedent, whether accrued or contingent, was, of course, a proper subject of claim against the estate, but the demand, if not presented as a claim within the time limited, was barred. Code Civ. Proc. § 1493. Having failed to present a claim, Stultz has lost his right to maintain any action against the estate. Code Civ. Proc. § 1500. His claim might have been collected if he had followed the procedure adopted by White. Having omitted to do so, he has in effect waived his demand against the estate.

[1] The court cannot relieve him of the consequences of his own neglect by directing the executors to pay a demand which became barred by his failure to pursue the plain requirements of the statute. Upon like grounds, Mary Hurley has no standing to compel the estate to pay the claim of Stultz. If, by reason of her guaranty to Stultz, she should be compelled to reimburse him, she would at most be subrogated to his rights against the estate. But she cannot, in this way, acquire rights greater than those held by the party under whom she might claim subrogation. 27 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law (2d Ed.) 206.

[2] (b) The claim for repayment of money expended on the house and for payment of further sums required for completion.

These two items, covered by the petition of Mary Hurley, stand upon a different ground from the matters already discussed. It is no doubt the duty of the executor or administrator to make such expenditures as may be reasonably necessary to preserve the property of the decedent pending administration. In re Clos, 110 Cal. 494, 42 Pac. 971. It is alleged in the petition that the sum of $148.32 was expended by Miss Hurley in order to protect the house "from great loss and injury owing to its uncompleted condition," and the evidence shows without substantial conflict that this was the real purpose of the expenditure. The petitioner herself testified that, when she saw the house, there was a lot of lumber cut and standing up against the walls, and that both executors had told her that it was "very necessary to protect the house and just as well to go on and put this lumber in place so that it could not be stolen; that the house should be protected; the lumber put in place and the doors fastened." Both executors testified, and neither controverted Miss Hurley's testimony in this regard. Mr. Inches one of the executors, had himself been the foreman in charge of the work for the decedent, and he did the new work under Miss Hurley's instructions. According to Mr. Kinsell's testimony, he had said to Miss Hurley that the executors had no authority to complete the work "notwithstanding the fact that it might be necessary for the preservation of the estate." In this, we think, he took an erroneous view of the extent of the powers of executors. As above stated, they did have the right, and it was their duty, to make such expenditures as were necessary to preserve the property left by the decedent. If, in order to effect such preservation, they, instead of Miss Hurley, had made the expenditures of $148.32 for putting the lumber in place, they would undoubtedly have been entitled to claim reimbursement from the funds of the estate. In re Clos, supra.

But they declined to make this payment, and Miss Hurley, with full knowledge of the facts, made it herself. We think her payment to this extent must be regarded as voluntary, and that she cannot recover the amount from the estate. Upon the refusal of the executors to go ahead, she could have applied to the court for an order requiring them to make such expenditures as were necessary to protect the property. She did not do this, but expended the money herself. There was no such compulsion as would make her payment involuntary, and she must take the consequences of her own action.

The item of $361, estimated to be necessary to complete the building does not come within the rule authorizing expenditures for the preservation of the estate. In the first place, the administration was virtually over when this matter was brought up. The doing of the work then could hardly have been required to preserve the house during administration. Besides, the petition does not aver that this payment must be made to preserve the estate, but alleges merely that it will be necessary to complete the building. The evidence, too, supports the conclusion that the real purpose of this proposed expenditure was to make a completed house rather than to protect from injury the unfinished structure.

[3] But, apart from the duty of executors to preserve the estate, the appellant Hurley contends that, upon a proper construction of the will, the testator directed that the completion of the building should be a charge upon his estate. We may assume that an executor is protected in carrying out the provisions of the will with reference to improvements of the testator's estate (18 Cyc. 272), but, so conceding, we think the will in question cannot be interpreted as intended to authorize any such improvements. The gift to Mary Hurley was of certain real property "on which property is situate a cottage in course of construction." The will did not purport to give her a completed building. It gave her the lot, together with a building expressly described as unfinished. As we have said, the building was being constructed by day labor, and there were no contracts outstanding with the exception of those of White and Stultz. While it is the duty of executors to perform valid and uncompleted contracts which have been entered into by their testator, they are not called on, nor have they the right, to expend the funds of the estate for the doing of new work which the testator himself was not bound to do. Such expenditure, unless incurred for the preservation of the property of the decedent, is not a charge upon the estate. In Re Moore, 72 Cal. 335, 13 Pac. 880, an administrator had expended moneys of the estate in the erection of a new building upon property belonging to the decedent, and claimed reimbursement. It was held that the court erred in allowing this claim, saying: "This money was not expended in the care and management of the estate. It was the duty of the administrator to administer and turn over the estate as soon as possible, and not to speculate with it, or carry on business on its account, or to improve it for the benefit of the heirs." So in Byrd v. Governor, 2 Mo. 102, the decedent had constructed foundations for a house and the administrator completed the house thereon. The court held this to be a misapplication of the funds of the estate. See, also, Gray v. Hawkins, 8 Ohio St. 449, 72 Am. Dec. 600.

The fact that, as shown by Miss Hurley's testimony, the decedent believed that the house was substantially completed, cannot alter these conclusions. The language of the will is plain. It gives to the devisee the lot with a house in course of construction. To import into this a direction that the house should be brought to the point at which the testator believed it was would not be to construe the will, but rather to add to it a provision which the testator did not insert. Miss Hurley's testimony was that Hinchon said to her about a week before his death that he was going to give her a deed of gift of the house, and that in answer to a question by her as to its completion he had said, "Yes; it is all finished. There may be a few locks to put on the closet doors and on the doors; otherwise it is finished." And that thereupon he said: "I want you to do something for me. I want to have my body put in perpetual care and move my mother's and sister's remains and put a monument over it." It can hardly be claimed that this testimony showed a contract by which the decedent agreed, in consideration of the payment of certain burial expenses, to make to Miss Hurley a deed of the house. But if the testimony could be so viewed, the answer is that this proceeding is not one to enforce the supposed contract. In an action upon such contract it might be possible, if the parties were shown to have been laboring under a mutual mistake as to a material fact, to reform the agreement and enforce it according to its true intent. But no such proceeding has been taken. The petitioner is not relying on an agreement to make a deed of gift to her, but is claiming under the will. So claiming she can take no more than the will has given her, and that is a lot with an uncompleted building standing upon it.

[4] (c) The claim for payment of funeral expenses incurred by Miss Hurley.

The funeral expenses paid by her were expended immediately after Hinchon's death and before she was aware of the terms of his will or of the fact that the cottage was far from completion. In view of paragraph 2 of the will, there can be no doubt that the testator intended that his funeral expenses should be paid out of his estate. Miss Hurley was a relative of Hinchon. It is not questioned by the respondents that money paid for funeral expenses by one not acting officiously, if reasonable considering the estate of the deceased and the circumstances surrounding the death and burial, will be repaid by the estate to the party paying them. 2 Woerner, Am. L. of Adm. (2d Ed.) § 357; France's Estate, 75 Pa. 220. This is a proper, and, indeed, a necessary rule in view of the fact that the burial must often be provided for before an executor or administrator can be appointed. The money advanced for this purpose by Mary Hurley should therefore in justice be refunded. The only answer to her demand in this regard is that she paid the money voluntarily. But this claim, we think, cannot, under the circumstances disclosed by the bill of exceptions, be supported. The claim of the respondent is that she agreed with the decedent to make such payment in consideration of his giving her the East Oakland property. It would, as we have already suggested, require an extreme construction of the evidence to hold that it established any such agreement. However, even if Miss Hurley made the payment in compliance with what she thought to be a contract, she should not be held to be a volunteer unless she acted with knowledge of the facts. Her supposed undertaking to pay the funeral expenses was made upon the understanding that she was receiving a deed of gift of a completed house. The house was not completed and a deed of gift was not, in fact, made. The expenditures were incurred by her before she was in possession of these facts. It is more than probable that, if she had known the terms of the will and had been aware of the condition of the house, she would not have paid these expenses. When it appeared that the facts were not as she had supposed them to be, and that she was not receiving the consideration which she had believed she was to get, she was entitled to claim her rights under the will. The testator had evidently not acted on the theory that there was any binding agreement. He had not made a deed of gift, and had expressly declared his intention that the funeral expenses should be borne by the estate. Her payment of the same under these circumstances was not voluntary and she should be reimbursed therefor out of the estate.

[5] (d) The prayer for payment of the expenses of removing the remains of Hincheon's mother and sister and of erecting a monument.

It cannot be held that it was the court's duty to direct the executors to remove to the burial plot of the decedent the remains of his mother and sister and to erect a monument over his grave. The will contained no directions in this regard. The sole foundation for this claim is the request of the decedent to Miss Hurley. This request was not binding upon the executors or the estate.

The decree is reversed, with directions to the court below to enter a decree in conformity with the views expressed in this opinion.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SHAW, J.

On Rehearing in Bank.

PER CURIAM. Rehearing denied.

BEATTY, C. J. (dissenting). I think the decree herein should have been modified to the extent of allowing Miss Hurley the $148.32 expended by her for the preservation of the estate. Her omission to seek an order of the court to compel the executors to make the expenditure, conceded to have been necessary, and a part of their duty as executors, ought not to defeat her claim for reimbursement on the ground that she was a volunteer. Neither ought the fact that the property to be preserved was devised to her to have stood in the way of the allowance. The devise was subject to a precatory trust, not expressed in the will it is true, but clearly proved, and involving a considerable expense if executed as presumably it will be. The real intention of the testator will not be fulfilled as between the devisee and the residuary legatees by burdening the devise with an expense that should have been charged to the residue of the estate.

159 Cal. 769

WALTHER v. SOUTHERN PAC. CO.
(L. A. 2,646.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 18, 1911.
On Rehearing in Bank, June 17, 1911.)

1. CARRIERS (§ 307*)—NEGLIGENCE—EXEMPTIONS FROM LIABILITY—SPECIAL RATES.

A contract exempting a common carrier from liability for negligence causing injury to a passenger carried for any compensation is against public policy, though agreed to by the passenger in consideration of special concessions as to rates or otherwise.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 1252-1259; Dec. Dig. § 307.*]

2. CARRIERS (§ 307*)—NEGLIGENCE—EXEMPTIONS FROM LIABILITY—GRATUITOUS CARRIAGE.

A contract of exemption from liability to a passenger for injuries resulting from negligence, except willful, wanton, or gross negligence, is valid as to a passenger carried solely as a matter of favor, and without any compensation or advantage to the carrier.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 1252-1259; Dec. Dig. § 307.*]

3. CARRIERS (§ 307*)—NEGLIGENCE—CONTRACT OF EXEMPTION—PUBLIC POLICY—STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

Civ. Code, § 2175, providing that a common carrier cannot be exonerated by any agreement made in anticipation thereof from liability for gross negligence, fraud, or willful wrong of himself or servants, prevents a carrier from contracting against liability for the character of negligence referred to in the statute, as against one who is carried without any compensation whatever.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 1252-1259; Dec. Dig. § 307.*]

4. CARRIERS (§ 238*)—WHO ARE PASSENGERS.

Upon whatever terms a common carrier of persons voluntarily receives and carries a person, the relation of common carrier and passenger exists.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. § 973; Dec. Dig. § 238.*]

5. CARRIERS (§ 239*) — COMPENSATION — WAIVER.

The voluntary waiver of all claim for compensation for carriage of a person does not take away the status of common carrier with respect to such person.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 974, 975; Dec. Dig. § 239.*]

6. CARRIERS (§ 307*)—LIMITATION OF LIABILITY—"GROSS NEGLIGENCE"—"SLIGHT CARE."

Civ. Code, § 2175, prohibiting a carrier from limiting its liability for injuries resulting from gross negligence, was a part of Civ. Code 1872, which by sections 16 and 17 declared that there are three degrees of care and diligence, "slight," "ordinary," and "great," and three degrees of negligence, "slight," "ordinary," and "gross." "Slight care" was defined as that which is such as persons of ordinary prudence usually exercise about their own affairs of slight importance, and "gross negligence" was defined as that which consists in the want of slight care and diligence. These sections were repealed in 1874. Held, that such repeal cannot affect the construction of the words "gross negligence" as used in section 2175, as the intention of the Legislature at the time of the adoption of the latter section must control, and there is no warrant for holding that such words were intended to mean other than as the term is defined in the repealed sections.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 1252-1259; Dec. Dig. § 307.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 4, pp. 3163-3173; vol. 8, p. 7675; vol. 7, p. 6531.]

7. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1010*)—REVIEW—QUESTION OF FACT.

The appellate court cannot disturb the conclusion of the trial court based on evidence legally sufficient to warrant the inference drawn.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3979-3982; Dec. Dig. § 1010.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Benjamin F. Bledsoe, Judge.

Action by Carrie E. Walther against the Southern Pacific Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

J. W. McKinley (W. R. Miller, of counsel), for appellant. L. M. Sprecher and Frank T. Bates, for respondent. Warren Olney, Jr., and Alexander R. Baldwin, Amici Curiae.

ANGELLOTTI, J. The plaintiff is the widow of one Henry F. Walther, who, while being carried on a passenger train of defendant on March 23, 1907, was killed by reason of the derailment of such train and the consequent wrecking and demolition of the car in which he was being carried. The accident occurred in defendant's yard at Colton in San Bernardino county, and was caused by the train on which deceased was riding running from the main track into an open switch at a high rate of speed, estimated by the trial court to be between 45 and 55 miles an hour, when, being unable to traverse the curve of the sidetrack, it was derailed. The switch had been left open by the switch foreman, who, with his crew, were working on the siding at the time, and who had neglected to keep himself advised of the whereabouts of the train, which was long overdue, and had left the switch open in violation of the rules of the defendant. Deceased was an employé of defendant, but at the time of the accident and for some months next preceding the same was absent on leave. At the time of the accident he was returning from a journey to an Eastern state to his home in California. He was riding on a pass, good until March 31, 1907, which had been issued to him by defendant for the purposes of his journey. It was found by the trial court, in accord with a stipulation of the parties, that the pass was issued to him as an employé, "in accordance with the long established practice of the company, and one well known to its employés, to furnish passes from time to time to its employés." There was no other consideration for such pass. It contained the following statements, subscribed by the deceased: "This is a free pass based upon no consideration whatever. The person accepting and using this pass, in consideration of receiving the same, agrees that the Southern Pacific Company shall not be liable under any circumstances, whether of negligence—criminal or otherwise—of its agents or others, for any injury to the person, or for any loss or damage to the property of the individual using this pass; and that as to such person the company shall not be considered as a common carrier, or liable as such." This action was brought by plaintiff to recover the damage caused her by the death of her husband, being based upon section 377, Code of Civil Procedure, which provides that, when the death of a person not being a minor is caused by the wrongful act or neglect of another, his heirs or personal representatives may maintain an action for damages against the person causing the death, or, if such person be employed by another person who is responsible for his conduct, then also against such person. In her complaint she alleged that the accident and the consequent death of deceased were caused by the "gross negligence" of defendant, and these allegations were found by the trial court, which tried the case without a jury, to be true. Damages were assessed at the sum of $8,000, and judgment was given in favor of plaintiff for that amount. This is an appeal by defendant from such judgment. The record on appeal was filed in this court on March 29, 1910.

The ultimate question presented by this appeal is whether the provision in the pass purporting to exempt defendant from liability for the negligence of its agents precludes a recovery under the circumstances of this case.

[1] Independent of statutory provisions, it is almost universally held that any contract purporting to exempt a common carrier of persons from liability for negligence of himself or his servants to a passenger carried for compensation is void, as being against public policy, and it is immaterial in such cases that the attempted limitation on such liability is agreed to by the passenger in consideration of special concessions in the matter of rate of fare or other departure from the rules applicable to passengers paying full fare. It is enough that there is any consideration for the carriage.

[2] The person admitted to his vehicle by a common carrier for the purpose of carriage for any compensation is a passenger, with all the rights possessed by any passenger so far as the exercise of care for his safe carriage is concerned. By the great weight of authority, however, in the absence of provision to the contrary, such a contract of exemption from liability for negligence is upheld, at least so far as any except what is called in the opinions wanton or willful or gross negligence is concerned, in the case of a passenger who is carried solely as a matter of favor, and without any compensation or advantage whatever to the carrier. See Northern Pacific R. R. Co. v. Adams, 192 U. S. 440, 24 Sup. Ct. 408, 48 L. Ed. 513; Rogers v. Kennebec Steamboat Co., 86 Me. 261, 29 Atl. 1069, 25 L. R. A. 491; Quimby v. Boston, etc., R. Co., 150 Mass. 365, 23 N. E. 205, 5 L. R. A. 846; Kinney v. New Jersey, etc., R. R. Co., 32 N. J. Law, 407, 90 Am. Dec. 675; Muldoon v. Seattle City R. Co., 7 Wash. 528, 35 Pac. 422, 22 L. R. A. 794, 38 Am. St. Rep. 901; Payne v. Terre Haute, etc., Ry. Co., 157 Ind. 616, 62 N. E. 472, 56 L. R. A. 472.

[3] We think that the question of public policy in regard to such contracts of exemption, even as to passengers carried gratuitously, has been settled in this state by legislative enactment. Section 2175, Civil Code, provides: "A common carrier cannot be exonerated, by any agreement made in anticipation thereof, from liability for the gross negligence, fraud, or wilful wrong of himself or his servants." Aside from the question of the meaning of the term "gross negligence" as used in this section, it is earnestly contended that the section has no application in the case of one carried without consideration of any kind, and that as to such a passenger the carrier is not a common carrier at all. We are of the opinion that the question of consideration cuts no figure in determining the applicability of the section. Section 2168, Civil Code, contained in the same chapter, which is entitled "Common Carriers in General," declares that "every one who offers to the public to carry persons, property, or messages, excepting only telegraphic messages, is a common carrier of whatever he thus offers to carry," and, of course, the defendant was under this definition a common carrier of persons. As such, under other provisions of the same chapter and other chapters, it was entitled to refuse to carry any person except upon compliance with certain requirements, including the payment of a prescribed reasonable compensation, but at the time of this accident at least it could legally waive any of these requirements on the part of the passenger, and could receive and carry him for a reduced or different consideration, or altogether without consideration.

[4] But, on whatever terms a common carrier of persons voluntarily receives and carries a person, the relation of common carrier and passenger exists. This is recognized by some of the authorities upholding the exemption from liability for negligence provision in the case of a passenger carried gratuitously. See Rogers v. Kennebec Steamboat Co., supra. The sole inquiry in this regard is, as has been said, whether the person was lawfully on the vehicle (see Ohio & Miss. R. Co. v. Muhling, 30 Ill. 9, 81 Am. Dec. 336), has been voluntarily received by the common carrier on any terms for the purpose of carriage, and is not, as was the case in Sessions v. Southern Pacific Co., 114 Pac. 982, a mere trespasser on the vehicle.

[5] The voluntary waiver of all claim for compensation for carriage of a person does not take away from the status of the carrier as a common carrier so far as the person carried is concerned, any more than would a special reduction in the amount of compensation charged or a special concession as to some other authorized requirement accomplish such effect. The carrier is still a common carrier as to such person, with all the obligations of a common carrier, except in so far as those obligations are limited by contract provisions which are not inhibited by law. Other sections of our Civil Code permit such limitations as to certain matters not here involved, but section 2175 expressly prohibits limitations of liability for gross negligence on the part of the common carrier or his servants, whatever, as we read the various sections bearing upon this matter, may be the terms upon which it receives and undertakes to carry a passenger.

[6] This brings us to a consideration of the question of the meaning of the term "gross negligence," as used in section 2175, Civil Code, for under the views already stated the exemption provision in the pass of deceased was not effectual to free defendant from liability for damages resulting from "gross negligence" of the defendant or its servants, within the meaning of the term "gross negligence," as used in said section. The contention of learned counsel for defendant is that these words, in the connection in which they are used, imply something in the nature of willful wrong, and do not include anything in the nature of a mere omission to exercise care without knowledge that such omission will probably result in injury to others. Section 2175 was, as it now stands, a part of the original Civil Code adopted in the year 1872. This Code contained two sections declaring that there are three degrees of care and diligence, "slight," "ordinary," and "great," and three degrees of negligence, "slight," "ordinary," and "gross." "Slight care" was defined as that "which is such as persons of ordinary prudence usually exercise about their own affairs of slight importance," and "gross negligence" was defined as that "which consists in the want of slight care and diligence." Sections 16 and 17. These sections were repealed outright in 1874, but such repeal cannot affect the question of the construction of the words "gross negligence" in section 2175, Civil Code, as it is the intention of the Legislature at the time of the adoption of the latter section that must control.

We see no warrant for holding that the term "gross negligence" as used therein was intended to mean other than the "gross negligence" defined in section 17 of the same act "to establish a Civil Code," which was simply "the want of slight care and diligence." This must necessarily have been the view of this court in Donlon Bros. v. Southern Pacific Co., 151 Cal. 763, 766, 91 Pac. 603, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 811, for an examination of the record shows that there could have been no other ground for the expression of opinion "that there was sufficient evidence in the case warranting the jury in finding that the defendant was guilty of gross negligence occasioning the loss and injury complained of." It was also recognized in Merrill v. Pacific Transfer Co., 131 Cal. 582, 589, 63 Pac. 915, upon evidence that was utterly destitute of anything in the nature of a showing of willful or wanton wrong, that the question whether or not the common carrier was guilty of gross negligence was one for the jury to pass upon under proper instructions. But regardless of these expressions of opinion, both of which were made under such circumstances that they may reasonably be claimed not to constitute binding authority on the question, we are satisfied that the definition of the "gross negligence" of section 2175, Civil Code, must be found in sections 16 and 17 of the Civil Code, as the same were adopted in 1872.

[7] Accepting this definition of gross negligence, it cannot reasonably be contended that the evidence was not legally sufficient to support the finding of the trial court that the deceased was killed by the gross negligence of defendant's servants. The question of the existence of such gross negligence was one for the trial court, and, the facts being legally sufficient to warrant the inference drawn, an appellate court cannot properly disturb the conclusion reached by that tribunal.

The conclusion we have arrived at upon the points already discussed renders it unnecessary to consider other questions argued in the briefs, and compels an affirmance of the judgment.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: SLOSS, J.; SHAW, J.

On Rehearing in Bank.

PER CURIAM. Rehearing denied.

BEATTY, C. J. (dissenting). I think this case deserves further consideration, not because I am convinced that the judgment of the superior court is erroneous, but because the decision here is based upon a ground which will include cases affected by considerations different from those which may properly be deemed controlling in this case. It is held in the opinion of the court that, no matter how entirely gratuitous the transportation of a passenger may be, he can never bind himself, in consideration of such transportation, to waive any claim for damages based upon the gross negligence of a common carrier or his servants. It is in my opinion unnecessary to lay down so broad a rule in order to sustain this judgment. The fact that the pass in question here was issued to an employé of the defendant, in accordance with its long-established and well-understood practice, would warrant the conclusion that his transportation was not purely gratuitous; for it is reasonable to suppose that the privilege of free transportation to employés would in many, if not in all, instances affect the terms upon which men would be willing to enter, or to continue in, the service of a railway corporation, and would in the long run result in a considerable pecuniary advantage to the company—an advantage imposing a corresponding obligation to issue the pass when requested.

In this view the issuance of a free pass to a railway employé rests upon a valuable consideration. But there are many other classes of persons, as for example sick, destitute, or homeless, but deserving, persons, to whom railway companies and other common carriers are permitted to issue free passes, and for whom they do provide transportation for no consideration except the promptings of common humanity. Certainly there is no justice or sound policy in a law which sets a premium on inhumanity by warning a person, otherwise disposed to extend relief to one in dire need of it, that he can only obey the promptings of compassion at the risk of serious pecuniary loss. But that is what our law of common carriers does if it has been correctly construed in the broad declaration that "on whatever terms a common carrier of persons voluntarily receives and carries a person the relation of common carrier and passenger exists." This proposition is only partly true, and the particular in which it falls short of the truth is precisely that element in the ordinary relation of carrier and passenger which takes the case of purely gratuitous transportation out of the operation of section 2175 of the Civil Code. The definition of common carrier found in section 2168 of the Civil Code comes no nearer defining the relation of carrier and passenger than the definition of lawyer would to defining the relation of attorney and client. What the true relation is in either case is to be gathered from those provisions of the statute which prescribe the mutual rights and duties of the parties. It is the duty of a common carrier to provide transportation for passengers, and the right of the passenger to be transported, but only on condition that the passenger pays the regular fare. Civ. Code §§ 2169-2173. If the person desiring transportation cannot pay, and stands in no relation to the carrier which gives him a right to demand free transportation, the carrier owes him no duty, and in granting him free transportation as a mere bounty he steps out of his character as a common carrier, and deals with him in a relation essentially different from the legal relation of common carrier and passenger. If in such case the carrier requires a waiver of claims for damage, it is absurd to suppose that he is craftily bargaining for exemption from any claims based upon his willful torts or meditated fraud. No agreement would shield him from such claims, and, since he could make no profit out of the free transportation of a passenger, a motive for such an elaborate contrivance is hard to imagine. But that he should desire to be exempt from claims based upon the mere forgetfulness, ignorance, or unskillfulness of himself or his servants is natural and entirely justifiable. To say that a common carrier merely because he is a common carrier cannot in such circumstances stipulate as freely for exemption from claims for damages as any other person is to ignore the fact that for the sole benefit of the passenger he has waived the rights, and in so doing divested himself pro hac vice of the character of a common carrier.

The decision of the court in my opinion goes too far in putting upon the same plane with employes of a railway company traveling upon passes issued in accordance with its general custom, those who are carried out of simple compassion.

160 Cal. 98

BREITENBUCHER et al. v. OPPENHEIM et al. (Sac. 1,756.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 3, 1911.)

1. TRUSTS (§ 63½*)—RESULTING TRUSTS—PAYMENT OF CONSIDERATION—ORAL AGREEMENT.

Though a resulting trust may be defeated by parol evidence of a contract different from that implied by law from a contribution to the purchase price, that the complaint before amendment alleged an agreement for the purchase of the land in controversy, by which undivided interests were to be assigned in exactly the same proportions afterwards fixed by the court in its findings in favor of a resulting trust, did not affect the validity of plaintiffs' recovery; the oral agreement, if any, being identical with that which the law would imply.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. § 92; Dec. Dig. § 63½.*]

2. TRUSTS (§ 88*)—RESULTING TRUSTS—EVIDENCE.

Where an agreement with a defendant for the advancement of money to purchase interests in land for plaintiffs was abandoned when defendant announced his inability to raise more than $5,000 cash, such agreement was nevertheless admissible in a suit to establish a resulting trust concerning plaintiffs' alleged interests, under the rule that, while no parol agreement between the parties giving to an implied trust a character different from that which the law would create from their acts can be admitted, all the facts and circumstances out of which the implied trust is raised may be proved to establish the trust itself.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. §§ 130-133; Dec. Dig. § 88.*]

3. TRUSTS (§ 76*)—RESULTING TRUSTS—PURCHASE OF LAND—MONEY PAID FOR ANOTHER.

In order that a trust may result from the payment of money for the purchase of land, it is not essential that the money should be paid by the person for whom the trust is to be created, but it may be paid for him by another.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. § 108; Dec. Dig. § 76.*]

4. TRUSTS (§ 79*)—RESULTING TRUSTS—PAYMENT OF CONSIDERATION—PROPORTION.

Where there is no uncertainty regarding the amount of money contributed by plaintiffs and its proportion to the entire purchase price, a trust results, under Civ. Code, § 853, providing that, where one pays the purchase price of land and the property is conveyed to another, the title is held in trust for the person who paid the money, and such rule may be applied so as to make the payment of a part of the purchase money carry with it a proportionate equitable estate in the land.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. §§ 111, 112; Dec. Dig. § 79.*]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 187*)—PARTIES—NONJOINDER—REVIEW—QUESTIONS NOT RAISED AT TRIAL.

An objection that a necessary party was not joined, not raised by demurrer or otherwise at the trial, cannot be raised for the first time on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1184-1189; Dec. Dig. § 187.*]

6. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 193*)—OBJECTIONS NOT RAISED AT TRIAL—ISSUES.

Where an objection to the declaration of a resulting trust that the property was covered by a deed of trust executed by defendants, to which plaintiffs were not parties, and that it was impossible to declare their interest in the land by reason thereof, was not raised by the pleadings, it could not be raised on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1226-1240; Dec. Dig. § 193; Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 1355-1374.]

7. TRUSTS (§ 374*)—RESULTING TRUSTS—ENFORCEMENT—JUDGMENT.

Where, in a suit to enforce a resulting trust arising from contributions to the purchase price of the land in controversy, the fact that defendants had executed a deed of trust on the property was not pleaded, the court properly adjudged the interest of the parties to be in proportion to the amount contributed by each, either in money or notes, leaving unaffected any lien that a stranger to the record might have on account of the balance of the purchase price.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. §§ 607-612; Dec. Dig. § 374.*]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; Frank H. Smith, Judge.

Action by Al Breitenbucher and another against E. Oppenheim and others. From a judgment for plaintiffs and from an order denying the motion of H. H. Hewlett for a new trial, he appeals. Affirmed.

C. H. Fairall and A. C. White, for appellant. R. C. Minor, Murphy & Percival, and Clary & Louttit, for respondents.

MELVIN, J. H. H. Hewlett, one of the defendants, has appealed from a judgment in favor of plaintiffs, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial. The action was brought for the purpose of having a resulting trust declared in favor of plaintiffs, and for an accounting of the rents and profits of the property involved. The court found that defendants Oppenheim and Hewlett, on the 1st day of May, 1905, purchased from one Covell a certain tract of land in San Joaquin county for \$16,725; that Oppenheim paid on said purchase price \$8,362.50, or one-half thereof, Hewlett \$7,000, or $\frac{415}{1000}$ thereof, and the plaintiffs \$1,362.50, or $\frac{85}{1000}$ of the entire amount expended in the purchase of the said real property; that by agreement between plaintiffs and defendants Oppenheim and Hewlett the deed to the property was taken by the two latter persons; that Hewlett did not purchase an undivided one-half interest in the land for \$7,000, but that he did have relations with plaintiffs as co-purchasers; that Hewlett held an undivided $\frac{85}{1000}$ of the said property in trust for plaintiffs; and that Breitenbucher and Martin were entitled to their proportionate share of the rents, issue, and profits for the years 1905, 1906, and 1907. Defendant Kleinsorge was at the time of the trial the owner of all of Oppenheim's original interest.

There is a conflict in the evidence as to many matters, but Hewlett by his answer does not deny that the entire purchase price of the property was $16,725, and that he paid $7,000. Plaintiffs were conducting a real estate business at Lodi, under the name of the Realty Company. They acquired an interest in certain property owned by one Beardslee, and were also trying to sell Covell's property, on which Oppenheim held an option, on which he had paid $1,000. Breitenbucher went to Hewlett with the proposition that the latter purchase his portion of the Beardslee property and also an interest in that of Covell. He wrote a letter to Hewlett in which it was shown that a half interest in the Beardslee property could be obtained for $2,500 cash, together with the assumption of a mortgage interest, and that the Covell land could be had for $7,725 in cash and three notes for $3,000 each, payable in 18, 30, and 42 months, respectively, amounting in all to $16,725 as the purchase price of the property. The letter contained this sentence: "One half of the above cash, $3,862.50, provided for as follows: $2,500 in cash; $1,362.50 advanced on the crop. Necessary to swing the two deals, $5,000 net." Appellant contends that, as shown by this letter, he and plaintiffs contemplated a transfer to him of a half interest for a payment of $2,500 cash, and that the rest of the money was to be raised by an advance on the crops. Breitenbucher explains the item in the letter by saying that at first he and Hewlett talked about getting money on the crop to take care of a part of the cash payment, but that they afterwards abandoned that idea and concluded to pay all the cash demanded, and to handle the crop as they saw fit. Hewlett said upon cross-examination that there was no discussion at the time the purchase was consummated about a reduction in the price of the property, or the manner in which the item of $1,362.50 was to be paid. He simply depended, he said, upon Breitenbucher's promise that for $2,500 cash and certain notes he should acquire a half interest. He denied any knowledge of the note for $1,362.50 given by plaintiffs to Oppenheim, or of any payment made by or on behalf of Martin and Breitenbucher for the property. This testimony is squarely contradicted by that of Breitenbucher and Oppenheim. The former said that he and Hewlett had an agreement, whereby Hewlett was to take a quarter interest for himself and to advance the money for a quarter interest for Martin and Breitenbucher, taking their note therefor; but that, when the parties were ready to close the sale, Hewlett did not have sufficient money to carry out this arrangement, and that then the money was borrowed from Oppenheim on the note of Breitenbucher and Martin. This was paid on the purchase price, and Breitenbucher told Hewlett that they "would fix it up later." A few days subsequently he called upon Hewlett and sought an understanding in reference to his interest, but, according to his testimony, Hewlett said: "Never mind, we just bought this on speculation; we will turn it over right away, and we will fix it up at the time we make the sale." Defendant Oppenheim corroborated Breitenbucher in many particulars. He testified that when they met on May 1, 1905, to conclude the purchase of the Covell property, Hewlett said he was going to take an interest, but did not specify what interest. Hewlett, he said, lacked just $1,362.50 of enough to pay for a half interest, so witness paid that amount for Martin and Breitenbucher, taking their note. This note was not made in Hewlett's presence. Breitenbucher, however, testified positively that Hewlett knew all about the transaction and tacitly agreed to it. He said: "I did not borrow money on the crop. Borrowed it from Mr. Oppenheim. Mr. Hewlett knew this at the time the sale was consummated. He was there at the time. I told him that we were short $1,362.50, and he said he could not furnish that amount of money, so I told him that I would furnish it, or get it from Mr. Oppenheim. I spoke to Mr. Oppenheim about it, and he said, 'Yes.' He said he would loan us boys that amount of money to put into this deal. I think I was the first to mention the fact that he was short. We figured on the lines of getting some money on the crop. I told him we could not get the money on the crop. I told this to Mr. Hewlett."

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r indexes

[1] Appellant's first contention is that, according to the theory of plaintiffs and their evidence, an express trust was sought to be established by parol, and that, such a trust being within the statute of frauds, the idea of a resulting trust was an afterthought brought before the court by an amendment to the complaint. It is true that the complaint, before its amendment, alleged an agreement for the purchase of the land, by which undivided interests were to be assigned in exactly the proportions afterwards fixed by the court in its findings on the resulting trust, but the averment of exactly the verbal agreement which, in the absence of any contract, the law would imply would not alter the nature of the action. Bayles v. Baxter, 22 Cal. 578; Gerety v. O'Sheehan, 9 Cal. App. 447, 99 Pac. 546; Faylor v. Faylor, 136 Cal. 93, 68 Pac. 482.

[2] While it is true that a resulting trust may be defeated by parol evidence of a contract different from that implied by law, we do not agree with appellant that this is a case for the application of the rule. The agreement which, according to Breitenbucher's testimony, was made by him and Hewlett with reference to the advancement by Hewlett of money to buy a quarter interest for Martin and Breitenbucher was abandoned when Hewlett announced his inability to raise more than $5,000 in cash for the purchase of interests in the Beardslee and Covell properties. Yet it was proper for the court to hear evidence of such agreement in getting the history of the entire transaction. The Supreme Court of Nevada, in White v. Sheldon, 4 Nev. 292 (Ed. 1877, vols. 3, 4, p. 751) said: "That no parol agreement between the parties giving to an implied trust an effect or character different from that which the law would create from the acts of the parties could be admitted in evidence in cases of this kind there is little doubt, for that would be simply creating an express trust by parol, which the law does not tolerate. But that all the facts and circumstances out of which the implied trust is raised may be proven is clear; otherwise the trust itself could not be established." The note given by Breitenbucher and Martin to Oppenheim at the time of the purchase of the land from Covell had not been paid when this action was tried. Breitenbucher explained that the makers of the note had expected to pay it from their share of the crops. Appellant contends that the giving of the note under the circumstances shown indicated the intent of plaintiffs to secure their advance, "either out of the proceeds of the land or of the sale thereof." Clearly they could claim none of the profits of the land, unless they owned an interest in it. True the Realty Company afterwards took an agreement for the sale of the land from the owners of the title, and it is the theory of appellant that the $1,362.50 was contributed to the purchase price to insure a consummation of the sale on May 1, 1905 (the last day of Oppenheim's option); the plaintiffs (who owned nearly all the stock of the Realty Company) expecting to recoup themselves for this amount from their commissions on that transaction and on a subsequent sale which they hoped to make for Oppenheim and Hewlett. But there is nothing to support this theory. Appellant does not assert that they disclosed any such plan to him, and it seems improbable that they should have secretly advanced the amount obtained on their note. The only basis for this deduction on his part is his assertion that he was promised a half interest for a cash payment of $2,500.

[3] The evidence is sufficient to sustain the finding that upon receiving the note Oppenheim paid the amount represented by it for and on behalf of plaintiffs, thus creating a resulting trust, because, "in order that a trust might result in their favor, it was not necessary that the consideration for the transfer should have been paid by them. It was enough if it was paid for them." Barroilhet v. Anspacher, 68 Cal. 121, 8 Pac. 804; section 853, Civ. Code. Appellant calls our attention to the fact that plaintiffs permitted the proceeds of the crops to be equally divided between him and Oppenheim until the time of the commencement of this action. This, according to appellant, shows that the claim by plaintiffs of an interest in the property was an afterthought. But it is not for us to weigh the evidence for the purpose of determining whether or not some acts of plaintiff might, when considered by themselves, seem inconsistent with the facts found. The court below heard and considered all the evidence, and we cannot say that its conclusions were not justified, nor are we unmindful in so holding of the rule that the evidence necessary to establish a trust must be clear, satisfactory, and convincing. Sheehan v. Sullivan, 126 Cal. 193, 58 Pac. 543. Appellant cites many authorities to support the contentions that, "where two or more persons purchase land in equal proportions and pay unequal sums on the purchase price, the one paying the greater portion has no resulting trust for such excess payment," and that "a contribution of money towards the entire purchase of land is not sufficient to create a resulting trust in favor of the contributor, unless the contribution is shown to have been paid for some specific part of the land." Without reviewing these authorities, we may say that many of them are so dissimilar to this case as to be of little value. Undoubtedly there are many cases in which payment of unequal sums by purchasers of property does not indicate the acquirement of unequal interests.

[4] It is equally true that resulting trusts will not be declared where it is impossible definitely to establish the proportion of the purchase price contributed by the person in whose behalf the existence of the trust is asserted. This is the doctrine of such cases as Woodside v. Hewel, 109 Cal. 486, 42 Pac. 152; Los Angeles, etc., Co. v. Occidental Oil Co., 144 Cal. 534, 78 Pac. 25; Plass v. Plass, 122 Cal. 11, 54 Pac. 372; Sheehan v. Sullivan, supra, and other cases cited by appellant. But here there is no uncertainty regarding the amount of money contributed for plaintiffs and its proportion to the entire purchase price, and, as was said in South San Bernardino Land & Imp. Co. v. San Bernardino Nat. Bank, 127 Cal. 247, 59 Pac. 700: "It is settled law that, where one pays the purchase price of land and the land is thereupon conveyed to another, the title to the land is held, under such conveyance, in trust for the person who has paid the purchase price. Civ. Code, § 853. This principle is also applied so as to make the payment of a part of the purchase money carry with it a proportionate equitable estate in the land purchased equal to the amount paid. 2 Pomeroy's Equity Jurisprudence, § 1038." See, also, Gerety v. O'Sheehan, supra; Somers v. Overhulser et al., 67 Cal. 237, 7 Pac. 645.

[5, 6] At the time of the sale certain notes secured by deed of trust were executed by Hewlett and Oppenheim. Plaintiffs were not parties to this portion of the transaction, and the contention is made that it is impossible to declare their interest in the land, owing to the existence of these notes and the trust deed, and that, in any event, this action must fail because the trustee was not made a party to it. It is not necessary to consider the question of nonjoinder, as it was not raised by demurrer or otherwise in the superior court, and it cannot be suggested for the first time in this court. A complete answer to the first contention also is the fact that it was not raised by the pleadings.

[7] Appellant by his answer averred the payment of $7,000 for a half interest, and did not deny that the total consideration was $16,725. Under the pleadings and proof the court adjudged the interest of the parties to be in proportion to the amount contributed by each (either in money or in notes), leaving unaffected any lien that a stranger to this record might have on account of the balance of the purchase price. The share of plaintiffs is as much affected pro tanto by the trust deed as are the shares of appellant and of Oppenheim's successor in interest, although the part of the purchase price which was advanced for plaintiffs has been paid to Covell, the trustee, in cash, while the order shares were partly bought by the notes, to secure which the trust deed was executed. We cannot see how the judgment, therefore, adds anything to the burdens under the trust deed of either the appellant or Oppenheim's successor.

There are no other matters in the record which seem to require attention, and, in accordance with the views expressed in the foregoing discussion, the judgment and order from which appeals have been taken are affirmed.

We concur: HENSHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.

(160 Cal. 90)

MILLER et al. v. LANE. (L. A. 2582.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 3, 1911.)

1. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 183*)—PLEADING.

In an action against defendant to recover an additional statutory liability as a stockholder of a foreign bank, he alleged that for more than 10 years he had been continuously a resident of the state; that the alleged cause of action arose on a subscription to stock of the bank; that the shares were issued to him about June 15, 1900; that he never resided in the state where the bank was located; was never served with process there; and that no judgment was ever obtained on any liability by reason of his subscription to the capital stock, and therefore pleaded limitations, specifying Code Civ. Proc. § 338, subd. 1, and section 359, providing that an action on a liability created by statute other than for a penalty or forfeiture must be brought within three years, and that an action to enforce a statutory liability against stockholders of a corporation should be brought within the same period. Held, that such plea was substantially in the form prescribed by section 458, and therefore was not objectionable as applying only to the "subscription to the capital stock," and not to the cause of action pleaded in the complaint.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. §§ 683-692; Dec. Dig. § 183.*]

2. BANKS AND BANKING (§ 49*)—LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 34*)—STOCKHOLDERS—STATUTORY OBLIGATIONS—LIMITATIONS—WHAT LAW GOVERNS.

Laws Colo. 1885, p. 264, § 1, provides that shareholders in banks shall be individually responsible for its debts, in double the amount of the par value of stock owned by them respectively. Held, that notwithstanding the courts of that state had determined that the obligation thereby created was secondary, yet when suit was brought thereon in California against a resident stockholder of an insolvent Colorado bank the lex fori would prevail with reference to the form of action essential to enforce such liability, which would be considered as an original statutory liability, and therefore barred after three years by Code Civ. Proc. § 338, subd. 1, and section 359.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Banks and Banking, Cent. Dig. §§ 71-81½; Dec. Dig. § 49;* Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. §§ 151-157; Dec. Dig. § 34.*]

3. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 58*)—STOCKHOLDERS—INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY—NATURE—CAUSE OF ACTION—ACCRUAL.

Laws Colo. 1885, p. 264, § 1 provides that stockholders of banks shall be individually liable for debts in double the amount of the par value of the stock owned by them respectively. Held that such statutory liability was not a corporate asset on the insolvency of the bank, but was a liability created for the benefit of creditors, and hence a cause of action to enforce the same accrued at the same time as the debt, to pay which the liability sought to be enforced accrued against the corporation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. §§ 324-347; Dec. Dig. § 58;* Banks and Banking, Cent. Dig. § 75.]

4. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 2*)—WHAT LAW GOVERNS.

Whether an action to enforce a stockholder's statutory liability to pay creditors of a foreign insolvent bank is barred by limitations depends on the statute of limitations of the state where the suit is brought.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. §§ 4-8; Dec. Dig. § 2;* Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1085.]

5. BANKS AND BANKING (§ 47*)—STOCKHOLDER'S LIABILITY—JUDGMENT AGAINST BANK—CONCLUSIVENESS—PARTIES.

A judgment of a Colorado court administering the affairs of an insolvent bank, imposing a double liability on stockholders under a Colorado statute, was not binding on a resident of California never brought within the jurisdiction of the Colorado court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Banks and Banking, Cent. Dig. §§ 62-68; Dec. Dig. § 47.*]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; George H. Hutton, Judge.

Action by Alfred L. Miller and others against Ezra F. Lane. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

E. S. Janes and G. L. Whitham (Tolles & Cobbey, of counsel), for appellants. Louis Luckel, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. Plaintiffs appeal from a judgment in favor of defendant, Ezra F. Lane, who was sued upon an alleged stockholder's liability arising from his ownership of certain stock of a bank formerly doing business in the state of Colorado. The bank of which Lane was a stockholder had been found to be insolvent in 1899 and its property had passed into the hands of an assignee, who settled certain preferred claims and paid the depositors a percentage of the amounts due them. By an action commenced June 9, 1905, certain creditors of the bank proceeded in a court of competent jurisdiction in the state of Colorado, under the appropriate statute of that state, and on May 28, 1907, a decree was made and entered by which the amount of personal liability of each stockholder was declared; Lane's obligation being found to be $5,353. Kipp v. Miller, 47 Colo. 598, 108 Pac. 164, 135 Am. St. Rep. 236. By the same decree and in accordance with statutory authority, the Colorado court appointed the plaintiffs herein to represent and to sue for the benefit of all creditors, and under this power they brought this action on October 21, 1908.

In his answer the defendant alleged that for more than 10 years immediately theretofore he had resided continuously in the state of California; that the alleged cause of action arose upon subscription to the capital stock of the state bank of Monte Vista, Colo.; that the shares of stock were issued to him on or about June 15, 1900; that he never resided within the state of Colorado; was never served with process within that state; and that no judgment was ever obtained against him upon any liability by reason of said subscription to said capital stock. He pleaded the bar of the statute of limitations, specifying sections 338, 339, 341, and 359, of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The court found in accordance with practically all of the allegations in the complaint and in substantially the language of the answer, including the bar of the statute of limitations.

[1] Appellant contends that the plea of the statute of limitations in the answer and the court's finding upon that subject goes only to the "subscription to the capital stock," and not to the cause of action set up in the complaint. But we are unable to accept this view, as the allegation of the bar of the statute is in substantially the form prescribed by section 458 of the Code of Civil Procedure. This is sufficient for all purposes. Nicholson v. Tarpey, 124 Cal. 449, 57 Pac. 457.

[2] The question, then, and the only important one, is this, When did the statute of limitations begin to run in favor of defendant? At the trial the plaintiffs introduced in evidence a certified copy of the statute of Colorado, which provides that: "Shareholders in banks, savings banks, trust, deposit, and security associations, shall be held individually responsible for debts, contracts and engagements of said associations, in double the amount of the par value of stock owned by them respectively." Laws 1885, p. 264, § 1.

The statutory law of Colorado, as interpreted by the Supreme Court of that state, makes the liability of a stockholder for the corporation's debts a secondary obligation, to be enforced by suit in equity. Zang v. Wyant, 25 Colo. 551, 56 Pac. 565, 71 Am. St. Rep. 145; Kipp v. Miller, supra. Therefore appellants insist that they have a right to sue under the law of a sister state as interpreted by the Supreme Court of that state, and that their citation of authorities with regard to secondary obligations are in point. All of the California cases cited in this behalf were actions involving recovery from stockholders on unpaid subscriptions. Turner v. Fidelity Loan Concern, 2 Cal. App. 122, 83 Pac. 62, 70; Union Savings Bank v. Leiter, 145 Cal. 696, 79 Pac. 441; Glenn v. Saxton, 68 Cal. 353, 9 Pac. 420; Harmon v. Page, 62 Cal. 448; Baines v. Babcock, 95 Cal. 581, 27 Pac. 674, 30 Pac. 776, 29 Am. St. Rep. 158. We cannot agree with this interpretation of the law. Even if the liability of a stockholder under the statute of Colorado is secondary, it is nevertheless a statutory obligation which cannot be postponed, even by the corporation itself, against the will of the stockholder. All of the California cases sustaining judgments of foreign tribunals fixing a stockholder's indebtedness for unpaid subscriptions go upon the principle that such subscriptions are part of the assets of the corporation, and that therefore the stockholders are bound to pay only when a proper call has been made for the amounts promised by their subscriptions; such call setting the statute of limitations in motion. While the Supreme Court of Colorado, in the cases cited above, determines that the liability of the stockholders under the statute is a secondary obligation enforceable in equity, it recognizes that the fund created by the indebtedness of stockholders under the provision of the Code of Colorado is not entirely analogous with that existing in the case of an unpaid subscription for stock, because the court holds that the assignee or receiver of an insolvent corporation has no right of action to enforce the liability arising under the statute. As was said in Re People's Live Stock Ins. Co., 56 Minn. 185, 57 N. W. 468: "The statutory liability is not to be regarded, like that of stock subscription, as corporate assets, with regard to which the corporation represents the stockholders. The two liabilities rest upon an entirely different footing." See, also, Morse on Banks and Banking, § 696; Thompson on Liability of Stockholders, § 342; Cook on Corp. § 216; Morawetz, Priv. Corp., § 869.

[3] The right of action against the stockholder on account of his individual liability for debts of the company accrues at the same time as against the corporation. O'Neill v. Quarnstrom, 6 Cal. App. 472, 92 Pac. 391; Davidson v. Rankin, 34 Cal. 503; Mitchell v. Beckman, 64 Cal. 117, 28 Pac. 110; Hyman v. Coleman, 82 Cal. 653, 23 Pac. 62, 16 Am. St. Rep. 173. The statute of limitations of the state where the suit is brought must govern. Platt v. Wilmot, 193 U. S. 602, 24 Sup. Ct. 542, 48 L. Ed. 809; Great Western Telegraph Co. v. Purdy, 162 U. S. 329, 16 Sup. Ct. 810, 40 L. Ed. 986.

[4] It is clear that we must consider the case at bar as one brought to enforce an original statutory liability, and it is equally clear that the cause of action against the defendant arose at least as far back as June 9, 1905, when suit was brought by the creditors against the corporation. We cannot subject the defendant, who is and for 10 years has been a resident of California, to any special law or judicial ruling of the state of Colorado, prescribing the form of action upon his statutory liability for the debts of the corporation of which he was a stockholder. In such an action as this the lex fori must prevail. Mr. Justice Temple, delivering the opinion of the court in Russell v. Pacific Railway Co., 113 Cal. 261, 45 Pac. 324 (34 L. R. A. 747), said: "The general rule upon this subject is very well established. Where a statute creates a right and prescribes a remedy for its enforcement, that remedy is exclusive. Where a liability is created, which is not penal, and no remedy is prescribed, the liability may be enforced wherever the person is found. The procedure will, however, be entirely governed by the law of the forum. If the law creating the liability provides for the particular mode for enforcing it, the mode limits the liability."

[5] The defendant, Lane, never having been brought within the jurisdiction of the courts of Colorado, the judgment pleaded against him was not binding. Godfrey v. Terry, 97 U. S. 171, 24 L. Ed. 944. Regarded as a liability created by statute, the cause of action was barred by section 338, subd. 1, of the Code of Civil Procedure, and section 359 of the same Code.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: HENSHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.

160 Cal. 21

In re GREGORSON'S ESTATE.
(L. A. 2,795.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 27, 1911.
Rehearing Denied June 26, 1911.)

1. MARRIAGE (§ 7*)—VALIDITY OF CONTRACT—CAPACITY OF PARTIES.

In the absence of statute, want of requisite mental capacity on the part of one of the parties to a marriage renders the same an absolute nullity, under the rule that marriage is a civil contract to which the consent of parties capable of making a contract is essential.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Marriage, Cent. Dig. § 25; Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

2. MARRIAGE (§ 2*)—REGULATION—LEGISLATIVE CONTROL.

The subject of marriage being one over which the Legislature has full control, it may fix the conditions under which the marital status may be created or ended, as well as the effect of the attempted creation of such status.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Marriage, Cent. Dig. § 2; Dec. Dig. § 2.*]

3. MARRIAGE (§ 54*)—VALIDITY—INCAPACITY OF PARTIES—STATUTES—COLLATERAL ATTACK.

Civ. Code, §§ 59, 60, 61, declares marriages between persons related in certain degrees, between white and colored persons, and by any person during the life of either a husband or wife of such person, except under certain conditions, to be void from the beginning, and section 80 permits either party to proceed by action to have the marriage declared void. Section 82 provides six different causes for which a marriage may be annulled, the third of which is where either party was of unsound mind, unless such party, after coming to reason, freely cohabits with the other as husband or wife. Held that, by such sections, a clear distinction is drawn between void marriages and those which are merely voidable or capable of being annulled, the first class being void from the beginning and the invalidity being capable of being shown in any proceeding in which the fact of marriage may be material, while in the second class the marriage is only void from the time it is so declared, so that, where a marriage between persons incapable for want of mental capacity to contract had not been questioned or annulled during the life of one of them, it could not be collaterally attacked by the public administrator in a proceeding by the guardian of the incompetent husband for letters of administration on the estate of the incompetent wife.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Marriage, Cent. Dig. §§ 105, 106; Dec. Dig. § 54.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; S. E. Crow, Judge.

Petition by Charles W. Northrup, as guardian of the person and estate of David Gregorson, for letters of administration on the estate of Mary J. Gregorson, deceased. From an order granting the petition and denying the application of A. M. Ruiz, public administrator, for letters, he appeals. Affirmed.

W. P. Butcher, for appellant. J. W. Smith and Richards & Carrier, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. Mary J. Gregorson died intestate, a resident of the county of Santa Barbara and leaving estate therein. Charles W. Northrup filed a petition for letters of administration, alleging that the decedent had left a surviving husband, David Gregorson, that said David had been adjudged incompetent, and that petitioner was the guardian of his person and estate. A. M. Ruiz, the public administrator of Santa Barbara county, filed an opposition and a petition that he be appointed administrator, alleging that a marriage had been regularly solemnized between the decedent and David Gregorson in January, 1897, but that at said time, and continuously up to her death, Mary J. Gregorson "was of unsound mind and wholly mentally incapable of entering into, or consenting to, any contract whatever," and particularly any marriage or marriage contract, "and the purported and pretended marriage is and at all times has been null and void." To this opposition and petition Northrup filed a demurrer, which was sustained, and the court entered judgment denying the petition of Ruiz for letters and disallowing his opposition. Ruiz appeals from this judgment.

The position of appellant is that inasmuch as marriage is a relation "arising out of a civil contract, to which the consent of parties capable of making that contract is necessary" (Civ. Code, § 55), no valid marriage can be created except by two persons capable of entering into such contract. Where for want of the requisite mental capacity on the part of one of the parties there has been no consent, the purported marriage is, it is claimed, an absolute nullity, and will be so declared in any court and in any proceeding where the question may arise, whether during the lifetime of both of the parties or after the death of either of them.

[1] It is not to be denied that, in the absence of any statute to the contrary, the great weight of authority is in support of the rule so contended for. 1 Bishop, Marr. & Div. § 614; 2 Nelson on Div. and Separation, § 671; Inh. of Millborough v. Inh. of Rochester, 12 Mass. 363; Jenkins v. Jenkins, 2 Dana (Ky.) 103, 26 Am. Dec. 437; Wightman v. Wightman, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 343; Jaques v. Pub. Adm'r, 1 Bradf. Sur. (N. Y.) 499; Rawdon v. Rawdon, 28 Ala. 565; Atkinson v. Medford, 46 Me. 510; Waymire v. Jetmore, 22 Ohio St. 271; Powell v. Powell, 18 Kan. 371, 26 Am. Rep. 774.

Some courts, while not denying the power to inquire collaterally into the validity of a marriage attacked on this ground, have preferred to leave the question of validity or invalidity to be determined in the first instance in an action commenced for that purpose. Williamson v. Williams, 56 N. C. 446; Wightman v. Wightman, supra. These rulings are put upon grounds of propriety and convenience, and do not question the soundness of the general rule that a marriage solemnized between parties, one of whom is not mentally capable of consenting, is absolutely and entirely void.

[2] But inasmuch as the Legislature has full control of the subject of marriage, and may fix the conditions under which the marital status may be created or ended, as well as the effect of an attempted creation of that status, the general rule, as above declared, may be altered by statute. Whether a marriage of the kind under consideration should be treated as entirely void, or should be open to attack only in a specific proceeding brought by certain persons, is purely a question of policy for the Legislature. The strict rule of absolute nullity may often serve to prevent designing persons who have led an incompetent into a purported marriage from profiting by the wrong committed. On the other hand, there must be many cases in which a great hardship might be worked on innocent persons if the validity of a marriage which had been treated by the parties as binding could, after the death of one of them or in a collateral proceeding, be questioned by a third party asserting that the purported husband or wife had been of unsound mind at the time of undertaking the marriage.

Acting upon some such view as that last indicated, the Legislatures of a number of states have passed statutes designed to render marriages of the kind under discussion free from attack except in proceedings for annulment brought by or on behalf of one of the parties. 2 Nelson, Marr. & Div. § 672. In some of the states the statutes declare that the marriage "shall be void from the time its nullity shall be declared by a court of competent authority." It has been held that the effect of this is to make the marriage valid until the decree of annulment has been entered. Eliot v. Eliot, 77 Wis. 634, 46 N. W. 806, 10 L. R. A. 568; State v. Cone, 86 Wis. 498, 57 N. W. 50. In Massachusetts the statute declares that "the validity of a marriage shall not be questioned in the trial of a collateral issue on account of the insanity or idiocy of either party, but only in a process duly instituted in the lifetime of both parties for determining such validity." The meaning of this statute is plain, and its validity had been upheld. Goshen v. Williams, 4 Allen (Mass.) 458. Statutes very similar to the provisions of our own Civil Code have been passed in Vermont. Under such statutes, it is held that a marriage which might have been annulled at the suit of the wife on the ground of the insanity of the husband cannot, after the latter's death, be questioned in proceedings in probate to administer his estate. Wiser v. Lockwood's Estate, 42 Vt. 720.

[3] We think our own statutes should be construed in like manner. Under the provisions of the Civil Code, a clear distinction is drawn between void marriages and those which are merely voidable, or, as it might perhaps be better expressed, those which are capable of being annulled. Thus it is declared that marriages between persons related to each other in certain degrees "are incestuous and void from the beginning" (section 59); that marriages of white persons with negroes, Mongolians or mulattoes "are illegal and void" (section 60); that a marriage contracted by any person during the life of either the husband or wife of such person (except under certain conditions) "is illegal and void from the beginning" (section 61). Section 80 permits either party to an incestuous or void marriage to proceed by action in the superior court to have the same so declared. On the other hand, section 82 declares: "A marriage may be annulled for any of the following causes, existing at the time of the marriage: One. That the party in whose behalf it is sought to have the marriage annulled was under the age of legal consent, and such marriage was contracted without the consent of his or her parents or guardian, or person having charge of him or her; unless, after attaining the age of consent, such party for any time freely cohabited with the other as husband or wife. Two. That the former husband or wife of either party was living, and the marriage with such former husband or wife was then in force. Three. That either party was of unsound mind, unless such party, after coming to reason, freely cohabit with the other as husband or wife. Four. That the consent of either party was obtained by fraud, unless such party afterwards, with full knowledge of the facts constituting the fraud, freely cohabit with the other as husband or wife. Five. That the consent of either party was obtained by force, unless such party afterwards freely cohabit with the other as husband or wife. Six. That either party was, at the time of marriage, physically incapable of entering into the marriage state, and such incapacity continues, and appears to be incurable." No one of these six classes (except the second) covers any marriages declared by the earlier sections to be void. The second subdivision relates to a marriage contracted by a person during the life of a former husband or wife. It will be observed, by reference to section 61, that even such marriage is not in all cases void. Where the former husband or wife had been absent and not known to be living for five years or was generally reputed or believed to be dead, the subsequent marriage is expressly declared to be valid until its nullity is adjudged by a competent tribunal.

A marriage prohibited as incestuous or illegal and declared to be "void" or "void from the beginning" is a legal nullity, and its invalidity may be asserted or shown in any proceeding in which the fact of marriage may be material. The provision of section 80 that an incestuous, or void marriage may in an action to that end be declared void does not undertake to make such action the exclusive method of questioning the validity of the purported marriage. The judgment merely declares an existing fact—viz., that the marriage is void—and this fact may be shown even though it may not have been so adjudicated.

The action for annulment for the causes specified in section 82 (except in so far as subdivision 2 may cover marriages void in the extreme sense) stands, however, upon a different ground. No general right to have the marriage declared null is given, but the persons who may bring the action, and the times within which they may bring it, are limited by the following section. Thus, where the cause is unsoundness of mind, the action may be brought "by the party injured, or relative or guardian of the party of unsound mind, at any time before the death of either party." These marriages are not declared to be void as are those mentioned in sections 59, 60, and 61. The fact that they are not so declared and that the right to have them annulled is closely limited as to both persons and time indicates clearly the intent of the Legislature that these marriages are to be regarded as merely voidable, and that the only manner of avoiding them is that provided by the Code. If the parties who are alone recognized by the statutes as entitled to have the marriage annulled do not, during its existence, see fit to avoid it, a stranger to the marriage should not be permitted to question its validity in a collateral proceeding. This would clearly be the proper interpretation of subdivisions 4, 5, and 6 of section 82. If the consent of either party had been obtained by fraud or force, or if one of the parties had been physically incapable of entering into the marriage state, no one would contend that in the absence of complaint by the injured party the validity of the marriage could be disputed collaterally. We think the same results were intended to apply to all of the grounds covered by section 82, unless in so far as subdivision 2 of that section may cover bigamous marriages that are void, as well as those which are merely voidable under the terms of section 61. Any intimation of a contrary view that may be found in the opinion in Stierlen v. Stierlen, 6 Cal. App. 420, 92 Pac. 329, was unnecessary to the decision.

With reference to the particular case under discussion, some force is added to the views we have expressed by the analogy of the sections of the Code dealing with the power of insane or incompetent persons to make contracts generally. Under section 38, "a person entirely without understanding has no power to make a contract of any kind," whereas, under section 39, "a conveyance or contract of a person of unsound mind, but not entirely without understanding, made before his incapacity has been judicially determined, is subject to rescission as provided in the chapter on rescission in this Code." We need not here inquire whether the marriage of "a person entirely without understanding" should be held to be absolutely void and open to collateral attack. The appellant's pleading does not allege directly or inferentially that the decedent was entirely without understanding. So far as the pleading shows, the decedent at the time the marriage was contracted was in the condition described in section 39. A contract for any other purpose than marriage, if made by her, would have been voidable merely, and would, in the absence of a rescission, have been binding upon her. In view of the various Code provisions dealing with the subject, we see no reason why a stricter rule should be applied to a marriage entered into by a person not entirely without understanding.

For these reasons, we think the court below rightly held that the public administrator had no standing to question the validity of the marriage which furnished the basis of the respondent's claim to letters of administration.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SHAW, J.

160 Cal. 1

WINCHESTER v. NORTH BRITISH & MERCANTILE INS. CO. OF LONDON AND EDINBURGH. (L. A. 2,753.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 25, 1911.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1011*)—FINDINGS OF TRIAL COURT—CONCLUSIVENESS.

A finding on conflicting testimony will not be disturbed on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3983-3989; Dec. Dig. § 1011.*]

2. INSURANCE (§ 505*)—FIRE INSURANCE—CONTRACTS—CONSTRUCTION.

A fire policy requiring the separation of damaged and undamaged property in the event of a fire so as to protect the undamaged part from further deterioration does not require segregation where the loss exceeds the amount of the insurance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. §§ 1291, 1292; Dec. Dig. § 505.*]

3. INSURANCE (§ 568*)—FIRE INSURANCE—APPRAISERS—DEMAND—WAIVER.

A fire policy requiring written notice for the appointment of appraisers by either party, and stipulating that the loss shall be payable 60 days after proof of damage and award by appraisers when required, and that insurer shall not waive any provision of the policy by any act relating to appraisal, requires insurer desiring the appointment of appraisers to serve on insured written notice within 60 days after proof of loss or the right to arbitration is waived, and insured need not thereafter submit to arbitration but may sue on the policy, and such notice must actually be received by insured within the specified time.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. § 1424; Dec. Dig. § 568.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; George E. Church, Judge.

Action by J. M. Winchester against the North British & Mercantile Insurance Company of London and Edinburgh. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

R. T. Archer and John W. Kemp, for appellant. Bernard Potter, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. Defendant appeals from a judgment rendered in favor of plaintiff in a suit upon a contract of insurance for loss by fire. The property alleged to have been destroyed consisted of certain walnuts which, at the time of the fire, were stored in a room of a dwelling house in the city of Los Angeles. The suit was for $700, the full amount of the policy. Judgment was rendered as prayed.

The court found that before the fire the nuts were of the value of $958.50; that the total value of the nuts not entirely destroyed by fire was not in excess of $155; and that the loss to plaintiff was in excess of $700.

[1] This finding is attacked, but we think it is upheld by certain evidence, and, of course, we cannot undertake to pass upon questions which have been decided by the lower court upon a conflict of testimony where there is substantial evidence to support the finding. Mr. Mabb testified that there were 6,400 pounds of walnuts, about one-half being of the soft shell variety, and that nuts of one kind were worth 14 cents a pound, and of the other kind, 15 cents a pound. This estimate alone would place the value of the nuts at $928, not the figure fixed by the court, but an amount sufficiently large to justify the conclusion reached. But there was other evidence tending to show that the personal property insured was of approximately the value found by the court. The evidence showed that only about 15 sacks of nuts were in such condition that they could be removed from the room in which the fire occurred. These were placed in another apartment and were afterwards sold for $15. The nuts averaged in weight a little less than 70 pounds to the sack, and estimating their value at 15 cents per pound (the highest price which, according to the testimony, any of the nuts would bring) they would be forth approximately $150, or about the value found by the court to be the greatest possible limit of their worth.

[2] Appellant's next contention is that the insured failed to comply with the provision of the policy requiring that damaged and undamaged property should be separated and cared for in such manner as to protect the undamaged portion from further deterioration. Respondent's agent did cover the nuts with canvas to protect them from rain and later removed the 15 sacks mentioned above to another room. Besides this, there was no need of segregation, and an inventory of the property in view of the fact that the loss, exclusive of the highest appraisal of the slightly damaged portion of the property was greater than the full amount of the policy. It has been correctly held that whenever the loss exceeds the amount of the insurance there is no question of apportionment. Lesure Lumber Co. v. Mutual Ins. Co., 101 Iowa, 524, 70 N. W. 761. Under the terms of the policy, the segregation is to be made when there is damaged and undamaged property. Here there was testimony which, if true, would support a finding that all of the property was damaged either by fire, water, or smoke. In such a case no segregation or inventory would be necessary.

[3] The most serious question arises upon appellant's contention that the action was prematurely brought. After the fire there were conferences between plaintiff's attorney in fact and defendant's agent. They were unable to agree, and an adjuster was employed by plaintiff's attorney in fact to assist in the settlement of the matter. He prepared the proofs of loss in due form, and they were filed with the company. Subsequently defendant made a demand in writing that appraisers should be appointed under the terms of the policy, but this did not reach plaintiff's attorney in fact until after the expiration of 60 days. Thereupon plaintiff refused to submit the matter of her difference with the insurance company to arbitrators and an umpire. It was doubtless the theory of the trial court (and we think the correct theory) that the failure to serve such notice upon the insured within 60 days after service of proof of loss amounted to a waiver. The policy of insurance contained the following provisions: "This company shall not be liable beyond the actual cash value of the property at the time any loss or damage occurs, and the loss or damage shall be ascertained or estimated according to such actual cash value, with proper deduction for depreciation however caused, and shall in no event exceed what it would then cost the insured to repair or replace the same with material of like kind and quality; said ascertainment or estimate shall be made by the insured and this company, or, if they differ, then by appraisers, as hereinafter provided; and, the amount of loss or damage having been thus determined, the sum for which this company is liable pursuant to this policy shall be payable sixty days after due notice, ascertainment, estimate and satisfactory proof of the loss have been received by this company in accordance with the terms of this policy. * * * In the event of disagreement as to the amount of loss the same shall, as above provided, be ascertained by two competent and disinterested appraisers, the insured and this company each selecting one, and the two so chosen shall first select a competent and disinterested umpire; the appraisers together shall then estimate and appraise the loss stating separately sound value and damage, and, failing to agree, shall submit their differences to the umpire; and the award in writing of any two shall determine the amount of such loss. * * * This company shall not be held to have waived any provision or condition of this policy or any forfeiture thereof by any requirement, act, or proceeding on its part relating to the appraisal or to any examination herein provided for; and the loss shall not become payable until sixty days after the notice, ascertainment, estimate, and satisfactory proof of the loss herein required have been received by this company, including an award by appraisers when appraisal has been required."

It is earnestly contended on behalf of appellant that, the parties having failed to agree, an appraisal by persons selected according to the terms of the policy was a condition precedent to the right of the insured to bring suit; that no duty to demand an appraisal rested upon the insurer; and that, therefore, the passing of 60 days after the filing of plaintiff's proofs of loss without a demand for appraisal by the company did not amount to a waiver of the right to such an adjustment. We are aware that these views find support in some cases. Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Lorton & Co., 109 Ill. App. 63; Murphy v. Northern British & Mercantile Co., 61 Mo. App. 323; Graham et al. v. German-American Ins. Co., 75 Ohio St. 374, 79 N. E. 930, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1055. We believe, however, that the weight, both of reason and of authority, is the other way.

In Case v. Manufacturers' Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 82 Cal. 266, 21 Pac. 843, 22 Pac. 1083, the policy under consideration contained the following clauses: "The loss to be paid sixty days after due notice and proofs of the same shall have been made by the assured and received at the office of the company in accordance with the terms and provisions of this policy. In case of differences touching any loss or damage after proof thereof has been received in due form, the matter shall, at the written request of either party, be submitted to impartial appraisers, whose award in writing shall be binding on the parties as to the amount of such loss or damage."

The defendant made a demand for arbitration more than 60 days after proof of loss by the plaintiff, the latter refused to arbitrate, and the same contention was made as that urged by appellant's attorneys here. Mr. Chief Justice Beatty, delivering the opinion of Department 1, which, as to the subject here involved was subsequently adopted unanimously by the court in bank, said: "We think it clear that if the formal proofs had stated a total loss of $4,000 or over, and defendant had failed to demand arbitration within the sixty days, at the expiration of which the loss was, by the terms of the policy, to become payable, this would have amounted to a waiver by the defendant of its right to make such demand, and the plaintiff would have been entitled, notwithstanding his refusal to arbitrate, to prove the whole amount of loss so stated. The necessity of an appraisal was not absolute upon any construction of the policy. It was not a condition precedent to the right of action, unless demanded. The most that can be said is that either party could demand arbitration within a reasonable time; but, if not so demanded, it was waived. It is not necessary to decide what would, under the circumstances of this case, have been a reasonable time within which to make the demand, if the amount of the loss had been correctly stated in the proofs. It is sufficient to say that a demand made for the first time after the expiration of the full period of sixty days, or, in other words, after the loss had become payable and a right of action had accrued, would have been too late. And we think it equally clear that, if the plaintiff in this action had confined his demand to an amount justly proportioned to the statement of his total loss, his refusal to arbitrate would have been no ground for denying his right to recover, even admitting defendant's right to an arbitration if seasonably demanded."

Our attention has been called to Old Saucelito, etc., Co. v. Commercial, etc., Co., 66 Cal. 253, 5 Pac. 232, Carroll v. Girard Ins. Co., 72 Cal. 297, 13 Pac. 863, and Adams v. Insurance Co., 70 Cal. 198, 11 Pac. 627, as expressing the view that arbitration is a condition precedent to the right to sue where the insurer and the insured have failed to agree. In the case first named the question here presented was not squarely raised. In that case there seems to have been a request for arbitration by defendant. Indeed, such request was averred in the complaint, and the court found that defendant was always ready to arbitrate the matter, but that plaintiff had at no time offered to submit the difference of opinion between himself and defendant as required by the policy to disinterested persons; but the case was decided upon the language of the policy itself which provided that the loss or damage was payable after the accounts had been adjusted. There could be no adjustment of the account where the parties to the contract disagreed except by the method of submitting the difference of opinion to a committee as provided in the policy. In the case at bar the loss became payable, not after adjustment, but the policy provided that "the loss shall not become payable until sixty days after the notice, ascertainment, estimate, and satisfactory proof of the loss herein required have been received by this company, including an award by appraisers when appraisal has been required." In other words, according to the policy before us, there might be an automatic "adjustment" arising from the passage of 60 days without demand for the selection of appraisers. In Carroll v. Girard Ins. Co., supra, the arbitrators had been selected and the court held that respondent was bound by their award in fixing the amount of his claim in the suit. That case is in favor of respondent's position here because it holds, in effect, that, notwithstanding general language in a policy whereby an insurance company seeks to protect itself against waiver of any of the provisions thereof, it may by its conduct waive a requirement so important as that by which the insured is bound under the contract to file written proofs of loss. In Adams v. Insurance Co., supra, the contract was not like the policy here considered as it did not provide (so far as the opinion discloses) that the loss should be paid after the expiration of a certain time following the filing of proofs, etc., including appraisal if it should be required. But, even if it be conceded that the opinions in the cases just discussed tend to sustain appellant's position, then we must hold that those cases are to that extent overruled by the later opinion of this court in bank in Case v. Manufacturers' Fire & Marine Ins. Co., supra.

The two portions of the policy, one requiring written notice of request for the appointment of arbitrators by either party to the contract, and the other making the loss payable after proof of damage and award by appraisers when required, lead to the conclusion that in the absence of a demand from either party within the 60 days mentioned, there could be no requirement of that kind and a waiver of such settlement of the amount of the loss must be presumed. In Randall v. American Fire Ins. Co., 10 Mont. 359, 25 Pac. 959, 24 Am. St. Rep. 64, after analyzing the authorities, including the Californian cases on the subject, the Supreme Court of Montana says, speaking through Mr. Justice Harwood: "Without further reviewing authorities, we conclude from the number examined bearing upon this important subject that the tendency now is to construe the provision found in contracts like the one before us, providing for arbitration as to differences respecting the amount of loss or damage, to mean, in contemplation of the parties, that the party desiring arbitration shall request the same. In view of the numerous terms and conditions of the contract, and the position occupied by the parties, we believe this is the manifest intention. Under the terms of the policy, when a loss occurs, the time for payment is fixed. Notice and verified proofs of loss are required to be presented by the assured, with other conditions as to proofs and examinations, if the insurer request them. The proofs of loss certify under oath the amount of loss as claimed by the assured. The insurer may accept this estimate, or proceed to negotiate for an adjustment or a 'mutual agreement' with the assured as to the amount he will take in satisfaction of the contract, or the insurer may give notice within the required time of intention to restore the property. All these alternatives for the insurer are provided in the policy, and it is contemplated that the assured must await the movements of the insurer upon some of these lines of action. The assured cannot know which will be adopted until notified by the insurer. The insurer may also, if a difference of opinion as to the fair amount of the loss is entertained, notify the assured thereof, and request arbitration. The insurer has the amount of loss claimed by assured stated under oath, and the suggestion of 'differences' in that respect must come from the insurer, and such differences ought to be certain, and would probably involve the admission of liability to pay a stated amount (Lasher v. Northwestern Nat. Ins. Co., 55 How. Prac. [N. Y.] 318), so that an issue would be stated to submit to arbitration. The insurer, under such a contract, is the only party who can effectually demand and bring about arbitration, or gain a defense by reason of the other party's default in failing to comply therewith. But, if the assured fails to request arbitration, this deprives the insurer of no right whatever. If the insurer is deprived of the right of arbitration, it happens by his own laches. Nor by demanding arbitration can the assured bring that remedy into action, for the insurer may simply ignore such demand, and lose no defense thereby when the cause of action is taken into court. Therefore, under the peculiar conditions of the contract, it depends on the will of the insurer alone as to whether he will have arbitration or not. If he demands it in season, according to the conditions of the policy, and the conditions are shown to exist which the policy provides shall be submitted to arbitration, then the assured must accede to the request, for the courts will afford him no remedy until he submits to arbitration: Hamilton v. Liverpool, etc., Ins. Co., 136 U. S. 242, 10 Sup. Ct. 945, 34 L. Ed. 419. But, on the other hand, if the insurer is unwilling to arbitrate, he may ignore the request made by assured therefor; and under such conditions, to require the assured to make the request and plead and prove the fact is to require a vain and useless act, and the ceremony of proving it, which is always against the policy of the law."

It has been held that appraisal must be demanded by the insurance company, otherwise the insured need not submit to that form of settlement. Nurney v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co., 63 Mich. 633, 30 N. W. 350, 6 Am. St. Rep. 338; Mutual Fire Ins. Co. of N. Y. v. Alvord, 61 Fed. 752, 9 C. C. A. 623. See, also, Manchester Fire Ins. Co. v. Simmons, 12 Tex. Civ. App. 607, 35 S. W. 722.

It follows that the judgment should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

We concur: HENSHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.; SLOSS, J.; SHAW, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.

160 Cal. 28

BRUCE v. BRUCE (Sac. 1,886.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 27, 1911.)

DIVORCE (§ 182*)—TEMPORARY ALIMONY PENDING APPEAL—POWER OF COURT—"PENDING THE ACTION."

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1049, providing that an action is pending from the time of its commencement until its determination on appeal, and Civ. Code, § 137, empowering the court, where an action for divorce is pending, to require the husband to pay alimony for the support of his wife and children, or suit money, the court, granting to a wife an interlocutory decree of divorce and permanent alimony, may, on the motion of the wife, desiring to appeal from the judgment fixing the alimony, allow her temporary alimony pending the appeal, together with suit money, notwithstanding section 139, empowering the court, on granting a divorce for an offense of the husband, to compel him to provide for the maintenance of the wife and children, which is inapplicable to orders for payments "pending the action."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. § 641; Dec. Dig. § 182.*

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 6, pp. 5276-5279; vol. 8, p. 7750.]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Kings County; John G. Covert, Judge.

Action by Alice Bruce against H. S. Bruce. From an order awarding temporary alimony to plaintiff pending the determination of her appeal, granting insufficient relief, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 116 Pac. 994.

H. P. Brown and Lamberson & Lamberson, for appellant. Dixon L. Phillips and M. L. Short, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. The plaintiff commenced this action to obtain a divorce on the ground of extreme cruelty. The defendant having answered, the cause was tried, and the court made its interlocutory decree, which, after reciting that findings had been waived, adjudged that plaintiff was entitled to a divorce. The decree further adjudged that the plaintiff be awarded permanent alimony in the sum of $4,500, and that to secure this sum she have a lien on the homestead of the parties; said homestead being assigned to the defendant.

This interlocutory decree was rendered on April 20, 1910. The plaintiff was dissatisfied with the amount of alimony awarded, and with the disposition of the homestead. Asserting her intention to appeal from the portions of the decree dealing with these matters, she applied to the court, upon notice duly given, for an order directing the defendant to pay her a reasonable sum for attorney's fees and expenses of her appeal, and for her support pending said appeal. The motion came on for hearing on May 23, 1910. It was supported by affidavits and by oral testimony. The defendant opposed the making of an order requiring him to pay the plaintiff any money, except upon condition that it be allowed as a credit upon the $4,500 awarded as alimony. The court made its order directing the defendant to pay to plaintiff, as alimony, pending determination of the appeal, or until the further order of the court, the sum of $25 monthly. It further ordered the payment of the expense, not exceeding sums named, of printing a transcript and a brief on appeal, and the payment of $125 for fees of plaintiff's attorney on appeal. The present appeal is taken by the defendant from this order.

The defendant's sole contention is that the court was without jurisdiction to make the order complained of. It is argued that, after the entry of judgment in an action for divorce, the court's power with respect to alimony is limited to modifying or changing the order already made, and that the order under review did not purport to modify or change the original judgment. The claim is absolutely without merit. It is based upon Civil Code, § 139, which has no application to orders for payments during the pendency of the action. Section 137 provides in express terms that, "when an action for divorce is pending, the court may, in its discretion, require the husband to pay as alimony any money necessary to enable the wife to support herself or her children, or to prosecute or defend the action." An action is pending "from the time of its commencement until its final determination upon appeal, or until the time for appeal has passed, unless the judgment is sooner satisfied." Code Civ. Proc. § 1049. Following these provisions, this court has repeatedly held that the power to make an allowance to the wife for her support, or to enable her to defend or prosecute the action, is not exhausted upon the rendition of the judgment in the trial court, but continues during the pendency of an appeal. Reilly v. Reilly, 60 Cal. 624; Ex parte Winter, 70 Cal. 291, 11 Pac. 630; Larkin v. Larkin, 71 Cal. 330, 12 Pac. 227; Bohnert v. Bohnert, 91 Cal. 428, 27 Pac. 732; Grannis v. Superior Court, 143 Cal. 630, 77 Pac. 647; Gay v. Gay, 146 Cal. 237, 79 Pac. 885.

Howell v. Howell, 104 Cal. 45, 37 Pac. 770, 43 Am. St. Rep. 70, and similar cases cited by the appellant, are not in point. They deal with the power of the trial court, after a final judgment which makes no provision for the support of the wife or children, to require such support by subsequent orders. The orders involved did not purport to cover the period of an appeal, and had no reference to the pendency of the action. The question in each of these cases was whether the order was authorized by the terms of section 138 or section 139 of the Civil Code. The extent of the court's power under section 137 was not presented or considered.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.

160 Cal. 9

McQUIDDY et al. v. WORSWICK STREET PAVING CO. et al. (Sac. 1,697.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 26, 1911.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 305*)—ASSESSMENTS FOR STREET IMPROVEMENTS—ORDINANCES—VALIDITY—"WORK."

A provision in an ordinance for a street improvement that the contractor shall use precautions to prevent accidents to persons and property by providing barriers and shall be responsible for damage to persons, property, or the work, due to the nature of the work, when considered in connection with the provision that all work or materials shall be performed or furnished in accordance with the specifications, refers exclusively to damages arising during the progress of the work, and not to damages arising subsequently thereto, caused by the nature of the work when completed, and it does not invalidate an assessment for the work; the word "work" meaning the state of actively working or operating.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 817; Dec. Dig. § 305.*

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 8, pp. 7517-7519; vol. 8, p. 7537.]

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§§ 293, 304*)—STREET IMPROVEMENTS—ASSESSMENTS—VALIDITY.

Where the resolution of intention and the resolution ordering a street improvement referred to the specifications on file in the clerk's office and to the ordinance prescribing the specifications, there was a sufficient description of the work to support the assessment therefor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 811-816; Dec. Dig. §§ 293, 304.*]

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 444*)—STREET IMPROVEMENTS—ORDINANCES—VALIDITY.

A provision in a general ordinance providing specifications for street improvements, including specifications for work under the Vrooman act or under street improvement acts, that no work or materials shall be changed or omitted except on the order of the trustees, certified by the clerk, and that additional work will be allowed only on the order of the board certified by the clerk, etc., does not give the trustees power to change the contract for the work, but only provides that, if a change is intended, it cannot be made except by order of the trustees, and it does not apply to contracts for work under the street improvement acts, and it does not invalidate an assessment for the improvement.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 444.*]

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 444*)—STREET IMPROVEMENT—ORDINANCES—VALIDITY.

A provision in an ordinance for a street improvement that any materials, apparatus, or plant owned by the city may be furnished the contractor on such terms as may be stipulated in the contract therefor does not secure to one contractor more than to another the privilege of making contracts with the city for the use of any property which may be available in the construction of the improvement, so as to invalidate for that reason an assessment for the improvement.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 444.*]

5. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 444*)—STREET IMPROVEMENT—ORDINANCES—VALIDITY.

A provision in an ordinance for a street improvement that the contractor shall employ only competent and faithful laborers, and dismiss any employé failing to perform the work satisfactorily to the city authorities, merely allows the city authorities when an employé is incompetent or unfaithful to see that he is dismissed, and it does not invalidate an assessment for the improvement.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 444.*]

6. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 444*)—STREET IMPROVEMENTS—ORDINANCES—VALIDITY.

A provision in an ordinance for a street improvement that the wearing surface shall be composed of asphaltic cement 16 to 20 parts, sand 80 to 65 parts, and stone dust as required, when read as it must be in connection with the provision that the materials must be mixed in proportion by weight depending on their character within the limits specified, and that the stone dust must be used in such proportions that the mixture of sand, cement, and dust will pass at least 10 per cent. through a 100-mesh screen, is not objectionable for indefiniteness, or uncertainty as to the amount of stone dust, and does not empower the city engineer or trustees to fix the amount to be used, and does not invalidate an assessment for the improvement.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 444.*]

7. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 307*)—STREET IMPROVEMENTS—ORDINANCES—VALIDITY.

Minor details in a street improvement may, by the ordinance for the work, be left to the supervision of the officer in charge of the work, who will presumptively perform his official duty.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 819; Dec. Dig. § 307.*]

8. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 307*)—STREET IMPROVEMENTS—ORDINANCES—VALIDITY.

A provision in an ordinance for a street improvement which gives to the contractor his option to use broken rock or clean river gravel of the quality prescribed is not objectionable as giving the city or its superintendent power to determine which material shall be used.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 819; Dec. Dig. § 307.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Kings County; John G. Covert, Judge.

Action by William R. McQuiddy and another against the Worswick Street Paving Company and others. From an order denying defendants' motion for a new trial, they appeal. Reversed.

Charles G. Lamberson, Frank Lamberson, H. P. Brown, Everts & Ewing, and Gray & Cooper, for appellants. Dixon L. Phillips and W. R. McQuiddy, for respondents. William Denman, amicus curiæ.

SHAW, J. This is an appeal by the defendants from an order denying their motion for a new trial. The action was one to quiet title to two lots in the city of Hanford. The defendants claim a lien on the property by virtue of their ownership of certain bonds for street improvements issued under the provisions of the act of 1893 and amendments of 1899 thereto, entitled "An act to provide a system of street improvement bonds. * * *" St. 1893, p. 33; St. 1899, p. 40. The court below held that the proceedings leading up to the issuance of the bonds were void, and gave a judgment for the plaintiffs, declaring that the defendants had no interest in the land.

The resolution of intention, and the resolution ordering the work done, described the proposed improvement as follows: "That Eighth street * * * be paved with asphaltic pavement on an asphalt concrete foundation, and curbed with granite curbing, all in accordance with the plans and specifications on file in the office of the city clerk of the city of Hanford. * * *" The specifications referred to were those contained in a general ordinance (No. 131) prescribing ing specifications for the construction of the several varieties of improvements of streets and sidewalks in the city of Hanford, whether paved by means of special assessments upon private property, or out of the general funds of the city. The principal objection to the validity of the proceedings upon which the bonds were issued is based upon the provisions of section 6 of the ordinance. Section 1, which is introductory in character and is given under the subhead "Declaration," provides that "all work or materials required in grading, paving or improving any street * * * shall be performed, or furnished in accordance with these specifications and plans." Section 6 is as follows: "Safeguards. The contractor shall use all necessary precautions to prevent accidents to persons and property by providing sufficient fences, guards, barriers, temporary bridges, lights, etc., and shall be responsible for all loss, damage or injury to persons, property or the work, due to the nature of the work or the action of the elements."

It is contended that this specification is identical in effect with those declared to be fatal to the validity of such assessments by the decisions in Blochman v. Spreckels, 135 Cal. 662, 67 Pac. 1061, 57 L. R. A. 213; Goldtree v. Spreckels, 135 Cal. 666, 67 Pac. 1091; Woollacott v. Meekin, 151 Cal. 701, 91 Pac. 612; Hatch v. Nevills, 152 Cal. 16, 95 Pac. 43; Van Loenen v. Gillespie, 152 Cal. 222, 96 Pac. 87; Stansbury v. Poindexter, 154 Cal. 709, 99 Pac. 182, 129 Am. St. Rep. 190; True v. Stansbury, 155 Cal. 534, 102 Pac. 263. We cannot agree with this contention. The portion of the specification which was held fatal to the assessment in Blochman v. Spreckels, supra, was as follows: "All loss or damage arising from the nature of the work to be done under these specifications shall be sustained by the contractor." It was said that the other specifications might reasonably be held to refer exclusively to damage occurring from acts done in the progress of the work and to make the contractor responsible merely for damages caused by his negligence in prosecuting the work. But as to the clause above quoted the court said that it had a "broader meaning and looked to damage which might arise out of and subsequent to the completed work—practically any damage for which the city would be liable which might originate in 'the nature of the work to be done.'" It is perfectly clear from a reading of the opinion that, if this meaning had not been attributed to the clause quoted, the assessment there considered would not have been held to have been invalidated by the specification in question. The specifications involved in the other cases above cited were each and all held to be the same, in effect, as that considered in the Blochman Case.

[1] We think the specification here under consideration contains language which, when taken in connection with the introductory clause and considered in the light of the purpose for which such specifications are made, must be construed to refer exclusively to damages arising during the progress of the work, and not to damages arising subsequently thereto caused by the nature of the work when completed. The introduction to the ordinance prescribing the specifications and plans declares in effect that they are adopted as a guide for the performance of the work. There is nothing in the ordinance anywhere which indicates any intention to provide anything with respect to liabilities accruing after the work is performed in the way of damages to property or persons arising from the nature or character of the pavement when completed. The subhead of specification No. 6 consists of the word "Safeguards." This of itself indicates an intention to provide for the safety of persons who may be upon the streets while the work of paving them is in progress. It is a well-settled proposition, frequently applied in the case of sections of the Code which are preceded by subhead or title, that such subhead or title may have the effect of making the language of the section more certain and limited in its application. The construction given to the clause considered in the Blochman Case was necessarily based upon the theory that the word "work" in the phrase, "nature of the work to be done under this specification," referred to the completed work, the pavement itself, and not to the process of doing the work. The word "work" has numerous variations of meaning. Webster defines it as "state of actively working or operating"; also as "that which one is doing"; and as "that which is produced; structures." In the Blochman Case the word was given the meaning last stated. In the specification in the case at bar the word appears in different company and in a connection which necessarily gives it the meaning first stated. It makes the contractor "responsible for all loss, damage or injury to persons, property, or the work, due to the nature of the work or the action of the elements." Here are three things to which damages may be caused: (1) Persons; (2) property; (3) the work. The thing which is to cause the damage, as contemplated by the specification, is "the nature of the work." In the Blochman Case this was held to mean the completed work. In the present case it could not mean this, because one of the things which may be damaged is "the work," and, if it were given this meaning, we would have the work itself—that is, the completed work—injuring itself. The phrase "nature of the work," in the last clause in the specification, necessarily must refer to the character of the operations carried on by the contractor in the construction of the pavement, otherwise the clause would be absurd upon its face. The only reasonable construction of this part of the clause, therefore, is that it was intended to make the contractor liable for all injuries to persons, property, or the pavement to be constructed, by reason of his negligence in constructing the pavement, or, to more closely follow its language, by reason of the nature of his operations in carrying on the work of construction. So construed, there is nothing in it which violates the law or which would have the effect of invalidating the contract.

In Gay v. Engebretsen, 158 Cal. 21, 109 Pac. 876, we had under consideration a similar specification, whereby the contractor was made responsible for "all loss or damage arising from the nature of the work to be done under these specifications, during the progress of the work, and before the acceptance thereof, from any act or omission on the part of the contractor," and whereby he agreed to hold the city harmless from any suits for damages arising from or out of and during the performance of the work. It was there held that a provision which made the contractor responsible for the consequences of his own negligence or carelessness in the construction of the improvement contracted for was not improper or fatal to the validity of the street assessment.

[2] Certain other objections are made to the validity of the proceedings which it is necessary to consider. The specifications are not set out at length in the resolution of intention or in the resolution ordering the work to be done, but are referred to therein by reference to the specifications on file in the clerk's office and to ordinance No. 131 prescribing the said specifications. The objection that this is not a sufficient description of the work is disposed of by the decision of this court in Chase v. Trout, 146 Cal. 367, 80 Pac. 81.

[3] Section 4 of the specifications provides that "no work or materials for which a contract has been made under the provisions of these specifications shall be changed or omitted, excepting upon order of the board of trustees, certified by the clerk thereof. Additional work in connection with that under contract will be allowed only upon the order of the board of city trustees, certified by the clerk. The price to be added to, or deducted from, the contract price for any added, changed or omitted work or materials shall be stated in the order of the board of city trustees, authorizing such addition, change or omission." It is claimed that this provision gives the city trustees power to make changes in the contract and in the work to be done thereunder, and that this invalidates the proceedings. As before stated, the ordinance in which these specifications are contained is a general ordinance and the specifications include those for work done under the Vrooman act or under street improvement acts, providing for assessments upon private property, and also for work to be done by the city under direct contract and to be paid for out of the general funds. The provision above quoted does not give the city trustees any power to change the contract. It only provides that, if a change is intended, it cannot be made except by order of the trustees. We do not think that this applies to contracts for street work made under assessment acts. Such contracts cannot be materially changed after they have been let in accordance with the statute. If in connection with this contract the city desired to have other work done and the contractor and the city could agree upon the terms upon which such work should be done, this section of the ordinance might be applicable thereto, but it would not in any respect affect or change the contract for the particular improvement to be done under the proceedings in question.

[4] Section 5 of the ordinance in question provided that "any materials, apparatus or plant owned by the city may be furnished, loaned or hired to the contractor, upon such terms as may be stipulated in the contract therefor." It is suggested that this invalidates the proceedings because it is possible that prospective bidders might have had a private understanding with the officers of the city by which they could have procured such materials, apparatus, or plant at lower rates than would have been allowed to other bidders, and that this would allow unfair competition.

There is nothing in the provision which would secure to one contractor more than to another the privilege of making such contracts with the city for the use of any property which the city might have which would be available in the construction of the improvement, or which could be made the basis for any discrimination between bidders.

[5] This section also requires the contractor to employ no one but competent and faithful laborers, and requires him to dismiss any employé who fails to perform the work satisfactorily to the city authorities. We can see nothing improper in this provision. It does not give the city authorities absolute power to arbitrarily dismiss an employé whether he was competent or faithful or not. It only allows such action by the city authorities when the employé is in fact incompetent or unfaithful. There is nothing improper in the clause giving the city the right to demand the dismissal of such employés.

[6] Section 13 provides that the wearing surface shall be composed of asphaltic cement 16 to 20 parts, sand 80 to 65 parts, and stone dust "as required." It is claimed that this leaves the amount of stone dust entirely indefinite and makes the contract void. This, however, must be read in connection with sections 16 and 18, which provide that the materials must be mixed in proportion by weight, depending upon their character, within the limits specified, and that the stone dust must be used in such proportions that the mixture of sand, cement, and dust will pass at least 10 per cent. through a 100-mesh screen. Asphaltic cement will vary in its consistency, and sand will necessarily vary in the size of its particles. The statement that stone dust is to be used as required does not mean that it shall be used as required by the city engineer or the city trustees, but that so much of it shall be used as may be required to make the mixture pass 10 per cent. through the screen aforesaid. Thus understood, there is nothing objectionable in the specification. We do not think there is any such indefiniteness or uncertainty in the provisions of section 14 prescribing the character of the asphaltic cement, or in section 17 describing the broken rock or gravel to be used where specified, as to make the proceeding invalid. Many of such minor details must necessarily be left to the decision of the officer in charge of the work. This subject was discussed at length in the recent case of McCaleb v. Dreyfus, 156 Cal. 206, 103 Pac. 924. We cannot add anything to the argument there made.

[7] It shows clearly that such minor details may be provided for by leaving them to the supervision of the officer in charge of the work, who, it is to be presumed, will faithfully and honestly perform his official duty.

[8] There is nothing in the objection that section 17 gives the city or the street superintendent power to determine whether the contractor shall use broken rock or clean river gravel. The effect of the specification is that either may be used by the contractor at his option, but that whichever material is used must be of the quality there prescribed.

We do not find any other defects in the specifications or proceedings in which the bonds were issued which require notice. The proceeding was apparently conducted in accordance with law and the bonds constitute valid liens upon the property. The court below erred in declaring that they were void.

The order appealed from is reversed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; LORIGAN, J.

BEATTY, C. J. (concurring). I concur in the judgment, and in all material particulars in the opinion of Justice SHAW. The following observations are added only for the purpose of emphasizing the importance of limiting more carefully, than has been done in some of the cases followed by the superior court, the application of the principle established by the decision in Brown v. Jenks, 98 Cal. 10, 32 Pac. 701. It was there held, and I think correctly held, that a contract for street paving to be binding upon abutting owners must not impose upon the contractor the duty of keeping the pavement in repair after completion of his contract and acceptance of the work; and this upon the ground that the necessary effect of such a contract would be to impose upon abutting owners the cost of insuring against defects inherent in the plan and specifications of the work—a liability not contemplated by the statute. It was a mistake in my opinion to apply this principle in deciding the case of Blochman v. Spreckels, because the contract there in question would easily have borne a construction limiting the liability imposed upon the contractor to the risks assumed by him in undertaking the work, and to the consequences of his own negligence in carrying it out—a construction to be preferred to one which rendered the contract invalid. I dissented from the decision in that and a companion case, and ever since have hoped to see them overruled, being entirely convinced that they and the whole line of decisions in which they have been followed, so far from subserving the policy they were designed to promote, have simply tended to subvert it. Instead of encouraging competition among contractors bidding upon such improvements, the effect has been to diminish competition and to lay upon abutting owners a heavier, and in many cases, an intolerable burden. This serious and growing evil, I think, requires the courts to limit as strictly as possible the doctrine of Blochman v. Spreckels in its application to the construction of contracts differing in language from that which was there construed. I thought, and still think, this might have been done in Woollacott v. Meekin, and despite that precedent I think it may be done in this case.

In the argument some stress has been laid upon the fact that the Hanford ordinance was passed two years after the decision in Blochman v. Spreckels, and the work here in question ordered nearly two years later; from which it is inferred that contractors generally, being aware of the infirmity in the resolution of intention, order for the work, and contract, failed to compete in the bidding, with the result that the price at which the contract was awarded was excessive in proportion to the risks they supposed to be involved. This may, in fact, have been so, but it is a sounder legal inference that the city council of Hanford, being aware at the time its ordinance was adopted of the unfortunate consequences resulting from the wording of the San Diego ordinance, deliberately chose a different phraseology for the express purpose of invoking a different and more beneficial construction. I think myself that there is a difference sufficient to exempt this case (in which the contract was made and performed before the decision in Woollacott v. Meekin) from the rule of stare decisis.

160 Cal. 95

SUNRISE LAND CO. v. ROOT. (Sac. 1,876.)
(Supreme Court of California. June 3, 1911.)1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 654*)—CORRECTION OF RECORD.

The Supreme Court has no power to correct a record by inserting in the complaint allegations which were never there.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2819-2822; Dec. Dig. § 654.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 717*)—CORRECTION OF RECORD.

The Supreme Court may not consider the opinion of the trial judge in lieu of a finding.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 2967; Dec. Dig. § 717.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 548*)—MATTERS REVIEWABLE.

Where there is no bill of exceptions, excerpts from the evidence will not be regarded, and the case will be considered in the light of the original record.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2433-2440; Dec. Dig. § 548.*]

4. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE (§§ 114, 123*) — PLEADING—FINDINGS.

While, under Civ. Code, § 3391, providing that specific performance of a contract cannot be enforced against a party not receiving an adequate consideration, it is not necessary that it be alleged in the complaint and found by the court in hac verba that "the contract was supported by an adequate consideration," a complaint, alleging a written contract for the sale of land, and a finding that the sale was "legally and fairly" made, were insufficient; there being no allegation that defendant received an adequate consideration for the contract or that it was to her just and reasonable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Specific Performance, Cent. Dig. §§ 356-372, 397-399; Dec. Dig. §§ 114, 123.*]

5. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE (§ 65*) — REASONABLENESS OF CONTRACT.

The court must be satisfied, in an action for specific performance, that a claim for a deed under a contract is fair, just, and reasonable, the contract equal in all its parts, and founded on an adequate consideration.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Specific Performance, Cent. Dig. § 196; Dec. Dig. § 65.*]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Stanislaus County; L. W. Fulkerth, Judge.

Action by the Sunrise Land Company, a corporation, against Abbie J. Root. From the judgment, defendant appeals. Reversed, with instructions.

Maddux & Maddux and D. M. Young, for appellant. L. L. Dennett and J. M. Walthall, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. Plaintiff brought an equitable action to enforce the specific performance of a contract for the sale of 840 acres of land in Stanislaus county, at $100 per acre. This contract was made by plaintiff and Messrs. Root & Saunders (copartners), alleged in the complaint to be defendant's duly authorized agents for the sale of the land, the written agreement between defendant and the said copartnership granting the latter full power to contract for the sale of any or all of the land described in the complaint, being made a part of the pleading. Defendant demurred to the complaint; her demurrer was overruled; and, after she had answered, the case was tried on its merits, with the result that judgment was rendered in favor of plaintiff, decreeing specific performance of the contract. From this judgment defendant appealed on the judgment roll alone; the record being authenticated by stipulation of counsel that it correctly set forth the complaint, demurrer, proceedings of argument on demurrer, minute order overruling defendant's demurrer to the complaint, etc. Appellant filed her points and authorities, resting her appeal upon the single contention that her demurrer should have been sustained because of want of sufficient facts in the allegations of the complaint, and it is pointed out in the brief of her attorneys that said complaint fails to allege that defendant received an adequate consideration for the contract, or that it was as to her just and reasonable. Thereafter plaintiff filed a document entitled "Suggestion of Diminution of Record," asking permission to insert at the proper places in the complaint an allegation respecting the reasonableness of the contract and adequacy of consideration, which would meet the point made in appellant's brief. This amendment was sought for the reason, as stated by one of plaintiff's counsel in an affidavit accompanying the "Suggestion of Diminution of Record," "that the said allegation in the complaint was inadvertently omitted and the findings inadvertently made to follow the complaint, and the point was never raised that such allegations were omitted; but, on the other hand, the case was tried by the court, and the evidence was introduced without objection showing the reasonableness of the consideration, and that the complaint was amended by implication, and the first time that the point was ever raised specifically by the defendant was on her brief on appeal herein." This document also presents the written opinion of the judge of the superior court who tried the case, and certain extracts from the testimony at the trial. Respondent seeks to utilize part of this opinion as a finding upon the adequacy of consideration, and to show by the selected portions of the testimony that this matter was thoroughly tried in the action.

[1] We have no power to correct a record by inserting allegations in the complaint which were never there, and cannot, of course, receive respondent's suggestion that such averments be supplied after an appeal in which its attorneys stipulate to the correctness of a record containing no such allegations. By such action we would deprive defendant not only of her right to answer, but of the privilege of meeting, perhaps, by sufficient proof, statements which, under the condition of the record at the trial, she was not called upon to controvert.

[2] Neither can we consider the opinion of the learned judge of the trial court in lieu of a finding, even if we should ignore the appellant's suggestion that such opinion cannot be part of the record of an appeal on the judgment roll alone, because such finding, in the absence of the proper allegation in the complaint, would be without the issues. Kaiser v. Barron, 153 Cal. 790, 96 Pac. 806.

[3] The excerpts from the evidence have no place here because there is no bill of exceptions. We must therefore, of course, consider the case in the light of the original record. Respondent contends that there was sufficient allegation and finding of adequacy of consideration because a written contract was alleged and the court found that the sale was "legally and fairly" made.

[4] While it is not necessary that, to conform to the requirements of section 3391 of the Civil Code, it must be alleged in the complaint and found by the court in hac verba that "the contract was supported by an adequate consideration" (Wait v. Kern River Mining, etc., Co., 157 Cal. 25, 106 Pac. 102), nevertheless the complaint and findings in this case fall far short of the measure long established by courts of equity. A sale might be "legally" made, in that an agent had power to bind his principal, and, while it might be "fairly" conducted in respect to full disclosure to the purchaser of all of the matters pertaining to the property, yet the consideration might be so inadequate as to shock the conscience of the chancellor.

[5] As was said by the chancellor in Seymour v. Delancey, 6 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 225 (language quoted more than once by this court): "A court of equity must be satisfied that the claim for a deed is fair and just, and reasonable, and the contract equal in all its parts, and founded on an adequate consideration, before it will interpose with this extraordinary assistance." As the complaint failed to set up the adequacy of the consideration, the demurrer should have been sustained. Section 391, Civ. Code; Kaiser v. Barron, supra; White v. Sage, 149 Cal. 614, 87 Pac. 193; Stiles v. Cain, 134 Cal. 171, 66 Pac. 231; Bruck v. Tucker, 42 Cal. 354; Agard v. Valencia, 39 Cal. 302.

There is nothing in respondent's point that, inasmuch as the copartners had done much work in negotiating for the sale of land, the contract was partly executed, and therefore its adequacy not a matter subject to inquiry. The agents are not parties to this action, and their contract with appellant is not in issue here.

The judgment is reversed, with instructions to the court below to sustain defendant's demurrer.

We concur: HENSHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.

160 Cal. 82

GASSNER v. McCARTHY, Mayor, et al. (S. F. 5,711.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 2, 1911.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 57*)—POWERS. A municipal corporation may exercise only such powers as are conferred on it in its charter, or by some general law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 144, 148; Dec. Dig. § 57.*]

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 412*)—POWERS—CONSTRUCTION OF TUNNELS.

The provision in the charter of the city and county of San Francisco that the board of supervisors may construct or permit the construction of tunnels grants authority to construct tunnels, but does not authorize a special assessment to pay the cost of the work.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1013; Dec. Dig. § 412.*]

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 406*)—SPECIAL ASSESSMENTS—STATUTORY POWERS.

In the absence of a grant of power to levy a special assessment to pay the cost of authorized work, the cost of the work must be borne by the city as a whole, either out of current revenues or a bond issue.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1001, 1002; Dec. Dig. § 406.*]

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 415*)—SPECIAL ASSESSMENTS—STATUTORY POWERS.

The charter of the city and county of San Francisco, empowering the board of supervisors to change the grade of any public street and to regrade or repave, or otherwise improve, the same so as to conform to such change, etc., does not authorize the board of supervisors to change the grade of two blocks of a street and to construct a tunnel under two intervening blocks of the street, without changing the grade of that part of the street, and to levy a special assessment to bear the cost of constructing the tunnel.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1018; Dec. Dig. § 415.*]

5. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 414*)—SPECIAL ASSESSMENTS—STATUTORY POWERS.

The power to levy a special assessment to repave streets granted to the city and county of San Francisco by the charter, empowering the board of supervisors to change the grade of streets and to regrade and repave the same so as to conform to such change, is an incident to the change of grade, and must be limited to the length of the changed grade.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1008, 1017; Dec. Dig. § 414.*]

6. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 414*)—STREET IMPROVEMENTS—VALIDITY.

A proposed improvement changing the grade of two blocks of a city street and constructing a tunnel under two intervening blocks of the street, without changing the grade of the street in the blocks through which the tunnel is to run, is an entire scheme, and, where the municipality had no power to construct the tunnel at the cost of property benefited, the regrading and repaving of the two blocks at either end of the tunnel cannot be sustained.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1008, 1017; Dec. Dig. § 141.*]

7. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 413*)—STREET IMPROVEMENTS—ASSESSMENTS—POWERS.

Under the charter of the city and county of San Francisco, providing that the expense of any street work may be made chargeable on the district specially benefited, but that all work on accepted streets must be done at the expense of the city and county, the cost of improving an accepted street cannot be charged to private property owners according to frontage or by the special assessment district plan.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1014; Dec. Dig. § 413.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; James M. Trout, Judge.

Action by Louis Gassner against P. H. McCarthy, Mayor of the City and County of San Francisco, and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Olin L. Berry, for appellant. Dorn & Dorn & Savage, amici curiæ. Percy V. Long, City Atty., and Jesse H. Steinhart, Asst. City Atty., for respondents.

SLOSS, J. The purpose of this action is to test the validity of proceedings instituted by the board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco, looking to a change of grade on two blocks of Stockton street in said city, and the construction of a tunnel under two other blocks of said street. The steps taken provide for the assessment of the cost of the proposed work and the damage to be caused thereby upon a district declared to be specially benefited. The plaintiff, an owner of property fronting on Stockton street, within the proposed district, brought this action to enjoin the mayor, the supervisors, and other officers of the city and county from ordering the said proposed work to be done and from taking any further proceedings with reference thereto. A demurrer to the complaint was sustained. The plaintiff declined to amend, and judgment was rendered in favor of the defendants. The plaintiff appeals.

The appellant makes no attack upon the form of the proceedings taken by the board of supervisors or the board of public works. His main contention is that under the charter of the city and county the municipal authorities have no power to assess the cost of the proposed work upon a special assessment district. On the other hand, the respondents do not question the appropriateness of the remedy of injunction, if the city be without power to carry out the contemplated scheme.

Stockton street is a street running north and south. Proceeding southerly, it crosses successively Sacramento, California, Pine, Bush, and Sutter streets. Between these crossings there are great variations of grade; the street rising sharply until it reaches its highest point between Pine and California streets, and then descending to Sutter street. The board of supervisors, upon the recommendation of the board of public works, passed a resolution declaring its intention to change the grade of Stockton street between Sacramento and California streets and between Bush and Sutter streets. This was to be done by lowering the grade of Stockton street at the northerly line of California street 44 feet and establishing it at 117 feet above the city base. The grade at the crossing of Sacramento street was to remain at 128 feet above city base. The grade at the southerly line of Bush street was to be lowered 24 feet and established at 86 feet above city base, and at the crossing of Sutter street was to be left at its existing status of 78 feet above city base. It was further declared to be the intention of the board that Stockton street, between Sacramento and California and between Bush and Sutter streets, be graded and changed to the official grade, and that the two said blocks be regraded, repaved, resewered, and residewalked. The doing of this work would have produced two open cuts running into the northerly and southerly sides, respectively, of the Stockton street hill and separated by a distance of two blocks, i. e., the space between Bush and California streets, and it was proposed to connect these two cuts by a tunnel running through the hill under Stockton street. The resolution in question, accordingly, declared it to be the intention of the board to order Stockton street to be improved by constructing a tunnel thereunder, to a width equal to that of Stockton street, between the southerly line of Bush street and the northerly line of California street, the grade of such tunnel to conform to the foregoing changed grade of Stockton street. It was further declared to be the intention of the board to construct two appropriate stairways in Stockton street between Sutter street and Bush street, leading from the level of Stockton street as changed to Bush street, and to construct similar stairways in Stockton street between California and Sacramento streets. The resolution went on to describe a tract of land constituting a district which was declared to be specially benefited by the proposed work, and provided that the actual cost of performing the work and the damages caused thereby should be assessed upon the said district.

The plaintiff is the owner of a lot on the easterly line of Stockton street between Sutter and Bush streets, a lot which would therefore, if the proposed work be done, face upon the open cut leading to the southerly mouth of the tunnel. It is alleged in the complaint that Stockton street between Sutter and Sacramento streets is an improved and accepted street.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

The question in dispute, i. e., the power of the municipal authorities to impose the cost of the proposed work upon an assessment district, involves an examination of the provisions of the San Francisco charter, upon which the respondents rely for authority to carry out the improvement in the manner declared in the resolution of intention.

[1] It is elementary that "a municipal corporation can exercise only such powers as have been conferred upon it in its charter, or by some general law." Von Schmidt v. Widber, 105 Cal. 151, 157, 38 Pac. 682, 684; Hyatt v. Williams, 148 Cal. 585, 84 Pac. 41; 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. (4th Ed.) §§ 89, 91.

[2] The respondents point, in the first place, to section 1 of chapter 2 of article 2 of the charter, which declares that the board of supervisors shall have power, among other things: "26. To construct or permit the construction of tunnels, under such rules and regulations as the board may prescribe." This is the only reference to tunnels to be found in the charter. It clearly constitutes a grant of authority to construct tunnels, but as clearly does not authorize the board to select any limited area of property within the city and county; and impose the burden of the construction upon the owners of such property.

[3] In the absence of a grant of power to assess the cost of an authorized work upon a special assessment district, the expense of the work must be borne by the municipality as a whole, either out of current revenues or by means of a bond issue. This is, indeed, conceded by the respondents.

[4] They claim, however, that the power to create an assessment district in a case like this is conferred upon the board of supervisors by chapter 6 of article 6 of the charter. Article 6 relates to the department of public works. Chapter 2 of this article is entitled "Improvement of Streets." Its provisions follow, in the main, those of the general street law, commonly known as the "Vrooman Act." Stats. 1885, p. 147. Chapter 6 of article 6 was not a part of the charter as originally framed. It was added by an amendment approved by the Legislature on November 23, 1907. Stats. (Sp. Sess.) 1907, p. 41. Compare sections 38 et seq. of Vrooman Act, incorporated by Stats. 1891, p. 116; 1893, p. 89. By section 1 of this chapter the board of supervisors is "empowered, on the written recommendation of the board of public works, to change or modify the grade of any public street, avenue * * * and to regrade, repave, sewer, sidewalk, curb or otherwise improve the same so as to conform to such change or modified grade in the manner as hereinafter provided. Before any change of grade is attempted, the board of supervisors shall pass a resolution of intention to make such change or modification of grade, and it shall in the same resolution, when regrading, repaving, sidewalk, sewer, curbing or other improvement on such street or streets is contemplated in connection therewith, define and establish the district benefited and to be assessed for the payment of damages and for the expense of regrading, repaving, sewer, sidewalk, curbing, or otherwise improving such street or streets so as to conform with such change or modified grade; and it shall have power at the same time and in the same resolution to provide for the actual cost of performing the work of regrading, repaving, sewer, sidewalk, curbing or otherwise improving such street or streets or portion or portions thereof with the same or other material with which it was formerly graded, paved, sewer, sidewalk, curbed or otherwise improved, briefly describing the work to be done and providing that the cost of the same shall also be assessed upon the same district which is declared to be benefited by such change or modified grade; and it shall have power at the same time and in the same resolution to provide for the actual cost of performing the work of regrading, repaving, sewer, sidewalk, curbing or otherwise improving such street or streets or portion or portions thereof with the same or other material with which it was formerly graded, paved, sewer, sidewalk, curbed or otherwise improved, briefly describing the work to be done and providing that the cost of the same shall also be assessed upon the same district which is declared to be benefited by such change or modified grade. When a change or modification of grade or grades is proposed to be made upon a street, avenue, alley, lane, court or place, which has already been sewer, paved, curbed or graded, no such change or modification of such grade or grades shall be made unless provision shall also be made for the regrading, repaving, recurb or regrading of such street, avenue, alley, lane, court or place. One or more streets or blocks of streets may be embraced in the same resolution. * * *

The respondents claim that, inasmuch as the resolution of intention provides for a change of grade upon two blocks of Stockton street (i. e., from Sutter to Bush and from California to Sacramento streets), the construction of a tunnel under the two intervening blocks (from Bush to California streets) is an exercise of the power to "regrade, repave, sewer, sidewalk, curb or otherwise improve the same so as to conform to such change or modified grade." We think this contention cannot, under any fair interpretation of the language, be maintained. It must be remembered that the resolution of intention does not assume to change the grade of Stockton street in the two blocks through which the tunnel is to run. The change of grade is limited to one block south and one block north of the tunnel. From Bush to California streets the grade of the street is to remain as it has been; that is to say, running over the crest of the hill. The claim of the city is, then, that the section is intended to authorize, as an incident to a change of grade in one block, not only the regrading, etc., of that block, but the improvement of any number of other blocks which have theretofore been brought to an established grade which remains unchanged.

The charter authorizes the board to change the grade of any street, and to regrade, repave, etc., the same so as to conform to such change. The idea underlying this provision evidently is that the raising or lowering of the grade of an improved street may and probably will necessitate the destruction and replacement in whole or in part of the pavement, sewer, sidewalk, or other improvements which had been laid and constructed in accordance with the old grade. The regrading, repaving, etc., is therefore authorized as a part of the proceeding for change of grade. But it can hardly have been contemplated that the necessity for such repaving or regrading would arise with respect to those portions of the street which are not to be brought to a new grade. Certainly it would be a straining of the ordinary meaning of words to say that the regrading, repaving, or other work upon parts of an improved street, the grade of which remained unchanged, was necessary in order to "conform" to a change of grade at some other place. The section, like other provisions of the street law, looks to the ordering or doing of work upon a part less than the entire length of a street. It declares in terms that "one or more streets or blocks of streets may be embraced in the same resolution."

[5] The power to repave, etc., is an incident to the change of grade, and must be limited to the length of the changed grade. When it is proposed to change the grade of two blocks of a street, such two blocks constitute the street, so far as the change of grade and any improvement incidental thereto are concerned. A reading of the section as a whole leaves no doubt in our minds of the correctness of the construction here given. Take, for example, the clause declaring that the board shall provide for the cost of regrading, repaving, etc., "such street or streets or portion or portions thereof with the same or other material with which it was formerly graded, paved * * * or otherwise improved," and the succeeding one to the effect that, when a change of grade is proposed to be made upon a street which has already been improved, no such change of grade shall be made "unless provision shall also be made for resewering, repaving, recurburing or regrading of such street. * * *" This language clearly indicates that the work authorized is the replacement or reconstruction of necessary improvements upon those portions of the street which are to be brought to a new grade, not the original improvement of other portions of the same street.

[6] Under these views, the creation of an assessment district to bear the cost of constructing a tunnel in or under a portion of Stockton street which remains at its old grade is unauthorized. The proposed improvement is an entire scheme and the grading and paving of the two blocks at either end of the tunnel cannot be separated and upheld. In fact, there can be no doubt that the tunnel is the principal object sought, and the change of grade at the adjoining blocks is an incidental thing, undertaken for the purpose of affording approaches to the tunnel. In the effort to bring the project within the terms of the charter, the resolution of intention seeks to make the change of grade on the blocks leading to the tunnel the principal purpose, and the tunnel itself an incident. This is a forced construction of the real nature of the undertaking, and only serves to emphasize the argument that the framers of chapter 6 never contemplated that the burden of what is here sought to be done could be imposed on a special assessment district.

[7] To avoid any misunderstanding, it may be remarked that the provision in chapter 6 is not the only one authorizing the creation of special assessment districts in connection with street improvements. Under section 5 of chapter 2 the expense of any street work or improvement may be made chargeable upon a district found to be specially benefited. But the respondents have not relied upon this section, for the sufficient reason that, under sections 8 and 23 of the same chapter, all work on accepted streets must be done at the expense of the city and county. Stockton street being an accepted street, the cost of improving it in any way authorized by chapter 2 certainly could not be charged to private property owners, whether according to frontage, or by the special assessment district plan. The proceedings are therefore sought to be supported under chapter 6 alone; the contention of the defendants in this regard being that work done under this chapter, in connection with a change of grade, is not subject to the rule declared in chapter 2 exempting private property from the cost of work on accepted streets. Under the construction we have given to chapter 6, it becomes unnecessary to decide whether this contention is sound. For the same reason, we need not consider appellant's point that, under a proper interpretation of section 1 of chapter 6, the words "otherwise improve" are, under the rule of ejusdem generis, to be limited to work of a kind similar to that enumerated in the preceding words, and should therefore be held to exclude the construction of a tunnel. For the purposes of this decision, we have assumed that the wider interpretation urged by respondents is the correct one.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.; MELVIN, J.; HENSHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.

15 Cal. App. 770

TOWN OF RED BLUFF v. WALBRIDGE.
(Civ. 793.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 3, 1911. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court June 2, 1911.)

1. PUBLIC LANDS (§ 114*)—PATENTS—HIGHWAYS.

Land belonging to the United States, on parts of which were persons, who had taken no steps to acquire title from the government, was by some one platted as a town site into blocks, lots, and streets; and while part of one of such streets was fenced in with lots, the Legislature passed an act declaring the streets shown on the plat to be highways. Thereafter Act Cong. July 26, 1866, c. 262, 14 Stat. 251, was enacted, granting rights of way for highways over the public lands, and reserving to the public the use of all highways that were then across or over the land granted. Subsequently, a patent for the platted lands issued to one "in trust for the several use and benefit of the occupants of the town site * * * according to their respective interests." Held that, all the right an occupant had being under the patent, his right was subject to the rights of the public in the highways established by the Legislature, and intended to be recognized by the patent; so that the one who had inclosed with his lots part of the streets took no private right in such part of the streets.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Public Lands, Dec. Dig. § 114.*]

2. PUBLIC LANDS (§ 116*)—PATENTS—TITLE.

The title to land which one derails from the government by patent cannot be questioned, except by one bringing himself within the saving provisions of the patent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Public Lands, Cent. Dig. §§ 323, 325-328; Dec. Dig. § 116.*]

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 657*) — STREETS—LOSS BY NONUSER.

The additional width of a street is not lost merely by the street being opened up and used for part only of its width.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1429; Dec. Dig. § 657.*]

4. HIGHWAYS (§ 71*)—CHANGING WIDTH.

A county surveyor not being authorized to cut down the width of a highway, his direction to one, who had his fence in the highway, to move it back to a certain line, did not have the effect of cutting the highway down to such line, it being, as a matter of fact, still wider.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Highways, Dec. Dig. § 71.*]

5. ADVERSE POSSESSION (§ 8*)—HIGHWAYS.

Title to a public street cannot be acquired by adverse possession except where the public use has been abandoned by competent authority.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Adverse Possession, Cent. Dig. § 45; Dec. Dig. § 8.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Tehama County; John F. Ellison, Judge.

Action by the Town of Red Bluff against E. B. Walbridge. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. Affirmed.

W. P. Johnson, for appellant. McCoy & Gans, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. This is an action to have an encroachment upon a certain street in the town of Red Bluff, Tehama county, declared to be a public nuisance and an unlawful obstruction, and to have the same removed. Plaintiff had judgment, from which and from the order denying his motion for a new trial defendant appeals.

It is averred in the complaint that Washington street, running north and south in said town has a uniform width of 80 feet through its entire length, is now and for many years last past has continuously been one of the regularly and legally established and existing public streets and highways of said town; that defendant is the owner of certain six lots, situated in block 27, as laid down on the official map of said town, on file in the office of the county recorder of said Tehama county, the westerly ends of said lots lying along and being identical with the easterly boundary of said street a distance of 150 feet; that defendant has encroached upon said street and the sidewalk thereof, along the westerly ends of said lots, "by a fence and sheds, to the extent of 9 feet 6½ inches, and he has inclosed and does now inclose such and said portions of said street and sidewalk"; that on February 1, 1909, the board of trustees of said town duly adopted a resolution declaring said encroachment to be a public nuisance, and directed suit to be commenced for its abatement.

Defendant does not deny his inclosure of the said strip of land, but he claims that his lots are not bounded on the west by the westerly line thereof as laid down on said official map, but by "a line parallel to the said west line as shown on said official map and 9 feet and 6½ inches to the west thereof"; denies that said strip of land forms part of said street, and hence he has not encroached thereon; avers that the land described in the complaint is part of a tract granted by the United States by patent dated September 20, 1866, to Warner Earll, judge of the county court of said county, "In trust for the several use and benefit of the occupants of the town site of Red Bluff according to their respective interests, and to his successors and assigns in trust as aforesaid"; that the town of Red Bluff was incorporated in the year 1876, but that said town had existed as an unincorporated town and had comprised the said land for many years prior to its incorporation and for many years prior to the date of said patent; that said strip of land has been inclosed by defendant and his predecessors in interest for more than 50 years last past, and has never at any time been opened, traveled or used as a street or highway; that on March 6, 1868, and for many years prior thereto, there was a substantial frame building in said street as laid down on the official map of said town and bordering upon said strip of land, about 120 feet long and 50 feet wide; that about the year 1873, and prior to the incorporation of said town, the board of supervisors of said county ordered the streets of said town to be opened and the obstructions removed, whereupon defendant's predecessor in interest, the then owner of said strip of land and of said lots and the said building, at great cost to him, moved said building under the direction of the surveyor of said county to a point by him indicated as the east line of said street where said building remained until in 1903 when defendant took down the said building and erected a fence along the west line thereof for its entire length inclosing said strip of land; that ever since said east line of said street had been fixed by said county surveyor, as aforesaid, the said line has been acquiesced in as the east line of said street until the commencement of this action; that plaintiff is estopped from claiming that said strip of land as a part of said street and that the action is barred by section 318 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The cause was tried by the court, without a jury, and it made findings as follows: (1) That all the allegations of the complaint are true; (2) that the strip of land in question is of dimensions as averred by both parties; (3) that the cause of action is not barred by section 318, Code of Civil Procedure; (4) that the land described in the complaint was granted to Warner Earil as alleged in the answer; (5) that the said town was incorporated in 1876 as alleged and, prior thereto, for many years, existed as an unincorporated town; (6) that said strip of land has not been inclosed by defendant and his predecessors in interest for more than 50 years last past, nor longer than since the year 1865; "said described land has been inclosed since the year 1856, but not by said defendant or his predecessors in interest"; (7) that said strip of land has never at any time been opened or traveled or used as a street; (8) that neither on March 6, 1868, nor for any time prior thereto was there a substantial frame building in said street as said street is laid down on the official map of said town; that some time after July 6, 1868, one H. C. Curry erected a barn and shed in said street as so laid down on said map and bordering on said strip of land and of the dimensions alleged; (9) that about 1873 and before said town was incorporated, and while the streets thereof were under the control of the board of supervisors of said county, the said board ordered the streets opened and the obstructions removed; (10) that the predecessor in interest of defendant and the then owner of the said lots and the said building, after said order was given and made and about 1873 and in consequence thereof, moved said building upon the said lots and upon the strip of land; "that at said time the said predecessor in interest of the defendant was not the owner of said strip of land;" (11) that after said removal of said building and until about 1903, when defendant took down said building, the west line of said building formed the west line of said strip of land for a distance of 120 feet, being the entire length of said building, and when so taken down defendant built a fence along the west side of said strip; (12) that said building was not removed at great expense or at any expense greater than one hundred dollars; (13) that the line to which said building was removed "has not been acquiesced in as the east line of said Washington street"; (14) that plaintiff is not estopped from claiming that said strip of land is a part of said street. With the pleadings before us and the findings thus given, which latter seem to have support in the evidence, the opinion rendered by the learned trial judge, brought to our attention by respondent, clearly and as succinctly as the questions raised may readily be disposed of, covers the principal points involved in the case. It is as follows:

"The plaintiff has brought this action to have removed a fence which it claims is an encroachment upon a part of Washington street, in the plaintiff town and an obstruction to said street. The case as made up and presented may be stated in narrative form in such manner as to present the controlling features of the situation and make apparent the grounds of the conclusions I have reached.

"In 1853 the land embraced in the present town site of Red Bluff was public land of the United States. Some parts of it were occupied by settlers, but it was simply a small village. In that year one Gillette made a map of the town of Red Bluff, showing streets, alleys, blocks and lots. The blocks were represented as being 300 feet long by 250 feet wide, with an alley extending through them from about north to south 20 feet wide. The lots were all marked as having a frontage of 25 feet and a depth of 115 feet. Upon this map appeared, among others, a street marked Washington street, of a uniform width of 80 feet, extending through the whole length of the town from about north to south. This map showed, among others, a block numbered 27, bounded on the east by Main street, on the north by Hickory street, on the west by Washington street, and on the south by Walnut street. The map showed this block to be divided into 24 lots, each 25 feet wide by 115 feet deep. Lots 1 to 12 (inclusive) face on Main street and lots 13 to 24 (inclusive) face on Washington street. The evidence does not show for whom nor by what authority Gillette made this map. It was filed in Book A of Patents some time in the year 1859.

"The property in controversy in this action is a strip 9 feet 6½ inches wide by 150 feet long, lying along and west of the west end of lots 19 to 24, inclusive, in said block 27, the whole thereof being in Washington street as said street appears on the Gillette map. At the time the Gillette map was made in 1853, the west half of block 27 was vacant, unfenced, and unimproved land, with a growth of chapparal upon it. In 1856 the west half of the block was inclosed by a fence, which fence extended out into Washington street, as said street was shown on the Gillette map, a distance of about 34 feet. It does not appear who put this fence along that part of the block west of lots 19 to 24.

"On April 30, 1860, the Legislature of the state of California passed an act as follows: 'That all streets and alleys in the town of Red Bluff, as described on the plat of the said town, are hereby declared to be highways.' [St. 1860, c. 355.] The evidence shows that at that time no plat of the town had been made other than the Gillette map, and I conclude that this act referred to that plat.

"On the 20th day of February, 1861, Lucien B. Healey, county surveyor of Tehama county, made and filed a map of the town of Red Bluff, in the county recorder's office of Tehama county. This map refers to the Gillette map and states that blocks numbered 1 to 48, inclusive, except blocks 16, 19, 15, 6 and 7, are shown on this map as they appear on the Gillette map. Upon the Healey map, Washington street is shown as 80 feet wide its whole length, and the lots in block 27 are shown as 25 feet front by 115 feet deep, the same as on the Gillette map.

"On the 23d day of March, 1861, an act of the Legislature was passed which provided: 'The plat of the town of Red Bluff, as made by L. B. Healey, Feby. 20th, 1861, is hereby declared to be the official map of said town, and in all questions arising as to the size or locality of the streets, alleys, blocks and lots, said plat shall be evidence of such size and locality.' [St. 1861, c. 92.]

"On the 20th day of September, 1866, a patent was issued by the United States to Warner Earll, county judge of Tehama county, California, conveying to him the town site of Red Bluff (which patent embraced all the lands shown upon both of the maps above referred to), 'in trust for the several use and benefit of the occupants of the said town site.'

"In 1868 the Legislature of the state of California passed an act providing a method for the giving of titles to the lots in the town to the occupants thereof. Section 15 of said act provided: 'In all proceedings under this act, the blocks and lots when mentioned shall be designated with reference to the official plat of the said town.' Section 16 provided: 'The town plat or map filed in the county recorder's office on the 20th day of Feby. 1861, shall be the official map or plat of said town and all the streets, alleys and public squares as designated upon the said plat or map are hereby dedicated to public use.' Section 17 provided: 'When there have been brick or other substantial buildings erected, not in exact accordance with the said official map, the owner or owners of such buildings shall be entitled to the land upon which said building shall stand.' [St. 1867-68, c. 129.]

"The first deed to the lots 19 to 24, inclusive, that appears is one dated March 23, 1861, by which one William Peyton deeds

them to William Cook. There is no evidence to show that Cook ever deeded them to any one. The next deed appearing is a deed from Joseph Smith, sheriff, to one Hollister, dated February 3, 1865, conveying to him all the interest of W. T. Brooks, J. N. Williams, and Alpheus Bull in and to the lots. It does not appear how or when or from whom these three acquired an interest in the property. Hollister conveyed to Curry and Nicholson, March 11, 1868. July 1, 1868, Curry obtained from the county judge a certificate of title to the lots, and his title by mesne conveyances came regularly down until it vested in the defendant. No one has ever acquired any record title to the strip in dispute, either from the general government or from the county judge. The evidence shows that the strip in dispute was inclosed along with the adjoining lots in 1856, and has been inclosed ever since and during all that time has been used as a corral. Some time after March 11, 1868, H. C. Curry, the then occupant of the lots 19 to 24, inclusive, built a feed shed about 25 feet wide along the whole length of the west end of the lots, except about 30 feet at the south end thereof. This shed was out in Washington street about 25 feet west of the present fence of the defendant. Some time between 1870 and 1875 this shed was moved in, so that its west line was on a line with where the defendant's fence now stands and remained there until after 1899, when it being old and rotten, was torn down and a fence—the present fence built along where the west line of the shed had stood.

"From the foregoing I think the situation may be fairly stated as follows: In 1860, when the Legislature passed the act declaring all streets shown on the plat of the town of Red Bluff then on file to be public highways, all the lands in Red Bluff were public lands of the United States and subject to disposal by it to any person, in any manner and on any terms it saw fit to impose. It is true there were parts of the town site in the possession of individuals, but they had no title or interest in the land other than such as their mere possession gave them. But none of them, so far as the evidence shows, had taken any steps to acquire title from the United States government under any of its laws providing for the disposal of government lands. At that time there were two maps on file showing Washington street to be a street 80 feet wide, one the Gillette map, made in 1853, and one the Healey map, made in 1861. The act of 1860 declared all streets on the Gillette map to be public highways and the act of 1861 declared all streets shown on the Healey map to be public highways.

"In 1866 the land embraced in the town site of Red Bluff was deeded to the county judge 'in trust for the several use and benefit of the occupants thereof.' It must be apparent to any one, I think, that the federal government, in deeding the town site to the county judge, did not intend to give to any private individual an equitable or any kind of a title to those parts of the town site that were then legally constituted public highways. It intended that all public highways thereon at the time of the patent should remain public highways until abandoned by some competent authority and that the other parts of the town site should, under appropriate regulations to be prescribed by the Legislature, be deeded to those who were bona fide occupants at the date of the patent. So this necessarily brings us to a consideration of the question: Was Washington street, at the date of the patent, a public highway, 80 feet wide where it passes along west of block 27?

"I think it beyond question that the Legislature had power, by the acts of 1860 and 1861, to create Washington street a public highway, if in so doing it did not take any private property. As against the federal government it could not perhaps make a public highway over its lands without its consent or acquiescence, but the federal government is not complaining and its policy has always been to encourage the building of highways over the public domain, thereby facilitating its settlement and use, and this policy was crystallized into a statute passed on the 26th day of July, 1866, which was as follows: 'The right of way for the construction of highways over the public lands, not reserved for public use is hereby granted.' [Act July 26, 1866, c. 262, § 8, 14 Stat. 253.] Was the strip of land in question public land of the United States when the acts of 1860 and 1861 were passed? Did any individual have such an interest therein that the state could not put a public highway over it without the consent of the occupant or by bringing condemnation proceedings? The evidence shows that at the date of those acts the strip was inclosed by a fence, by whom built does not appear. There is no evidence to show that the occupant, whoever he was, had taken any steps to acquire title from the general government.

"In Wells v. Pennington [2 S. D. 1, 48 N. W. 305] 39 Am. St. Rep. 764, it is said: 'Settlement on the public lands of the United States confers no rights against the government or its grantees. The settler acquires no vested interest in the land until he has entered the same at the proper land office and obtained a certificate of entry. Until then the land continues subject to the absolute disposing power of the Congress.' In the case of Campbell v. Wade, 132 U. S. 35 [10 Sup. Ct. 9, 33 L. Ed. 240], Justice Field says: 'It has always been held that occupation and improvements of the tracts desired, with a view to pre-emption, though absolutely essential for that purpose, do not confer upon the settler any right in the land occupied as against the United States which could impair in any respect the power of Congress to withdraw the land from sale for the uses of the government or to dispose of the same to other parties.' In Smith v. Mitchell [21 Wash. 536, 58 Pac. 667] 75 Am. St. Rep. 858, it is said: 'The act of Congress already referred to does not make any distinction as to the methods recognized by law for the establishment of highways.' And in that case it was held that where travel had begun over a piece of land while it was held as a pre-emption claim, such travel created a highway, and when the patent issued to the patentee he took the land subject to the highway on it.

"In Labish v. Hardy, 77 Cal. 329 [19 Pac. 531], it appeared that a man and his wife went into possession of a piece of land that was or became a part of the town site of the city of Santa Cruz. The wife died before the act was passed providing for the disposition of the lots and the husband continued to live thereon and procured title. The question arose as to what rights the heirs of his wife had in the lots by reason of her occupancy, the law as to the general rights of the wife in the property of herself and husband being then somewhat different from what it is now. In deciding that the wife by her occupancy acquired no rights in the property that descended to her heirs, the court said: 'We are unaware of any law under which a bare occupancy of any public lands of the United States vests in the occupant any rights or equities in the land occupied. We think no property was acquired in the premises in controversy by either parent of the appellants prior to the passage of the act of Congress of July 23, 1866' [chapter 211, 14 Stat. 209] (being the act providing for the disposition of the lots in the town). See McLaughlin v. Monetti, 89 Cal. 363 [26 Pac. 880], for an instructive discussion of the term 'lawful claim to government land' and of the words 'bona fide settler.' 'We think that they (the words "bona fide settler") must refer to one who has done something more than merely occupy land and put a few improvements on it. It cannot be said that every one who enters upon land and builds a fence and cabin or a house is a bona fide settler.'

[1] "From the foregoing decisions, and in view of the general policy of the federal government to encourage the establishment of highways upon the public lands, I conclude that the party in possession of this strip of land in 1860 and 1861 did not have such an estate or interest in the land as precluded the Legislature, by an act passed, from establishing a highway over it and that a highway 80 feet wide was legally established in 1860 and 1861 by the acts of the Legislature, and that Washington street being a legally established highway at the date of the patent, the patent conveyed the land subject to the right of way for a highway thereon. The grant from the United States to Warner Earll of the town site in trust was a grant to him of the lots in trust for the occupants thereof and of the lands covered by the legally established highways to the use of the public. The patent was dated the 20th day of September, 1866. The act of Congress granting rights of way for highways over the public lands of the United States was passed July 26, 1866. The above act reserved to the public the use of all highways that were then across or over the land granted. 'We are of the opinion, therefore, that all persons acquiring any portions of the public lands, after the passage of the act in question, took the same subject to the right of way conferred by it for the proposed road.' St. Joe v. Baldwin, 103 U. S. 426 [26 L. Ed. 578], cited in Okanogan County v. Cheetham [37 Wash. 682, 80 Pac. 262] 70 L. R. A. 1030. See Doran v. C. B. Co., 24 Cal. 256. The lands embraced in the patent had been platted into streets, blocks, and alleys as early as 1853, and the plat filed in 1859. Another plat had been filed in 1861, which so far as the property in question is concerned, was a copy of the plat of 1853. Both of these plats were declared official by acts of the Legislature, and the streets shown thereon declared to be public highways. The patent to the county judge vested an equitable interest in the lots in those who were in possession thereof on the 20th day of September, 1866 (Eversden v. Mayhew, 65 Cal. 163 [3 Pac. 641]), and those who were in possession before that time and for any reason had ceased to be occupants on that day had no interest in the lots, legal or equitable. Labish v. Hardy, 77 Cal. 329 [19 Pac. 531]. Prior to the date of the patent, the government of the United States had full authority to ignore all claims of those who were or had been in possession, and to convey the land to any one it chose and upon any terms it wanted to. So I think it must be held that whatever rights or equities the occupants ever obtained in and to any part of the town site they obtained by virtue of the patent and not by reason of anything that had transpired before that time. But for the patent recognizing their possession and granting them certain rights by reason thereof, their occupancy would have been of no avail and would not have conferred any interest in the property occupied. The patent was in trust for the several use and benefit of the occupants of the town site. The use and benefit of the occupants of the town site necessarily required streets and alleys to be maintained so that travel could be had from one part to another. 'The grant of the lots by Congress to the occupants according to their respective rights necessarily recognized the existence of streets and alleys as then laid out and used, and such grant was a dedication of them to the public.' 'Disposing of the land covered by the town site to the occupants according to their several rights and interests could not be done except that the streets and alleys thereon for public use were reserved to the public.' Parchen v. Ashby [5 Mont. 68] 1 Pac. 204. From this I conclude that, the land being the property of the government at the time of the patent and no person having any such rights in any part of it as would preclude the government from disposing of it as it saw fit, it had a clear right to sell it in view of the situation as to the streets and alleys and of the highways established by the acts of the Legislature of the state, and that the patent was intended to vest in the public the use of the highways then existing.

"It must be borne in mind that the Legislature in passing an act to dispose of the lots to the occupants, redeclared the streets and alleys, as they appeared on existing maps, to be public highways. It did not attempt to make a new map or to change any of the streets as to location or size, but adopted a condition that had existed ever since 1853. This observation is in answer to many of the cases cited where the Legislature, after the execution of the patent in trust, undertook, by making a new map and survey, to change and affect the rights of occupants as they were at the date of the patent.

"There is another view of the case that may be taken. The plats of the town, showing streets and blocks, were filed in 1859 and 1861. In 1860 and 1861 the Legislature passed acts declaring those streets of the width shown on the maps to be public highways. The evidence does not show that the defendant or any one of his predecessors in title were in possession of the strip in dispute at that time. The defendant's chain of title only runs back to a deed from the sheriff of the county to one Hollister in 1865. One William Cook obtained a deed from William Peyton, March 23, 1861, but there is nothing to connect Cook with the defendant. So it must be held that the defendant's grantors went into possession of the strip of land after the plats of the town had been filed and after the Legislature had declared the street to be a public highway 80 feet wide. In Aleman v. City of Petaluma, 38 Cal. 559, it is said: 'If the land in contest was a part of one of the streets of Petaluma as laid down on the plan of the town when the occupation of the plaintiff's grantors began, his occupation was not bona fide within the meaning of the act of Congress of March 1, 1867 [chapter 143, 14 Stat. 418], and the plaintiff cannot recover.' In Jones v. City of Petaluma, 36 Cal. 237, it is said: 'The effect of the act of July 1, 1864 (so-called "Town Site Act," 13 Stat. of Congress, 1864, c. 205, p. 343), was to withdraw land upon which cities and towns had been established before the passage of the act, or might be established thereafter, from the operation of the general statutes relating to the disposal of the public lands, and to provide a different system in some respects for their disposal. The former system was inapplicable to such cases, and would have worked much mischief. Accordingly some plan was needed by which towns and cities already established could be secured in the privileges which the former had usurped and the latter needed. The act of July 1st was the result. Its result was to confirm the usurpations of the past and to provide a lawful mode for the acquisition of such privileges in the future. Its effect was to ratify and confirm the use to which the land had been put by cities and towns for the purpose of streets and squares and alleys and to permit such use in the future by providing for the sale of lots only. It was a dedication to the public of so much of the public land as had theretofore been appropriated to streets and squares and alleys, and a license for a like appropriation in the future. Such being the object and effect of the statute, if the land in question was public land (and by public land we mean land to which no private rights had attached at the time the steps in question were taken) we are unable to see why the city of Petaluma did not acquire a right to it as a public square. If so the plaintiff could not thereafter, while it so remained, acquire a bona fide occupation, within the meaning of the act of 1867 which obviously refers only to lands in lots and not to lands in streets and alleys. While the act above considered was not the act under which the town site of Red Bluff was secured, its general subject and purpose were the same and the decision seems to me to be very much in point.

"From all this I conclude that Washington street is a legally constituted public highway, 80 feet wide, and that the defendant has shown no legal justification for putting or maintaining any obstruction in any part of it, and that the city has the legal right to have the obstructions removed so that the public may have the free use of all of it for travel and other municipal purposes. Findings and decree will be drawn in accordance herewith."

[2] Appellant contends that, as title to the town site starts with the government, the burden was on plaintiff to connect itself with that title, which it has not done except by dedication, and this could not be accomplished as against the government by the Legislature. We think the learned trial judge showed, by the legislative history relating to the land, by the filing of plats of the town, as early as in 1859 and 1861, designating the streets, alleys and lots, as they have ever since existed, and by the Earll patent, which issued subsequently to the act of Congress expressly granting right of way over public lands not reserved for public use (Act July 26, 1866, c. 262, 14 Stat. 251), sufficient, at least, to make a prima facie case, and to cast the burden upon defendant to bring himself, through some predecessor in interest, within the trust clause of the patent, and to show that such predecessor was an "occupant" of the disputed land, such as was contemplated by the patent. This defendant failed to do. He does not, as the court found, connect himself with any title prior to the issuing of the patent. A sheriff's deed was introduced to show a conveyance to one Hollister in 1865 and by Hollister to H. C. Curry, from whom defendant derains title. But the sheriff's deed to Hollister and his to Curry refer to the lots and block as designated on the official plat and lend no support to the claim of occupancy of the strip in controversy. Plaintiff was not called upon to show occupancy of the street for highway purposes in order to show title. Its title is deraigned from the government, and it could not be questioned except by some one bringing himself within the saving provisions of the Earll patent. There is no evidence connecting Hollister's title with the government or to show that he conveyed this strip of land or intended to convey it, and it does not appear very clearly who first erected the obstruction in Washington street. Hollister conveyed to Curry May 11, 1868, and Curry's title is connected with the Earll patent by certificate of the successor to Earll and is dated July 6, 1868. It recites the provisions of the patent, also that it is issued in conformity with the acts of Congress and of the Legislature, and grants "the following property described according to the official plat of said town as lots," etc., naming the said lots. It appears that at this time the obstruction now complained of existed and Curry was using the shed and building on the said strip, but if he claimed it as an occupant by virtue of the provisions of the patent, it was his duty to have made known his claim to the county judge when he applied for the lots and to have had his certificate issue in conformity with his claim and proofs. In our opinion, he took nothing by his certificate of title beyond the boundaries of the lots as laid down on the official plat of the town.

[3] The evidence was that the street was used in its entire length but was never opened and used for its full width, and defendant claims that by nonuser plaintiff lost its right to any greater use than had been given the street. The plaintiff having acquired a right to an 80-foot street, such right was not lost because only part of this width was in fact used. Even where the right is by dedication, "the sale of lots," says Mr. Elliott, "with reference to the plat fixes the private rights of purchasers." Elliott on Roads, § 118, 2d Ed. It often happens that in towns and cities there may be streets only partially improved and used, or used not at all, for a long period, but the public does not necessarily thereby lose its right to such streets. Meier v. Portland, etc., Co., 16 Or. 500, 19 Pac. 610, 1 L. R. A. 856; Beall, Road Commissioner, v. Weir, 11 Cal. App. 364, 105 Pac. 133. The evidence does not support defendant's contention that the public and plaintiff acquiesced in the occupation of the street by defendant and are estopped now to claim the full width for the street. Even defendant was ignorant of the fact that his inclosure extended into the street. He testified: "I had no idea when I bought the property that there was inclosed there between the alley and the east line of Washington street more than the regular 115 feet." The court refused to allow defendant to prove that similar conditions existed at some other points on this street. We cannot see that the inquiry was material.

[4] Defendant offered witnesses to show that the county surveyor, pursuant to the order of the supervisors to remove all obstructions from the streets, indicated the line to which the obstructions were to be removed and that this line was the same as the west line of the strip now in controversy. In ruling, the court said: "I still adhere to my original proposition, Mr. Johnson, that if you can prove that that property, at the date of the patent, was in the occupancy of somebody you will have a right to do it. If it is a matter of fact that there was a street there 80 feet wide, Mr. Shackelford (the county surveyor) had no authority to cut it down to 60 by anything he might do." In this view of the matter we concur. In point of fact, the order of the board of supervisors was that the roadmaster open the streets and alleys. No authority is shown to have been given to Shackelford.

Other assignments of error do not seem to present any point not disposed of.

[5] The claim that the action is barred by section 318, Code of Civil Procedure, is based on the assumption that "the land inclosed by the defendant never was a street, and that defendant has been in possession of said strip of land for about 10 years immediately preceding the commencement of the action, claiming to be the owner adversely to the whole world." The first premise is not supported by the evidence. The land inclosed was part of a street. Upon the other ground, suffice it to say that title to a public street cannot be acquired by adverse use. See subject fully considered in People v. Kerber, 152 Cal. 731, 93 Pac. 878. This is the rule, in general, and ceases to operate only where the public use is abandoned by competent authority and the land is held as proprietary property. Id.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: HART, J.; BURNETT, J.

16 Cal. App. 37

HAWLEY v. LOS ANGELES CREAMERY CO. et al. (Civ. 907.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. April 17, 1911.)

JUDGMENT (§ 256*)—CONFORMITY TO FINDINGS—PARTIES AGAINST WHOM JUDGMENT MAY BE RENDERED.

In an action by a driver of a milk wagon for personal injuries, there were findings that the defendant companies held out to the public, and to plaintiff as an employé of one of the companies, that the appellant company was operating as a branch of the other defendant, and that the employés of the other defendant were also the employés of the appellant company, and that at the time of plaintiff's injury the appellant company did not operate a milk delivery system, but was the owner of the lot on which the other defendant maintained a dairy plant under lease and later under purchase from the appellant company; that plaintiff was employed by the other defendant; that his horses and harness were furnished by that defendant, and that plaintiff's complaint as to the unsafe condition of the harness was made to that defendant; and that there was no secret understanding between appellant and the other defendant by which plaintiff was deceived as to which company was his employer. Held, that the judgment against appellant was not sustained by the findings.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 446-454; Dec. Dig. § 256.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; George E. Church, Judge.

Action by Ray Hawley against the Los Angeles Creamery Company and the Belle Vernon Farms Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant the Belle Vernon Farms Company appeals. Reversed.

M. E. C. Munday, for appellant. J. Vincent Hannon, Hannon & McCormick, for respondent.

JAMES, J. Plaintiff was awarded a judgment for the sum of $3,750 against defendants. His cause of action as set out in the complaint was for damages alleged to have been sustained through the negligent act of said defendants. This appeal is taken by the Belle Vernon Farms Company from the judgment, and also from an order denying its motion for a new trial.

Plaintiff was employed to drive a milk delivery wagon. On the 13th day of February, 1908, the team driven by him became unmanageable and ran away, throwing plaintiff from the wagon, and causing his foot to be caught and crushed under the hind wheel thereof. In plaintiff's complaint it is alleged that the horses furnished to him to drive on the milk delivery wagon were wild and unbroken, and that the harness which he was required to use was worn, weak, and unsafe; that he had called the attention of his employers to the unsafe condition of the harness and requested that they furnish him with a good and safe set to be used upon the horses, but that his request had not been heeded; that portions of the harness broke, whereupon the team was caused to run away, and plaintiff was injured as before stated.

It is the contention of appellant that there was no evidence tending to show any liability on its part for any of the alleged damage caused to plaintiff. It is also urged that upon the facts as found by the court no judgment should have been rendered against appellant.

[1] The trial court found that at all of the times mentioned in the complaint of plaintiff defendants had represented and held out to the public and to the employés of the Los Angeles Creamery Company, including the plaintiff, that the Belle Vernon Farms Company was operating with and as a branch of the Los Angeles Creamery Company in carrying on and conducting a general dairy business, and "that the said employés working at and from the said Belle Vernon Farms Company plant were under the employ of the said Belle Vernon Farms Company operating as aforesaid as a branch of the said Los Angeles Creamery Company." This further finding follows: "That during said time the said Belle Vernon Farms Company did not carry on or conduct such dairy business in the said city of Los Angeles, nor did it maintain, operate, or conduct as incidental to such business, or at all, any delivery system for the purpose of selling or delivering milk, or other dairy products, in the said city of Los Angeles, but at all times mentioned in said complaint owned the land and buildings in the said city of Los Angeles upon which was situated a dairy plant known as the Belle Vernon Farms Company plant, and which said land and buildings were during all of said time held under lease by the said defendant, Los Angeles Creamery Company, a corporation, and on or about the 1st day of January, 1907, the said Los Angeles Creamery Company purchased and took over from the said Belle Vernon Farms Company all wagons, teams, harness, and other appliances of a milk delivery system and the Los Angeles Creamery Company at all times mentioned in said complaint operated such Belle Vernon Farms Company plant as a part of its dairy system in the said city of Los Angeles." The court then found specifically that plaintiff was employed by the Los Angeles Creamery Company as a driver and deliveryman on one of its wagons, and that he was continuously employed by said Los Angeles Creamery Company from the 15th day of October, 1907, up to and including the 13th day of February, 1908, during which period he suffered the injuries complained of. The court also found that the horses and harness furnished to plaintiff to drive were furnished by the Los Angeles Creamery Company, and that the complaint made by plaintiff of the unsafe condition of the harness being used by him was made to the manager of the Los Angeles Creamery Company. No liability for damages against the Belle Vernon Farms Company can be predicated upon these findings of fact. It is nowhere found that through any secret understanding between the Los Angeles Creamery Company and the Belle Vernon Farms Company, or any concealment of any sort, plaintiff was deceived as to which of the defendants he was being employed by, nor as to which had furnished him with the horses and harness for use on the delivery wagon. On the other hand, it is expressly found, not only that his employment was with the Los Angeles Creamery Company, but that, if there was any negligence on the part of either company in furnishing unsafe horses or harness, it was the negligence of the Los Angeles Creamery Company, and not the negligence of the Belle Vernon Farms Company. The finding that the Belle Vernon Farms Company held out to the public and to plaintiff that it was operating with the Los Angeles Creamery Company, or as a branch thereof, becomes immaterial in the face of the other findings referred to. The judgment against the Belle Vernon Farms Company is therefore clearly not sustained by the findings.

As the judgment must be reversed, it will be unnecessary to consider the question of the insufficiency of the evidence as presented by appellant on its motion for a new trial.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; SHAW, J.

16 Cal. App. 50

HAWLEY v. LOS ANGELES CREAMERY CO. et al. (Civ. 911.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. April 18, 1911. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court June 16, 1911.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT (§§ 101, 102*)—APPLIANCES FOR WORK—DUTY OF MASTER.

An employer is bound to furnish his employé with reasonably safe appliances to perform the work for which they are designed, and to keep them in repair.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 180-184; Dec. Dig. §§ 101, 102.*]

2. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 221*)—ASSUMPTION OF RISK—PROMISE TO REPAIR DEFECT—DURATION OF CONTINUANCE IN EMPLOYMENT.

Civ. Code, § 1970, provides, in effect, that a servant having knowledge of the unsafe character of appliances used by him shall be barred of recovery, if thereafter, with knowledge and appreciation of the danger incident thereto, he continues in the use thereof, but when the master, through a vice principal, has expressly promised to repair a defect, the servant can recover for an injury caused thereby within such period of time after the promise as it would be reasonable to allow for its performance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 638-647; Dec. Dig. § 221.*]

3. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 288*)—ACTION FOR INJURIES—QUESTION FOR JURY—CONTINUANCE IN WORK WITH KNOWLEDGE OF DEFECT.

The question whether a servant continues his employment with knowledge of a defect in an appliance used by him after the lapse of a reasonable time within which the master might perform his promise to repair the defect is one of fact for the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 1068-1088; Dec. Dig. § 288.*]

4. MASTER AND SERVANT (§§ 278, 280*)—ACTION FOR INJURIES—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE—NEGLIGENCE OF MASTER—ASSUMPTION OF RISK.

Evidence in an action by a servant for personal injuries caused by a defect in a harness which he was using after the employer had promised to repair a defect therein held to support a finding of the employer's negligence, and that plaintiff did not assume the risk incident to the use of the defective harness for 10 or 12 days after the promise to repair.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 954-972, 981-986; Dec. Dig. §§ 278, 280.*]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1058*)—ACTION FOR INJURIES—EVIDENCE—RULES AND ORDERS.

In an action by a servant for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by a defective harness furnished for his use by defendant, the exclusion of the existence of a rule of defendant requiring reports as to defective appliances to be made to a certain employé is not prejudicially erroneous, where there was evidence tending to show that such a report was in fact made, and that plaintiff was referred by him to the company's manager, to whom also report of the defect was made.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4200-4206; Dec. Dig. § 1058.*]

6. CONTINUANCE (§ 22*)—ABSENCE OF WITNESS.

Where defendant knew before trial that a witness subpoenaed by him was absent, probably from the state, and that counsel had suspicions that he would not be present at the trial, and where the matter sought to be proved by the witness was cumulative, the trial court was justified in denying a continuance on the ground of the witness' absence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Continuance, Cent. Dig. §§ 58-67; Dec. Dig. § 22.*]

7. NEW TRIAL (§ 108*)—DISCRETION OF LOWER COURT—NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE.

Where the evidence presented in affidavits for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence was that of the president of defendant company, who was present during most of the trial and who remained silent until after the trial and then disclosed his information to the manager of the company, and where the trial court, in denying the motion for new trial, necessarily determined whether such evidence, had it been introduced, would have changed the decision, its denial of a new trial was not an abuse of its discretion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 226, 227; Dec. Dig. § 108.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; George E. Church, Judge.

Action by Ray Hawley against the Los Angeles Creamery Company and the Belle Vernon Farms Company. From the judgment for plaintiff defendant the Los Angeles Creamery Company appeals. Affirmed.

Hatch & Lloyd, for appellant. J. Vincent Hannon and Hannon & McCormick, for respondent.

ALLEN, P. J. This appeal is by the Los Angeles Creamery Company alone, from a judgment and from an order denying a new trial.

The action was for damages on account of personal injuries. The bill of exceptions presents evidence tending to show the following facts: Plaintiff was employed by appellant as a driver of a milk wagon. During the existence of such employment and a few days prior to and upon February 1, 1908, plaintiff notified appellant's manager, with whom he had made his contract of employment, that the lines furnished by appellant for use in guiding and checking the team of horses used in drawing such milk wagon were defective, and that unless they were made safe, or a new set furnished, plaintiff would quit work. The manager promised plaintiff that he would "take care of such lines" for plaintiff; that "we will fix you up all right." Relying upon such promises, plaintiff continued his work for the 10 or 12 days succeeding. On February 13th plaintiff made an effort to check the team through the use of the lines, when the same parted at the place where their weakness was evident and with reference to which complaint had been made. The team thereupon become unmanageable, and plaintiff was thrown with his left foot under a wheel in such manner as to cause serious and permanent injuries. Appellant did not fulfill its promise of seeing to the safety of the appliances in any way. By reason of said injuries plaintiff was confined to his bed for several days under a physician's care, and until about March 1st, when he was able to undertake and perform the work of collecting for appellant, which he did with the assistance of his wife, and continued in such work of collection until August 1st, although much of the time he was unable to work. On the last-named date, his injuries becoming more aggravated, he ceased work, and has ever since suffered from such injuries. This action was commenced in November, 1908. The trial court found the facts as above stated, found that the creamery company was negligent in not providing suitable and proper appliances for the work incident to plaintiff's employment, and that plaintiff was without fault.

[1] Appellant's principal contention is that plaintiff could have fixed, and it was his duty to fix, the lines so as to render them safe, and that continuing in their use for the period of 12 days, or thereabouts, with knowledge of their unsafe condition, he assumed the risk of working with such defective appliances. Section 1970, Civil Code, provides, in effect, that a servant having knowledge of the unsafe character of appliances by him used shall be barred of recovery, if thereafter, with such knowledge, and, understanding, comprehending, and appreciating the danger incident thereto, he consents to or continues in the use thereof. This must be accepted as the law of this state, notwithstanding the rule that an employer is bound to furnish his employé with reasonably safe appliances to perform the work for which they are designed and to keep them in repair.

[2] When, however, as in this case, the master, through a vice principal, has expressly promised to repair a defect, the servant can recover for the injury caused thereby within such period of time after the promise as it would be reasonable to allow for its performance and, as said by the Supreme Court of the United States in Hough v. Railroad Co., 100 U. S. 224, 25 L. Ed. 612, "as we think for an injury suffered within any period which would not preclude all reasonable expectation that the promise might be kept." In Martin v. California Cent. Ry. Co., 94 Cal. 331, 29 Pac. 646, it is said that: "The plaintiff had a right to go to the jury on the question whether he was, under the circumstances, justified in going on with his work." And again in Rothenberger v. Northwestern Milling Co., 57 Minn. 461, 59 N. W. 531: "It is sufficient if it appears that the servant was induced to remain in the master's service by reason of the promise to repair and that he had no intention of waiving his objection to the defect of which he complained."

[3] The question, then, as to whether plaintiff in the case under consideration continued his employment after the lapse of a reasonable time within which the master might fulfill his promise is one of fact.

[4] That matter the court determined adversely to appellant, and we are not prepared to say that the evidence did not support the finding of defendant's negligence, and that plaintiff did not assume all of the risk of his employment, which, of course, must be taken as including the risk incident to the use of the defective appliances for a limited period and after the promise to repair.

[5] We see no prejudicial error in excluding evidence of the existence of a rule of the creamery company requiring reports as to the defective condition of appliances to be made to the barn man. There was evidence tending to show that such report was in fact made to such barn man, who referred plaintiff to the manager, to whom complaint was in fact made. The knowledge imparted to the manager was knowledge to appellant, whether it came through a rule or otherwise.

[6] We see no error in the action of the court in refusing during the progress of the trial to continue the same because a witness regularly subpoenaed by appellant did not respond when called. It sufficiently appears that appellant's counsel knew before entering upon the trial that the witness was absent, probably from the state, and that counsel "had suspicions" that he would not be present at the trial. In addition, the matter sought to be proven by the witness was cumulative, and, under all the circumstances furnished by the record, we think the court justified in denying the continuance.

[7] Neither do we see any error in the order of the court refusing a new trial on account of newly discovered evidence. This evidence, as presented to the court through affidavits, was that of the president of the creamery company, who was present during most of the trial, and it is fair to assume that, if the plaintiff upon the witness stand made statements contrary to those theretofore narrated to the president, he had full knowledge of their importance, and his relations to appellant were such as required him to act promptly if he desired to contradict such statements of the plaintiff. The president, however, remained silent until after the trial, and then disclosed his information to the manager of the company. Aside from any other question connected with this motion for a new trial, it became the duty of the trial court to determine the effect which such newly discovered evidence would have had, if any, upon its decision had it been introduced upon the trial, and whether the same would have changed the decision had it been offered in due time. By the denial of the motion, it may be assumed that the court determined such matter in favor of plaintiff. Certainly, under this record, it cannot be said that the court abused its discretion in this regard, and we can conceive of no prejudice resulting to appellant, even were it to be assumed that certain counter affidavits filed after the time limited by stipulation for the filing thereof were improperly considered.

A careful examination of the record indicates that the judgment of the court was proper and that no prejudicial error intervened during the progress of the trial.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: JAMES, J.; SHAW, J.

16 Cal. App. 67

HENNE v. SUMMERS. (Civ. 894.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. April 24, 1911.)

1. CONTRACTS (§ 162*)—CONSTRUCTION—CONFLICTING CLAUSES.

Where two clauses of a contract are so repugnant that they cannot stand together, the first is to be given effect and the latter rejected.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. § 744; Dec. Dig. § 162.*]

2. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 184*)—SECURITY FOR RENT—BOND—CONSTRUCTION—CONFLICTING CLAUSES—"ALSO."

Civ. Code, § 1641, provides that the whole of a contract is to be taken together so as to give effect to every part if reasonably practicable, and section 1652 declares that repugnancy in a contract must be reconciled, if possible, by such interpretation as will give some effect to the repugnant clause, subordinate to the intent of the whole contract. Tenants entered upon a five-year term January 1, 1907, and executed a bond with defendant as surety in the sum of $1,800; that sum being the amount of two months rent, conditioned for the full performance of all the obligations of the lease, and also the last two months rent due and payable as provided by the lease being the rent for the months of November and December, 1911. Held that, as the word "also" preceding the last clause indicated an intention to include something not theretofore included, there was no repugnancy in the two clauses of the obligation, and that the contract would be interpreted so as to give effect to the last clause relating to rent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. §§ 743-750; Dec. Dig. § 184.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 1, pp. 357-360.]

3. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 184*)—SECURITY FOR RENT—BOND—CONSTRUCTION—CONFLICTING CLAUSES.

The bond of a surety for tenants was conditioned to secure the full performance of all the obligations contained in the lease and also the last two months rent. Held, that the last clause with reference to rent was effective as a limitation of the general words.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. §§ 743-750; Dec. Dig. § 184.*]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1050*)—HARMLESS ERROR—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

In an action on the bond of a surety for tenants, where an interpretation unaided by extrinsic evidence was possible on the face of the contract, the admission of evidence that the promisor believed at the time of making the contract that the promisee understood it in such sense was harmless.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4153-4166; Dec. Dig. § 1050.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; N. P. Conrey, Judge.

Action by Jane Louise Henne, executrix of C. Henne, deceased, against Emma A. Summers. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Campbell & Moore, for appellant. Jones & Weller, for respondent.

ALLEN, P. J. The action was one to enforce the provisions of a certain bond in the sum of $1,800 executed by defendant in favor of C. Henne, plaintiff's testator. It is made to appear by the record that on or about the 20th day of November, 1906, Edward Booth and John W. Neighbours leased from Henne, for the term of five years from the 1st day of January, 1907, a certain storeroom in the city of Los Angeles, by which lease the lessees covenanted and agreed to pay to said lessor as rent for said premises the sum of $54,000, payable in monthly installments of $900 each in advance on the 1st day of each and every month of said term of the lease. Certain other covenants are found therein of the usual and ordinary character, with reference to keeping the premises in good order and condition, not to make alterations or repairs without the consent of the lessor, not to underlet the premises without the written consent of the lessor, and with a covenant that if the lessees should move out or abandon said premises, or any part thereof, the lessor might relet the same and apply the proceeds collected, less the expenses, upon the rent to be paid by the lessees, and the lessees should be liable for the payment of any balance due under the lease, and it is expressly provided that such reletting shall not operate as a termination of the lease or as a waiver or postponement of other rights or remedies; and there are certain other obligations with reference to not engaging in any hazardous or extra-hazardous business, which might result in damage to the building. Contemporaneous with the execution of the lease, Booth and Neighbours as principals, with Emma A. Summers as surety, executed to Henne a bond in the sum of $1,800, conditioned that the same was given to secure the full performance of all of the obligations contained in said lease above referred to, and also the last two months rent to become due and payable as therein specified and provided, being the rent for the months of November and December, A. D. 1911. It further appears that, with the consent of Henne, Booth and Neighbours, shortly after the execution of the lease, assigned and transferred the same to a corporation, called the Booth & Neighbours Clothing Company, and the said corporation took possession of the premises, paying the rent therefor and performing all other conditions, until the first day of January, 1908, at which date the corporation became bankrupt. Thereafter, one Harris, trustee in bankruptcy, entered into an agreement with plaintiff for the use and occupation of said premises from the 27th day of March, 1908, until the 1st day of July, 1908, at a rental of $20 per day, and thereafter at the rate of $500 per month until the 1st day of September, 1908, paying to the lessor as rental the aggregate sum of $4,454.97 from January to August, 1908, inclusive; the balance of the rental for said premises, amounting to more than $2,700, remaining unpaid. The defendant by her answer denied that the original lessees ever actually took possession, but that the premises were occupied solely by the corporation; and, further alleged that at the time of the execution of the undertaking sued on it was agreed and understood that said undertaking, so far as the same referred to rent falling due under the terms of the lease, should apply only to the last two months of said term, and that the condition of said bond with reference to the performance of all obligations contained in said lease referred to and was intended only to apply to obligations of said lease other than the payment of rent. Upon the trial of the action the court permitted the defendant to introduce evidence, under objection, tending to show that at the time of the execution of the lease it was orally agreed that, notwithstanding its term, the only liability incurred by signing the said bond was for the payment of the two months rent mentioned in the concluding part of said bond. The court found that it was agreed and understood between the defendant and the agent of plaintiff's testator that such undertaking, so far as the same referred to rent falling due under the terms of the lease, should apply only to the last two months of said term as specifically mentioned in the undertaking, and that the term therein used with reference to said bond being given to secure the performance of all the obligations contained in said lease referred to and was intended to apply to the obligations of said lease other than the payment of rent. Judgment was accordingly rendered in favor of the defendant, from which judgment and an order denying a new trial plaintiff appeals.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

The questions, therefore, for determination upon this appeal are as to the construction which should be given the undertaking set out in the complaint, and the competency of evidence to establish a contemporaneous oral agreement as signifying the intention of the parties. Certain rules to govern in the interpretation of contracts are declared in the Civil Code of this state. Section 1636 provides: "A contract must be so interpreted as to give effect to the mutual intention of the parties as it existed at the time of contracting, so far as the same is ascertainable and lawful." Section 1641: "The whole of a contract is to be taken together, so as to give effect to every part, if reasonably practicable, each clause helping to interpret the other." Section 1648: "However broad may be the terms of a contract, it extends only to those things concerning which it appears that the parties intended to contract." Section 1649: "If the terms of a promise are in any respect ambiguous or uncertain, it must be interpreted in the sense in which the promisor believed, at the time of making it, that the promisee understood it." Section 1652: "Repugnancy in a contract must be reconciled, if possible, by such an interpretation as will give some effect to the repugnant clauses, subordinate to the general intent and purpose of the whole contract." And by section 1654 it is provided that if the uncertainty cannot be removed by the rules laid down by the Code, the language of the contract must be interpreted most strongly against the promisor as being the one presumed to have caused the uncertainty.

[1] It is elementary law that, if two clauses of a contract are so wholly repugnant to each other that they cannot stand together, the first shall be received and the latter rejected. Straus v. Wanamaker, 175 Pa. 213, 34 Atl. 648; Blackstone's Commentaries, book 2, p. 381.

[2] Considering the language employed in the whole instrument, we are led to the conclusion that the learned judge who tried this cause did not err in his construction of the contract. The fact that the amount of the bond exactly equaled two months rent, and that this amount was specifically mentioned as being that guaranteed by the surety, is significant. Nor can it be said that the two clauses of the contract are so repugnant that they cannot stand together. The word "also," which precedes the last clause, would indicate an intention to include something not theretofore included. We are of opinion that it was not error to so interpret the contract under the provisions of sections 1641 and 1652 of the Civil Code as to give effect to the last clause.

[3] It is settled law that to give effect to the intention of the parties general words may be restrained by a particular recital which follows them, when such recital is used by way of limitation or restriction. It is obvious that the insertion of the last clause with reference to rent was intended as a limitation; otherwise, it is meaningless. In the interpretation of the entire contract, it is the duty of the court to so interpret the same as to give effect to every part, if reasonably practicable.

[4] Given this interpretation, no prejudice could have resulted from the admission of oral evidence of the sense in which the promisor believed at the time of making the contract that the promisee understood it, even though an interpretation unaided by extrinsic evidence was possible upon the face of the contract. If, therefore, the bond was so restricted in its conditions, the rent for which it was given had not yet matured, and the action was premature.

We see no error in the judgment and order, and the same are affirmed.

We concur: JAMES, J.; SHAW, J.

16 Cal. App. 44

PEOPLE v. MULLALLY. (Cr. 149.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 18, 1911.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 211*)—COMPLAINT—VERIFICATION—WHO MAY TAKE.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 2093, authorizing a notary public to administer oaths, a criminal complaint is not bad because verified by such officer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 420-430; Dec. Dig. § 211.*]

2. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 139*)—INSUFFICIENT VERIFICATION—OBJECTIONS—TIME FOR MAKING.

Motion to set aside an information on the ground that the verification of the preliminary complaint was insufficient will not be entertained after the regular preliminary examination and commitment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. § 473; Dec. Dig. § 139.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1144*)—APPEAL—PRE-SUMPTIONS.

A stenographer appointed by a justice of the peace to take the testimony on a preliminary examination is presumed to have been sworn where the record is silent as to whether he was.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 3016; Dec. Dig. § 1144.*]

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 236*)—PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION — STENOGRAPHERS' OATH—NECESSITY.

An official reporter of a superior court appointed to take the testimony at a preliminary examination before a justice of the peace need not be sworn.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 489-491; Dec. Dig. § 236.*]

5. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1144*)—APPEAL—PRE-SUMPTIONS.

A transcript of a preliminary examination is presumed to have been filed within 10 days, as required by Pen. Code, § 869, subd. 5, when the date of filing does not appear.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 3016; Dec. Dig. § 1144.*]

6. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 244*)—PRELIMINARY EXAMINATIONS—TRANSCRIPTS—FILING.

The provision of Pen. Code, § 869, subd. 5, that the transcript of a preliminary hearing be filed within 10 days, is only directory; filing within a reasonable time being sufficient.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 511-514; Dec. Dig. § 244.*]

7. DEPOSITIONS (§ 111*) — OBJECTIONS — WAIVER.

Objection to the admissibility of a deposition on specified grounds waives other grounds.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Depositions, Cent. Dig. §§ 329-339; Dec. Dig. § 111.*]

8. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 390*)—EVIDENCE—ASSUMPTION OR BELIEF BY ACCUSED.

In a larceny trial, accused is not entitled to testify to his "assumption" as to ownership of the property, especially where it relates to a time subsequent to the offense, but he may testify to his belief at the time of the alleged offense.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 858; Dec. Dig. § 390.*]

9. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1170*)—HARMLESS ERROR—EXCLUSION OF TESTIMONY.

In a larceny trial, any error in excluding a showing by accused as to his assumption as to who owned property was harmless, where he testified that he never saw it, and never gave any directions respecting it, and that he considered it the property of a certain person.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3145-3153; Dec. Dig. § 1170.*]

10. WITNESSES (§ 347*)—IMPEACHMENT—CONDUCT.

In a larceny trial, evidence as to whether a witness who had disposed of the property took the most direct route in going to town to sell the same was inadmissible on an issue as to such witness' guilty knowledge.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. § 1134; Dec. Dig. § 347.*]

11. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 368*)—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

In a larceny trial, evidence of statements made by another when he sold the property after commission of the alleged offense was inadmissible, being no part of the res gestæ.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 806, 812, 815, 821; Dec. Dig. § 368.*]

12. WITNESSES (§ 388*)—IMPEACHMENT—PRE-REQUISITES.

A witness cannot be impeached by showing statements made by him out of court without first calling his attention thereto.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 1233-1242; Dec. Dig. § 388.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Colusa County; H. M. Alberg, Judge.

P. Mullally was convicted of larceny, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Ernest Weyand and W. H. Carlin, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, for the People.

BURNETT, J. Defendant was convicted of the larceny of a yearling bull and sentenced to the penitentiary for the term of three years.

[1] 1. There is no merit in the contention that the court should have set aside the information for the reason that the complaint filed in the justice court was verified before a notary public. Every notary public has power to administer oaths or affirmations. Section 2093, Code Civ. Proc. And, since the statute does not designate any particular officer before whom the complaint must be verified, it necessarily follows that the verification may be attested by any one authorized to administer an oath. Dunn v. Ketchum, 38 Cal. 99. Every clerk of any court is placed upon the same footing in this respect as a notary, and it has been held that, under the authority given by said section 2093 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the clerk of a police court has authority to administer an oath to a person verifying a complaint and a motion to set aside an information based thereon for want of a legal commitment under such complaint, owing to the absence of a legal verification thereof, cannot be sustained. People v. Vasalo, 120 Cal. 168, 52 Pac. 305; People v. Burns, 121 Cal. 529, 53 Pac. 1096.

[2] Besides, if the verification had been illegal, the objection could not avail after a regular preliminary examination and commitment of the defendant. People v. Gregory, 8 Cal. App. 738, 97 Pac. 912.

2. Edward de St. Maurice, the official reporter of the superior court of Colusa county, took in shorthand the testimony and proceedings at the preliminary examination, and thereafter transcribed and filed the same with the clerk of said superior court.

During the trial the prosecution made proper showing that one Charles Schnitter, who had testified at the preliminary examination, could not be found in the state, and, upon attempting to offer the deposition of said witness, it appeared that the original transcript of the proceedings at the preliminary examination had disappeared and could not be found. The district attorney then stated: "At this time, I have had certified this transcript by the official reporter as a true copy of the testimony taken in the case." The reporter was then examined by counsel for defendant, and testified that there were three copies of the testimony at the preliminary examination made, that the original was filed with the clerk, one copy delivered to the district attorney and the other delivered to defendant's attorney and that they were all alike. An objection was then made to the offer of the deposition on the grounds that due diligence had not been shown in attempting to serve the witness; that it did not appear that Mr. de St. Maurice was appointed as reporter of the justice court in the case against the defendant; that it was not shown that the reporter was sworn to take the testimony; or that the transcript was filed in the superior court within ten days after the defendant was held to answer. There was no contention that a copy of the deposition could not be received, or no question raised as to it being an exact copy of the original, counsel stating: "I desire that my objection should run to the question of the certificate of the reporter, showing exactly what was done. In other words, I am willing that this be considered in the same place as the original was, whenever that was filed. I don't care when that was. My objection does not run to any question of that kind. In other words, I understand they have a right to substitute a paper when one is lost."

It is clear that all the objections urged to the admissibility of the deposition are entirely without merit. With commendable candor it is, indeed, admitted by appellant that "the prosecution did make a sufficient showing of the absence of the witness and of efforts made in good faith to procure his attendance."

[3, 4] The other objections may be disposed of as follows: It appears that the said de St. Maurice was appointed by the justice as reporter to take the testimony. The record is silent as to whether he was sworn. Therefore, if the matter was material, the presumption would be that the oath was administered, but, since it appears that he was the official reporter of the court, it was not necessary that he be sworn. People v. Riley, 75 Cal. 98, 16 Pac. 544. The record also shows that the original transcript was properly certified, as the reporter testified that the one substituted therefor was an exact copy of the original and the certificate attached to said substitute is unobjectionable in form.

[5] It does not appear just when the original was filed and therefore the presumption would be that it was filed within the statutory time. People v. Witty, 138 Cal. 578, 72 Pac. 177.

[6] Besides, it is settled that the specification as to time (Pen. Code, § 869, subd. 5) is directory merely, and that, if the filing be within a reasonable time, it is sufficient. People v. Buckley, 143 Cal. 381, 77 Pac. 169. As before indicated, there is nothing to show that an unreasonable time elapsed.

[7] Appellant is deemed to have waived any other ground of objection to the admissibility of said deposition. People v. Garnett, 9 Cal. App. 200, 98 Pac. 247; People v. Buckley, supra.

[8] 3. The defendant was asked this question by his counsel: "I will ask you again what you assumed on the 24th and 25th when you knew that there was a calf killed on the place? What did you assume about that calf and the ownership of that calf?" And again: "I will ask you if, on the 24th and 25th of March, when you knew that a calf was killed there, whether or not it is a fact that you assumed that that calf was Jack Mullally's?" An objection to each of these questions was sustained. It is admitted by appellant that the form of the questions asked is not free from criticism. This is undoubtedly true, as the defendant's assumption would be no defense, since it might be contrary to his knowledge or belief. But it is claimed that, "if the circumstances under which these cattle came upon defendant's premises and were driven from his grain were such that he had reason to believe that they belonged to himself and his cousin Jack, he had a right to lay that before the jury and refusal to permit him to do so was the denial to him of a legal right." In a case like this, a party, really believing that property asported by himself or under his direction was his own, would not be guilty of larceny, since the felonious intent would be absent. His belief is an important element in the case, and, under proper circumstances, he should be permitted to state what he believed at the time of the alleged commission of the offense as to the ownership of the property. The jury, of course, would not be bound by his statement, but it should be considered with the other evidence in the case. But here, in addition to the objectionable form of the question, it appears that it related to a time subsequent to the commission of the offense. What he may have assumed after the offense was complete would be no defense to the charge and if intended to explain his subsequent conduct the questions should have been directed specifically to the conduct which it was sought to explain.

[9] But, again, the defendant testified that he never saw the calf and never gave Schnitter any directions in reference to it, and knew nothing of the killing until he was told of it afterwards. He could have had no belief, therefore, as to the calf at the time it was taken. Another complete answer to the whole proposition is that the witness had already testified that he considered the calf the property of his cousin Jack. He said: "Well, I didn't know anything about the killing of the calf much. Jack and me talked it over once, and I didn't pay any attention to it as long as he didn't and we didn't think it worth while to talk about it. He considered it his calf and I did too until George Lenning told me I was going to be arrested."

[10] 4. The court committed no error in sustaining the objection of the district attorney to the following question asked by appellant of the witness Harry Brooks: "Is the route around by the way where your dwelling house is, and where you were when you met Schnitter, as direct a route to the town of Arbuckle as another route to that town?" The purpose was to show, so it is claimed, that Schnitter was in a clandestine manner seeking to dispose of the meat, and thereby to discredit his statement that he had no reason to believe that the calf was stolen. But there is no contention that one route was more secluded than the other or that there was any secrecy whatever in his disposition of the meat. In fact, the carcass was openly sold, as the evidence all shows, and whether Schnitter took the most direct route to town would have no bearing upon the question of his guilty knowledge.

[11, 12] 5. Likewise, the court's ruling was correct in sustaining an objection to questions asked of witnesses as to statements made by Schnitter when he sold the meat. This was no part of the res gestæ, as the offense had been fully completed (People v. Petruzo, 13 Cal. App. 577, 110 Pac. 324), and Schnitter could not in that manner be impeached as his attention was not called to the alleged statements (People v. Garnett, supra, and cases therein cited).

Appellant does not claim that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict, and none of the points made would justify us in interfering with the judgment and order of the court, and they are therefore affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

16 Cal. App. 55

SEABOARD NAT. BANK v. ACKERMAN.
(Civ. 865.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. April 22, 1911.)

1. RECORDS (§ 17*)—LOST RECORD—SECONDARY EVIDENCE—JUDGMENT.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1855, subd. 1, relating to proof of the loss or destruction of writings before the admission of oral evidence of their contents, and Act June 16, 1906 (St. [Sp. Sess.] 1906, p. 73), providing for the restoration and proof of court records destroyed by fire, secondary evidence is admissible and competent in an action on a judgment to establish the existence of the original action, and of the proceedings therein, including the judgment; the records having been destroyed by fire.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Records, Cent. Dig. § 25; Dec. Dig. § 17.*]

2. RECORDS (§ 17*)—LOST RECORDS—EVIDENCE—CHARACTER AND DEGREE OF SECONDARY EVIDENCE.

Where secondary evidence is admissible to prove the contents of a lost or destroyed instrument, proof of the substance of the instrument is all that is required.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Records, Cent. Dig. § 33; Dec. Dig. § 17.*]

3. RECORDS (§ 17*)—LOST RECORDS—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY—INFERENCES.

In an action on a judgment, where the original complaint, summons and return of service, and judgment roll have been lost or destroyed, the fact that in the original action they were prepared by an attorney at law in the ordinary and usual form employed in actions of that kind warrants in some degree the inference that the destroyed record contained in detail all that was essential to support the jurisdiction and judgment in the original action.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Records, Cent. Dig. § 33; Dec. Dig. § 17.*]

4. RECORDS (§ 17*)—LOST RECORD—JUDGMENTS—EVIDENCE—WEIGHT AND SUFFICIENCY.

Evidence in an action on a judgment of which the record has been destroyed held sufficient to establish the rendition of the original judgment, and that it was made and entered by a court of superior jurisdiction in favor of the present plaintiff and against the present defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Records, Dec. Dig. § 17.*]

5. JUDGMENT (§ 470*)—COLLATERAL ATTACK—JUDGMENT PRESUMED TO BE VALID IN GENERAL.

A judgment of a court of general jurisdiction not void on its face is immune from collateral attack, and on such attack it is presumed to be in all respects regular, and its rendition implies that the court rendering it had determined upon sufficient evidence that it had jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the action and of the defendant therein.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 907; Dec. Dig. § 470.*]

6. RECORDS (§ 17*)—LOST RECORD—ACTION ON JUDGMENT—EVIDENCE—PRESUMPTION.

In an action on a judgment of which the record has been destroyed, the fact that it is not shown upon whom or how the service of summons in the original action was made is not inconsistent with the conclusion that defendant therein was properly served with summons, and, in support of the action of the court, it must be presumed that such service was shown, although no record thereof was preserved.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Records, Cent. Dig. § 33; Dec. Dig. § 17.*]

7. RECORDS (§ 17*)—LOST RECORD—ACTION ON JUDGMENT—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Evidence in an action on a judgment, the record of which was lost, held sufficient to sustain the finding on which judgment in the present action was based.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Records, Dec. Dig. § 17.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; E. P. Mogan, Judge.

Action by the Seaboard National Bank against A. H. Ackerman. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Lloyd S. Ackerman, for appellant. Cushing & Cushing and William S. McKnight, for respondent.

LENNON, P. J. This is an appeal from a judgment.

Respondent, as plaintiff in this action, recovered judgment in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco against appellant, as the defendant below, in the sum of $7,882. This judgment was made and entered upon a judgment alleged to have been previously duly made and entered in the same court against the defendant and in favor of the plaintiff in the sum of $5,583.

Appellant's answer in the action at bar denied specifically the allegations of plaintiff's complaint, and, as a separate and distinct defense, alleged that the records and papers in the original action had been destroyed by fire, and set out the act of June 16, 1906 (St. [Sp. Sess.] 1906, p. 73), providing for the restoration of court records lost, injured, or destroyed by conflagration or other calamity. Upon the trial of the present case respondent relied entirely upon oral evidence to establish the making and entry of the original judgment, and no testimony in reply thereto or contradictory thereof was offered upon behalf of appellant. The trial court found as a fact that "on the 10th day of November, 1903, in an action brought by the above-named plaintiff against the above-named defendant, in the above-entitled court, a judgment was duly given, made, and entered in favor of said plaintiff, and against said defendant, for the sum of $5,583, * * * which said action and judgment are the same referred to in the complaint herein." Appellant challenges the sufficiency of the evidence to support this finding.

The uncontroverted evidence on the part of the plaintiff which was offered and received without objection showed, in substance, that about the year 1902, upon a complaint in the usual form for money loaned, an action was instituted in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, wherein respondent was plaintiff and appellant the defendant, for the recovery of the sum of $5,000, alleged to have been loaned to appellant by the Seaboard National Bank, the plaintiff here; that the complaint and summons in the action were personally prepared by Mr. Charles S. Cushing, attorney for plaintiff, and service of the same made; that subsequently a return thereon, showing service in due form, was made and filed in the action; that on November 10, 1903, judgment was rendered and entered against the defendant upon his default, and in favor of the plaintiff, for the sum of $5,583.33, and costs amounting to the sum of $8.50; that this judgment was entered in the regular form, and thereafter a judgment roll made up, consisting of the complaint, return of summons and the judgment; that this judgment was never paid either in whole or in part.

[1] The record evidence of the original action having been entirely destroyed by fire before the commencement of the present action, secondary evidence was admissible and competent to establish the existence of the original action and all of the proceedings, including the judgment had therein (Code Civ. Proc. § 1855, subd. 1; Ames v. Hoy, 12 Cal. 11; In re Will of Warfield, 22 Cal. 64, 83 Am. Dec. 49); and this is so notwithstanding the provisions of the act of June 16, 1906 (Hibernia Sav. & Loan Society v. Boyd, 155 Cal. 193, 100 Pac. 239).

It is appellant's contention that in the case at bar there was no direct proof of personal service of summons on the defendant, or of the contents of the complaint and judgment roll in the original action. The evidence of the institution of the original action, service of summons, and entry of judgment therein was positive and direct, and in substance established the contents of the papers and pleadings constituting the judgment roll.

[2] "In the case of a lost instrument where no copy has been preserved, it is not to be expected that witnesses can state the contents, word for word." Posten v. Rasette, 5 Cal. 467. The substance of a lost or destroyed document is all that is required. Kenniff v. Caulfield, 140 Cal. 43, 73 Pac. 803.

[3] The fact that the complaint, the return of summons, showing service, and the judgment roll in the original action were prepared by an attorney at law in the ordinary and usual form employed in actions for money loaned tended in some degree to warrant the inference that the destroyed record contained in detail all that was essential to support the jurisdiction and judgment of the court in the first instance. Mandeville v. Reynolds, 68 N. Y. 536; Jackson v. Crawfords, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 536. In brief, the evidence in its entirety was in our opinion a sufficient premise for the deduction and inference that the destroyed record contained all that was necessary to effectuate its purpose and establish the ultimate fact disputed in the case at bar.

[4] Aside from this conclusion as to the scope and effect of the evidence generally, it is certain that the uncontroverted evidence offered upon behalf of the plaintiff established the rendition and existence of the judgment upon which the present action is based, and that said judgment was made and entered by a court of superior jurisdiction in favor of the present plaintiff and against the present defendant.

[5] It is the settled rule in this state that a judgment of a court of general jurisdiction not void on its face is immune from collateral attack. In the face of such an attack it is presumed to be in all respects regular, and its very rendition carries with it the implication that the court rendering the judgment had previously determined, upon sufficient evidence, that it had jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the action and of the defendant therein. Carpentier v. City of Oakland, 30 Cal. 439; Hahn v. Kelly, 34 Cal. 391, 94 Am. Dec. 742; Estate of Eichhoff, 101 Cal. 600, 36 Pac. 11.

[6] The fact that the evidence in the case at bar does not show upon whom or how the service of summons in the original action was made is not inconsistent with the conclusion that the defendant therein was properly served with summons, and "it must be presumed in support of the action of the court that such service was shown to it, although it has not preserved any record thereof." Eichhoff v. Eichhoff, 107 Cal. 47, 40 Pac. 24, 48 Am. St. Rep. 110; Canadian, etc., Co. v. Clarita, etc., Co., 140 Cal. 675, 74 Pac. 301.

[7] The judgment which forms the basis of this action having been established and received in evidence, without objection or controversy, is entitled to all the presumptions pertaining to judgments of courts of superior jurisdiction, and was in and of itself sufficient support for the finding upon which rests the judgment in the case at bar.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: HALL, J.; KERRIGAN, J.

16 Cal. App. 126

JUNE v. SUPERIOR COURT OF SONOMA COUNTY. (Civ. 865.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 2, 1911.)

1. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§ 155*)—APPEAL—PREMATURITY.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 891, requiring entry of judgment of a justice of the peace in conformity to the verdict, under section 893, providing that judgment shall not be effective until entered, and under section 974, permitting appeal from a justice's judgment within 30 days after its rendition, an appeal taken before entry of the judgment confers no jurisdiction on the superior court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Dec. Dig. § 155.*]

2. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§ 125*)—JUDGMENT—REQUISITES.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 891, requiring a justice of the peace to enter judgment in conformity to verdict, the judgment need not be formulated with the particularity required of superior court judgments, but he must make some entry in his docket showing that he has rendered judgment on the verdict.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Dec. Dig. § 125.*]

3. MANDAMUS (§ 53*)—RIGHT TO REMEDY.

Since the superior court acquired no jurisdiction of an attempted appeal from a justice's court before judgment was entered, the District Court of Appeal cannot confer such jurisdiction, through writ of mandate, to set aside an order dismissing the appeal, though motion to dismiss in the superior court was not made on that ground.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Dec. Dig. § 53.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; Thos. C. Denny, Judge.

Petition by John June for writ of mandate against the Superior Court of Sonoma County. Writ denied.

Rolfe L. Thompson, for appellant. John C. Ruddock, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Mandate. Plaintiff prays for the writ of this court compelling defendant to set aside its order dismissing the appeal of plaintiff herein, in a certain action wherein J. J. Smalley is plaintiff and John June, plaintiff herein, is defendant, from an alleged judgment made and entered in the justice's court of Cloverdale township, Sonoma county, in favor of said Smalley, and directing defendant to proceed to the hearing and trial of said action of Smalley v. June.

It appears that in said action a trial was had by a jury, and, on July 20, 1910, the jury rendered the following verdict: "We, the jury, find for the plaintiff according to the complaint. J. A. Linde, Foreman." In the justice's docket there is an entry of July 20, 1910, reciting that the case was called at 9 o'clock a. m. of that day, a jury impaneled to try the case (naming the members), and, "after argument by counsel, the case was submitted to the jury; after being out a half hour, the jury returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff." No other proceedings were taken by the justice, and no other entry was made in his docket, except that it appears from defendant's answer herein that the said justice entered judgment on the verdict on December 30, 1910, and it is conceded that the justice neither rendered nor entered any judgment on the verdict, except as last above stated. On July 22, 1910, defendant in that action, plaintiff now here, filed his notice of appeal to the superior court, "on questions of both law and fact," and on July 23, 1910, filed with said justice an undertaking, reciting the amount of the alleged judgment, to wit, $110.29, principal, and $53, costs, and claiming a stay of execution and obligating the sureties in the sum of $300, and reciting that said sureties "promise on the part of the said appellant that the said appellant will pay the amount of said judgment so appealed from and all costs, if the appeal is withdrawn or dismissed, or the amount of any judgment and all costs that may be recorded against him in the action in said superior court."

On July 26, 1910, the justice transmitted to said superior court a certified copy of his docket in said action, and the pleadings, all notices, motions, and other papers in said cause, the notice of appeal and the undertaking filed therein, all of which were received by the clerk of said superior court on said last-named day.

Defendant in the said action having failed to pay the clerk's fees, and having taken no further steps to prosecute his appeal, the plaintiff in that action paid the clerk's fees, on December 8, 1910, and served and filed his motion in said superior court that he would move to dismiss said appeal "for failure to prosecute the same, and for unnecessary delay in bringing the said action to hearing. The said motion will be heard on the papers in the case." On January 4, 1911, the court made an order dismissing the appeal, with costs.

It is claimed by respondent here that at the time defendant in the action, Smalley v. June, took his appeal, no judgment had been entered on the verdict, and the attempted appeal was ineffectual for any purpose, and the superior court was without jurisdiction to hear and determine the case and rightly dismissed the appeal. It is also claimed that the undertaking is insufficient; there being no separate bond to cover costs on appeal, as required by section 978, Code of Civil Procedure.

[1] Section 974, Code of Civil Procedure, provides that: "Any person dissatisfied with a judgment, rendered in a civil action in a police or justice's court, may appeal therefrom to the superior court of the county, at any time within thirty days after the rendition of the judgment." And the notice must state whether "the appeal is taken from the whole or a part of the judgment."

Section 891, Code of Civil Procedure, reads: "When a trial by a jury has been had, judgment must be entered by the justice at once, in conformity with the verdict." And the judgment "must be entered substantially in the form required in section six hundred and sixty-seven. * * * No judgment shall have effect for any purpose until so entered." Section 893, Code Civ. Proc.

It seems to us that the appeal was prematurely taken, and that the superior court did not acquire jurisdiction thereby. Montgomery v. Superior Court, 68 Cal. 407, 9 Pac. 720, is cited by petitioner in support of the claim that the verdict was a judgment within the meaning of the statute. In that case the justice's docket contained the following entry: "Jury fees paid by defendant and judgment entered for the defendant for costs of suit. Defendant's costs being $25 for witness and jury fees, and also the sum of $1.75 for constable fees; total $26.75. Plaintiff's costs being $17." It further appears that the petitioner went to trial in the superior court, and, without objection to the regularity of any proceedings, defended the case on its merits. Said the court: "Having thus taken the chances of obtaining a verdict in his favor, we think his objection now comes too late." It was also held that the court had jurisdiction, because the justice's record showed "that a judgment had been entered in conformity with the verdict, and appears to be in all respects regular and sufficient."

[2] We do not think that the justice must formulate a judgment with that particularity required of judgments required to be entered in the superior court, but that he should make some entry in his docket, showing that he has rendered judgment on the verdict, we do think is essential to a substantial compliance with the statute. His duty to enter judgment is in a sense ministerial, and its performance could probably be enforced by mandate, but, nevertheless, the statute requires this of him. Until such entry is made, there is no judgment from which an appeal may be taken, and, if the appeal is taken before the justice enters judgment on the verdict, it confers no jurisdiction on the superior court.

[3] It follows that, as the superior court acquired no jurisdiction by the attempted appeal, this court cannot give it jurisdiction through the means of the writ prayed for; and this is true, although the motion to dismiss was not made on this ground.

It is not necessary to pass upon the sufficiency of the undertaking.

The writ is denied.

We concur: BURNETT, J.; HART, J.

16 Cal. App. 143

IRWIN v. INSURANCE CO. OF NORTH AMERICA. (Civ. 874.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. May 3, 1911. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court June 30, 1911.)

1. INSURANCE (§ 638*)—NONPAYMENT—PLEADING.

Allegation of neglect and refusal to pay fire insurance is a sufficient allegation of nonpayment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. § 1607; Dec. Dig. § 638.*]

2. INSURANCE (§ 645*)—FIRE POLICIES—WHEN PAYABLE—PLEADING.

In an action on a fire policy, a denial that the policy became payable on a certain date, or at any other time, or at all, raised an issue as to the time the loss was payable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. §§ 1632-1644; Dec. Dig. § 645.*]

3. PLEADING (§ 8*)—CONCLUSIONS OF LAW—"DUE"—"OWING"—"PAYABLE."

Ordinarily, the words "due," "owing," and "payable" are conclusions of law, denial of which raises no issue.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 12-28½; Dec. Dig. § 8.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 3, pp. 2213-2220; vol. 8, p. 7643; vol. 6, pp. 5129, 5130; vol. 6, pp. 5245, 5246.]

4. INSURANCE (§ 623*)—FIRE POLICIES—PAYMENT—TIME—WAIVER.

A provision in a fire policy, making loss not payable until 60 days after fire, was not waived by insurer refusing payment on the ground that plaintiff was not the owner of the premises and possessed no insurable interest.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. §§ 1551-1553; Dec. Dig. § 623.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County, W. R. Guy, Judge.

Action by I. Isaac Irwin against the Insurance Company of North America. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Patterson Sprigg, for appellant. Eugene Daney and M. H. Fleming, for respondent.

ALLEN, P. J. The action was upon a policy of insurance. The complaint averred ownership and an insurable interest in certain property in San Diego county on the 20th day of July, 1908; that on said date the defendant executed a contract and policy of insurance in writing upon said property, and by the terms of which contract and policy the defendant insured plaintiff against all loss or damage by fire from the 20th day of July, 1908, to the 20th day of July, 1909, to an amount not exceeding $1,200; that on the 22d day of September, 1908, the property was destroyed by fire and damaged to the extent of $1,305; that on or about the 18th day of November, 1908, the plaintiff duly complied with all the terms, conditions, and requirements of said contract and insurance policy to be kept and performed by him, and the amount of said policy, to wit, the sum of $1,200, became due and payable to the plaintiff from the defendant on the said 18th day of November, 1908. Neglect and refusal to pay the same is averred. The answer denied the ownership or insurable interest; admitted the issuance of the policy of insurance upon the express agreement and stipulation set forth in said agreement and contract, and not otherwise; admitted the destruction by fire; denied the loss as to the amount thereof; denied that the defendant was notified of the fire, or that on the 18th day of November, 1908, plaintiff duly complied with all the terms, conditions, and requirements, or any of the said terms, conditions, and requirements, of said contract of insurance to be kept and performed by plaintiff; and denied that the sum of $1,200, or any other sum or amount, became due and payable on said 18th day of November, 1908, or at any other time or at all, or that said sum became due and payable by reason of said fire, or for any cause, or upon said contract, or upon any contract, or at all. The action was tried by the court, a jury being waived, after a motion for nonsuit was denied. Findings of fact and conclusions of law were waived, and judgment was entered by the court in favor of plaintiff in the amount sued for. From this judgment, defendant appealed upon a bill of exceptions.

[1] Upon a former hearing of this appeal, this court determined that the complaint was insufficient, basing such opinion upon the authority of Scroufe v. Clay, 71 Cal. 123, 11 Pac. 882, but overlooking certain subsequent decisions overruling such case, notably that of Gardner v. Donnelly, 86 Cal. 367, 24 Pac. 1072.

A rehearing was therefore granted. We take it that under these later decisions an allegation of neglect and refusal to pay is a sufficient allegation of nonpayment. It appears from the bill of exceptions that upon the trial plaintiff established ownership and an insurable interest, the destruction of the property by fire, and the loss and proof thereof, as in the complaint averred. He, however, introduced in evidence the policy of insurance, by the terms of which it was provided that the loss was not payable until 60 days after proof of loss.

[2] The material allegations of the complaint at issue were fully established without the introduction of the policy of insurance, unless it be said that the averment that the policy became payable on the 18th of November, 1908, was traversed by defendant's denial. We are of opinion that such denial raised an issue as to the time when the loss was payable under the terms of the policy, and that it devolved upon plaintiff to establish by the policy the stipulated time of payment. Undertaking this duty through the introduction of the policy, he established beyond controversy that such loss was not payable until the lapse of 60 days after the 18th of November, 1908. This obviated any proof upon the part of defendant in that regard.

[3] Ordinarily, the words "due," "owing," and "payable" are said to be conclusions of law, a denial of which would raise no issue; but considering this complaint, which averred a contract of indemnity, and which in the absence of specific time of payment would become payable upon the happening of the event, plaintiff averred that it did not become payable until the 18th of November, 1908, which must be construed as an allegation that such time of maturity was evidenced by the policy; and the statement that it became payable upon a certain date is open to the construction that by the terms of the policy the defendant obligated itself on that date to pay the loss. Defendant's allegation that its promise to pay was contained in the policy and not otherwise, and its denial that the same became payable on the 18th of November, must be taken as a denial that by the terms of the policy it became payable upon that date; and hence the issue was raised as to the time when under the policy the loss became payable. [4] Respondent contends that the condition of the policy as to the time of payment was waived by reason of the action of defendant in refusing payment on the ground that plaintiff was not the owner of the premises and possessed no insurable interest therein, the contrary of which was clearly established by the evidence, and for the further reason that by its answer it denied liability generally. We cannot construe such denial of liability, either before or after suit, as a waiver of the definite time fixed by contract for the payment of the loss. No breach of contract existed at the time the suit was brought; there was no sum due or payable to plaintiff. The terms of the contract gave to defendant 60 days, during which time it had a right to retain and use the money necessary to liquidate the loss. Within this time the defendant could make independent investigations in order to determine its liability. The loss was not payable until the time specified. A different rule might apply had the policy provided only that no action should be maintained for a period of 60 days; but we are not advised that a denial of liability before maturity can be said to have the effect to mature an obligation before the date fixed in the contract for its payment. Tatum v. Ackerman, 148 Cal. 360, 83 Pac. 151, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 908, 113 Am. St. Rep. 276.

In our opinion, the court erred in denying the motion for a nonsuit made at the conclusion of plaintiff's testimony.

The judgment is therefore reversed, and cause remanded for further proceedings.

We concur: JAMES, J.; SHAW, J.

16 Cal. App. 59

ALLSTEAD v. LAUMEISTER. (Civ. 835.)
(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 22, 1911.)

FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES (§ 174*)—TRUSTS—ENFORCEMENT BY DEBTOR.

Complainant, a judgment debtor, desiring to purchase certain land in controversy, procured the title to be conveyed to his minor son on agreement to reconvey on demand, to protect the property from seizure by complainant's creditors. The son participated in the fraud, and thereafter conveyed the land to defendant without consideration on her agreement also to convey to complainant on demand. Held, that though defendant was not a bona fide purchaser, but took title subject to the same trust, complainant, because of the fraud, could not maintain a suit to compel defendant to convey, regardless of whether the parties were in pari delicto, under the rule that he who comes into equity must come with clean hands.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraudulent Conveyances, Cent. Dig. §§ 530-542; Dec. Dig. § 174.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. M. Seawell, Judge.

Action by Gustave Allstead against Elizabeth Laumeister. Judgment for complainant, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

F. J. Castelhun and Walter J. Thompson, for appellant. James H. Boyer, for respondent.

HART, J. This action was brought to obtain a decree declaring certain real estate, situated in the city of San Francisco, to be held in trust by defendant for the plaintiff, and to compel said defendant to execute "a good and sufficient deed transferring and conveying to plaintiff said property." Plaintiff was awarded judgment as prayed for, and this appeal is prosecuted therefrom under the alternative method of taking such appeals prescribed by sections 941a, 941b, 953a, 953b, and 953c of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The facts, as alleged in the complaint and as proved by the evidence from which the findings of the court were made, may be stated as follows: On the 31st day of May, 1905, plaintiff purchased from William and Elise Marshall, his wife, a certain lot in the city of San Francisco, and caused the deed thereto to be executed by said Marshalls to his son, Van C. Allstead, then a minor, of the age of about 20 years; that plaintiff paid to said Marshalls the entire consideration supporting the transfer of said property; that, on said 31st day of May, 1905, said Van C. Allstead "agreed with and promised plaintiff that he would reconvey to plaintiff said real property at any time upon request of plaintiff"; that on the 20th day of January, 1906, said Van C. Allstead conveyed said property to the defendant, Elizabeth Laumeister, and it is charged in the complaint that said conveyance was brought about without the knowledge, acquiescence, or consent of plaintiff, and through the act of said defendant in fraudulently representing to said Van C. Allstead that "it was the will and desire of plaintiff that said Van C. Allstead transfer and convey said property to said Elizabeth Laumeister to be by her held in trust for said plaintiff, and by her reconveyed to plaintiff on demand." The complaint further states that said Van C. Allstead, for some six months prior to the date of the transfer of said property to said defendant, had resided with the latter at her home in San Francisco, and that "said Van C. Allstead and Elizabeth Laumeister during said time bore the relation to each other of foster mother and child; and during all of said time said Van C. Allstead reposed great trust and confidence in said Elizabeth Laumeister"; that by reason of the confidence and trust so reposed in said Laumeister by said Van Allstead, and relying upon and believing in "said false and fraudulent statements of said Elizabeth Laumeister," said Van Allstead, on the date heretofore mentioned, conveyed, by grant deed, said property to said Laumeister, without the knowledge, acquiescence, or consent of plaintiff. The complaint further charges that the transfer to defendant of said property by said Van Allstead was without any consideration whatever, and that the sole purpose of said defendant in thus fraudulently obtaining a deed and title to said property was to cheat and defraud plaintiff out of his equitable title to the same, and without any intent on her part to reconvey said property to plaintiff. On the 1st day of June, 1906, it is alleged, plaintiff demanded of defendant that she reconvey said property to plaintiff, but that defendant then and has ever since refused to convey said property to said plaintiff.

The answer specifically denies all the material averments of the complaint, and, additionally, sets up several special defenses, of which, except the one that follows, we deem it unnecessary, under our view of the case, to take special or any notice: "That, at the time said plaintiff caused said William Marshall and wife to execute and deliver to plaintiff a grant deed of the premises in the complaint described to Van C. Allstead, said plaintiff was indebted to various persons in divers sums of money, and that said plaintiff caused said deed from said William Marshall and wife to be made to said Van C. Allstead for the purpose and with the intent to hinder, delay, and defraud the creditors of said plaintiff, of all which said Van C. Allstead had knowledge."

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

The court's findings are in favor of plaintiff on all the material issues, except the one responding to the foregoing allegation of the answer, and except, further, that the court does not find that the defendant, as alleged in the complaint, procured Van C. Allstead to execute a transfer of the property to her by misrepresentation and fraud.

Several of the important findings of the court, essential to the support of the judgment, if the judgment could be upheld at all, are assailed by the appellant; but an examination of the record will disclose that all the findings derive sufficient support from the evidence, much, it may here be stated, to the disadvantage of the judgment in favor of the plaintiff, for the court found, upon the testimony of both the plaintiff and Van C. Allstead, as follows: "On and prior to May 31, 1905, plaintiff was indebted to the Mission Loan and Home Association of San Francisco upon a deficiency judgment made and entered in favor of said association and against said plaintiff; that on said 31st day of May, 1905, said plaintiff purchased said real property of and from said William Marshall and Elise Marshall, and thereupon caused said William Marshall and Elise Marshall to execute and deliver to plaintiff a grant deed transferring and conveying the legal title to said property to Van C. Allstead, who was then and there the minor child of said plaintiff, to conceal the fact of his ownership of said property from said association."

In support of the foregoing findings, the record discloses the following testimony given by plaintiff: "I paid $300 cash for the lot. * * * Had a conversation with my son, Van C. Allstead, immediately prior to the purchase of this property, relative to its purchase. * * * I told him I had a show to buy a nice cheap piece of property, and I thought I would take it, but I would make the deed in his name, as I had a little financial difficulty so I couldn't hold it myself. * * * There was a deficiency judgment lien against me. They had sold my place on a mortgage and didn't get enough for it, and they had a deficiency judgment against me."

Van C. Allstead testified: "Had a conversation with my father relative to the property in 1905, a few days before he purchased it. * * * Well, he said: 'Van, I am going to buy a piece of property. I got a good piece of property that I am going to purchase. I am going to have the Marshalls deed it over to you. I can't keep anything in my own name, as they are apt to take it away from me.' He said, 'I am going to make this deed over to you, and I want you to give it back to me any time I want it.' And I said, 'All right, you can have it.'"

It is plainly evident, from the foregoing testimony and the findings deduced therefrom, that the agreement between the plaintiff and his son, with respect to the property in controversy, comes within the maxim, "Ex turpi causa non oritur actio," and cannot be sustained or executed at the suit of plaintiff, without a clear violation of the fundamental conceptions of equity jurisprudence. Pomeroy's Eq. Juris. § 397. That author, in the same section, thus states the rule as to the application of the equitable maxim, "He who comes into equity must come with clean hands." "It says that whenever a party, who, as actor, seeks to set the judicial machinery in motion and obtain some remedy, has violated conscience, or good faith, or other equitable principle, in his prior conduct, then the doors of the court will be shut against him in limine; the court will refuse to interfere on his behalf, to acknowledge his right, or to award him any remedy." As seen, the court did not find that the defendant procured the execution of the deed to her by Van Allstead by misrepresentation and fraud, as charged in the complaint, and it may be remarked that, so far as plaintiff is concerned, it would make no difference whether the court had so found. The plaintiff's conduct in making the arrangement with his son for a conveyance of the property to him whenever he might demand it was conceived and founded in fraud—in an intent to defraud creditors—and there was nothing that either the son or third parties might do with respect to the property or its disposition that could relieve him from the consequences of his unconscientious part in the transaction.

The court, however, found as follows with reference to the transfer of the property by Van Allstead to defendant: "That thereafter, and on the 20th day of January, 1906, at said city and county of San Francisco, said Van C. Allstead conveyed said property to Elizabeth Laumeister, to be by her held in trust for said plaintiff, and by her reconveyed to plaintiff on demand."

Thus it will be observed that the transaction between the defendant and Van Allstead merely resulted in transferring to her shoulders the obligations of the trust created by the plaintiff and accepted by his son. The son testified that he well knew and understood the purpose for which the plaintiff had the property put in his name. He knew the purpose of the trust was to defraud the creditors of the trustor and under those circumstances and to aid the trustor in perpetrating the fraud he accepted the trust. The defendant, having assumed the obligations of the trust—that is, having, according to the finding on that proposition, taken the property upon an agreement to execute the terms of the trust according to their original tenor—took the legal title for the purpose of executing such trust with all the infirmities characterizing said trust from its very inception. It may be true that, although Van Allstead stood in pari delicto to the fraud, the defendant would not sustain that relation thereto unless she accepted the trust with notice or knowledge of its fraudulent character or that its purpose was to defraud third parties; still, nevertheless, the transaction between plaintiff and his son was so tainted with corruption that its nature as thus characterized could not be changed, however many times the property might be transferred, except where conveyed to an innocent purchaser for value and without notice or knowledge of the fraud. In other words, it is obviously immaterial, so far as the plaintiff—the actor in this suit—is concerned, whether the defendant stood or did not stand in pari delicto to the fraudulent creation of the trust which she accepted from Van Allstead and promised to execute. The question whether she stood in pari delicto to the fraudulent contract or as a particeps criminis in the fraud giving rise to it could be material only where she was also seeking affirmative relief as to the property, in which case, should she be found, equally with plaintiff, to be a party to the fraud, a court of equity would refuse to interfere in behalf of either.

But, in the case at bar, the plaintiff, according to his own admissions and the findings of the court, was a particeps doli in the transaction, and therefore, regardless of whether the defendant knew of the fraudulent creation of the trust when the duty of its execution was transferred to her, by her own consent, it may be, he is in no position to ask a court of equity to restore him to rights of which he, ex industria, divested himself in order to defraud others. "If a contract has been entered into through fraud, or to accomplish any fraudulent purpose, a court of equity will not, at the suit of one of the fraudulent parties—a particeps doli—while the agreement is still executory, either compel its execution or decree its cancellation, nor, after it has been executed, set it aside, and thus restore the plaintiff to the property or other interests which he had fraudulently transferred." Pomeroy, Eq. Juris, § 401, and cases cited in footnote thereof. In other words, as the same author declares, "any really unconscientious conduct, connected with the controversy to which he is a party, will repel him from the forum whose very foundation is good conscience." And in Alaniz v. Casenave, 91 Cal. 47, 27 Pac. 521, 523, Judge Temple said that "courts will not allow a trust to be proven by a party to the fraud, if the trust was created for a fraudulent purpose." Many other cases affirming the doctrine as thus stated may be found in the California reports.

It is very true that it may be looked upon as a harsh rule that will permit one not entitled to property to maintain a good title thereto by reason of the fraud of the person from whom he has obtained it without having paid any consideration therefor. The effect of this decision, unless the plaintiff has some efficacious legal remedy that will relieve him of his dilemma, will in practical effect be to confirm title in the defendant, unless the claims of the creditors of plaintiff are yet alive, in which event the property may be pursued and seized to satisfy such claims. But even if, under the circumstances here, the defendant may in effect be sustained in her fraudulent claim to the title to the property in dispute, on the other hand the harshness of such consequence falls upon one who would fraudulently conceal his property so as to escape the just demands of those having a claim upon it. The lien of the deficiency judgment against plaintiff, presumably alive when the fraudulent trust was created, would have attached to this property immediately had the deed from the Marshalls been executed in his name. This proposition he well understood, and now, if a court of equity will not, as it cannot, lend its aid to the consummation of his fraud, the penalty he must suffer can hardly be said to be unjust, even though one not legally entitled to do so may reap the fruits thereof. If the defendant may claim that he has suffered through the perfidy of his trustee, his creditors can likewise say that they have suffered through his perfidy. In any event, as stated, a court of conscience cannot consistently with the very principles which have occasioned its existence lend its aid to relieve a party from the results of his own fraud.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

16 Cal. App. 17

COOPER v. SPRING VALLEY WATER CO.
(Civ. 857.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. April 14, 1911. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court June 13, 1911.)

1. TRIAL (§ 235*)—INSTRUCTIONS—BURDEN OF PROOF.

In an action for conversion of corporate stock claimed to have been stolen by a third person, instructions that when the evidence is contradictory the decision on an issue must be according to the preponderance of the evidence; that to establish the theft plaintiff must produce satisfactory evidence; that it must be established by such positive proof as to preclude any other inference in the mind of a reasonable man; and that circumstances relied upon to establish the theft must be inconsistent with any other rational conclusion than that the stock was stolen—were erroneous as placing too great a burden of proof on plaintiff.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 539-548, 551; Dec. Dig. § 235.*]

2. EVIDENCE (§ 60*)—PRESUMPTIONS—INNOCENCE OF WRONG.

The presumption, in civil cases, that one is innocent of crime or wrong provided for by Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 1, controls as evidence only to the point that it is overcome by a preponderance of evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 81; Dec. Dig. § 60.*]

3. TRIAL (§ 234*)—INSTRUCTIONS—PRESUMPTION OF INNOCENCE.

In an action for conversion of corporate stock claimed to have been stolen by a third person, the principle of presumption of innocence held sufficiently covered by an instruction that innocence is always presumed, and that the presumption can be overcome only by satisfactory proof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 537; Dec. Dig. § 234.*]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1031*)—PREJUDICIAL ERROR—INSTRUCTIONS.

Conflicting instructions on burden of proof are presumed to have been prejudicial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4043; Dec. Dig. § 1031.*]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1068*)—REVIEW—PREJUDICE—INSTRUCTIONS.

Where error prejudicial to plaintiff-appellant, in instruction on the burden of proof, appears, and defendant-respondent challenges the sufficiency of the evidence to support a verdict in favor of appellant had one been rendered, the evidence must be tested by the rule applicable to a motion for nonsuit or a directed verdict; that is, truth of plaintiff's evidence is admitted, and every inference legitimately deducible therefrom should be interpreted most strongly against defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4227; Dec. Dig. § 1068.*]

6. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1011*)—REVIEW—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

A trial judge's determination on conflicting evidence cannot be disturbed on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3983; Dec. Dig. § 1011.*]

7. TRIAL (§ 251*)—INSTRUCTIONS—APPLICABILITY TO ISSUES.

An instruction inapplicable to the issues is improper.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 587-595; Dec. Dig. § 251.*]

8. TRIAL (§ 252*)—INSTRUCTIONS—ASSUMPTION OF FACTS.

An instruction assuming a fact not in evidence is improper.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 596-612; Dec. Dig. § 252.*]

9. TROVER AND CONVERSION (§ 67*)—INSTRUCTIONS—NOTICE OF PLAINTIFF'S RIGHTS.

Where, in an action for converting stock claimed to have been stolen by a third person, defendant's attorney argued that the notice served by plaintiff on defendant of his right to the stock was insufficient, it was error to refuse to instruct that, upon receiving notice of the conflicting claims to the stock, defendant could lawfully have refused to transfer it, and could have maintained interpleader to compel litigation of such claims, but that defendant could decide without the aid of a court who it would recognize as the owner, taking the risk of having to pay the true owner the value of the stock on it appearing that the person recognizing it was not the true owner.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trover and Conversion, Cent. Dig. §§ 295-303; Dec. Dig. § 67.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank J. Murasky, Judge.

Action by Erwin M. Cooper, executor, against the Spring Valley Water Company. From a judgment refusing a new trial on verdict for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

W. C. Sharpstein, for appellant. Page, McCutchen & Knight, for respondent.

LENNON, P. J. In this action the plaintiff, as the executor of the last will and testament of John H. Lochhead, deceased, sought to recover damages of the defendant for the conversion of 40 shares of the capital stock of the "Spring Valley Water Works," alleged to have been the property of the estate of said deceased. Plaintiff's complaint is in the usual form, and the answer of the defendant consists of denials only. The case was tried with a jury. The verdict was for the defendant, and judgment was entered accordingly. From the order denying his motion for a new trial, plaintiff appeals. The appeal is prosecuted under the provisions of section 941b of the Code of Civil Procedure, and is presented to this court upon the engrossed statement of the case used upon appellant's motion for a new trial.

Appellant's assignments of error relate exclusively to the giving of certain instructions, and the refusal to give others requested by appellant. It is one of the contentions of respondent that the jury arrived at the only verdict possible under the evidence, and, therefore, assuming that the court erred to the prejudice of appellant in its charge to the jury, the judgment should not be disturbed.

This view of the case requires a statement of so much of the evidence as will illustrate the points presented by the respective parties; and inasmuch as appellant's résumé of the evidence given upon the whole case is clear, concise, and undisputed, we herewith quote and adopt it as a statement of the material facts of the case:

"The evidence on the part of plaintiff showed that the stock in controversy stood on the books of the company in the name of John H. Lochhead at the time of his death; that for a number of months prior to the death of said Lochhead one George M. Terrill collected the dividends on said stock pursuant to a written order given him by Lochhead more than a year prior to the latter's death; that these dividends were paid by Terrill to Lochhead to the date of the latter's death, which event occurred the 4th day of May, 1899; that the certificate evidencing these shares was in Lochhead's possession and indorsed as late as October, 1898; that, although Terrill had been attending Lochhead as the latter's physician for a number of years, he had on several occasions admitted that he was serving Lochhead without compensation because Lochhead was himself a physician; that as late as April 1, 1899, about five weeks before Lochhead's death, and three months after Terrill claimed the stock had been transferred to him in payment of his services, Terrill, in a conversation with an intimate friend of Lochhead's, spoke as though he had not been paid; that immediately after Lochhead's death plaintiff had conversations with Terrill in which the latter did not claim ownership of the stock, but that he had it in his possession as security for the payment of his services; that thereupon plaintiff served a written notice on the company to the effect that the stock in question belonged to Lochhead's estate; that the certificate was indorsed and was believed to be in the possession of Terrill, and forbidding transfer of it; that Terrill presented the stock for transfer after the receipt of this notice, but transfer was refused; that subsequently it was presented by the First National Bank, and transfer was made to it; and that the value of the stock on the day of its cancellation and transfer to the First National Bank was $102 a share.

"On the part of defendant the evidence showed that Terrill was Lochhead's physician and had been serving him for eight years; that in January, 1899, Lochhead indorsed and transferred the stock to Terrill in payment of his services and upon his promise to pay Lochhead the dividends on the stock as long as Lochhead lived; that in the same month Terrill pledged the stock to the First National Bank for a loan made him, where it remained until Lochhead's death."

Upon the impanelment of the jury plaintiff's attorney made an opening statement, wherein he said: "The theory of the plaintiff in this case is that the stock was stolen by Dr. Terrill either during Dr. Lochhead's last illness or after his death. * * * The testimony in regard to the theft of the stock will necessarily be what is known as 'circumstantial'; that is, we will not be able to produce any witness who saw the actual taking of the stock, but we expect to introduce evidence that will satisfy your minds of the fact that Dr. Terrill did steal the stock."

The defendant in turn claimed that the stock in controversy had been indorsed and transferred to Dr. Terrill for a valuable consideration.

[1] The court's charge to the jury included the following instructions:

"No. 2. In civil cases, and this is a civil case, the affirmative of the issue must be proved, and when the evidence is contradictory the decision must be according to the preponderance of the evidence."

"No. 20. The court further instructs you that, if loss or damage must be suffered by one of two equally innocent parties, then and in that event the loss or damage must be borne by the party whose negligence has made the loss or damage possible, and, in this case, the court instructs you that the plaintiff, as the executor of the last will of Dr. Lochhead, stands in the same position, relative to this stock, as Dr. Lochhead would stand if he were now living.

"No. 21. The court instructs you further that, in order to establish the theft of this stock by Terrill, the plaintiff must produce satisfactory evidence of that fact.

"No. 22. Suspicion will not warrant a verdict of theft; it must be established by such positive proof of actual theft or circumstances as to preclude any other inference so as to convince the mind of a reasonable man. Innocence is always presumed, and the presumption cannot be overcome except by satisfactory proof to the contrary. It is also presumed that the ordinary course of business has been followed until the contrary is shown by satisfactory evidence. If you believe that this stock came into the possession of the bank in January, 1899, and that during the life of Lochhead no claim was made by him that the stock had been stolen, you can consider that circumstance.

"No. 23. Circumstances relied on to establish the theft of this stock by Dr. Terrill must not only be consistent with the hypothesis that he stole such stock, but they must also be inconsistent with any other rational conclusion, and, where there is a failure of proof in a particular necessary to establish such theft, the whole chain of circumstances fails, and your verdict should be for defendant."

Appellant complains—and we think justly—that the charge of the court, in so far as it attempted to define the amount and quality of proof required of appellant in order to establish the alleged theft of the stock, imposed upon him a burden of proof greater than that required by law.

"In civil cases the affirmative must be proved, and when the evidence is contradictory the decision must be made according to the preponderance of the evidence. * * * Code Civ. Proc. § 2061, subd. 5. In other words, "the result should follow the preponderance of the evidence" (2 Whart. Crim. Ev. 1246), and this rule applies to all civil cases alike, even though the theory of the case involves, as it does here, an accusation of felony (Brown v. Tourtelotte, 24 Colo. 204, 50 Pac. 195; Mead v. Husted, 52 Conn. 56, 52 Am. Rep. 554). This was declared to be so by our Supreme Court as early as the case of Ford v. Chambers, 19 Cal. 143. Subsequently, in the case of Merk v. Gelzhaeuser, 50 Cal. 631, the court, without considering Ford v. Chambers, supra, declared that section 2061, subd. 5, of the Code of Civil Procedure, was but an affirmation of the general rule at common law, and announced the doctrine that, in a civil case involving an accusation of crime, the accused "would be entitled to the benefit of any reasonable doubt of his guilt in the minds of the jury, in the same manner as in a criminal trial."

This construction of the statute, however, is in conflict with the rule prescribed in Murphy v. Waterhouse, 113 Cal. 467, 45 Pac. 866, 54 Am. St. Rep. 365, and it is expressly repudiated in Hearne v. De Young, 119 Cal. 670, 52 Pac. 150, 499.

It is the generally accepted doctrine in other jurisdictions that in civil cases, where a criminal act is directly pleaded or only incidentally involved, such criminal act may be established by a preponderance of evidence. Kane v. Hibernia Ins. Co., 39 N. J. Law, 697, 23 Am. Rep. 239.

It may be safely asserted that there is no rule of law sanctioned by the weight of authority which requires the plaintiff in a civil action, even though the result thereof imputes a crime, to prove his case with the same certainty that is required in a criminal prosecution. N. Y. & B. Ferry Co. v. Moore, 102 N. Y. 667, 6 N. E. 293; U. S. Ex. Co. v. Jenkins, 73 Wis. 471, 41 N. W. 957.

The reason for the rule limiting the burden of a plaintiff's proof in such cases to a preponderance of evidence is founded largely "in the importance of preserving the distinction between civil and criminal cases with the growth of the criminal law. Almost every tortious act is by statute made indictable if done willfully or maliciously; and the courts should be reluctant to adopt, in civil cases, the rules peculiar to criminal law, lest wrongdoers be enabled to avoid civil liability, as well as escape criminal responsibility, under cover of the rules of criminal prosecution, the object of which is punishment only." Kane v. Hibernia Ins. Co., supra.

Evidence sufficient to convince beyond a reasonable doubt necessarily excludes every other hypothesis but that of a defendant's guilt (Stout v. State, 90 Ind. 1, 2; State v. Wilcox, 132 N. C. 1120, 44 S. E. 625; Com. v. Costley, 118 Mass. 1, 2; Carlton v. People, 150 Ill. 181, 37 N. E. 244, 41 Am. St. Rep. 346; Catasauqua v. Hopkins, 141 Pa. 30, 21 Atl. 638); and therefore the trial court, in that portion of its charge herein quoted, in effect told the jury that the plaintiff must establish his case, as far as the alleged theft of the stock was concerned, beyond a reasonable doubt.

This is not only against what we conceive to be the settled rule of law, but it is opposed to the express language of the statute.

It is insisted upon behalf of respondent that the instructions numbered 22 and 23 simply told the jury that, inasmuch as the defendant's witness Terrill was incidentally charged with the commission of a crime, the presumption of innocence, which obtains in civil as well as criminal cases, should be given proper consideration, and that to overcome this presumption not only "satisfactory" but "convincing" proof was necessary; that, in any event, the charge of the court as a whole is free from prejudicial error because at the outset the court instructed the jury that "in civil cases the affirmative of the issue must be proved, and when the evidence is contradictory the decision must be made according to the preponderance of evidence."

[2] "That a person is innocent of crime or wrong" (Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 1) is a presumption of law which applies in civil and criminal cases (Hunter v. Hunter, 111 Cal. 267, 43 Pac. 756, 31 L. R. A. 411, 52 Am. St. Rep. 180), and the court or jury must find in accordance with this presumption unless it be controverted and overcome by other evidence (section 1961, Code Civ. Proc.; Bickerdike v. State, 144 Cal. 698, 78 Pac. 277). In other words, the presumption that a person is innocent of crime or wrong is itself evidence and controls only to the point that it is overcome in a civil case by a preponderance of evidence and in a criminal case by proof beyond a reasonable doubt. Kurz v. Doerr, 86 App. Div. 507, 83 N. Y. Supp. 738; McBee v. Bowman, 89 Tenn. 132, 14 S. W. 481.

[3] The general proposition of law with reference to the scope and effect of the presumption of innocence was sufficiently covered in that portion of the trial court's charge, wherein the jury was told that "innocence is always presumed, and the presumption cannot be overcome except by satisfactory proof to the contrary." Satisfactory evidence is defined by section 1835 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and declared to be sufficient of itself to justify a verdict, and it has been said that, "when a matter is proved to the satisfaction of a jury by a preponderance of evidence, then it can be affirmed that they are convinced of its truth, and being thus convinced of its truth they can base a verdict upon it." Treadwell v. Whittier, 80 Cal. 584, 22 Pac. 266, 5 L. R. A. 498, 13 Am. St. Rep. 175. All that followed in the charge of the court cannot be construed as a summarization of the rule by which the jury was to be governed in weighing the presumption of innocence. On the contrary, it was calculated to, and doubtless did, mislead the jury as to the quantity and quality of evidence which the law required of plaintiff to support his claim that the stock in controversy was stolen. It was an unauthorized enlargement of plaintiff's burden of proof, and to that extent gave to defendant an advantage greater than that granted by the mere presumption of innocence.

Counsel for respondent cites the case of Hunter v. Hunter, supra, in support of his assertion that the presumption of innocence, in a civil case, can be overcome only by "conclusive" proof. He relies largely upon an excerpt from the opinion of the cited case, which in turn was quoted from Sharp v. Johnson, 22 Ark. 79, and is as follows: "A charge of an act of immorality or of disobedience of a positive law will not be received unless supported by direct evidence. Circumstances showing probability merely are not enough; the fact averred must be conclusively proved."

One phase of Hunter v. Hunter involved the question of the supremacy of conflicting presumptions, and it is apparent that the language quoted in the opinion, and now relied upon by respondent, was employed by the author of the opinion in passing and merely to point the discussion of the case. We do not understand the ultimate decision in that case to declare, as a rule of law, that the measure of proof required to overcome the presumption of innocence is the same in civil and criminal cases.

[4] The general instructions given in obedience to subdivision 5 of section 2061 of the Code of Civil Procedure, declaring that the preponderance of evidence should control the result, made no reference to the plaintiff's claim of theft, while that issue was specifically committed to the jury's consideration by the instruction complained of. It requires no argument to show that the charge of the court given upon the general issue is in irreconcilable conflict with the instructions upon the special incidental issue of the alleged theft of the stock. "In such a case it is impossible to determine which of the conflicting rules presented to them was followed by the jury, and the error * * * of the instructions must be deemed to be prejudicial." Rathbun v. White, 157 Cal. 253, 107 Pac. 309.

[5] Respondent's contention that the jury arrived at the only verdict possible under the evidence challenges the sufficiency of the evidence to support a verdict in favor of appellant had one been rendered in his favor. Therefore, as suggested by counsel, "the evidence must be tested by the rule applicable to a motion for a nonsuit or to a directed verdict at the close of the evidence."

Tested by this rule, the truth of plaintiff's evidence, for the purpose of this discussion, is admitted, and every inference of fact which can be legitimately drawn therefrom should be interpreted most strongly against the defendant. Wright v. Roseberry, 81 Cal. 87, 22 Pac. 336; Warner v. Darrow, 91 Cal. 312, 27 Pac. 737; Goldstone v. Merchants', etc., Co., 123 Cal. 632, 56 Pac. 776; Hanley v. Cal., etc., 127 Cal. 232, 59 Pac. 577, 47 L. R. A. 597. There was some conflict in the evidence (Cooper v. Spring Valley Waterworks, 145 Cal. 207, 78 Pac. 654), and we are not prepared to say that the evidence on behalf of appellant, if believed by the jury, was wholly insufficient to support a verdict in his favor. On the other hand, we do not wish to be understood as intimating that the evidence compelled a verdict against respondent.

[6] In the face of a conflict of evidence, we are not required, nor permitted, to speculate upon the sufficiency of the evidence to support a verdict in favor of either party. The determination of such a question rests exclusively in the discretion of the trial judge.

[7] The subject-matter of instruction No. 20 hereinbefore quoted embraced the doctrine of equitable estoppel (generally cited and applied in support of the claims of innocent third party purchasers), the origin of which is to be found in the maxim, "Where one of two equally innocent persons must suffer from the fraud of a third, he who first trusted must first suffer." This instruction is vigorously assailed by counsel for appellant. Inasmuch, however, as counsel for respondent consider that the principle of law enunciated therein was inapplicable to any phase of the case, it will suffice to say that the instruction should not have been requested or given.

"Great caution should be exercised in applying this principle, and the court should be satisfied that the case is one calling for its application before the question is submitted to the jury as to which of the parties is entirely in delicto." Davis v. Davis, 26 Cal. 45, 85 Am. Dec. 157.

"It is good and useful in its place, but will always make trouble if not kept where it belongs." Rapps v. Gottlieb, 142 N. Y. 164, 36 N. E. 1052.

[8] A fact not in evidence (that Dr. Lochhead knew the stock in controversy was stolen) is assumed in instruction No. 22, and to this extent the instruction was erroneous.

[9] In his argument to the jury respondent's attorney contended that "the notice served by Mr. Cooper on the defendant was entirely insufficient because it was not stated in the notice that the stock had been stolen; that, if the plaintiff had notified the defendant that the stock had been stolen, of course the defendant would have refused to transfer the stock, but defendant had no right, upon the mere claim of plaintiff that the stock belonged to Dr. Lochhead's estate, to refuse to transfer it when the certificate was presented with the genuine indorsement of Dr. Lochhead upon it; that, if plaintiff believed that Dr. Lochhead's estate owned the stock, it was his duty to bring suit either against the defendant to enjoin the transfer, or against Dr. Terrill to recover the stock, but it was not the duty of defendant to take any action whatever; * * * that, if it had refused to transfer the stock, it would have been subjected to a suit by Dr. Terrill or the First National Bank."

In view of this argument, appellant's counsel requested the court to charge the jury that: "In this case, the evidence is undisputed that, before it canceled the certificate in controversy, defendant was notified by plaintiff that the stock belonged to Dr. Lochhead's estate, and was forbidden to permit a transfer of it. Upon receipt of this notice defendant could lawfully have refused to transfer the stock, and could have commenced an action without expense to itself against the persons claiming to own the stock, to compel them to litigate their claims to it, and when the court had decided who the owner was defendant could have recognized such person as the owner without incurring any liability to any of the other claimants. It was not obliged to pursue this course, however; but it had the right to decide without the aid of the court who it would recognize as the owner of the stock; but it took the risk of having to pay the true owner the value of the stock if it turned out that the person it had recognized as the owner was not the true owner."

This requested instruction stated a correct legal principle. Code Civ. Proc. § 386; Dows v. Kidder, 84 N. Y. 121; Wetherly v. Straus, 93 Cal. 283, 28 Pac. 1045; Wilson v. Nugent, 125 Cal. 280, 57 Pac. 1008. And, in view of the argument of respondent's counsel, it was pertinent and should have been given. Todd v. Todd, 221 Ill. 410, 77 N. E. 680; Yore v. Mueller, etc., 147 Mo. 679, 49 S. W. 855; Pryor v. Morgan, 170 Pa. 568, 33 Atl. 98; Norton v. Galveston, etc. (Tex. Civ. App.) 108 S. W. 1044. It is true that certain instructions dealing with general principles of law applicable to the facts of the case ignored appellant's claim that the stock had been stolen; but this issue was elsewhere in the court's charge sufficiently covered, and we are satisfied that, upon this phase of the case, the charge of the court was not in conflict.

The order appealed from is reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: HALL, J.; KERRIGAN, J.

16 Cal. App. 28

PEOPLE v. BALMAIN. (Cr. 307.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. April 14, 1911.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 696*)—APPEAL—RULINGS ON EVIDENCE—OBJECTIONS WAIVED.

When evidence is admitted at a trial on condition that it be subsequently connected with other evidence in the case, the burden is on him objecting to move to strike it out if the connection be not made.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1639-1644; Dec. Dig. § 696.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1120*)—REVIEW—RECORD.

Error in excluding a letter cannot be considered when it is not incorporated in the record.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2931-2937; Dec. Dig. § 1120.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1130*)—APPEAL—BRIEF.

When counsel fails to cite in his brief the folio or page of the record containing matter relied on as error, such part of the brief will be disregarded.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2965-2970; Dec. Dig. § 1130.*]

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 400*)—EVIDENCE—PEDIGREE—FAMILY BIBLE.

Even in cases of pedigree, entries in a family Bible are but secondary evidence of the facts stated, and are not admissible as evidence of the fact when the persons having actual knowledge of the fact are alive.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 880-882; Dec. Dig. § 400.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank H. Dunne, Judge.

William Balmain was convicted of abduction, and from the judgment, and an order denying him a new trial he appeals. Affirmed.

John T. Williams and Wm. A. Jackson, for appellant. Attorney General Webb, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. The defendant was convicted of abduction under the provisions of section 267 of the Penal Code. This appeal is from the judgment and from the order denying him a new trial.

The evidence in the case favorable to the prosecution is, very briefly, as follows: Some time early in the month of April, 1910, the defendant met Henrietta Nelson, a girl less than 17 years of age, at a "nickel dance" in San Francisco. Their relations became intimate, and not more than a week later she, at his earnest solicitation, left her home, where she resided with her mother, and became a prostitute and an inmate of a house of ill fame in the town of Point Arena.

The offense of which the defendant was convicted is defined by section 267 of the Penal Code, which reads as follows: "Every person who takes away any female under the age of eighteen years from her father, mother, guardian, or other person having the legal charge of her person, without their consent, for the purpose of prostitution, is punishable by imprisonment in the state prison not exceeding five years, and a fine not exceeding one thousand dollars." Defendant makes no claim that the verdict is not supported by the evidence; but he relies on certain rulings of the court relating to the admission and rejection of evidence.

1. The first objection is concerning the declaration of Henrietta Nelson on her direct examination that the defendant had received a letter from Point Arena. Defendant asserts that this statement was pure hearsay, and that his motion to strike it out should have prevailed. The point is not well taken. It was the theory of the prosecution that the defendant had taken the prosecutrix from her home, and had arranged to, and in fact did, place her in a house of prostitution. In attempting to sustain this theory the following took place: "Q. (By the district attorney): Now, then, did you ever have any conversation with him relative to your leaving home? A. Not right away we didn't. Q. You had some conversation later on? A. He didn't say right away about going away, or anything; not until he got a letter of some kind. Q. Did he say anything to you about your going away? A. Not then. After he got a letter from Point Arena then he started in to talk about it. Q. Did he get a letter from Point Arena? A. That is what he said. I never seen it. Mr. Williams: I move to strike out the answer as being hearsay. Mr. Berry: I think I shall connect that. If the defendant himself stated he got a letter, and I connect it with the defendant, it will be quite material. Mr. Williams: I would like to have my objection acted upon. The Court: I will overrule the objection. Mr. Williams: Exception. Mr. Berry: Did he tell you from whom the letter came? A. He said from Point Arena. Mr. Williams: I make the same objection to this question that is now asked, and upon the further ground that there is no evidence upon which this question can be predicated. If the letter has been received, it has not been proved. The Court: The prosecuting attorney has said that he will make the connection. Upon that showing I will overrule the objection. Mr. Williams: Note an exception." No error was committed with reference to this testimony. The two answers which the defendant sought to have stricken out were, under the circumstances of the case, in the nature of admissions by the defendant covering competent and relevant matter, and were therefore admissible. But if this be not true, as the testimony was admitted conditionally, and as the defendant failed to move to strike it out on the ground that the promised connection of the testimony had not been made, any possible error in its admission must be deemed waived.

[1] When evidence is admitted at a trial on condition that it be subsequently connected with other evidence in the case, it is a principle of law too well settled to require the citation of authority that the burden is cast upon the person objecting to move to strike it out if the connection be not made, and failing to do so he is not in a position to complain of its admission.

[2] 2. Defendant next claims that a letter dated July 4, 1910, from the prosecutrix to May Taylor, the proprietress of the house of prostitution in Point Arena, should have been admitted in evidence. Defendant stated that this letter disclosed that at its date the prosecutrix was in San Francisco, and that she desired to return to the house of prostitution in Point Arena; and he argues that this circumstance tends to prove that she originally entered the said house voluntarily, and not at the instance of the defendant. This letter was written about two months and a half after the prosecutrix became an inmate of the house in question; and we are inclined to think that whatever tendency it had was to show that she had become accustomed to the life of a prostitute, and was willing, reluctantly perhaps, to continue it. Assuming, however, that it had any tendency as suggested by defendant, still its bearing in that regard would have been too slight a circumstance upon which to base a reversal of the case. Furthermore, in order to properly raise the point, the defendant should have had the letter incorporated into the record. This he has not done.

3. Defendant also complains of the admission of the following testimony elicited by the district attorney from the mother of the prosecutrix: "Q. Did Henrietta discuss with you or state to you that the defendant in this case had talked with her about going away, or that he had endeavored to influence her to go away? A. Yes, sir. Mr. Williams: I object to that as hearsay. The Court: Overruled." The question called for hearsay testimony, but the answer was immaterial, and, moreover, the objection to the question came too late; and, as no motion was made to strike it out, the defendant cannot now be heard to complain.

4. Defendant, under heading numbered 5 of his brief, complains that the court allowed, over objection, certain leading questions. Accepting appellant's quotation of the testimony as correct, still there is no merit in his position. Another reason, however, for holding against this contention, is that no folio or page of the record is cited.

[3] Whenever counsel in a brief fails to comply with this requirement, that part of the brief will be disregarded. People v. Chutnacut, 141 Cal. 683, 75 Pac. 340.

5. On the day that the prosecutrix arrived at Point Arena, May Taylor wrote a letter to the former's mother, which was dated not at Point Arena, but at Fitchburg. Its evident purpose was to deceive the mother as to the whereabouts and occupation of her daughter. It read as follows: "Dear Madam: Your daughter was with me for a week. Would like to have her back as my husband is away, and babe and I are alone, and I always keep a girl when he is gone. Yours rep. Write me, Mrs. Taylor, Fitchburg, Calif. Alameda Co. P. S.—The reason why she did not come was that she wanted to get money to pay for her room, so she waited until I paid her." This letter was admitted upon the cross-examination of the witness, who was called for the defendant, and gave testimony tending to exculpate him. Defendant contends that there is nothing in the record indicating that the letter was written under the direction of the defendant, and that, therefore, its admission over his objection and exception was prejudicial error. If this letter did not tend to show the interest of the witness, or to contradict or discredit her testimony, as claimed by the prosecution, it had no bearing in the case either for or against the defendant, and therefore the error, if any, in admitting it, was purely abstract, and furnishes no ground for the reversal of the judgment. People v.

Winters, 125 Cal. 331, 57 Pac. 1067; People v. Glaze, 139 Cal. 161, 72 Pac. 965; People v. Stokes, 5 Cal. App. 213, 89 Pac. 997.

[4] 6. Defendant contends that the court erred in refusing his motion for the issuance of a subpoena duces tecum to be served in Alameda county on the grandmother of the prosecutrix, and having for its object the production of the family Bible of said grandmother then in her possession. The production of this Bible seems to have been desired in order that counsel for defendant might examine it, to ascertain if it contained any entry as to the date of the birth of the prosecutrix, and, if such entry should show the date of the birth to be as long as 18 years before the date of the alleged offense, to use the same as evidence of that fact. The motion was made upon an affidavit, but, as this affidavit is not contained in the record, we are confined to such matters as do appear and which bear upon the question involved. For a proper understanding of the question involved in all its aspects, a somewhat extended statement of the facts is necessary. The prosecutrix on Tuesday, the 18th day of October, 1910, testified on cross-examination that she was then 16 years of age, and would be 17 years of age on the 18th day of November, 1910. She also testified that a record of her birth was contained in the family Bible of her grandmother, which was then at the residence of her grandmother in East Oakland. On Thursday, October 20th, the mother of the prosecutrix testified to the age of said prosecutrix, and that she was born on the 18th day of November, 1893. (The offense was committed in April, 1910.) On cross-examination she testified that a record of such birth was in the Bible of her mother (grandmother of the prosecutrix). It further appears that she gave similar testimony as to the record of said birth at the preliminary examination of the defendant in the police court. On Friday, October 21st, the mother of the prosecutrix was recalled by the defense, and testified that she had been to the home of her mother since last on the witness stand, and had ascertained that the said Bible contained no record of the birth of the prosecutrix; that it contained only the record of the births of her mother's children, and no record of the births of grandchildren. Later, after the defense had examined several witnesses and rested its case, and the prosecution had examined several witnesses in rebuttal, including the mother of the prosecutrix, and immediately after she had stated that her mother was in court, defendant made the application for the subpoena for the production of the Bible. The court, however, directed the grandmother to take the witness stand, and the appellant stated that he would reserve the motion until the testimony was in. The grandmother thereupon testified that she had at her home a family Bible, and that it contained only entries as to the births of her own children, and that there was no entry in said Bible as to the birth of the prosecutrix. She further testified that she was present at the birth of the prosecutrix, and that it occurred in November, 1893. Upon the close of her testimony, defendant stated that he renewed his motion, and it was denied. It may be noted that, inasmuch as the grandmother was in court, it was quite unnecessary to obtain a subpoena, but the object sought could have been attained by an order to her from the court to produce the Bible; but looking to the substance of the motion rather than to its form we will now discuss the merits of the contention of the appellant.

In discussing the question before this court, as well as in presenting his motion to the trial court, appellant has made the fundamental error of assuming that an entry as to the birth of the prosecutrix in the Bible in question would be evidence as to the date of her birth. Such is not the law. Even in cases of pedigree (and this is not a case of pedigree, but only a case where the date of a birth is involved) entries in a family Bible are but secondary evidence of the facts stated, and are not admissible as evidence of the fact when the persons having actual knowledge of the fact are alive, and can be and are produced in court. This is the rule laid down, after a very full discussion of the law in People v. Mayne, 118 Cal. 516, 50 Pac. 654, 62 Am. St. Rep. 256, in which case a conviction of rape was reversed, because the court had allowed entries in a family Bible as to the date of the birth of the girl to be introduced in evidence when the mother was alive and present. The rule laid down in the Mayne Case is fully supported by the cases therein cited. McCausland v. Fleming, 63 Pa. 36; Leggett v. Boyd, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 376; Greenleaf v. Dubuque, etc., R. R. Co., 30 Iowa, 301; Campbell v. Wilson, 23 Tex. 252, 76 Am. Dec. 67; Robinson v. Blakely, 4 Rich. (S. C.) 586, 55 Am. Dec. 703. The mother of the prosecutrix had actual knowledge of the date of the birth of her child, and any entry in the Bible not made by her could not be used to contradict her testimony as to such date. If it be said that she testified that the Bible contained no entry on the subject, and that if it in fact did contain such entry the production of the Bible might contradict her testimony upon that point, the answer is that her testimony, simply that the Bible contained no entry on the subject, was as to a purely collateral matter brought out upon cross-examination, and she could not be contradicted thereon. There is no pretense that she made any entry in the Bible in question, or that she used it to refresh her memory, or based her testimony thereon. She had actual knowledge of the fact and date of the birth of her child, and testified from such knowledge. Any entry or statement in such Bible made by any other person concerned neither her nor the prosecutrix. The only use that could be made of any entry as to the birth of the girl would be for the purpose of contradicting and thus impeaching the testimony of the person who made the entry, if it should prove to be inconsistent with the testimony of such person.

When the motion to obtain a production of the Bible was made, no one had testified who is in any way claimed to have made an entry therein. When the motion was made, it is apparent that it was only sought to procure an inspection of the Bible to ascertain, first, if it contained any entry of the birth of the prosecutrix, and if it did, and such entry was inconsistent with the testimony of the girl and her mother, to introduce it as substantive evidence of the fact as to the date of the birth in question. This could not be done. People v. Mayne, supra.

It may be said that, if the Bible did contain an entry made by the grandmother as to the birth of the girl, such entry might be used to contradict the testimony of the grandmother, if it in fact proved to be inconsistent with her testimony as to the date of such birth. But, when the motion was made, the grandmother had not testified. The purpose of the motion was thus not to obtain evidence that might possibly impeach her. She subsequently did testify, and the motion was renewed, on the original grounds, and no suggestion was made that the book was sought to obtain possibly impeaching testimony against the testimony of the grandmother.

There is nothing in the record to suggest that the age of the girl was not as testified to by herself, her mother, and her grandmother. According to the evidence, she was still under 17 years of age at the time of the trial, and was but 16 years and 5 months of age at the time of the commission of the offense. There is no evidence to the contrary, and there is nothing in the record that suggests that her appearance belied the testimony. If it did, the able and industrious counsel for defendant would doubtless have taken timely steps to procure evidence as to her age, even to the production of this Bible, for he had been apprised, not only of its existence, but that it might contain a record of her birth, as early as at the preliminary examination of defendant in the police court.

It is clear that the court did not err nor abuse its discretion in denying defendant's motion for the production of the Bible.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; HALL, J.

16 Cal. App. 96

CARGNANI v. CARGNANI. (Civ. 823.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 26, 1911.)

1. DIVORCE (§ 150*)—FINDINGS—SUFFICIENCY.

Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 632, 633, requiring a decision to be in writing and to consist of facts found and conclusions of law separately stated, a finding in a divorce suit "that the defendant has been guilty of extreme cruelty towards the plaintiff" is a mere conclusion, and furnishes no basis for a judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. § 506; Dec. Dig. § 150.*]

2. TRIAL (§ 392*)—FINDINGS—SCOPE.

A trial court must find on all the material issues independent of any request by either party.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 916; Dec. Dig. § 392.*]

3. NEW TRIAL (§ 79*)—GROUND—"DECISION AGAINST LAW."

A judgment based upon findings not determining all the material issues is a "decision against the law," for which a new trial may be had.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. § 165½; Dec. Dig. § 79.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 8, p. 7629.]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 867*)—REVIEW—FINDINGS.

Appeal from an order denying a motion for a new trial on the ground the decision is against the law presents for review objection to the trial court's failure to find on all the material issues.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3480; Dec. Dig. § 867.*]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 864*) — WHEN PROPER.

Where a trial court's decision is unsupported by the facts found, the remedy is by appeal from the judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 864.*]

6. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 223*)—REVIEW—OBJECTIONS NOT MADE BELOW.

Objection that the findings do not support the judgment appealed from can be made for the first time on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 223.*]

7. DIVORCE (§ 150*)—FINDINGS ON CROSS-COMPLAINT—NECESSITY.

Failure to find upon the material allegations of a cross-complaint in a divorce suit is not excusable because the court found for plaintiff on the complaint.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 499-508; Dec. Dig. § 150.*]

8. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 197*)—OBJECTIONS IN LOWER COURT—COMPLAINT—VARIANCE—WAIVER.

In a divorce suit, objections to testimony concerning instances of cruelty other than those alleged cannot be made by defendant for the first time on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1423-1441; Dec. Dig. § 197.*]

9. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 931*)—REVIEW—PRESUMPTIONS.

It appearing that the trial court disbelieved defendant and her witnesses, it will be presumed that the disbelief was justified by attending circumstances.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3762; Dec. Dig. § 931.*]

10. DIVORCE (§ 286*)—REVIEW—DISPOSITION OF PROPERTY.

Though under Civ. Code, § 146, subd. 1, one granted a divorce for extreme cruelty may be awarded all the property, under section 148, the appellate court can review the action and make such order as is deemed proper.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 769, 770; Dec. Dig. § 286.*]

11. DIVORCE (§ 194*)—COSTS—ALLOWANCE—“DISCRETION.”

The discretion under Civ. Code, § 137, vested in the trial court in a divorce suit to allow the wife costs on appeal, is a discretion guided by law based upon sound judgment and inspired by the desire to promote justice, and must not be arbitrary or capricious.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. § 580; Dec. Dig. § 194.*]

12. DIVORCE (§ 194*)—COSTS OF APPEAL—ALLOWANCE—JUDICIAL DISCRETION.

On awarding a husband a divorce and all the property, it was an abuse of discretion to refuse to make some allowance for the wife's costs on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. § 580; Dec. Dig. § 194.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; T. W. Harris, Judge.

Action by Michele Cargnani against Philomena Cargnani. From the judgment and from orders denying new trial and overruling motion to require plaintiff to pay defendant's costs and expenses of appeal, defendant appeals. Reversed.

A. A. Montague, for appellant. Crosby & Richardson, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The appeal is from the judgment and order denying the motion for a new trial and also from an order denying defendant's motion to require plaintiff to pay said defendant's costs and expenses of appeal. An interlocutory decree of divorce was granted plaintiff on the ground of extreme cruelty, and all the community property, including a homestead, was assigned to him absolutely. Defendant, in her answer, denied all the specified acts of cruelty charged by plaintiff, and she filed a cross-complaint setting up a cause of action against him for divorce on the ground also of extreme cruelty.

Of the various contentions made by appellant, we consider first the question as to the sufficiency of the findings. These are very brief, and, aside from the formal recital of the conjugal relation, the place and date of marriage and a statutory residence in Oakland, county of Alameda, they are as follows: “(4) That the defendant has been guilty of extreme cruelty towards the plaintiff. (5) That the property herein mentioned and described in the cross-complaint is community property (describing it). (6) That the allegation of plaintiff alleging that adultery was committed by the defendant and cross-complainant was not proven to the satisfaction of this court, for the reason that the testimony of the plaintiff regarding said allegation was not corroborated by other testimony as required by law, and for that reason the court finds that defendant did not commit adultery.” Then follow the conclusions of law that the plaintiff is entitled to an interlocutory decree of divorce and to be awarded all of the property. The only finding, therefore, as to a disputed fact is in relation to the charge of adultery, and that is in favor of defendant.

[1] Plaintiff's complaint exhibits some nine distinct acts of cruelty, and the defendant's cross-complaint, twelve or thirteen, and, with the aforesaid exception, the court has entirely ignored them in its decision; for it cannot be, and is not, disputed that the so-called finding “that the defendant has been guilty of extreme cruelty towards the plaintiff” is but a mere conclusion, and it furnishes no basis for the judgment. A complaint containing merely such an allegation as a ground for divorce would manifestly fail to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. Under our practice the decision of the court must be in writing and filed within 30 days after the cause is submitted. Section 632, Code Civ. Proc. It consists of the facts found and conclusions of law separately stated. Section 633, Code Civ. Proc.

[2, 3] It is settled beyond controversy that it is the duty of the court to find on all the material issues, and a failure in that respect is ground for a new trial as a “decision against law.” “A judgment based upon findings which do not determine all such issues is, in our opinion, ‘a decision against law’ for which a new trial may be had. In such case a re-examination of the facts becomes necessary in order that the issues of fact may be determined.” Knight v. Roche, 56 Cal. 15; Adams v. Helbing, 107 Cal. 298, 40 Pac. 422.

[4] That the “decision is against law” was one of the grounds urged in the court below, hence it is reviewable on an appeal from the order denying the motion. Haight v. Tryon, 112 Cal. 4, 44 Pac. 318. This duty of the court is entirely independent of any request of the parties or either of them. Lamb v. Harbaugh, 105 Cal. 680, 39 Pac. 56.

[5] This defect in the findings is also fatal to the judgment for the reason that no facts are found sufficient to support said judgment. When the conclusion of the court is unsupported by the facts found, the remedy is by appeal from the judgment. Kirman v. Hunnewell, 93 Cal. 519, 29 Pac. 124.

[6] The only answer made by respondent to this contention is “that it does not appear that any objection was made to the findings in the court below, and in view of that fact the objection thereto cannot be urged in the appellate court for the first time." In support of this position the following cases are cited: Moore v. Campbell, 72 Cal. 253, 13 Pac. 689; First National Bank v. Holt, 87 Cal. 162, 25 Pac. 272; Warner v. Holman, 24 Cal. 228; Cook v. De La Guerra, 24 Cal. 237. The first two are not at all in point. Neither involved the sufficiency or want of findings of fact, but the claim was made that there was an unwarranted finding in each case—in the first because not within the issues; and in the second for the reason that there was no law authorizing it. In each instance the Supreme Court decided adversely to the contention. The Warner and Cook Cases, supra, are early decisions, prior to the adoption of the Codes, under a special statute requiring an objection to be made, and they are of no authority now. The procedure therein prescribed ceased to be operative when the Codes came into operation in 1873. Lamb v. Harbaugh, supra.

[7] Similarly the court erred in its failure to find upon the material allegations of the cross-complaint. Under some circumstances such omission would be excused, but that is not the case here. There was abundant evidence to support said allegations, and it cannot be said that a finding thereon was rendered immaterial by reason of the decision of the court in favor of plaintiff on the allegations of his complaint. Even if the court below had found the facts as alleged in the complaint, defendant would have been entitled to a specific finding as to her averments of cruel conduct. This follows from an application of the test whether a finding either way would or might have affected the judgment. If the finding had been in her favor as to her specific allegations, it is hardly probable, in view of the evidence in the record that the trial judge would have granted plaintiff a divorce at all. At least, the court would have assuredly awarded defendant a portion, if not all, of the community property.

There is nothing to the contrary in McCourtney v. Fortune, 57 Cal. 619, or Murphy v. Bennett, 68 Cal. 528, 9 Pac. 738. As stated by appellant, the McCourtney Case involved the ownership of real property, and the court found that plaintiff had at no time been the owner or in the possession or entitled to the possession of the property in controversy. Manifestly it was not prejudicially erroneous for the court to omit to find upon the plea of the statute of limitations. Since the plaintiff had no title at all, of course, there was nothing to be barred by the statute. In the Murphy Case the action was to recover damages from the defendant for tearing down a barn and converting the materials thereof to his own use. The court found that the plaintiff was not, and that the defendant was, the owner of the building. The Supreme Court very properly held that this rendered it of no moment whether there was any finding upon the affirmative defense of justification. The finding as to ownership was necessarily decisive of the whole case.

[8] While the corroborative evidence in behalf of plaintiff seems somewhat feeble, we cannot say that it is not sufficient to meet the requirements of the Code. The testimony of plaintiff that was corroborated appears to have been addressed to other instances of cruelty than those specifically alleged in the complaint, but to this no objection was made at the trial by defendant and of this variance it is now too late to complain. Anderson v. Black, 70 Cal. 231, 11 Pac. 700. If the case was tried upon the theory that such evidence was admissible, and it was offered and received without objection, the losing party cannot be permitted in the appellate court for the first time to raise an objection on the ground suggested. Carpenter v. Ewing, 76 Cal. 488, 18 Pac. 432.

[9] Likewise, it is not for us to declare that the court was bound to find in favor of the allegations of the cross-complaint. The cold record exhibits a persuasive showing in favor of defendant. The court, however, manifestly disbelieved her and her witnesses, and we must assume that the disbelief was justified by the concomitant circumstances.

[10] To set apart all of the property to plaintiff seems rather harsh treatment of defendant. This, though, is permitted where a divorce is awarded on the ground of extreme cruelty. Section 146, Civ. Code, subd. 1. Under our practice the appellate court, however, has the right to review the action of the lower court in awarding property in actions for divorce, and to make such order thereupon as it may deem proper, independent of the question of discretion. Section 148, Civ. Code; Reid v. Reid, 112 Cal. 274, 44 Pac. 564; Strozyński v. Strozyński, 97 Cal. 189, 31 Pac. 1130. But, since a new trial may develop a different situation, it is deemed unnecessary to do more than to make the foregoing suggestions.

[11] Appellant complains bitterly of the action of the court in refusing to require plaintiff to pay defendant's costs of appeal. She contends that "no bad faith in this appeal can possibly be attributed to appellant; that she has no separate property; that the action of the court below has left her absolutely penniless; that the husband is not only a strong able-bodied man, but is as well in the full present enjoyment of all the community property, together with its rents and profits; that she has a right to defend herself against the attacks of her husband; that not only the immediate parties to an action for divorce, but as well the state is interested in the matrimonial relations of its citizens; and that, if she has a defense against her husband's accusations or an independent cause of action against him, public policy demands that she present the same for judicial determination, and that there be no connivance on her part, and that there is no case reported in our California Reports where the wife in good faith defending herself against her husband, without personal means of her own, has been denied the right to an order for an allowance against the husband," and she asserts that the same consideration should have been shown her as has been the uniform practice in other cases.

In opposition to this contention it is claimed that the allowance of costs of appeal is purely discretionary with the court below, and there is no showing that there was any abuse of discretion in this case. Section 137, Civ. Code; Gay v. Gay, 146 Cal. 237, 79 Pac. 885. The "discretion," though, as has been often held, means discretion guided by law and based upon sound judgment and inspired by a desire to promote justice. It must not be arbitrary nor capricious. It was said by Chief Justice Marshall in Osborne v. U. S. Bank, 22 U. S. 738, 6 L. Ed. 204: "Courts are mere instruments of the law and can will nothing. When they are said to exercise a discretion, it is a legal discretion, a discretion to be exercised in discovering the course prescribed by law, and when that is discovered, it is the duty of the court to follow it."

[12] While the law here, it is true, does not in terms make it mandatory for the court to allow such costs, yet, in view of the reported cases in which the law has been construed and of the uncontradicted averments of defendant's affidavit, we think the discretion of the court should have been exercised in making some allowance to defendant for her costs on appeal.

For the foregoing reasons the judgments and orders are reversed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

16 Cal. App. 156

REEVES v. KINNEY. (Civ. 943.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. May 5, 1911.)

SALES (§ 359*) — ACTION FOR PRICE — EVIDENCE.

Evidence held to justify a finding for plaintiff in an action to recover the reasonable value of refreshments furnished by her to persons receiving them at a club house in accordance with defendant's promise to pay.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 1056-1059; Dec. Dig. § 359.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; N. P. Conrey, Judge.

Action by M. A. Reeves against Abbot Kinney. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Gurney E. Newlin (Roy V. Reppy, of counsel), for appellant. Anderson & Anderson, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Action to recover for services alleged to have been rendered at the special instance and request of defendant. Judgment went for plaintiff. Defendant appeals from an order of court denying his motion for a new trial. His sole contention is that the finding of the court is not supported by the evidence.

The evidence clearly supports the finding. It tends to prove that plaintiff, while in charge of the Country Club House at Ocean Park and conducting a restaurant in connection therewith, was requested by defendant to furnish to the members of certain designated parties accustomed to gather at said club house lunches and such refreshments as they might require, the actual cost of which should be charged to defendant, who promised and agreed to pay the same each month; that plaintiff performed the services and furnished the refreshments so requested, charging therefor actual cost; that she rendered defendant a final statement of account in the sum of $525.70, which was the actual cost to her of furnishing said lunches and refreshments, and requested him to pay the amount thereof, which he agreed to pay on the following Saturday, but failed to do so, promising it at a future date. Defendant never disputed the bill, but failed to pay the same. The fact that the testimony of the plaintiff is contradicted by defendant constitutes no ground for reversing the order of the court in denying a new trial.

There is no merit in the appeal, and the order is affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; JAMES, J.

16 Cal. App. 113

WAKEFIELD v. WAKEFIELD. (Civ. 847.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. April 29, 1911.)

1. DIVORCE (§ 160*)—DEFAULT JUDGMENT—FORMAL ENTRY.

Where plaintiff in an action for divorce did not answer defendant's cross-complaint, and more than 30 days after the time to answer having expired, the record showed that both parties appeared by counsel, that defendant obtained leave to withdraw her original cross-complaint, that evidence was heard in support of the amended cross-complaint, and, plaintiff offering no evidence in support of his complaint, judgment was ordered in accordance with the amended cross-complaint, it would be assumed that notice of the trial was regularly given, or that the cause was heard by consent; and hence plaintiff was estopped to question the regularity of the judgment, because no formal entry of his default in failing to answer had been made before an interlocutory judgment was ordered.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. § 521; Dec. Dig. § 160.*]

2. JUDGMENT (§ 131*)—FORMAL ENTRY.

Formal entry of a default need not be made to confer jurisdiction to enter judgment against the defaulting party, even in the absence of notice of hearing.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 160, 245; Dec. Dig. § 131.*]

3. DIVORCE (§ 101*)—CROSS-COMPLAINT—ESTOPPEL.

Where plaintiff in a suit for divorce at no time objected in the trial court to defendant's filing a cross-complaint or to the filing of an amended cross-complaint, and not only failed to answer the latter, but appeared at the trial and waived the right to make any proof of the allegations of his complaint, or in defense of those of the amended cross-complaint, he was estopped thereafter to object that the action was not of a kind permitting the filing of a cross-complaint praying judgment for divorce.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Dec. Dig. § 101.*]

4. DIVORCE (§ 104*)—AMENDED CROSS-COMPLAINT—PRAYER.

Where an original cross-complaint was attached to the answer, and in the amended cross-complaint the prayer of the original answer and cross-complaint was referred to for the relief demanded, the original cross-complaint remained on file and continued as a part of the amended cross-complaint, though the original cross-complaint was withdrawn by leave of court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 328-339; Dec. Dig. § 104.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; T. L. Lewis, Judge.

Action by Franklin W. Wakefield against Lena H. Wakefield. From an interlocutory judgment in favor of defendant, plaintiff appeals. Motion to dismiss appeal denied, and judgment affirmed.

Anderson & Anderson and A. J. Treat, for appellant. Stearns & Sweet, for respondent.

JAMES, J. An appeal is taken by plaintiff from an interlocutory judgment of divorce entered in favor of defendant. Plaintiff instituted this action for the purpose of obtaining the custody of one Franklin Webster Wakefield, Jr., and also prayed for an order giving him the right to visit Joseph Sefton Wakefield. Plaintiff and defendant were husband and wife; the two persons above named were minor children of plaintiff and defendant, and at the time this action was instituted were in the custody of the wife, who was then living separate and apart from her husband. An answer was filed to plaintiff's complaint, denying the allegations thereof, and, by way of cross-complaint for divorce, the defendant charged the plaintiff with having committed adultery. Plaintiff answered the cross-complaint of defendant, and on June 19, 1909, an amended cross-complaint was filed, wherein the defendant set up a different cause of action for divorce, charging the plaintiff with having failed to provide for her the common necessities of life for more than one year prior to the filing of said cross-complaint. This amended cross-complaint was served upon the attorney for plaintiff on the 10th day of June, 1909. No answer was made thereto, and on July 22, 1909, after the time allowed by law for the defendant to appear and make answer to the cross-complaint had expired, the cause came on for hearing before the court. The minute entry of the court, made on July 22, 1909, is shown, and it appears therefrom that both parties were represented in court, and that the defendant asked and received leave to withdraw her cross-complaint as first filed, and that evidence was heard in support of the allegations contained in the amended cross-complaint; plaintiff offering no evidence at all in support of his complaint. The minute entry further shows that after the hearing of the testimony an interlocutory decree of divorce was ordered entered in favor of the defendant, in accordance with the prayer of her amended cross-complaint.

[1, 2] On this appeal plaintiff, among other points urged, contends that, as the record does not show that a formal entry of the default of the plaintiff for not answering the amended cross-complaint was made, the court was without right to proceed and render judgment. The record does show that issues had been made up on the complaint and the answer of the defendant, and that the cause came on regularly for hearing; that both parties were present in court, the plaintiff by his attorney and the defendant with her counsel. The time within which the defendant was allowed to make answer to the amended cross-complaint had expired about 30 days prior to the time of trial. It does not appear that the plaintiff at any time, at or prior to the date of hearing, offered or asked leave to file an answer to the amended cross-complaint. He was present by counsel in court when the matter came on for hearing and did not then, so far as the record shows, offer any evidence, either in support of the allegations of his complaint or in denial of the allegations of the amended cross-complaint. Under this state of facts, plaintiff is not in a position to question the regularity of the judgment on the ground that a formal entry of his default in failing to answer the amended cross-complaint should have been made before the interlocutory judgment was ordered. It must be assumed from the record as it is here presented that notice of trial was regularly given, or that the cause was heard on the date mentioned by the consent of the parties. It is very evident that the plaintiff had notice of the hearing, for the record shows that his counsel was in court to represent him. It has been held, however, even in cases where no notice of hearing is given, that a formal entry of default need not be first made in order that the court shall have jurisdiction to enter judgment against a defaulting party. Hibernia Savings & Loan Society v. Matthal, 116 Cal. 424, 48 Pac. 370.

[3] It is further objected by the plaintiff that this action was not of a kind permitting the filing of a cross-complaint wherein a divorce is prayed for, and for that reason that the court was without authority to enter the judgment as made. Whether or not the filing of a cross-complaint is an appropriate proceeding in an action of this kind seems immaterial, for the reason that plaintiff by his conduct has estopped himself from now raising that question. At no time in the superior court did the plaintiff object to the filing of the cross-complaint or to the filing of the amended cross-complaint. As before stated, he not only made no answer to the amended cross-complaint, but appeared at the trial and waived the right to make any proof in substantiation of the allegations of his complaint, or in defense of the allegations of the amended cross-complaint. By his action in so doing, he conceded the right in the defendant to pursue the remedy which she sought by her pleading. Riverside Heights, etc., Co. v. Trust Co., 148 Cal. 457, 83 Pac. 1003. The amended cross-complaint set out in sufficient form and substance a cause of action in favor of defendant against the plaintiff.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[4] The prayer attached to the amended cross-complaint was in the following words: "Wherefore, defendant prays judgment as prayed for in her original answer and cross-complaint on file herein." Appellant further argues that this prayer is insufficient to sustain the judgment awarded, because the original cross-complaint was withdrawn by leave of court, and therefore that there was no pleading on file to which the prayer of the amended cross-complaint could refer. The original cross-complaint was attached to the answer of the defendant, and the prayer in conclusion was as much a part of the answer as of the cross-complaint. The prayer of the original cross-complaint, so considered, remained as a part of the files of the case and was undoubtedly sufficient, by reference thereto, in aid of the prayer of the amended cross-complaint. Moreover, it would seem that as the cause of action presented by the amended cross-complaint was of equitable character, and the facts pleaded were sufficient to support the decree rendered by the court, the prayer might be disregarded. In re De Leon, 102 Cal. 541, 36 Pac. 864; Johnson v. Polhemus, 99 Cal. 245, 33 Pac. 908. In the case last cited it is true that an answer had been filed by the defendant, but for that reason the case should not be distinguished from this one, because here the parties appeared and proceeded to trial in all respects as though an answer had been filed to the amended cross-complaint.

The motion of respondent to dismiss the appeal on the ground that notice thereof was served more than six months after the entry of judgment must be denied. The transcript shows that the judgment was entered in the judgment book on December 15, 1909, and the notice of appeal was filed on March 24, 1910. Under the provisions of section 131, Civil Code, an appeal may be taken from an interlocutory judgment of divorce within six months after the entry of the decree.

The motion to dismiss the appeal is denied; the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; SHAW, J.

16 Cal. App. 141

FIRST STATE BANK OF CALEXICO v. BLACKINTON. (Civ. 986.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District; California. May 3, 1911.)

1. JUDGMENT (§ 101*)—DEFAULT—PLEADING.

A complaint in an action on a note, which treats the principal and interest separately, and which alleges that interest has been paid to a designated date, and that no part of the principal has been paid, but which is silent as to whether interest subsequently accruing has been paid, does not support a default judgment for interest from the designated date to the filing of the complaint.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 168-170; Dec. Dig. § 101.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1151*)—DEFAULT JUDGMENT—REVERSAL.

Where a default judgment is for a sum in excess of that justified by the complaint, and the amount of the excess is not ascertainable by the record, the judgment cannot be modified, but must be reversed, and the cause remanded.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4498-4506; Dec. Dig. § 1151.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; Franklin J. Cole, Judge.

Action by the First State Bank of Calexico against J. C. Blackinton. From a default judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Conkling & Brown, for appellant. F. P. Willard, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Action to recover upon a promissory note. The complaint alleges that defendant made and delivered to plaintiff his certain promissory note, dated October 21, 1908, due on or before one year after date, and bearing interest at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum, payable quarterly; that interest thereon had been paid up to October 21, 1909, and that no part of the principal of the note had been paid. The prayer was for the principal sum of $5,000 and interest thereon from October 21, 1909, at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum, as provided by the terms of the note. Defendant failed to answer, and judgment was rendered on default in accordance with the prayer of the complaint.

Defendant appeals from the judgment and insists upon reversal for the reason that, in addition to the rendition of judgment for the principal sum of $5,000, the court gave judgment for interest accruing subsequent to October 21, 1909, in the sum of $229.16.

[1] The verified complaint treats the principal and interest specified in the note separately, it being alleged that no part of the principal has been paid, but is silent as to whether or not the interest accruing after October 21, 1909, for the amount of which the court gave judgment, remained unpaid. There is neither direct allegation of nonpayment of interest, nor an allegation from which such fact is implied. Penrose v. Winter, 135 Cal. 289, 67 Pac. 772; Ward v. Clay, 82 Cal. 502, 23 Pac. 50, 227. Hence there is nothing in the complaint upon which to base judgment for the amount of this interest. It follows that the judgment, in so far as it pertains to interest accrued from October 21, 1909, to the date of the filing of the complaint, is erroneous.

[2] It is impossible to order a modification of the judgment, because the record does not disclose when the complaint was filed. Inasmuch as the default judgment is for a sum in excess of that justified by the complaint, the amount of which excess, for the reason given, is not ascertainable upon the record, it must therefore be reversed and remanded for such further action as to the parties may seem advisable; and it is so ordered.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; JAMES, J.

(16 Cal. App. 164)

OLIVER v. WARREN. (Civ. 774.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 5, 1911.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1011*)—REVIEW—FINDINGS ON CONFLICTING EVIDENCE.

Findings on conflicting evidence will not be disturbed on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3983-3989; Dec. Dig. § 1011.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1048*)—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

Where a witness, in an action to cancel a deed by plaintiff's intestate, on the ground of his mental incapacity, had testified as to the mental condition of deceased, questions on cross-examination to fix the time of the last visit of the witness to deceased, while not within the rules governing cross-examinations, are harmless.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4145; Dec. Dig. § 1048.*]

3. EVIDENCE (§ 278*)—DECLARATIONS BY DECEDENT AGAINST INTEREST.

In an action by an administrator to cancel a deed executed by his intestate on the ground of mental incapacity, the testimony of a witness as to declarations made to him by the deceased, favorable to the validity of the deed, were properly admitted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 1137, 1138; Dec. Dig. § 278.*]

4. WITNESSES (§ 198*)—COMPETENCY—PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATIONS.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1881, subd. 2, making communications between attorney and client privileged, the testimony of an attorney who had prepared a deed and taken the grantor's acknowledgment to it, as to his impression of the grantor's mental condition at that time, is not inadmissible as a communication between attorney and client.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. § 753; Dec. Dig. § 198.*]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1050*) REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

Where, in view of the other facts in an action to cancel a deed on the ground of the deceased grantor's mental incapacity, it was not important to show the money value of the grantor's support, which was one of the considerations of the deed, the admission of evidence of such value is not prejudicial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4153-4160; Dec. Dig. § 1050.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Tuolumne County; G. W. Nicol, Judge.

Action by J. N. Oliver, administrator of the estate of J. K. Oliver, deceased, against Thekla Warren. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

F. P. Otis and C. M. C. Peters, for appellant. J. B. Curtin and Rowan Hardin, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. This is an action to set aside a certain deed made by J. K. Oliver, plaintiff's intestate, to defendant, to the surface of the Table Mountain Alpha Gravel Placer Mining Claim, designated for convenience the Alpha Mine, and for a reconveyance of the same to plaintiff. Defendant had judgment, from which and from the order denying his motion for a new trial, plaintiff appeals.

On April 9, 1906, plaintiff's said intestate was the owner of the placer mining ground described in the complaint, and on that day executed and delivered to defendant a deed conveying to her "the surface of that certain placer mining claim [describing it] for and in consideration of the sum of $389.35 * * * and other valuable considerations." The grantor granted to the grantee "the use of the water from the tunnel upon said premises," not, however, to interfere with mining the claim, reserving to himself all the minerals in the land and the right to remove the same, with the right of ingress and egress to and from said premises for mining purposes, and also reserving certain pasturing privileges for his stock. The deed contained the following provision: "In consideration of this conveyance, the party of the second part agrees that the party of the first part shall remain upon and occupy the cabin now occupied by him upon said premises, or a room in the dwelling house to be constructed upon said premises by the party of the second part, and the party of the second part agrees to care for, board, and suitably support and maintain the party of the first part for and during his natural life."

It is averred in the complaint that at the time this conveyance was made the grantor was very old, being about 80 years of age, was infirm in body and mentally weak, and unable to understand the nature of the deed executed by him; that defendant knew of his said weakened condition, mentally and physically; "that said defendant wholly failed and refused to suitably support and maintain said J. K. Oliver during his natural life, and that said defendant has utterly failed and refused to comply with the terms and conditions of said deed and to carry out the provisions therein made, and that defendant made said promises without any intent on her part to perform the same."

The court found against plaintiff on the issue of the alleged mental incapacity of the said J. K. Oliver at the time he executed said deed, finding that he was then mentally competent to transact said business; that defendant paid as consideration for said deed the sum named in the complaint and also the further sum of $50; that the said land embraced 76.37 acres, and that the value of the interest conveyed by said deed did not exceed $439.35, the amount of the money consideration paid therefor, and was not of greater value than $1.75 per acre; that defendant and her husband built a dwelling on said land shortly after April 9, 1906, and occupied the same and offered to the said Oliver a room therein, which he declined, preferring to remain in his cabin near by; that he continued to occupy said cabin from April 9, 1906, until January 22, 1908, during all which time "said defendant and her husband did care for, board, and suitably support and maintain the said J. K. Oliver in a good and proper manner and at their own cost and expense, the reasonable value of which board and maintenance was the sum of $20 per month from the 9th day of April, 1906, to the 22d day of January, 1908," and that during that entire period the said Oliver "was sound of mind and well able to attend to any business whatever, and not in any weakened condition, and said J. K. Oliver was not induced by defendant to convey said property to defendant, but said J. K. Oliver entered into said contract freely and voluntarily, with a full understanding of his act in so doing, and said transaction was unaccompanied by any inequitable incident; that all of the promises made by the defendant to said J. K. Oliver were made with intent on her part to fully perform the same, and defendant never did at any time or at all refuse to keep any promise or perform any promise by her made to said J. K. Oliver." It is then found that on January 22, 1908, "without the knowledge, consent, or connivance of the said defendant, the said J. K. Oliver, at the request of J. N. Oliver, the individual who is administrator of said estate and plaintiff herein, left the said premises * * * and did not again return to or live upon said lands and premises, and defendant was thereby prevented from caring for, boarding, and suitably supporting and maintaining the said J. K. Oliver on the said premises; and said J. K. Oliver left said premises through no fault or neglect of said defendant or her husband." It was admitted that said J. K. Oliver died on November 9, 1908.

[1] There were other findings, but the foregoing cover the principal controverted issues. The case does not seem to call for an analysis of the evidence. There was some conflict in the testimony as to the mental capacity of plaintiff's intestate during the period found by the court. There was, however, sufficient evidence to support the findings, which, having been accepted by the court, is conclusive upon us.

Aside from certain rulings at the trial, appellant confines his argument to the insufficiency of the evidence to support the findings. The most that can be said upon this question is that the testimony is conflicting upon all the findings challenged, and we need go no further than to make this discovery.

[2] Exceptions numbered in the transcript as 1, 2, and 3 relate to the same matter. Witness Fitzgerald was called by plaintiff to testify as to the mental condition of deceased in 1906 and down to January 22, 1908. On cross-examination witness was asked if he knew about the deed to J. N. Oliver, made in January, 1908, and answered, without objection, that plaintiff told him about it. He was then asked when, with reference to the date of the deed, he told him. Other questions followed, apparently for the purpose of fixing the time of the last visit of the witness to the cabin of deceased. This was probably not within the rules governing cross-examination, but the questions were harmless. Exceptions 4, 5, 6, and 7 relate to the same matter, and are of the same character.

[3] Witness Slonicker was called by defendant and testified that he knew J. K. Oliver about the 9th of April, 1906, and afterwards, and "thought he was perfectly sane at that time." He was then asked several questions as to statements made to witness concerning the treatment of Oliver by defendant; and also about the contract he had with defendant. The court allowed the answers, over plaintiff's objection, noted as exceptions 8, 9, 10, and 11, on the ground that they were hearsay declarations made by a deceased. He answered: "He appeared well satisfied; he said he never was treated so well in his life as he was after he got with the Warrens." We think the ruling was correct.

[4] Attorney F. W. Street was a witness for defendant, and testified to his having prepared the deed from Oliver to defendant and to facts occurring at the time. He also testified to Oliver's soundness of mind at that time—April 9, 1906. He was shown the deed from J. K. to J. N. Oliver, dated January 22, 1908, of which he took the acknowledgment on that day. He was then asked: "Q. Now on that date I will ask you if John K. Oliver was mentally competent?" Counsel for defendant objected, as inadmissible under subdivision 2, § 1881, of the Code of Civil Procedure. We do not think Mr. Street's observations of Oliver's mental condition at that time and his testimony as to the impressions he then received of Oliver's mental condition could be said to fall within the class of communications between client and attorney which the law will not allow to be disclosed, if the parties can be said to have sustained that relation, which we doubt. Mr. Street could testify as to his opinion of Oliver's mental condition without divulging any communications between him and his client.

[5] Exceptions 14 and 15 arose out of objections to evidence of the reasonable value of the care and support given Oliver by defendant. One of the considerations mentioned in the deed to defendant was the support of Oliver. In view of other facts established, it was not important to fix a money value on the support given Oliver, but it was not prejudicial to allow it. Generally it may be observed that the alleged errors, if conceded to be such, were of too little consequence to have produced any substantial prejudice.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: HART, J.; BURNETT, J.

16 Cal. App. 2d

STANDARD INVESTMENT CO. v. KINGSBURY, Surveyor General. (Civ. 784.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 24, 1911.)

PUBLIC LANDS (§ 54*)—SCHOOL LAND—SALE—PAYMENT OF PRICE.

Pol. Code, § 3494, provides that school lands shall be sold at the rate of $1.25 per acre, payable 20 per cent. of the principal within 50 days from the date of the certificate of location issued to the purchaser, and the balance, bearing interest at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum in advance, within one year after the passage of any act requiring such payment, or before, if desired by the purchaser. Section 3427 declares that the county treasurer shall compute interest on all sales from the date of the approval of the survey or the date of the certificate of location to the 1st of January following on which the interest falls due, after which time all payments of principal or interest fall due on the 1st day of January. Held that, while payments of the principal in the absence of a legislative act requiring payments may be made whenever the purchaser desires, interest payments must be made in advance on all deferred payments on the 1st day of January following the date of the approval of the location, and on each 1st day of January thereafter, so that where an assignee of the certificate omitted to pay interest due on the certificate on January 1, 1910, and on March 8th desired to pay the full amount remaining due, he was not entitled to a rebate of interest for the balance of that year, but was required to pay the principal and interest for that entire year.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Public Lands, Cent. Dig. §§ 152-169; Dec. Dig. § 54.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; P. J. Shields, Judge.

Application by the Standard Investment Company for a writ of mandamus against W. S. Kingsbury, as Surveyor General, and ex officio register of the State Land Office. From an order denying the writ, petitioner appeals. Affirmed.

M. W. McIntosh, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Malcolm C. Glenn, Asst. Atty. Gen., for respondent.

BURNETT, J. Plaintiff, being the owner, by assignment, of a certificate of purchase of state school lands, which had been purchased on credit, omitted to pay in advance the annual 7 per cent. interest due thereon the 1st day of January, 1910, but on the 8th day of March, 1910, paid to the county treasurer of the proper county the full amount of principal and interest accrued to the latter date, and on or about said time surrendered the certificate and requested the Surveyor General to prepare and cause to be issued to plaintiff a patent for said lands, which the Surveyor General refused to do, assigning as a reason therefor that the plaintiff did not on January 1, 1910, pay the year's interest to January 1, 1911. Upon the filing of a complaint setting forth these facts, an alternative writ of mandate was issued in accordance with the order of the court below. Upon the hearing a general demurrer filed by respondent was sustained and the plaintiff allowed 20 days to amend its complaint. Plaintiff declined to amend, and a judgment of dismissal was entered, from which the appeal has been taken.

Section 3494 of the Political Code provides that "the unsold portion of the 500,000 acres granted to the state for school purposes, the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections and lands selected in lieu thereof, must be sold at the rate of $1.25 per acre, in gold coin, payable: 20 per cent. of the principal within fifty days from the date of the certificate of location issued to the purchaser; the balance, bearing interest at the rate of seven per cent. per annum, in advance, is due and payable within one year after the passage of any act by the Legislature requiring such payment, or before, if desired by the purchaser." It is to be observed that, except the 20 per cent. required to be paid within 50 days from the issuance of the certificate of location, the time for the payment of the principal is optional with the purchaser. He may pay it all at any time. The Legislature may provide also that the balance of the principal must be paid within one year, but it has enacted no such statute. The section expresses also, as clearly as can be, the legislative intent that the interest on whatever balance of principal may be due shall be paid in advance.

The rule providing specifically how interest on deferred payments for all state lands shall be computed and when payable is found in section 3427 of the Political Code as follows: "The county treasurer must compute interest on all sales from the date of the approval of the survey, or the date of the certificate of location to the 1st of January following the day upon which the interest falls due; after which time all payments of principal or interest fall due on the 1st day of January." Without doing violence to the simple and explicit language employed by the Legislature in a matter admittedly within its control, it is impossible, therefore, to avoid the conclusion that on the 1st day of January, 1910, there was due from plaintiff to the state interest on the balance of the principal for one year at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum. Since it was not paid, it would still be due on the 8th day of March following. It is, indeed, conceded by appellant that said condition existed on the 1st of January, but it is contended that by the subsequent tender of the balance of the principal plaintiff become entitled to an abatement of over three-fourths of the interest that was due on said 1st day of January. There is no warrant in the statute for such contention. Neither the county treasurer, Surveyor General, nor any one else is authorized to waive the payment of any portion of this interest. Indeed, if the interest is not paid by the 1st day of May, the land is included in the delinquent list which is required to be furnished by the register to the district attorney of the county in which the land is situated. Section 3546, Pol. Code. The district attorney thereupon is required to give notice that, if the amount due is not paid within 50 days thereafter, he will commence suit to foreclose the interest of the purchaser in the land. Id., § 3547. The holder of the certificate, however, at any time before the filing of the decree of foreclosure may pay the amount due the state and the costs of suit to the time of payment and thereby be restored to his rights in the premises. Sec. 3551. In all these sections the "amount due" unmistakably contemplates one year's interest in advance computed on the 1st day of January, and there is not a word to indicate a purpose to relinquish any part of the interest if a complete settlement be made subsequent to said date. The position of appellant really amounts to the contention that by a failure to comply with its statutory duty to pay the interest on the 1st day of January a portion of its obligation is remitted as a reward for its dilatory payment of the principal. This is hardly consonant with conventional business principles or a rational view of the legislative intent.

The infirmity of appellant's claim is further shown in the circumstance that, if the year's interest is not paid prior to the 1st day of May, foreclosure will follow, and the only way to avoid the decree is to pay all that is due the state, together with accrued costs. It is not provided that the payment of the principal alone subsequent to January the 1st will excuse the Surveyor General from reporting the nonpayment of the interest nor relieve the district attorney of the duty of foreclosure. Since the land, therefore, after the first day of the year is burdened with a debt to the state for interest that renders it liable to be sold under foreclosure, it is obvious that the state, while this interest remains unliquidated, is in no position to execute a patent, and thereby waive its claim to assert any incumbrance.

Appellant has apparently proceeded upon the theory that the Legislature has already passed an act requiring the payment of the balance of the principal within one year. If such a statute had been enacted, the situation might be different. As suggested by respondent, if the Legislature, in March, 1909, had passed an act requiring the payment of the balance within a year, or by March, 1910, the last payment of interest would probably be reduced proportionately; the final payment having been made a matter of compulsion, and not of discretion. But as the law exists now the payment of the balance of the principal is a mere privilege, which the purchaser may or may not exercise. The difference is aptly illustrated by reference to two promissory notes. In the case of a note, made in March, 1910, payable two years after date, the first payment of interest to be made in advance to January, 1911, and thereafter the interest to be payable yearly in advance on the 1st day of January of each year, the principal, of course, would be due in March, 1912. If the principal is paid when due, the last installment of interest that could be exacted would probably not extend beyond that date. But if a promissory note provided that the interest should be payable yearly in advance, on January 1st, and the principal might be paid on or before 10 years after date, then, of course, the maker might pay the principal at any time within the year, but it would not relieve him of the duty of paying the whole year's interest, which became due on the first day of the year.

There is nothing unreasonable, unjust, or oppressive in the requirement of the statute. It provides for uniformity in the purchase of these public lands, and contemplates that the payment of the balance of the purchase price as well as the interest due on any unpaid balance shall be made on the first of the year. The purchaser can easily escape the payment of a year's interest in advance by liquidating the principal on the first day of the year, but if he defers, as in the case at bar, the payment of the balance of the principal, he cannot complain that the Surveyor General exacts what the statute demands and with which all purchasers must be deemed familiar.

There is manifestly no inconsistency between this position and the direction contained in the form of approval issued by the Surveyor General as follows: "The county treasurer of said county will, within fifty days of this date, receive from applicant the sum of ——— dollars, being payment in full for said land, or the county treasurer will, at the option of said applicant, receive the sum of ——— dollars, being twenty per cent. of the purchase money, with interest on the balance at the rate of seven per cent. per annum in advance from the date of this approval to the first day of January next." The law gives the purchaser the privilege of paying the entire principal within 50 days without interest, the statute requiring interest only on the balance of the principal remaining unpaid. Appellant sees, in this interpretation of the law, an example of penalty or forfeiture, in that it requires the payment of interest in advance upon money that the purchaser is not using. By calling it a penalty or forfeiture we cannot disguise nor obscure the plain, simple fact that the law does demand the interest in advance, that this is one of the terms of the contract to which the purchaser has agreed, and there can be no question that the Legislature has the right to impose such conditions for the disposition of the state lands.

Respondent, in his brief, calls attention to the various statutes upon the subject, beginning with the act of 1855, all exhibiting the same purpose to hold the purchaser strictly to the payment of the interest in advance. For instance, the act of 1855 (Stats. 1855, p. 189) for the sale of swamp and overflowed lands provided that the purchaser, if he desired, might have a credit of five years within which to pay the purchase price "by paying interest at the rate of ten per cent. per annum upon the purchase money, the interest in all cases to be paid one year in advance." It provided, also, that, if the purchaser "shall fail or neglect to pay the interest as required by this act for the space of one year from the time such interest may become due, * * * such neglect or failure shall work a forfeiture of such lands, and the same shall be resold as if no purchase had been made." In Borland v. Lewis, 43 Cal. 572, it is said, in reference to this provision, that "In our judgment it was intended by the sixth section to make the failure to pay the interest for one year after it became due operate as a complete forfeiture of the purchaser's right in and to the land."

Without specific reference to them, it may be said that the other statutes are similar in their requirement as to the interest; the only difference being the date from which the interest should be computed. Since 1868 the rule has been to compute the interest to the 1st day of January following the date of the approval, or the date of the certificate of location, or, in case of lands purchased prior to the enactment of the statute, to the 1st of the following January. The purpose of the change was undoubtedly to make the interest on the various locations fall due at the same time, thereby simplifying and facilitating the work of the Surveyor General in his reports and of the district attorneys in their proceedings against delinquent purchasers.

The suggestion is made by appellant that the practice for many years has been in accordance with his construction of the statute, and it is urged that the practical interpretation of the law by those charged with its administration is entitled to great weight. In this connection the following is quoted from Sutherland's Statutory Construction, § 309: "A practical construction of long standing by those for whom the law was enacted will not be lightly questioned, especially in matters of form, though it will not be allowed to defeat the manifest purpose of the statute. * * * The practical construction given to a doubtful statute by the public officers of the state and acted upon by the people thereof is to be considered—it is perhaps, decisive, in a case of doubt. This is similar in effect to a course of judicial opinions. The Legislature is presumed to be cognizant of such construction, and, after long continuance without any legislation evincing its dissent, courts will consider themselves warranted in adopting that construction. Contemporaneous construction and official usage for a long period, by the persons charged with the administration of the law, are among the legitimate aids in the construction of statutes." But, granting that the practice has been as claimed by appellant and that the courts must take judicial notice of it, still, as stated above, this would simply be an aid to the construction of a doubtful statute, and it could not be allowed to defeat the manifest purpose of the Legislature. We think there is no doubt in the case before us as to what the law requires of respondent, and, in recapitulation, we adopt substantially his language, as follows: First. Section 3494 of the Political Code provides for the payment of interest in advance on deferred payments. Second. Section 3427 provides for the payment of the first interest in advance up to the 1st day of January following the date of the approval, and all subsequent payments fall due on the 1st day of January. Third. By section 3513, if payment is not made within 50 days after approval, the location is void. This payment must be either in full of $1.25 per acre, or 20 per cent. and interest in advance till the following January. Fourth. If the subsequent payments of interest are not made on the 1st day of January, when due, no forfeiture is provided, but in May of each year a delinquent list is sent to each of the various district attorneys, containing a statement of such fact, and, after publication thereof, foreclosure is made. Before filing judgment in such foreclosure proceedings, the purchaser may be restored to his rights by paying the amount due. This would include the interest which became due in advance on the preceding January. Fifth. The privilege given to an applicant to pay the balance remaining unpaid before an act of the Legislature requiring such payment, in no manner relieves a purchaser from paying interest on January 1st of each year, in advance, if the principal be not paid before that time. Sixth. The adoption of the theory of appellant would mean the waiver of payment of interest after it became due and payable, which the state has not authorized. Seventh. The construction adopted by the trial court gives harmonious effect to all of the said sections of the Code, follows the unequivocal direction of the statute, and therefore should be upheld.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

16 Cal. App. 72

SWIFT et al. v. BOARD OF SUP'RS OF SANTA BARBARA COUNTY (OOTH-CUT, Intervener). (Civ. 941.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. April 24, 1911.)

1. HIGHWAYS (§ 77*) — DISCONTINUANCE — PROCEEDINGS—NOTICE TO LANDOWNERS.

Pol. Code, § 2681, provides that any 10 freeholders may petition the board of supervisors to alter or discontinue any road or lay out a new road. Section 2684 declares that on the filing of a petition and bond viewers shall be appointed to view and survey any proposed alterations of an old or opening of a new road, and submit an estimate, including the purchase of a right of way and their views of the necessity thereof. Section 2688 provides that on the filing of the viewers' report the board shall fix a day for hearing the same, and that the board shall hear the evidence offered for or against the proposed alterations or new road, and declare the damages awarded to each nonconsenting landowner over whose land they shall order the road to be opened. Section 2643, subd. 3, makes it the duty of the board without hearing evidence to abandon by proper order such roads as are not necessary for public use. Held, that since no provision is made for the appointment of viewers except in the case of the establishment of a new road, or the alteration of an old one, and section 2688 provides for notice and hearing only in cases where viewers are appointed, jurisdiction of the board in a proceeding contemplating only the abandonment of a road between designated termini does not depend on the giving of notice under section 2688.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Highways, Cent. Dig. §§ 263-276; Dec. Dig. § 77.*]

2. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 291*) — DUE PROCESS OF LAW—DEPRIVATION OF PROPERTY—ABANDONMENT OF HIGHWAY.

An abutting owner has no property right in a country road; and hence an abandonment thereof without notice by the constituted authorities does not constitute a deprivation of such abutting owner's property without due process of law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 870-876; Dec. Dig. § 291.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; S. E. Crow, Judge.

The Board of Supervisors of Santa Barbara having abandoned a public road, Louis F. Swift and another applied for a writ of review, and Helen R. Oothcut intervened. From a denial of such application, Swift and others appeal. Affirmed.

O. F. Carrier and Richards & Carrier, for appellants. W. S. Day, for respondent Board of Sup'rs of Santa Barbara County. G. H. Gould, for respondent Oothcut.

SHAW, J. Appeal from an order denying an application for a writ to review the action of the board of supervisors of Santa Barbara county in abandoning a public road without notice to the owners of property abutting thereon.

Pepper lane was, and for a number of years had been, a public highway extending from the east line of Sycamore Canyon road in a northeasterly direction to the west line of Hot Springs avenue. Petitioners were the owners of the land on the south side of Pepper lane, the lands of one fronting and abutting on Sycamore Canyon road and that of the other fronting and abutting on Hot Springs avenue. Swift's ownership of the fee extended to the center of Pepper lane, from which he had an entrance to his property. Faulkner did not own any part of the fee in said land and maintained no entrance from said highway to her premises. On Saturday, the 2d day of October, 1909, a petition sufficient in form and substance as provided by section 2681, Political Code, and signed by more than 10 freeholders, was filed with the clerk of the board of supervisors, praying for an order whereby the road known as Pepper lane should be vacated and abandoned. On the following Monday, October 4, 1909, at a regular meeting of the board of supervisors, and without any notice of the filing of the petition or time and place of the hearing thereof, the board made an order as prayed for abandoning said road between the points named as a public highway. Thereafter petitioners applied to the superior court for a writ of review of the proceedings, alleging that the action of the board of supervisors was had and taken without jurisdiction. In response to an order to show cause, the board appeared by its attorney and made answer to the petition, and by leave of court Helen R. Oothcut, respondent herein, appeared as an intervener and filed her complaint in intervention, denying the allegations of the petition and alleging that the board had jurisdiction in the proceedings. At the hearing the court made an order denying the application, and petitioners appeal therefrom.

[1] Appellants insist that the making of the order abandoning the road as a public highway was and is void for the reason that it was made without a reference to viewers and in the absence of any notice of the hearing given in the manner prescribed by section 2688, Political Code. This section is one of a number of sections found under the title of "Laying out, Altering, and Discontinuing Roads," and constituting article 6, part 3, title 6, chapter 2, Political Code. Referring briefly to these sections, we find that "any ten freeholders who will be accommodated by the proposed road * * * may petition, in writing, the board of supervisors to alter or discontinue any road, or to lay out a new road therein" (section 2681), which "petition must set forth the general route of the road to be abandoned, discontinued, altered, laid out, or constructed, and the names of the persons over whose land the same is to run, if known" (section 2682). The petition must be accompanied with a bond in double the amount of the cost of viewing, laying out, or altering of the road, conditioned for the payment of the costs of viewing and surveying the same (section 2683). Upon the filing of the petition and bond, viewers are to be appointed by the board of supervisors, whose duty it shall be to view and survey any proposed alteration of an old or opening of a new road, and submit an estimate of the change, alteration, or opening, including the purchase of the right of way, and their views of the necessity thereof (section 2684). They must view and lay out the proposed alterations or new road over the most practicable route (section 2685); and, when the view and survey of the proposed alteration or new road is completed, must report to the board of supervisors the course, termini, length, and probable cost of construction of the proposed road, an estimate of damage to the owner of any land over which it is proposed to run the road, the names of owners who consent to give the right of way therefor, together with the names of owners who do not consent, and the amount of damage claimed by each (section 2686). Section 2688 provides that, upon the filing of the report, the board must fix a day for hearing the same, and must give notice of the time and place of such hearing in the manner therein prescribed. "Said notice shall intelligibly describe the road to be abandoned, discontinued, altered, laid out, or constructed, and the lands over which the same is to run. * * *

The board must, on the day fixed for the hearing, or to which it may be postponed or continued, hear the evidence offered by parties interested for or against the proposed alterations or new road; and must ascertain and by order declare the amount of damage awarded to each nonconsenting landowner over whose land they shall order the road to be opened." It will thus be seen that section 2688 provides for notice of a hearing only in those cases where viewers are appointed, whose duty it is to make a report to the board as required by the preceding sections. No provision is made for the appointment of viewers, save and except in those cases where a new road is proposed, or it is proposed to change or alter the old one, which alteration may necessitate the abandonment of a part thereof and the taking in of new territory for the purpose of widening or straightening. It will also be noted that section 2688 makes no provision at the hearing for the introduction of any evidence offered by parties interested for or against abandonment merely, but only for or against proposed alterations or the opening of a new road. We are therefore of the opinion that where the proceeding contemplates the abandonment only of a road between designated termini, jurisdiction of the board to make the order does not depend upon the giving of notice of the hearing required by section 2688, Political Code. This construction is further strengthened by the fact that by subdivision 3 of section 2643, Political Code, it is made the duty of the board, of its own motion and without hearing evidence, to abandon by proper order such roads as are not necessary for the public use, and thus relieve the county of the expense and burden of their maintenance.

[2] As thus construed, appellants insist that the act is unconstitutional, in that it deprives the abutting owner of his property without due process of law. "The question, therefore, is," says counsel for appellants, "has the abutting owner a property right in a country road? It has been held to the contrary in Levee District v. Farmer, 101 Cal. 178 [35 Pac. 569, 23 L. R. A. 388]." The opinion in that case contains an extended discussion of the question and holds that the "vacation of a highway does not take from the individual residing thereon his property, either for public or private use, and that he cannot recover damages therefor, although he may sustain inconvenience and loss therefrom"—citing Barr v. City of Oskaloosa, 45 Iowa, 275. In 15 American and English Encyclopedia of Law, p. 402, it is said: "It is generally held that, in the absence of statutory provision, one whose land abuts on a highway is not entitled to damages on account of the discontinuance of the highway, his rights therein not being considered property within the protective clauses of the constitution." To same effect, see Paul v. Carver, 24 Pa. 207, 64 Am. Dec. 649; State v. Deer Lodge Co., 19 Mont. 582, 49 Pac. 147; Coffey Co. v. Venard, 10 Kan. 95. Appellants endeavor to avoid the effect of the decision in Levee District v. Farmer, supra, by citing a number of authorities wherein it is held that a municipality cannot vacate a city street as against nonconsenting owners of property abutting thereon without compensation. There is a marked distinction between the rights of an abutting property owner upon a city street and one upon a country road. As said in Bradbury v. Walton, 94 Ky. 167, 21 S. W. 869: "The streets of a town or city are acquired by grant with the implied right of ingress and egress to the abutting lot owner, the grantor, or the party making the dedication saying to the owners of lots, 'This right of ingress and egress you shall have'; but not so with an ordinary public road. The state creates the easement for the entire public. Its use is that of the public, one citizen having as much right to this use as the other; and, when its abandonment or nonuser is deemed necessary for the public good, the county court may discontinue." The board of supervisors in making the order abandoning the road merely surrender the rights which have been acquired by the public. If, by grant or otherwise, rights have been acquired by an abutting property owner, such rights are unaffected by the order (Leverone v. Weakley, 155 Cal. 395, 101 Pac. 304), but such owner may not insist that the public shall maintain a road for his private convenience and use. As disclosed by the record, Pepper lane was not necessary nor used for the purpose of ingress and egress to the property of Faulkner, and, while Swift had access therefrom to his property, it appears that by the abandonment he acquires exclusive dominion over the land to the center of the road, thus affording him a continued means of ingress and egress to his property from the abandoned public highway.

Under these circumstances, and upon the authority of Levee District v. Farmer, supra, we are compelled to hold that the order appealed from should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; JAMES, J.

16 Cal. App. 157

CONDE et al. v. SWEENEY, Sheriff.

(Civ. 772.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 5, 1911.)

1. FIXTURES (§ 21*)—MINING MACHINERY—VENDOR OF LAND AND CLAIMANT OF CHATTELS—"AFFIXED TO LAND."

Civ. Code, § 660, provides that a thing is deemed affixed to land when it is imbedded in it, as in the case of walls; or permanently resting on it, as in the case of buildings; or permanently attached to what is thus permanent, as by means of cement, plaster, nails, bolts, or screws. Section 661 declares that sluice boxes and all other machinery or tools used in working or developing a mine are deemed affixed to the mine, and section 1013 provides that, when a person affixes his property to the land of another without an agreement permitting him to remove it, the thing affixed belongs to the owner, unless he chooses to require the former owner to remove it. Held that where mining machinery, consisting of electric motors, etc., was bolted to a concrete foundation placed in the earth or to a wood foundation, and the lighting transformer was on a pole which was fixed in the ground, and an electric pump was bolted down in the mine, and all were used in working and developing the mine, such machinery and appliances, though placed on the premises by an assignee of the vendee of the mine, were fixtures as between creditors of such assignee and the vendor, holding title to the mine as security for unpaid purchase money; the contract of sale containing no provisions for removal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fixtures, Cent. Dig. §§ 47-56; Dec. Dig. § 21.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 1, p. 249.]

2. ATTACHMENT (§ 178*)—EFFECT—INTERESTS AFFECTED—FIXTURES.

Where mining machinery and appliances were fixtures as between the vendor of the mine and the vendee's assignee, and such assignee made default in payment of the purchase price, for which the contract was forfeited, such fixtures were not subject to attachment at the instance of the assignee's creditors as against the vendor, though the attachment was levied three days prior to the expiration of the assignee's rights under the contract of sale; the attachment at most covering only the assignee's right to possession of the land and fixtures before default.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Attachment, Cent. Dig. §§ 528-534; Dec. Dig. § 178.*]

3. FIXTURES (§ 21*)—CREDITORS OF VENDEE'S ASSIGNEE—RIGHTS.

Where a vendor of a mine held the title as security for payment of the price by the vendee's assignee within a specified time, the assignee's possession before default did not confer on its creditors the right to remove fixtures which had become a part of the land as against the vendor; and this, notwithstanding the mines would be as valuable without the fixtures as they were at the time the contract of sale was executed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fixtures, Cent. Dig. §§ 47-56; Dec. Dig. § 21.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Tuolumne County; G. W. Nicol, Judge.

Suit by James E. Conde and others against William Sweeney, as sheriff of Tuolumne county. From an order granting a permanent injunction, and from another order denying defendant's motion for new trial, he appeals. Affirmed.

J. B. Curtin, for appellant. F. P. Otis, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. There have been two appeals in this case; the first, from an order "granting plaintiffs an injunction pendente lite as prayed for in the complaint," and the present appeal from the judgment awarding a permanent injunction and from the order denying defendant's motion for a new trial. In the decision on the former appeal (110 Pac. 973) may be found a full statement of the facts, and it is deemed unnecessary to repeat them here. On said appeal, it may be said, also, two questions discussed herein by appellant were decided adversely to his contention, and as to them the decision must now be considered the law of the case. They involve the action of the court in allowing the supplemental complaint to be filed and the sufficiency of the complaint in its statement of a cause of action. The only vital point to be determined on this appeal relates to the support for the findings furnished by the evidence. It may be stated that the cause was submitted upon the evidence taken at the hearing for a preliminary injunction, but that evidence was not brought up on the former appeal.

[1] Plaintiff James E. Conde testified that the machinery described in the complaint was placed upon the mine after he and his wife had entered into the contract for the sale of said land; that the electric motors were bolted to a concrete foundation which was placed in the earth, except the one in the blacksmith shop, and that was bolted to a wood foundation; that the lighting transformer was on a pole which was fixed in the ground, and the electric pump was also bolted down in the mine; that all the machinery was used in working and developing the Dreisam mines. It furthermore appears that the agreements as to the sale of the mine were silent as to the disposition of the machinery that might be placed thereon. There was no agreement nor understanding that any of said machinery might be removed. It necessarily results from the foregoing that the machinery became fixtures and a part of the real property. "A thing is deemed to be affixed to land when it is attached to it by roots, as in the case of trees, vines or shrubs; or imbedded in it, as in the case of walls; or permanently resting upon it, as in the case of buildings; or permanently attached to what is thus permanent, as by means of cement, plaster, nails, bolts, or screws." Section 660, Civ. Code. "Sluice boxes * * * and all other machinery or tools used in working or developing a mine, are to be deemed affixed to the mine." Section 661. Id. Being fixtures, of course, they are included in the ownership of the real property. "When a person affixes his property to the land of another, without an agreement permitting him to remove it, the thing affixed, except as provided in section ten hundred and nineteen, belongs to the owner of the land, unless he chooses to require the former to remove it." Section 1013, Civ. Code. The exception provided by section 1019 has no application here. It relates to certain fixtures, which have not become "an integral part of the premises," that a tenant may remove. In the case at bar there was no relation of landlord and tenant at any time.

As to these propositions, the situation before us is covered by the decision of the Supreme Court in Pomeroy v. Bell, 118 Cal. 635, 50 Pac. 683. Therein it is said: "The court finds that all of the property placed upon the land by the defendant Bell was permanently attached and affixed to the land, and that it was so affixed by him without any agreement with the plaintiffs, or either of them, permitting him to remove any portion of the same. The property thus became a part of the land (Civ. Code, §§ 658-661), and under the provisions of section 1013 of the Civil Code belonged to the plaintiff."

[2] It is not controverted here that at the time of the trial the land was the property of plaintiffs, as the defendant had utterly failed to comply with the terms of the executory contract for its purchase. The fixtures, also, therefore, belonged to plaintiffs.

It is manifestly beside the question that the fixtures were placed upon the land by the Parlin Mining Company instead of by the Parlin Gold Mining Company. With the latter the plaintiffs entered into the contract for the sale of the land, and the said company executed a similar contract with the Parlin Mining Company for the purchase of the property without any agreement as to the fixtures, and under that contract the Parlin Mining Company entered into possession and placed said machinery. The latter company would, of course, have no greater right to the fixtures than would the original vendee had it made the improvements.

As the machinery belonged to plaintiffs, no one would contend that at the time of the trial, November 2, 1909, it could be taken under an attachment issued against the Parlin Mining Company; but it is claimed that the situation was different when the writ of attachment was actually levied, on the 29th day of August, 1909, as the contract for the purchase of said mine did not expire till three days later.

It is clear, however, that the attaching creditor could have no greater right than the Parlin Mining Company. The latter could not remove the machinery, as it had become a part of the realty, and the title of the company to the realty was simply a conditional, defeasible one that was actually defeated and terminated by the default in the payment of the purchase price. This very question was decided in the Pomeroy Case, supra, wherein it was held that the entry of the vendee "is by reason of the estate in the land which he claims in himself, and the improvements which he makes thereon are made in contemplation of his becoming the owner, and if permanently affixed to the land become a part of the realty as fully as if he were the absolute owner. Such improvements belong to the vendor in case the vendee subsequently declines to comply with his contract of purchase and the vendee has no right to remove them from the land." In that case the vendee attempted to remove them prior to the expiration of the time within which the purchase was to be completed, and here the attaching creditor of the vendee was attempting a similar removal.

Viewing the matter in a little different light, it is plain, since the machinery was a part of the land, that the levy of the attachment, if it could affect anything, would reach only the interest of the Parlin Mining Company in the realty, and that was simply the right of possession of the mines and to prospect and develop them. 110 Pac. 973; Pomerooy v. Bell, supra. But, since this right ceased on the 1st day of September, there would be no interest upon which the attachment could operate thereafter.

But the whole case of appellant rests upon the assumption that the machinery was personal property and belonged to the Parlin Mining Company at the time the levy was made. This, as already shown, is entirely untenable, and the injunction was properly issued to restrain the sheriff from removing any part of the real property the title to which was vested absolutely in plaintiffs. In fine, the situation is as follows: A., owning a mine, enters into a contract with B. for its purchase on certain terms, B. thereafter executes a contract to sell it to C. for a certain amount, and C. enters into possession and places thereon certain fixtures which become a part of the realty. While B. and C., respectively, have the right to the use and enjoyment of the property while the said executory contracts are in force, neither, nor his creditor, has the right at any time to take away any part of said realty, and much less would he have such right after all claim under the contract with A. had terminated by reason of the failure to pay the purchase price of the property.

Some contention is made that the complaint, findings, and evidence are conflicting in material parts; but it will be found that the considerations are not of vital importance. It was sufficient for the court to find that James E. Conde was and is the owner of the property, describing it; that plaintiffs entered into the agreement in writing with the Parlin Gold Mining Company, setting out the agreement; that said company entered into the exhibited agreement with the Parlin Mining Company; that, after entering into said agreement, said Parlin Mining Company placed upon the property the machinery in question; and that said machinery was bolted and fastened so as to become fixtures and all of it was actually used in working and developing said Dreisam mines; "that on the 29th day of August, 1909, the defendant, as sheriff of the said county of Tuolumne, under and by virtue of a writ of attachment issued out of the superior court of said county in an action wherein Charles H. Clayter is plaintiff and the Parlin Mining Company, a corporation, as defendant did levy upon" said machinery and commenced to remove it and threatens to continue to remove all of it from said mines; that neither the Parlin Gold Mining Company nor the Parlin Mining Company paid to plaintiffs or either of them the purchase price agreed to be paid for the mines on the 1st day of September, 1909, or at any time, or at all; and that neither of them has since the 1st day of September, 1909, had any right, title, or interest whatever in and to said Dreisam mines. In view of the principles already discussed, the foregoing findings, which are supported by the evidence, justify the conclusions of law in favor of respondents.

[3] There is also a finding that plaintiff James E. Conde was at all times in possession of said mine. But this may be entirely disregarded. The fact is that the Parlin Mining Company was actually in possession from July 15, 1908, to and including September 1, 1909; but the possession did not and could not confer upon it or its creditor the right to take away any part of the realty.

Again, the court found that the removal of the machinery "will cause these plaintiffs great and irreparable injury." They certainly would be entitled to an injunction to restrain the defendant from taking away without right a part of their realty, whether in a pecuniary sense they would be greatly damaged or not by the removal. If the property had merely a nominal value, the owner surely could legally oppose its conversion to satisfy another person's debt. But, if material, the truth is that the machinery here was of value, and its removal would reduce the value of the mine, and there was evidence to that effect.

Appellant suggests that the mines would be as valuable without the machinery as they were at the time of the execution of the contract of sale to the vendee. This, however, is a false quantity, as we are not dealing with a case involving simply the commission of waste or the impairment of security. In Miller v. Waddingham, 91 Cal. 377, 27 Pac. 750, 13 L. R. A. 680, it is indeed held that: "It is a well-recognized principle in equity that a mortgagee cannot maintain an action to restrain waste without showing that thereby his security will be impaired. And by parity of reasoning the vendor who holds the legal title as security for the fulfillment of the contract of purchase by the vendee in possession should show that he will sustain some injury before he can maintain an action like the present. So long as the sufficiency of the security is unimpaired, he has no right to disturb the vendee in any use or enjoyment which he may make of the land." But it is plain that the case has no application, for the reason that there the contract of sale was still in force, the vendee was still rightfully in possession, the improvements were not found to be fixtures and therefore a part of the realty, but, to the contrary, it was assumed in favor of the judgment that the court below determined that the buildings were not fixtures, and, furthermore, it was assumed that the vendee "is not only able to comply with his obligations, but that he will fully and promptly meet them as they mature."

The foregoing seems to cover all the points made that we deem worthy of specific notice. We think there can be no question that the conclusion of the lower court is right.

The judgment and order are therefore affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

16 Cal. App. 13

PEOPLE v. PIERCY. (Cr. 226.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. April 14, 1911.)

1. HOMICIDE (§ 88*)—ASSAULT WITH INTENT TO KILL—ABILITY TO EXECUTE INTENT.

That accused was thwarted in his attempt to kill another before he had committed any actual violence is no defense, where, when he made the attempt, he had the ability to execute his intent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 114; Dec. Dig. § 88.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1137*)—APPEAL—PERSONS ENTITLED TO ALLEGE ERROR.

Accused cannot complain of an instruction given at his request.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 3009; Dec. Dig. § 1137.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 814*)—INSTRUCTIONS—APPLICABILITY TO ISSUES.

Where an information would not have supported a conviction of the crime of exhibiting a deadly weapon in a rude and threatening manner, as defined by Pen. Code, § 417, an instruction upon that crime was properly refused, even though the evidence would have justified such conviction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1980; Dec. Dig. § 814.*]

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 829*)—TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS.

The refusal of accused's requested instructions is not error, where other correct instructions have been given on those points.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2011; Dec. Dig. § 829.*]

5. HOMICIDE (§ 166*)—EVIDENCE—MOTIVE—PREVIOUS QUARRELS.

In a prosecution for assault with intent to murder, evidence that accused had on a previous occasion quarreled with and expressed hostility towards the complaining witness is admissible to show malice and motive.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 321; Dec. Dig. § 166.*]

6. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 384*)—EVIDENCE—PREVIOUS QUARRELS—REMOTENESS.

In a prosecution for assault with intent to murder, the objection that evidence of a quarrel between accused and the complaining witness, and accused's expression of hostility, was inadmissible, for remoteness goes to the weight of the evidence, rather than its competency.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 848; Dec. Dig. § 384.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; M. T. Dooling, Judge.

Edward M. Piercy was convicted of an assault with a deadly weapon, and appeals. Affirmed.

C. D. Wright, for appellant. Attorney General Webb and Jas. P. Sex, Asst. Dist. Atty., for the People.

LENNON, P. J. The defendant was charged with the crime of assault with intent to commit murder. He was found guilty of the crime of assault with a deadly weapon, and the judgment and sentence of the court was that he pay a fine of $500 with the alternative of imprisonment in the county jail. This appeal is from the judgment and the order of the court denying the defendant's motion for a new trial.

The information charged that the defendant made an assault upon the person of W. A. Beasley with a loaded revolver with intent to murder; and counsel for the defendant, in support of the appeal, asserts that the evidence is insufficient to justify the verdict; that the verdict is against law; and that the court erred upon questions of law occurring during the trial and in its instructions to the jury.

In substance, the facts upon which the information was based and the conviction had are these: On July 14, 1910, the defendant entered the office of the complaining witness in the city of San Jose in an intoxicated condition and evidently in an angry mood. Without provocation, he abused and ridiculed the complaining witness because of a real or fancied grievance arising out of a past business transaction. Finally the defendant "reached around to his hip pocket and pulled out a gun." The gun, it will be noted, was loaded. At this juncture the complaining witness shouted to one Laurensen, who was present and standing immediately behind the defendant, "Take the gun away from him." Laurensen closed in on the defendant, and despite his resistance disarmed him.

[1] This evidence as related by the witnesses for the people was somewhat clouded on cross-examination, and partially disputed by one witness for the defense. However, upon a review of the whole case it is clear that there is ample evidence to support the finding of the jury, implied from the verdict, that the defendant made an attempt to use a deadly weapon with the intent to commit a violent injury upon the person of the complaining witness, and that at the moment when he made the attempt the defendant had the ability to execute his intent. The fact that the defendant was thwarted in his attempt before it resulted in actual violence did not render his conduct any the less criminal. People v. McMakin, 8 Cal. 548; People v. Yslas, 27 Cal. 631; People v. Lee Kong, 95 Cal. 666, 30 Pac. 800, 17 L. R. A. 626, 29 Am. St. Rep. 165; People v. Johnson, 131 Cal. 512, 63 Pac. 842.

[2] The trial court, at the request of counsel for the defendant, charged the jury, in the language of section 22 of the Penal Code, with reference to the voluntary intoxication of the defendant, and its effect in determining the intent with which he committed the act charged against him. The contention of counsel for the defendant that the intoxication of the defendant was not voluntary, because the evidence shows that the brandy which produced the intoxication was taken for medicinal purposes, is unworthy of serious consideration. In any event, he cannot now be heard to complain of an instruction which the record shows was given at his request. People v. Rodley, 131 Cal. 240, 63 Pac. 351; People v. Hite, 135 Cal. 76, 67 Pac. 57.

[3] It may be, as suggested by counsel for the defense, that the evidence would have justified a verdict finding the defendant guilty of the crime of exhibiting a deadly weapon in a rude and threatening manner; but the allegations of the information would not have supported a judgment of conviction based upon such a verdict, and therefore the court did not err in refusing to charge the jury upon the subject-matter of section 417 of the Penal Code.

[4] Defendant's requested instruction No. 8 was properly refused. The subject-matter of this instruction was substantially and sufficiently covered, not only in the charge of the court given of its own motion, but in defendant's requested instructions Nos. 6 and 7 which were given to the jury.

The charge of the court is not susceptible to the criticism that it omitted to define the essentials of the crime of which the defendant was found guilty. As a whole the charge of the court fairly and correctly stated the law of the case, and the court was not required to include in every paragraph of its instructions a reference to the essentials of the crime charged in the information, or of any lesser offense included therein.

[5, 6] Objection was made at the trial to the introduction of certain testimony to the effect that defendant had on a previous occasion quarreled with and expressed hostility towards the complaining witness. The objection was properly overruled. The testimony was admissible as tending in some degree to show malice and motive. People v. Kern, 61 Cal. 244; People v. Chaves, 122 Cal. 143, 54 Pac. 596. The objection that the occurrence was too remote from the time of the commission of the offense charged went to the weight, rather than to the admissibility, of the evidence. People v. Brown, 76 Cal. 573, 18 Pac. 678.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: KERRIGAN, J.; HALL, J.

16 Cal. App. 130

PEOPLE v. BOYD. (Cr. 150.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 2, 1911.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 543*)—EVIDENCE—ABSENT WITNESS—DEPOSITION AT PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION—DILIGENCE.

Pen. Code, § 686, subd. 3, provides that, where a witness has been examined and cross-examined at a preliminary examination of accused, and it is satisfactorily shown that with due diligence he cannot be found within the state, the evidence taken in the preliminary examination may be read. A witness, to whom it was claimed defendant had confessed, was suspected of being connected with the same robbery, or other crimes committed in the vicinity, and it was shown that an officer sent to subpoena him could not find him at his residence within the county, and was informed by his wife that she did not know exactly where he was, but thought he had gone to certain springs for treatment for rheumatism; that thereafter the sheriff and district attorney telephoned to various mineral springs and were informed that no such person was there. Held to authorize a finding by the trial court, in its discretion, that sufficient diligence had been used to procure the witness' attendance to authorize the introduction of his testimony at the preliminary examination; it not being essential that a subpoena for the witness shall have been sent to every county in the state.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1236; Dec. Dig. § 543.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1153*)—APPEAL—DISCRETION.

Where a trial court, in its discretion, admitted the testimony of an absent witness, given at a preliminary hearing, it must be presumed on appeal that the discretion was properly exercised.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 3066; Dec. Dig. § 1153.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1169*)—APPEAL—PREJUDICE.

Accused was not prejudiced by the admission of testimony of an absent witness, given at the preliminary hearing, where such testimony was merely cumulative.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 3138; Dec. Dig. § 1169.*]

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1158*)—APPEAL—FINDINGS—NEW TRIAL—MISCONDUCT OF JUROR.

Where affidavits as to a juror's intoxication during the trial were conflicting, the trial court's refusal of a new trial because of the juror's alleged intoxication will not be reversed on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 3071; Dec. Dig. § 1158.*]

5. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1153*)—APPEAL—NEW TRIAL—REVIEW.

Where affidavits that a juror discussed the merits of the case against accused before it was submitted were flatly contradicted by the juror, a finding by the trial court as to the fact would not be reversed on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 3071; Dec. Dig. § 1158.*]

6. ROBBERY (§ 24*)—EVIDENCE.

Evidence held to sustain a conviction of robbery.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Robbery, Dec. Dig. § 24.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Siskiyou County; James F. Lodge, Judge.

Charles A. Boyd was convicted of robbery, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Gillis & Gillis, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, for the People.

HART, J. The defendant, having been informed against by the district attorney of Siskiyou county for the crime of robbery, was tried therefor, convicted of said crime, and thereupon sentenced by the court to imprisonment in the state prison for the term of 2½ years. This appeal is from the judgment and the order denying his motion for a new trial.

The points made by the appellant for a reversal are: (1) Errors in the decision of questions of law arising during the course of the trial; (2) that the jury were "guilty of misconduct by which a fair and due consideration of the case has been prevented"; (3) "that the verdict is contrary to the law and the evidence in the case."

1. The claim that the court erred in the decision of questions of law grows out of the admission in evidence, over the objection of the defendant, of the deposition of one George L. Weston, who was a witness at the preliminary examination and who could not be found by the sheriff and his presence at the trial secured. The ground of the objection to said deposition was that a sufficient showing of diligence in an effort to subpoena and procure the attendance of said witness at the trial had not been made to justify the ruling of the court in permitting it to be read to the jury.

[1] By section 686, subd. 3, of the Penal Code, it is provided that, where the charge has been preliminarily examined before a committing magistrate, and the testimony taken down by question and answer, in the presence of the defendant, who has, either in person or by counsel, cross-examined or had an opportunity to cross-examine the witness, the deposition of such witness may be read, upon its being satisfactorily shown to the court that he cannot with due diligence be found within the state.

Upon the question of diligence, it was shown that the case was set for trial for the 31st day of October, 1910; that, on the 27th day of September, 1910, a subpoena for Weston was issued by the district attorney and delivered into the hands of the sheriff for service; that the sheriff went to the home of the witness at the town of Etna Mills, in Siskiyou county, and that that officer was informed by the wife of the witness that the latter was not at home, and that she did not know exactly where he was; that she declared that, suffering from rheumatism, the witness left home some days before, saying that he intended going to Neyes Springs, in said county, and that if, upon arriving at said springs, he found them closed for the season, his intention was to go to Tuscan Springs, in Tehama county. It was shown that the sheriff addressed letters to all his deputies, located in various parts of Siskiyou county, commanding them to search for Weston; that a deputy sheriff went to Neyes Springs and failed to find him there; that the district attorney personally telephoned to Tuscan Springs, giving the name and description of the witness and inquiring whether he was there, or had been there,

"and the management at Tuscan Springs informed me there was no man by that name there." The district attorney further testified: "I telephoned up to Garretson Springs, a mineral spring up on the mountain here, thinking probably if he was going to a mineral spring he might go there, and was informed that there was no man by that name there."

Besides the foregoing, it appears from the record that the officers entertained some suspicion that Weston might be connected either with the robbery of which the defendant was accused or with some other crimes that had been perpetrated in and about the town of Etna Mills. It is evident from this fact that the witness was purposely avoiding the service of process, thus hoping to escape the ordeal of such a cross-examination as that to which he was subjected at the preliminary hearing.

We cannot say, upon the showing made, that the court abused its discretion in allowing the deposition of Weston to be read.

Counsel for appellant seem to think that, in order to disclose the "due diligence" contemplated by the statute, and necessary to be shown before the deposition of an absent witness, taken at the preliminary hearing, may be read in evidence at the trial, it must appear that a subpoena for such witness has been sent to every county in the state. In this they are mistaken.

[2] As is said in Heintz v. Cooper, 104 Cal. 670, 38 Pac. 512, "diligence is a relative term incapable of exact definition. What would amount to due diligence under one state of facts would fall absolutely short of it under another and different state of facts. It depends, therefore, so essentially upon the particular circumstances of each case, with all their distinct and varying phases and bearings, as they have appeared to the lower court at the trial and throughout the conduct of the cause, in determining whether diligence has been used in any particular instance, that this court should hesitate to disturb a ruling upon this ground where it has any substance whatever upon which to rest. The presumption is that the discretion has been properly exercised, and that presumption must be overcome by a clear want of facts, before the order will be disturbed." See Jones v. Singleton, 45 Cal. 92; Baker v. Joseph, 16 Cal. 180; Kenezleber v. Wahl, 92 Cal. 202, 28 Pac. 225; People v. Johnson, 13 Cal. App. 779, 110 Pac. 965.

In the case at bar, we have seen that the witness was a resident of Siskiyou county, was a married man, and that his wife, at the time the sheriff sought to serve a subpoena upon him, was at their home at Etna Mills; that she pretended to know nothing of his precise whereabouts at the time the sheriff called at their home in search of him. These circumstances were such as to make it manifest to the mind of any reasonable person that he had not permanently abandoned Siskiyou county, and such as to indicate that the witness was trying to avoid service of the subpoena, and to that end was in hiding. The officers, in their efforts to find him, searched and inquired for him at all the places where, according to information obtained from all the available sources, there was any likelihood that he might be found. If the witness was purposely keeping out of the way of the officers, so that he might not be subpoenaed, as the circumstances very strongly tend to show was the fact, it would then have been perfectly futile to have sent subpoenas to other counties, for, if his purpose was to elude the officers, he would have been very particular to conceal his identity, so far as he could, wherever he might be or go.

If the witness had been at the time without a family in Siskiyou county or some other strong incentive for his return to that county, and it was not made to appear, as it certainly was made to appear, that he was endeavoring to avoid the service of process calling for his appearance as a witness at the trial, we cannot say but that, perhaps, a better showing than was made here might be required. Under all the circumstances disclosed here, however, we think that the court made no error in its ruling admitting the deposition.

[3] But, conceding that the showing of diligence does not quite measure up to the requirements of the statute, we are of the opinion that the ruling was without prejudice, since the testimony thus brought to the attention of the jury involved, in substantial effect, only a repetition of the testimony given by the witnesses, Lowe, Moxley, and Sovy. Weston testified at the preliminary hearing to an alleged confession by the defendant, made to the witness a short time subsequently to the commission of the robbery. Said confession was the only subject concerning which Weston testified. Lowe testified at the trial that the defendant likewise confessed to him that he was the author of the crime. Moxley and Sovy testified that they overheard a conversation between the defendant and Weston, in which the accused confessed to having committed the crime. The deposition of Weston was therefore, as stated, only corroboratory and, in fact, cumulative of other testimony disclosing substantially the identical facts to which the deposition related, and, as before suggested, we cannot perceive how it could, under such circumstances, have prejudiced the defendant. In view of the cross-examination of Weston at the hearing before the magistrate, which cast no little suspicion about him in connection with certain transactions of a dubious character, his deposition could have added little force to the testimony of the confessions as given by the other witnesses. The testimony of Lowe, Moxley, and Sovy (the last two constable and city marshal, respectively) is sufficient, without the deposition of Weston, to sustain the verdict.

[4] 2. It is, secondly, contended that the alleged misconduct of the jury consisted in the inebriety, during the progress of the trial, of Juror Fowler. In support of said charge, the defendant filed a number of affidavits in which the affiants declared that, during the recesses of the court while the trial was in progress, said juror so freely used intoxicating liquor that, on several different occasions, he was in an intoxicated condition. One of the affidavits charged that, on a certain day while the trial was going on, but during an adjournment of the court, said juror was so much under the influence of liquor that "he talked at random and acted like an insane or wild man," etc.

A counter showing upon this issue was made by the people in the form of affidavits made by the other jurors. In each of these affidavits it is declared that Fowler did not appear to be under the influence of liquor at any time during the trial, when the jury were actively engaged in the discharge of their duties; that, to the contrary, he at all times when so engaged bore every appearance of sobriety; and that, after the jury retired to deliberate upon the case, he discussed the testimony and various phases of the record in an intelligent manner.

There is absolutely no evidence showing that the juror was not sober while he was actually engaged in performing his duties as a juror. No evidence was introduced that the trial judge or the attorneys observed anything unusual in the conduct of the juror while he was in the jury box, or that he was in a condition of inebriety. In brief, assuming that the affidavits filed by the defendant tended to prove, by reason of the quantity of liquor the juror was then shown to have consumed during the adjournments of the court while the trial was in progress, that he was or must have been still under its influence while in the jury box, there is presented upon the issue thus made a conflict in the evidence, and therefore upon that proposition the ruling of the trial court cannot be overturned by this court. See People v. Emmons, 7 Cal. App. 698, 95 Pac. 1032, and cases therein cited.

[5] An attempt was also made to show, by affidavits, that the same juror discussed the merits of the case with certain parties before the cause was submitted. These affidavits were flatly contradicted by the juror, and, of course, it was for the trial court to determine the truth of the matter between the conflicting testimony thus advanced upon the point.

[6] 3. It is lastly contended that the evidence does not support the verdict. This contention is not maintainable.

The facts, briefly, are: That on the night of the 2d day of May, 1910, a masked man appeared at the Blake Hotel, in said town of Etna Mills, a few minutes before the hour of 12 o'clock, and, leveling a pistol on the night clerk, who was alone in the barroom at the time, forced the latter to deliver over all the cash then behind the bar. The clerk had just closed and locked the doors leading from the street and a hallway into the hotel preparatory to closing the establishment for the night, when some one attempted to enter the barroom by way of the door leading from said hallway into the barroom. Thinking that the party at the door was a transient lodger who had but a few minutes previously been in conversation with him in the barroom, the clerk spoke, saying, "Hold on, I will open the door," and thereupon unbolted the door and opened it, only to be confronted by a man whose face was concealed by a mask and who leveled a pistol on the clerk. The latter yelled for Mr. Blake, the landlord, whose room was located on the first floor and across the hall from the barroom. Blake immediately put in an appearance in the barroom, but, observing the weapon in the masked man's hand, leveled at the clerk, he hastily made his exit from the barroom. As stated, the clerk, at the command of the highwayman, delivered the latter all the money then behind the bar. This consisted of about $28, in various denominations, and was contained in a dice box, which, with the money, the robber carried away; he having left the barroom by way of one of the doors leading to the street, and turned, as he reached the sidewalk, in the direction of a house of ill fame.

Some time after the robbery the defendant, as seen, admitted to the witnesses, Weston and Lowe, that he was the author of the crime. Weston, it appears, reported this information to Constable Moxley and City Marshal Sovy. Thereupon it was arranged between Weston and the officers that the latter, at a certain hour of the night of the day on which Weston communicated to them the fact of the defendant's confession, should secrete themselves behind a high board fence in the rear of another hotel in Etna, and that, upon some pretext, Weston should induce the defendant to accompany him to a point directly opposite the spot at which the officers were to station themselves. This scheme was carried out. Weston and the defendant stood against the fence on one side thereof, and the officers were against the fence directly opposite. Weston started the conversation by telling the defendant that the people were suspicious that he (defendant) had committed the Blake Hotel robbery, and advising him to leave Etna. It is unnecessary to detail this conversation; it being sufficient to say that he therein admitted, according to the testimony of Moxley and Sovy, that he committed the robbery.

The clerk of the hotel testified that he could not identify his assailant, but expressed the opinion that the man who robbed him corresponded in size and build with the defendant.

The witness Single testified that, at about 15 minutes before 12 o'clock, midnight, on the night of the robbery, the defendant came into a house of ill fame, situated about 500 yards from the Blake Hotel. Single further testified that he gave a bunch of keys to the defendant, and requested him to deliver them to the witness Lowe, who was a barkeeper in the saloon in the Barrenden Hotel.

Lowe testified that, shortly after he had retired, the defendant came to his room and delivered to him said bunch of keys, and then asked whether he could secure a room in the hotel, and, replying to this question, Lowe told him to take "Room 17."

The testimony given by Weston, Moxley, Sovy, and Lowe, all relating to the confessions of the accused, constituted the principal evidence brought out by the people directly connecting the defendant with the commission of the crime.

The defendant undertook to sustain an alibi, and in support of this contention testified that he went to the room of a Mrs. Willard, in the Barrenden Hotel, in Etna, at about the hour of 10 o'clock on the night of the robbery, and remained in said room with Mrs. Willard continuously until the hour of 2 o'clock the next morning. Mrs. Willard corroborated the defendant, declaring that, from 10 o'clock on the night of the robbery until 2 o'clock the next morning, the defendant was not for a moment out of her room.

Relative to the alleged confessions, the defendant admitted having made them, but explained that after the robbery the officers had received information that certain parties had planned the robbery of the local bank, and that he was employed by the marshal to do detective work, not only in connection with the alleged contemplated robbery of the bank, but also to work on the Blake Hotel robbery. Defendant's employment as a detective was to be kept a secret, or from the public, so that he could the more effectively execute his duties as such. He testified that his statements to Weston implicating himself in the hotel robbery were untrue, but that they were prompted entirely by the hope that thus he might be able to obtain information which would lead to the discovery and apprehension of the perpetrator of that crime. He denied having admitted his guilt to Lowe, saying that the conversation with the latter, about the robbery occurred in the saloon where Lowe worked, and could have been heard by a number of other persons then in said saloon. Sovy corroborated the defendant as to the hiring of the latter by him to do detective work, both in connection with the hotel robbery and the alleged proposed bank robbery.

It is insisted by counsel for the appellant that the testimony produced on behalf of their client clearly shows that the defendant's alleged confessions, by which, principally, his conviction was accomplished, were only made for the purpose of carrying out defendant's plan for apprehending the real perpetrator of the crime committed at the Blake Hotel.

The evidence, it must be admitted, presents a strange and unusual situation, for it is difficult to account for the fact, developed in this case, upon the hypothesis that the defendant is possessed of ordinary common sense, that he would voluntarily, when not under arrest or even under suspicion then, and when, therefore, there was no apparent reason for him to do so, confess that he had committed the crime of robbery—a fact which, under some circumstances, might be satisfactorily accounted for upon the theory upon which explanation was, without success, attempted by defendant before the jury. But we think there were developed, in connection with the confessions, some circumstances which place the jury's determination of the value of said confessions as evidence of defendant's guilt beyond the power of this court to disturb it.

In the first place, it may be mentioned as a fact worthy of note that the defendant, although claiming, after his arrest and while incarcerated in the local jail, to have obtained, while acting as a detective for the city marshal, considerable information concerning other thefts and crimes occurring in and about Etna, never conveyed such information to his superior officer until after his arrest. Nor did he say anything to the officers before his arrest about his interview with Weston, which was overheard by said officers. Secondly, it is to be noted that, when the interview between defendant and Weston that was overheard by the officers was in progress, several men stepped from the rear of the hotel near which said interview was taking place, and passed by and near the back of the point at which Weston and the defendant were standing, whereupon the latter remarked, after looking over the fence to see if he could identify the men or determine where they were going, "we had better get out of here; some one will hear us." This circumstance could well have been regarded by the jury as possessing some incriminatory force, or as impeaching the explanation by defendant that his confession to Weston was feigned for the purpose stated by him.

It is further argued that, accepting the night clerk's statement as to the hour at which the robbery occurred and the statement of the witness Single as to the hour at which the defendant made his appearance in the house of ill fame on the night of the robbery as precisely accurate, it would be impossible for the defendant to have committed the crime. The hotel clerk testified that the hotel clock always ran ahead of time from 5 to 10 minutes, and, according to his statement, the robbery occurred at about 5 minutes to 12 by said clock, which, assuming it to have been running fast or ahead of the actual time from 5 to 10 minutes, would make the precise time of the robbery from 10 to 15 minutes to 12 o'clock. Single said that the defendant came into the bawdyhouse at about 15 minutes to 12 o'clock. The defendant testified that he did not go to said house until after 2 o'clock the next morning. Said house was situated, as seen, about 500 yards from the Blake Hotel.

All the testimony for the prosecution regarding the times at which the various events referred to occurred no doubt involved, to a great extent, mere conjectures, or at least only approximations. The trial occurred several months after the robbery, and the jury could well have concluded that the witnesses were not precisely accurate upon these points. But, if the jury believed the evidence of the confessions and further believed that, by those confessions, the defendant told the truth, then they were obviously thus satisfied of his guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, notwithstanding that, taken at its face value, the testimony with respect to the times of the happening of the several events, as affecting the defendant, on the night of the robbery, might have a strong tendency to confirm the alibi for which the accused contended at the trial.

At any rate, there is sufficient evidence to support the verdict, and we cannot, therefore, set it aside on the ground that there may appear in the record some testimony favorable to defendant. The jury, presumably—indeed, presumptively—gave due attention and consideration to all the important facts brought out by the evidence, those favorable to, as well as those condemnatory of, the defendant, and their verdict must be interpreted to mean that their conclusion was that either the hotel clerk or Single, or perhaps both, were mistaken as to the hours of the night that the events to which those witnesses, respectively, testified occurred.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

16 Cal. App. 117

PEOPLE v. SHIMONAKA. (Cr. 147.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 2, 1911.)

1. HOMICIDE (§ 255*)—MANSLAUGHTER—EVIDENCE.

Where the evidence showed that the killing was without apparent cause and unlawful, and under circumstances implying a criminal intent, a conviction of manslaughter would not be disturbed on the ground that the jury found accused guilty of a lesser crime than the one proved.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Dec. Dig. § 255.*]

2. HOMICIDE (§ 7*)—ELEMENTS OF OFFENSE—MURDER—MANSLAUGHTER.

The crime of murder includes manslaughter.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 12; Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1159*)—VERDICT—CONCLUSIVENESS.

A verdict on conflicting evidence is conclusive on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 3076; Dec. Dig. § 1159.*]

4. HOMICIDE (§ 300*)—SELF-DEFENSE—INSTRUCTIONS.

An instruction that one who reasonably believes that another intends and is about to commit some great bodily injury on him may pursue and slay his adversary, but his pursuit must be prosecuted in good faith to the end of securing his life, and must be carried no further than is reasonably necessary to free oneself from danger, and that the law favors accused and justifies his conduct in taking life under circumstances indicating real or apparent danger of bodily injury, etc., is sufficiently favorable to accused, and is not objectionable as precluding the jury from an acquittal, regardless of the facts.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 614-632; Dec. Dig. § 300.*]

5. HOMICIDE (§§ 119, 116*)—SELF-DEFENSE—REPELLING ATTACK—APPREHENSION OF DANGER.

A person assaulted is justified in using so much force as is necessary to his defense, and to repel a slight assault the person assaulted may not resort to measures of great violence, and he is not justified in doing acts calculated to destroy the life of assailant, unless the assault is of such a character as to excite fears, as a reasonable man, of danger to life or great bodily injury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 172-174, 158-163; Dec. Dig. §§ 119, 116.*]

6. HOMICIDE (§ 116*)—SELF-DEFENSE.

The danger which will justify one in law for killing his assailant is not such as does not reasonably indicate real or apparent danger of great bodily injury, and accused, relying on self-defense, is not entitled to a charge which leaves the jeopardy under which he may shield himself undefined.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 158-163; Dec. Dig. § 116.*]

7. HOMICIDE (§ 340*)—APPEAL—HARMLESS ERROR—ERRONEOUS INSTRUCTIONS.

Where accused was convicted of manslaughter, errors in instructions on murder are not prejudicial to accused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 720; Dec. Dig. § 340.*]

8. HOMICIDE (§ 116*)—SELF-DEFENSE—APPREHENSION OF DANGER.

A requested charge that one may, while engaged in a sudden quarrel, be justified in killing another in self-defense, but the mere fact that the parties are engaged in a sudden quarrel, which may be a mere wordy altercation, cannot deprive one of the right to defend himself against a real or apparent assailant, is properly modified by adding that mere words, whether used in a sudden quarrel or otherwise, do not justify or excuse one in taking life, but there must be some overt act or demonstration of force, reasonably sufficient to cause accused to believe, as a reasonable man, that his own life is in danger, or that he is in imminent peril of great bodily injury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 158-163; Dec. Dig. § 116.*]

9. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 789*)—REASONABLE DOUBT—INSTRUCTIONS.

A requested charge that it is not necessary that reasonable doubt should result from the testimony affirmatively produced at the trial by accused, but it may arise from the testimony of the prosecution, is properly modified by adding that a doubt to be reasonable is one arising from a consideration of all the evidence in the case.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1906; Dec. Dig. § 789.*]

10. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 829*)—TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—REFUSAL TO GIVE REQUESTED INSTRUCTIONS COVERED BY THE CHARGE GIVEN.

It is not error to refuse a requested charge substantially covered by the charge given.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2011; Dec. Dig. § 829.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; J. A. Plummer, Judge.

Kiju Shimonaka was convicted of manslaughter, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Ben Berry and John Wilson, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, for the People.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Defendant was accused of the crime of murder and was found guilty of manslaughter; the jury recommending him to the mercy of the court. Defendant's motion for a new trial was denied by the court, and it thereupon sentenced him to be imprisoned for the term of four years.

1. Defendant and deceased, Hikotaro Tenouye, Japanese laborers, were working on a ranch near the city of Stockton, being farmed by another Japanese, named Yosaka Noguchi. About 8 o'clock on the evening of June 8, 1910, they were in a so-called bunkhouse, where, with some other Japanese, they lodged. They got into a verbal controversy over the trifling question as to how many pounds constituted a load of hay, which led to an encounter, but neither being injured. The bystanders separated them, and defendant left the bunkhouse. So far as appears, nothing had occurred, before this affray, to arouse a feeling of hostility towards each other. They had been acquainted only about three weeks. After defendant left the room, Tenouye sat down for a minute or two and then got up and followed after defendant, remarking as he left, that he was going to "hit" defendant, but this was not said in defendant's hearing. Tenouye had no clothing on his person at the time except an overshirt and defendant wore only an overshirt and undershirt. There was evidence that neither of them had any weapon at the time they left the bunkhouse. Defendant went towards a shed where there were arrangements for bathing, passing through a building used as a dining room and kitchen on his way. Tenouye followed after defendant, and witness Matsuyama followed Tenouye not far behind him. Defendant passed out of the kitchen at the door opposite to the door where the three entered the kitchen. Matsuyama testified that as Tenouye passed out of the kitchen door towards the bathhouse he saw defendant strike Tenouye with an ax, felling him to the ground, and while lying on the ground he struck him with the ax on the head, and ran away. The first blow was in the lower part of the abdomen, cutting a wide and deep gash, though not necessarily fatal, as testified by the medical witnesses. The second blow crushed the skull and inflicted a mortal wound. Matsuyama, who was the only eyewitness to the homicide, called for help, and Noguchi, the tenant of the farm, and others came at once and carried Tenouye into the house, where he died the next morning from the effects of the blow on his head, as testified by the medical witnesses. Defendant fled on striking the second blow, and was arrested the next day several miles from the scene of the homicide. Defendant testified that he had reached the bathhouse and was preparing to take a bath when Tenouye came at him in a threatening manner with a club or stick, and said, "I am going to kill you," or, "I am going to kill you one strike," and that he thereupon struck him in self-defense. Matsuyama testified that Tenouye had no club or stick, or other means of injuring defendant in his hands; that he was only a few feet from Tenouye when the blow was struck and heard no words between them. It appeared that the body of Tenouye was found a few feet from the kitchen; that the bathhouse was 15 or 20 feet further away. Defendant's account of the homicide cannot be reconciled with Matsuyama's. The jury must have accepted Matsuyama's testimony, and they might well have found defendant guilty of a higher degree of crime than manslaughter.

[1, 2] Defendant's counsel advance the rather singular contention that the verdict is not supported because the evidence does not bring the case within the definition of manslaughter, first, because the killing was not involuntary; and, second, it was not voluntary manslaughter, which consists of the unlawful killing of a human being without malice upon a sudden quarrel or in the heat of passion. "If, then," says the brief, "there does not appear to have been a sudden quarrel, and the defendant did not act in the heat of passion, the verdict would be unsupported by the evidence." Just what impelled defendant to kill Tenouye can only be surmised. The evidence justified the jury in finding that he killed him without apparent cause; that the killing was unlawful and under circumstances implying criminal intent. It would be a strange condition of the law that would acquit defendant because the jury found him guilty of a lesser crime than the one charged and proved. It is settled that the crime of murder necessarily includes the crime of manslaughter. People v. McFarlane, 138 Cal. 481, 71 Pac. 568, 72 Pac. 48, 61 L. R. A. 245.

[3] Upon the issue of self-defense, the verdict of the jury was against defendant, and is conclusive upon this court, there having been some evidence from which the jury might have concluded that defendant did not kill his adversary under circumstances such as the law would have justified under the plea of self-defense. Defendant complains of error in giving certain instructions for the people, in refusing certain instructions requested by him, and in modifying certain others before giving them.

[4] 2. The instructions principally made the subject of objection relate to the law of self-defense. Instruction marked 12, requested by defendant, was as follows: "You are instructed that where one reasonably believes that another intends, and is about to commit some great bodily injury upon him, he may, in his defense, pursue and slay his adversary. But his pursuit must not be revenge, but must be prosecuted in good faith to the sole end of winning his safety and securing his life." To which the court added: "(And must be carried no further than is reasonably necessary to free oneself from danger.)"

Instruction marked 23, given at the request of the prosecution, is referred to by defendant in this connection as being likewise objectionable, as shown in clause in brackets. It is as follows: "On the subject of self-defense or justifiable homicide, the court further charges the jury that one of the prime objects of the law is the preservation of human life. That no human life shall be taken unnecessarily is the policy of the law. Every individual is entitled to his life, unless forfeited thereunder. He may forfeit the right to his life by the commission of a crime, or by such conduct towards another individual as will justify that individual in taking his life then and there. A person taking the life of another, under such circumstances, must be justified in doing it by the law of necessity. This necessity must be real, or apparently real. A person so taking life must believe that he is in danger of losing his own, or receiving great bodily injury. This belief must be founded on reason and entertained in good faith. In the effort to save his own life, or to avoid the infliction of great bodily injury upon him, the person in danger, real or apparently real [may use so much force as is necessary to meet such danger, and no more. If he goes beyond this limit, he transcends the law of self-defense, and becomes himself a wrongdoer]. He would not be justified under the law in taking life unless such taking of life was really or apparently necessary to save his own, or to avoid the infliction of great bodily injury upon him. But, while the law is interested in the preservation of human life, still, as between a wrongdoer and an innocent person acting in good faith, and in a reasonable manner, the law will favor the latter and justify his conduct in taking life under such circumstances, if it were really or apparently necessary, and done in good faith, under an honest apprehension of danger to his own life, or of receiving great bodily harm."

The argument is that under these instructions the jury were precluded from rendering a verdict of acquittal regardless of the facts, and that under no circumstances would one ever be justified in slaying his assailant, that he must act at his peril, carefully avoiding the use of more force than is necessary to disable his assailant, and, if in striking the blow for his protection he should happen to use more than was necessary and kill his assailant, he would be accountable regardless of what the facts might be. We cannot see that these instructions can reasonably be said to so direct the jury. It will be noted that the court, very plainly, said to the jury, in the concluding part of instruction 23, that "the law will favor the latter (the accused) and justify his conduct in taking life under such circumstances (i. e., circumstances indicating real or apparent danger of bodily injury), if it were really or apparently necessary, and done in good faith under an honest apprehension of danger to his own life, or of receiving great bodily injury."

[5] The Supreme Court, in People v. Campbell, 30 Cal. 314, states the law as follows: "It is an elementary principle in criminal law that the person assaulted is justified in using so much force as is necessary to his defense. To repel a slight assault the person assaulted is not authorized to resort to measures of great violence. He will not be justified in doing those acts that are calculated to destroy the life of the assailant unless the assault is of such a character as to endanger his life or inflict on him great bodily injury, or to excite his fears as a reasonable man that such would be the result of the assault. The law limits him to such acts as are necessary to self-defense. The law does measure the degree of the force that may be used to repel the assault; and, although it will not make the measurement with a nice hand and hold the person assaulted to accountability for force slightly disproportioned to the assault, yet it will hold him responsible for a clearly marked excess."

The instructions complained of do not, when fairly considered in their entirety, lay down a rule at variance with the foregoing and we think were properly given.

[6] 3. Error is claimed because the court refused instruction marked 33, requested by defendant, as follows: "The law does not weigh in too nice scales the conduct of the defendant, and say he shall not be justified because he might have resorted to other means to secure his safety, and while an assault with intent to kill must be under absolute necessity, actual or apparent, as a matter of law that absolute necessity is deemed to exist when one without fault is placed in sudden jeopardy." The court refused the instruction because "argumentative and fully covered by other instructions." We do not think it a correct statement of the rule that the absolute necessity, justifying the taking of life, referred to, is, "as matter of law, deemed to exist when one without fault is placed in sudden jeopardy." One may find himself in jeopardy which does not reasonably indicate real or apparent danger of his receiving great bodily injury. But this is not the jeopardy contemplated by the law which would justify the killing of one's assailant. The defendant was not entitled to an instruction which left the jeopardy under which he would shield himself, entirely undefined.

[7] 4. Defendant requested an instruction declaring, with considerable particularity, the essential element of the crime of murder to be malice, and defining malice. The court refused the instruction and gave the following: "The words 'malice' and 'maliciously' import a wish to vex, annoy, or injure another person, or an intent to do a wrongful act, established either by proof or presumption of law." It is conceded that as an abstract proposition this is correct, but it is contended that, "as the court further instructed the jury that a malicious and guilty intent, from the deliberate commission of an unlawful act, for the purpose of injuring another is conclusively presumed," there was prejudicial error in the instruction. The question is immaterial, since the verdict was for manslaughter in which the element of malice is not involved. An erroneous instruction touching the crime of murder, of which defendant was acquitted, was without prejudice.

[8] 5. The following instruction, marked 10, was asked by defendant and was given as modified by the court: "A person may while engaged in a sudden quarrel be justified in killing another in self-defense, as, for instance, one party may assail another under such circumstances as to make it necessary for the other to kill in self-defense, or, such person being the aggressor, he may so conduct himself as to justify the other as a reasonable man in believing that it is necessary to so do in order to save himself from death or great bodily injury. In either event, the mere fact that the parties are engaged in a sudden quarrel, which may be a mere altercation of words, cannot deprive one of the right to defend himself against a real or apparent assailant." Added by court: "But mere words whether used in a sudden quarrel, or otherwise, never justify or excuse one in taking life. There must be some overt act or demonstration of force reasonably sufficient to cause the one doing the killing to believe, as a reasonable person that his own life is in danger, or that he is in imminent peril of some great bodily injury."

It is contended that under this instruction

the taking of life would never under any circumstances be justified because of words spoken; that the assailant might be known to be armed and prepared to carry out his threat to commit some great bodily injury, but before the other party would be justified in going to extreme measures to protect himself he would have to wait until it was too late and his right would become unavailable. The court did not convey this meaning. The instruction, as requested, referred to the existence of circumstances which would justify the taking of life to save oneself from great bodily injury, and, in the event of those circumstances appearing, "the mere fact that the parties are engaged in a sudden quarrel, which may be a mere altercation of words, cannot deprive one of the right to defend himself against a real or apparent assailant." The court simply makes it clearer that there must be some accompanying circumstances or acts of the assailant besides mere words before the taking of life in self-defense would be justified. In the case of People v. Thomson, 145 Cal. 717, 721, 79 Pac. 435, the court uses the language quoted in the concluding paragraph of the instruction as asked by defendant. But it must be read in the light of the facts in that case, and there appeared much besides "a mere altercation of words" as the ground for defendant's action.

[9] 6. The defendant requested the following instruction which was modified, and given as follows: "In order for the jury to have a reasonable doubt of the defendant's guilt, it is not necessary that such doubt should result from the testimony affirmatively produced at the trial on the part of the defendant. It may arise as well from, and be founded upon the weakness or defect in the testimony introduced on the part of the prosecution. A doubt to be reasonable is one which results or arises from a consideration of all the evidence in the case as heretofore defined in these instructions." Defendant objects to the modification of the instruction as shown in italics. Defendant states his point thus: "If a doubt to be reasonable must result from a consideration of all the evidence, an acquittal would become impossible irrespective of what the facts may be. The jury are required to consider all the evidence, but a reasonable doubt may arise out of any part of the evidence upon a consideration of all the evidence."

The point sought to be impressed upon the jury by defendant was that he was not called upon to produce affirmatively any evidence in order to create a reasonable doubt in the minds of the jury, but that such doubt might arise from the weakness of the case made by the people. It was proper for the court to remind the jury that a doubt to be reasonable must arise from a consideration of all the evidence, as the court had previously and very fully explained to the jury.

[10] 7. The court refused to give the following instruction, marked 32, requested by defendant: "The court instructs you that when a man exercises his right of self-defense he must be understood to act on the facts as they appear to him, and if without fault or carelessness he is misled concerning them, and defends himself correctly according to what he supposes the facts to be, he is justifiable, though the facts are in truth otherwise, and he really has no occasion for the extreme measure." The court properly refused to give this instruction because included in instructions elsewhere given. It is urged that being admittedly a correct statement of the law it should have been given notwithstanding the principles contained in it had been elsewhere given. The court did not err. When a principle or proposition of law is once correctly and clearly stated in an instruction, it is not error to refuse its repetition in some other form, unless this other form is necessary to a proper conception of the principle as applicable to some phase of the case not covered by other instructions.

Discovering no prejudicial error in the record, the judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: HART, J., BURNETT, J.

16 Cal. App. 41

ERVING v. NAPA VALLEY BREWING CO.
(Civ. 861.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 18, 1911.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 628*)—TRANSCRIPT OF RECORD—FAILURE TO FILE IN TIME—EXCUSE.

Where appellant's attorney did not file the transcript of the record within the time required by rule 2 of the Supreme Court (78 Pac. vii), the appellant cannot excuse his failure by showing that the clerk agreed with the attorney to prepare the transcript as he had done in a different case.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2750-2764; Dec. Dig. § 628.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 629*)—TRANSCRIPT OF RECORD—FAILURE TO FILE IN TIME—EXCUSE.

Where appellant failed to show that he had reason to believe there was merit in his appeal, the court, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 473, providing for the relieving from judgments when a furtherance of justice requires it, will not excuse a default in filing a transcript of the record.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 2765; Dec. Dig. § 629.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Napa County; H. C. Gesford, Judge.

Action by W. F. Erving against the Napa Valley Brewing Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Appeal dismissed.

Nathan Coombs, John T. York, and Frank L. Coombs, for appellant. F. E. Johnston and L. E. Johnston, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. [1] Respondent has moved to dismiss the appeal on the ground that "the appellant, Napa Valley Brewing Company, a corporation, has failed to serve and file the printed transcript of the record within the time prescribed by rule 2 [78 Pac. vii] of the Supreme Court." The motion is supported by the certified statement of the county clerk, setting forth the facts required by rule 6 (78 Pac. ix) of said Supreme Court. By said certificate, it appears that the notice of appeal was filed on January 11, 1911; "that no bill of exceptions or statement on appeal has been made or filed; that appellant has not requested the clerk to certify to a correct, or to any transcript of the record; and no motion or notice of intention to move for a new trial in said action is pending or has been filed in said cause." Notice of the motion to dismiss the appeal was served on March 13th and filed herein on March 15th.

The matter has been submitted without argument, and the only showing made by appellant in opposition to the motion is contained in an affidavit of Hon. Frank L. Coombs, who declares therein that "he acted for the attorney of appellant in filing the notice of appeal in the said cause; that affiant had previously taken an appeal under section 941b of the Code of Civil Procedure, and in this appeal he followed the same course adopted by the clerk of the superior court of the county of Napa in the said previous case; that upon the filing of the notice of appeal in the above-entitled case he requested the clerk to prepare a transcript of the judgment roll and papers necessary upon said appeal, and to transmit the same to the clerk of the said Court of Appeal with the necessary certificate, agreeing to pay the said clerk the expenses therefor; that the said clerk consented to do the same; that thereafter and upon several occasions affiant called the attention of the said clerk to said matter of preparing and transmitting said transcript, and understood and supposed the same would be done within the time required by law." It is thus not disputed that under the rule it was the duty of appellant to file the printed transcript within the 40 days, but it is sought to excuse the default on the ground that the attorney depended upon the clerk of the court to perform that duty. It was supposed that he would pursue the same course that he did under another appeal taken under a different section of the Code of Civil Procedure.

To accept this as a legal justification for the failure to comply with a rule of court designed to expedite and facilitate the disposition of causes upon their merits would be to discourage diligence in the prosecution of appeals, and establish a precedent that might lead to vexatious delays in the future. The following cases, though different in their facts, serve to illustrate the view of this same question taken by the appellate courts of the state.

In Union Lumber Co. v. Metropolis Construction Co., 13 Cal. App. 584, 110 Pac. 329, it is held that a failure to serve and file the transcript is not excused by a showing of the pendency of an appeal from the order denying a motion for the change of the place of trial of such action, and an intention to obtain leave to incorporate in the record of appeal from the order; the record also constituting the transcript on appeal from the judgment.

In Gervais v. Joyce, 114 Pac. 409, it is held that the failure to file the transcript is not excused by reason of the fact that the transcript was left with the attorney for respondent for examination, and it was returned within ample time for filing, but the attorney for appellant "was unaware of the exact time that the same was signed, and through his inadvertence and neglect overlooked the time required within which to file the same in the appellate court."

In Hamaker v. Keating (Sup.) 110 Pac. 109, for failure to file the transcript, the excuse was offered that the attorney, "after filing the notice of appeal, elected to have the record prepared in accordance with section 953a, and thereupon conceived the idea that the notice to be given to the clerk for the preparation of the transcript under that section would not have any effect and would not be mandatory upon the clerk, unless there was on file in his office at the time a duly served notice to the appellant's attorney of the entry of the order appealed from, and that with this idea in mind he deferred giving any notice to the clerk, and awaited the service of notice to himself of the entry of the order from which the appeal was taken and of which he already had full knowledge." It was held that such a mistake did not constitute a ground for relief.

[2] But, for another reason set out in the Keating Case, supra, the default should not be set aside. Therein the Supreme Court declares: "Lastly, if rules similar to those governing applications for relief under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure are to be applied here, the party asking relief from his default must at least show that he has consulted counsel and has been advised by them that in their opinion he has reasonable grounds to expect a reversal of the order appealed from, if the appeal were considered on the merits." As therein, so here, "no assertion of this character is made. The appellant stands contending merely for the technical right," not even the attorney in his affidavit intimating that he believes there is any merit in the appeal.

The appeal is therefore dismissed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

16 Cal. App. 147

PEOPLE v. GROW. (Cr. 194.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. May 4, 1911. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court, July 3, 1911.)

1. ASSAULT AND BATTERY (§ 87*)—EVIDENCE—MOTIVE.

In a prosecution for assault on prosecutor, a strike breaker, evidence that a strike was in progress in the works of prosecutor's employer, that he was employed there, and that defendant was a member of a union conducting the strike, and was engaged in assisting in the maintenance of a line of pickets around the employer's works, and that prosecutor had never seen him before, was admissible to prove motive.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Assault and Battery, Cent. Dig. § 132; Dec. Dig. § 87.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 371*)—OTHER OFFENSES—EVIDENCE.

In a criminal prosecution, evidence of collateral facts tending to prove a distinct, substantive offense is admissible, if it has a direct tendency, in view of the surrounding circumstances, to prove the motive, intent, or other material fact.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 830-832; Dec. Dig. § 371.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 806*)—INSTRUCTIONS—REASONABLE DOUBT—REPETITION.

Where, in a prosecution for assault, the court charged that the burden was on the prosecution to prove every element of the offense beyond a reasonable doubt, an instruction that, if the jury found from the evidence that some other person willfully, feloniously, and with malice aforethought assaulted prosecutor or committed any one of the lesser offenses included in that charge, and defendant aided and abetted in the commission of the offense, then he was himself guilty of the same crime was not objectionable for failure to require that such aiding and abetting must have been proved beyond a reasonable doubt.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1991; Dec. Dig. § 806.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Paul J. McCormick, Judge.

C. F. Grow was convicted of assault, and he appeals. Affirmed.

George Appell, Fred J. Spring, and Geo. F. Snyder, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and George Beebe, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

SHAW, J. Defendant was charged by information with the crime of assault with a deadly weapon with intent to commit murder. At the trial upon this charge, he was convicted of the crime of assault and sentenced to 90 days in jail. He appeals from the judgment and an order of court denying his motion for a new trial.

On September 19, 1910, Edward C. Hoffman, the prosecuting witness, was and had been for several months engaged in work as an iron moulder for the Keystone Iron Works in Los Angeles, Cal. He resided at a station on the Long Beach electric railway line, known as Latin Station, from which, over said railway line, he traveled to and from the place of his employment in Los Angeles. About 6 o'clock on the evening of September 19th, upon arriving at Latin Station, he left the car line and was proceeding along the sidewalk to his home, when, without warning and without seeing his assailants, he was, as shown by the evidence of those who witnessed the attack, assaulted by four men, knocked from the sidewalk into the roadway, and beaten into an insensible condition. While the evidence is conflicting upon the question, it clearly tends to establish the fact that defendant was one of the four persons who committed the assault. Hoffman was unacquainted with the defendant, and testified that, so far as he knew, he had never seen him until after the date of the assault.

For the purpose of showing a motive for the assault, evidence was introduced, over defendant's objection, tending to prove that Hoffman was a nonunion iron moulder employed by the Keystone Iron Works, which for several months had pursued a policy of refusing to employ men who were members of the iron moulders' union; that defendant was a member of the iron moulders' union, which at the time of the attack upon Hoffman was, and for some time had been, engaged in maintaining a strike declared against the Keystone Iron Works; that he was actively connected with the strike, associating with and encouraging others engaged in keeping a line of pickets at the plant of the Keystone Iron Works.

[1] Appellant insists that the court erred in admitting this evidence, for the reason that the facts sought to be established were collateral to the issue being tried and could have no bearing upon the guilt or innocence of defendant. In our opinion, the ruling of the court was proper. The motive with which a crime is committed is always material and a proper subject of inquiry. That it is established by proof of collateral matters prejudicial to defendant does not render the evidence incompetent. The fact that defendant was actively engaged with others in prosecuting a strike against the Keystone Iron Company, and that Hoffman accepted employment with such company, thus placing himself in a position antagonistic to the hostile attitude of defendant's union toward such employer, clearly and logically tended to show a motive on the part of defendant in committing the assault, and, since the identity of the person who committed the crime was a fact in dispute, evidence of motive was peculiarly material. People v. Soeder, 150 Cal. 14, 87 Pac. 1016; People v. Donnelly, 143 Cal. 394, 77 Pac. 177.

[2] Even where the evidence of collateral facts tends to prove the commission of a distinct, substantive offense, it is nevertheless admissible, if it has "a direct tendency, in view of the surrounding circumstances, to prove the motive or intent or other material fact." People v. Cook, 148 Cal. 341, 83 Pac.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

43. There is nothing in the case of People v. Lane, 100 Cal. 379, 34 Pac. 856, cited by appellant, contrary to the view here expressed. It was there held that the evidence admitted did not tend to prove any material fact involved in the issues.

[3] Appellant next contends that the court erred in instructing the jury as follows: "If you find from the evidence in this case that some other person, at the time and place mentioned in the information, did willfully, feloniously, and with malice aforethought assault the said Edward Hoffman with a deadly weapon with intent then and there him (the said Hoffman) to kill and murder, or did commit any one of the aforesaid lesser offenses necessarily included in that which is charged (and as to which the court had instructed the jury), and that the defendant now on trial was present and aided and abetted in the commission of such assault, then, under the law, this defendant is himself guilty of the crime so committed." Appellant's objection to this instruction is that the court omitted therefrom a statement that, in order to establish defendant's guilt as aider and abettor in the commission of the assault, such fact must be proven beyond a reasonable doubt. The court, however, fully instructed the jury upon this point in elsewhere stating: "The defendant's presence and participation in the crime are affirmative and material facts that the prosecution must show beyond a reasonable doubt to sustain a conviction; and, if, from a careful consideration of all the evidence in this case, you have a reasonable doubt of the defendant's presence at the time and place where the assault is charged to have been committed, it will be your duty to acquit him." And again told them that: "Every person is presumed to be innocent until he is proven guilty. If, upon such proof, there is reasonable doubt remaining, the accused is entitled to the benefit of it by an acquittal." Under the instructions, considered as a whole (People v. Jailles, 146 Cal. 307, 79 Pac. 965; People v. Stevens, 114 Pac. 800), it is impossible to conceive of the jury finding defendant guilty as an aider and abettor in the commission of the crime, if the members thereof entertained a reasonable doubt as to the proof of such fact (People v. Neber, 125 Cal. 562, 58 Pac. 133).

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; JAMES, J.

16 Cal. App. 211

Ex parte HAYTER. (Cr. 161.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 10, 1911.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 170*)—FORMER JEOPARDY—STATUTORY PROVISIONS—"ORDER."

Under Pen. Code, § 1008, providing that, if a demurrer is allowed, the judgment is final on the indictment or information, and is a bar to another prosecution for the same offense, unless the court, being of the opinion that the objection may be avoided in a new indictment or information, directs the case to be resubmitted or directs a new information to be filed, provided that, after such order, the defendant may be examined before a magistrate, and discharged or committed by him as in other cases, and section 1009 providing that if the court does not permit the information to be amended, nor direct that a new information be filed, the defendant must be discharged, the court's minutes reciting that, the demurrer to the information having been argued and submitted, the court expressed the opinion that the demurrer should be sustained, but that the defect in the information might be corrected by a new information, did not constitute an order within section 1008, authorizing proceedings de novo and a new information against the accused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 313; Dec. Dig. § 170.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 6, pp. 5017-5023; vol. 8, p. 7739.]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 170*)—FORMER JEOPARDY—STATUTORY PROVISION.

Pen. Code, § 1008, providing that, if a demurrer is allowed, the judgment is final on the indictment or information, and is a bar to another prosecution unless the court directs the case to be resubmitted, or a new information to be filed, is not limited in its application to cases where the original indictment or information states a public offense, but applies also where it does not state any offense whatsoever.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 313; Dec. Dig. § 170.*]

3. DISTRICT AND PROSECUTING ATTORNEYS (§ 10*)—DUTIES—ORDER OF COURT.

Under Pen. Code, § 1008, providing that, if a demurrer is allowed, the judgment is final on the indictment and information, and is a bar to another prosecution unless the court directs the case to be resubmitted or directs a new information to be filed, the court's order to the district attorney to proceed further in such a case is mandatory, and failure to obey it would involve a violation of duty on his part for which he could be removed from office.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see District and Prosecuting Attorneys, Dec. Dig. § 10.*]

4. HABEAS CORPUS (§ 4*)—NATURE OF REMEDY—EXISTENCE OF REMEDY BY APPEAL.

Where, on sustaining a demurrer to an information, the accused is detained, and proceedings de novo are prosecuted against him without an order of court required by Pen. Code, § 1008, the remedy by appeal is not speedy and adequate, and does not bar his right to release by habeas corpus.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Habeas Corpus, Cent. Dig. § 4; Dec. Dig. § 4.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Merced County; E. N. Rector, Judge.

Application by James Hayter for a writ of habeas corpus. Petitioner discharged.

B. F. Fowler, for petitioner. J. Chas. Jones, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the People.

HART, J. The petition alleges that on the 26th day of October, 1910, a complaint was filed in the justice's court of township No. 2, in the county of Merced, jointly charging the petitioner and one Walter Hayter with the crime of obtaining property from one A. Dastrevigne by false and fraudulent representations. A warrant was thereupon issued by the magistrate, and on the 5th day of November, 1910, said warrant was served on the petitioner, who was brought before said magistrate, by whom petitioner was on the 15th day of December, 1910, preliminarily examined on said charge and an order made holding him to trial in the superior court of said county. Upon said order the district attorney, in due time, filed an information, thereby attempting to inform against petitioner for the crime for which he was ordered held by the magistrate. After several postponements of the matter, the defendant appeared for arraignment upon the information thus filed on the 23d day of January, 1911. The petitioner moved to set aside said information on certain statutory grounds. This motion was denied by the court, and thereupon the petitioner interposed to the information a demurrer, which, after argument, was on the 28th day of January, 1911, ordered sustained by the court. The order sustaining the demurrer reads as follows: "The demurrer to the information herein having been heretofore argued and submitted is now ordered sustained." The petition further alleges that immediately upon the making of the foregoing order sustaining the demurrer the clerk of said court entered the same upon the minutes of said court "in the Minute Book kept by said clerk for recording the proceedings had in said court in such matters as come before said court." Immediately after the making of said order sustaining said demurrer, the petition proceeds, "as the defendant, James Hayter, petitioner herein, was leaving the courtroom of said court, he was arrested by the sheriff of said county, without any warrant of arrest being read to him, by order and direction of the district attorney of said county, and immediately taken to and confined in the county jail of said county, wherein he is now and has ever since been confined and restrained of his liberty." The petition discloses that on the afternoon of the day on which the court made the order sustaining the demurrer to said information, and after the petitioner had been rearrested as described, the district attorney caused another complaint to be verified and filed with said justice's court of township No. 2, charging the petitioner with the identical offense for which he was informed against by the information to which, as explained, a demurrer was sustained.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

The petitioner, claiming, as he does here, that since the court at the time of making the order sustaining the demurrer to the information referred to did not "direct a new information to be filed," as required by section 1008 of the Penal Code, the action of the district attorney in causing him to be rearrested and proceedings de novo taken and had before the magistrate upon a complaint filed before said magistrate accusing him of the identical offense with which he was charged by the information that fell under the force of a demurrer was in excess of his authority and jurisdiction, under the terms of the section of the Code just mentioned, petitioned the superior court of Merced county for his restoration to liberty through a writ of habeas corpus. The petition for said writ, as here, stated, as the ground upon which petitioner claimed the right to his release from imprisonment, that upon sustaining the demurrer to the information the court did not make an order directing the district attorney either to file a new information or otherwise to proceed de novo, as required by the statute, against the defendant upon the charge alleged against him in said information. Said writ was granted and made returnable before said superior court on the 2d day of February, 1911, at 5 o'clock p. m.

Argument upon the petition for said writ was had on the 3d day of February, 1911, and it appears that the court took the matter, after its submission, under advisement. On the 25th day of February, 1911, the matter of petitioner's application to be discharged from custody being still undecided, the court made an order correcting its minutes of the proceedings had on the 28th day of January, 1911, on which date the demurrer to the said information was sustained. The proceedings by which said minutes were corrected are recorded as follows in the minute book kept by the clerk of said court: "Whereas, the minutes of the superior court of Merced county, state of California, for the 28th day of January, 1911, in the matter of the application of James Hayter and Walter Hayter for a writ of habeas corpus read as follows: 'People vs. James Hayter and Walter Hayter, No. 630. January 28th, 1911. The District Attorney, the defendant, James Hayter and his counsel, B. F. Fowler, Esq., appear in court. The demurrer to the information herein having been heretofore argued and submitted is now sustained.' And, whereas, said minutes do not fully set forth the actions and judgment of said court had in said matter, said minutes are amended to read as follows: 'People vs. James Hayter and Walter Hayter. No. 630. January 28th, 1911. The District Attorney, the defendant and his counsel, B. F. Fowler, Esq., appear in court. The demurrer to the information having been heretofore argued and submitted, the court expressed the opinion that the demurrer should be sustained and it is so ordered and the court also expressed the opinion that the defect in said information existing through failure to set forth the intent to defraud, might be corrected by properly setting forth said intent in a new information.'" The minutes disclosing the foregoing correction of the order sustaining the demurrer also show that at the time said correction was made the district attorney declared that "he intended to file immediately a new information and to proceed further against the said James Hayter by issuance of new process." It also appears from said last-mentioned minutes that counsel for petitioner "requested the court to discharge the prisoner" upon the showing made on the application for the writ of habeas corpus theretofore issued by said court; but that "the district attorney objected to the making of such order, stating that he intended to file a new information, and the court, upon the objection of the district attorney, refused to order the discharge of the petitioner in order that said new information might be filed." Thereafter, the petitioner was preliminarily examined on the second complaint filed before the magistrate, charging him with the crime which was attempted to be stated against him in the first information, and for which he was originally or in the first instance held to trial. Thereafter the magistrate again examined the charge against petitioner and thereupon made an order holding him to trial upon said charge, and the district attorney subsequently filed an information against petitioner upon the order so made.

[1] Upon the record as disclosed by the foregoing recital of the history of the proceedings by which he is restrained of his liberty, the petitioner contends that he is entitled to be restored to freedom, and we think that it is very clear that there is no alternative left to this court, but to sustain his contention. Section 1008 of the Penal Code reads as follows: "If the demurrer is allowed, the judgment is final upon the indictment or information demurred to, and is a bar to another prosecution for the same offense, unless the court, being of the opinion that the objection on which the demurrer is allowed may be avoided in a new indictment or information, directs the case to be resubmitted to the same or another grand jury, or directs a new information to be filed; provided, that after such order or resubmission, the defendant may be examined before a magistrate, and discharged or committed by him, as in other cases." The succeeding section provides that "if the court does not permit the information to be amended, nor direct that an information be filed, or that the case be resubmitted, as provided in the preceding section, the defendant, if in custody, must be discharged, or if admitted to bail, his bail is exonerated, or if he has deposited money instead of bail, the money must be refunded to him." Whether in point of fact the court failed, as the petition charges, to direct the district attorney to proceed further against the petitioner by any of the modes prescribed by section 1008 of the Penal Code at the time it made its order allowing the demurrer is unimportant, since in our opinion even the nunc pro tunc proceedings by which the minutes of the proceedings of the court sustaining the demurrer were corrected fail to disclose that the court made an order, as required by said section, investing the district attorney with authority either to amend the information or to cause to be re-examined before a magistrate the charge attempted to be alleged in the defective information against the petitioner.

According to the minutes of the court as corrected, the court, upon sustaining the demurrer, merely expressed the opinion that "the defect in said information might be corrected," but nowhere is there any language to be found in said corrected minutes indicating that the court directed or intended to direct the district attorney to amend the information or to proceed de novo before a magistrate or otherwise to proceed further against the petitioner upon the charge attempted to be stated against him in said information. Obviously, the mere expression of an opinion by the court that "the defect in the information might be corrected" is not within the contemplation of section 1008 of the Penal Code a direction to the district attorney to file an amended information or to otherwise proceed further against the accused. The statute requires more than that. In addition to the entertainment and expression of an opinion by the court that "the objection on which the demurrer is allowed may be avoided in a new indictment or information," the Code section makes it requisite, in order to authorize the district attorney to proceed with the prosecution of the accused for the "same offense," that the court make an order directing that official to so proceed against the defendant. In Ex parte Williams, 116 Cal. 512, 48 Pac. 499, the court below sustained a demurrer to the information, "with leave to the district attorney to file a new information." Holding that under such an order the district attorney was without the power or right to proceed further against the accused for the offense charged in the information to which the demurrer was sustained, the Supreme Court says: "It cannot be held, therefore, that the order here given is equivalent to the order which the statute contemplates should be made. The 'leave' given to a party to file an amended pleading after demurrer sustained is never an order or direction to the party that he must file such pleading. As the only order which the court could properly make was an order directing a new information to be filed, and as the order in fact made by the court cannot be considered to be equivalent thereto, it follows, under sections 1008 and 1009 of the Penal Code, that the prosecution is at an end and that the prisoner must be discharged."

In the case at bar the language of the court, as evidenced by the corrected minutes of the proceedings in which the demurrer was allowed, does not even disclose a permissive order or such an order as is held in Ex parte Williams to be insufficient, under the terms of section 1008, to confer upon the district attorney the authority to proceed further against the prisoner for the offense with which he was charged or attempted to be charged by the defective information. Indeed, as we have seen, there was no order, nor anything approximating an order, but simply an expression of the opinion of the court that the defect could be corrected or avoided in a new information. Of course, if section 1008 of the Penal Code means anything at all, there was a total failure on the part of the court, even if it intended to do so, to make such an order as is absolutely essential to the justification of the proceedings taken in this case by the district attorney after the order sustaining the demurrer was made.

[2] But it is earnestly contended by the Attorney General that the mandates of section 1008 of the Penal Code have no application to a case where a demurrer is sustained to an information which, as in this case, does not state any offense whatsoever. The argument is that it is only where the accused is placed in jeopardy, in the common-law sense of that term, that the section becomes operative or has application, and that, the original information here having altogether failed to state any offense, the petitioner was never in jeopardy, and that, therefore, the district attorney was authorized to proceed further against the accused without an order by the court directing him to do so. This precise point, so far as we are advised to the contrary, has never before arisen in this state, and, while there is language in a New York case (People v. Rosenthal, 197 N. Y. 401, 90 N. E. 991) which appears to lend some support to the position of the Attorney General, we are not inclined to assent to that construction of section 1008 of the Penal Code.

The section of the New York Criminal Code with respect to the subject with which we are dealing is in language precisely the same as that of our section 1008. In the case cited the court says: "By the express command of the statute a judgment sustaining a demurrer is a bar to a further prosecution for the same offense unless such an order is made. No order to resubmit is required, however, unless the defendant has been put in jeopardy under a former indictment." From the language italicized in the foregoing excerpt from the opinion, it is argued that unless the indictment or information states a public offense—not merely attempts but fails to state it—section 1008 does not require that an order directing the district attorney to proceed further against the accused shall be made by the court as a prerequisite to the right or authority of the prosecuting official to so proceed.

As stated, the language referred to seems to be susceptible of the interpretation given it by the Attorney General, although it is not clear to us that such was the meaning intended. The first part of the quotation appears to hold that by virtue of the statute itself, without regard to whether the pleading states or simply attempts but fails to state a crime, a further prosecution of the accused upon the charge stated or attempted to be stated is barred in the absence of an order by the court, at the time of the making of the order allowing the demurrer, directing the district attorney to resubmit the case to the same or another grand jury. And we think, as stated, such to be the proper construction and true meaning of our statute. In other words, we are of the opinion that the question of common-law jeopardy does not arise here. The sole question propounded is whether the Legislature intended, by the enactment of section 1008, to place it with the court in any case where a demurrer to a criminal pleading has been sustained to say whether the charge designated in the defective pleading shall or shall not be further prosecuted by the district attorney. In our opinion the statute can mean nothing else without being absolutely purposeless.

We are unable to think of any occasion when there would arise a case to which section 1008 of the Penal Code would be applicable if the contention of the Attorney General were maintainable. We can conceive of very few cases in which a demurrer to an indictment or an information would be properly allowable where sufficient facts were stated to constitute a public offense. Indeed, we can now recall but three grounds upon which a demurrer would be sustainable in a case where the accusatory pleading stated a public offense according to the rules of criminal pleading, viz.: (1) Where, upon the face of the pleading, it appears that the court is without jurisdiction because of the improper laying of venue or disclosing that the place of the commission of the offense was outside or beyond the territorial jurisdiction of the court in which the pleading has been filed; (2) where it appears from the face of the pleading that the statute of limitations has barred a prosecution of the accused for the offense charged; (3) where, possibly, an act might be denounced as a crime for which no penalty has been provided. But obviously section 1008 of the Code can have no reference or application to such cases, for, where a demurrer is sustained either on the ground that the venue of the crime was not within the territorial jurisdiction of the court in which the accusatory pleading has been filed or on the ground that the statute of limitations has barred a prosecution of the accused for the crime therein charged, or on the ground that no penalty is prescribed for the act denounced as a crime, the court would have no legal right or jurisdiction to make the order authorized by section 1008 of the Penal Code directing the district attorney to proceed further against the accused. In all those cases there would manifestly be no other course for the court to pursue but to dismiss the indictment or information and order the discharge of the prisoner. But, if it be suggested that the section is intended to apply to cases where the demurrer is addressed, not to the sufficiency of the facts stated to disclose a public offense, but to the inartificiality of the pleading, as, for instance, that its averments are ambiguous or uncertain or unintelligible, the reply is that it so rarely happens that such an objection is made to a criminal pleading, except where an objection on those grounds in effect goes to the extent of challenging the sufficiency of the averments to state a public offense (in which case we are brought back to the original proposition that no offense is stated at all, and, therefore, according to the Attorney General, the section does not apply) that it is inconceivable that the Legislature intended to limit the application of the statute to such cases only. It may safely be declared that, where an information or indictment is not bad for want of facts or states a public offense, no demurrer would be interposed and much less allowed merely because such facts are not stated with the technical nicety which should, of course, characterize such a pleading. If the offense is stated in such manner as to inform the defendant of the precise crime with which he is charged, and the time and place of its commission, it is sufficient even if the statement of facts is not strictly in accord with a thoroughly scientific conception of criminal pleading.

There being, then, practically no cases to which the statute can apply except those in which the demurrer has been sustained on the ground that the pleading does not charge a public offense, and if it does not apply to the latter class, what is the meaning of sections 1008 and 1009 of the Penal Code? What did the Legislature intend to accomplish by their enactment? Of course, it must be conceded that they were placed upon our statute books for some purpose, for it cannot, of course, be assumed that the Legislature thus labored with no specific object in view or no particular purpose to subserve.

The vital requirement, or, if we may use the expression in this connection, the gravamen of the statute, is, in our opinion, that, in order to confer upon the district attorney the power to continue with the prosecution of a charge, which he has failed to state in the indictment or information, to which, for such reason, a demurrer has been sustained, he must, as an indispensable condition to his right to so proceed, first receive from the court the sole source of the power from which he may derive the right to proceed, express authority to do so; that, in other words, the district attorney's right to go on with the prosecution of the charge under the circumstances indicated solely depends upon and proceeds from the order of the court, as much so as the right to do any other act which can be done only on an order of the court must depend upon such an order. If the court elects not to order the district attorney to proceed further, then the bar attaches by the very terms of the statute itself. The bar contemplated by section 1008 of the Penal Code, in other words, is what may appropriately be termed a statutory bar, somewhat analogous, in the principle upon which it operates, to the statute of limitations, or it may, with no impropriety, be called, in contradistinction to the common-law jeopardy, a "statutory jeopardy," resting, however, as is obvious, upon conditions or consisting of elements which are purely of statutory or legislative creation, different and distinct from and having no relation to those conditions which must be present in common-law jeopardy, as that doctrine is defined by and appropriated to others of our Code sections. It is, in brief, a bar merely and solely because the Legislature has said so. Of course, no one will dispute the power of the Legislature to provide that any conditions which may arise in a criminal case may operate as a bar to a second or further prosecution of the charge preferred against the accused, regardless of whether jeopardy, in the common-law sense of that term, arises and attaches or not.

[3] The theory upon which this legislation proceeds is, as declared in Ex parte Williams, supra, that the Legislature deemed it the wisest plan to vest in the court and not in the district attorney the discretion of deciding whether under the circumstances pointed out by the statute the district attorney shall proceed further against the accused for the same offense named in the pleading to which a demurrer has been sustained. The reason for this is, it seems to us, obvious. On the one hand, while the district attorney clothed with such discretion might allow his partisanship (for, like all lawyers, a partisan in litigation he is) to lead him to an unjust harassment of the accused, on the other hand, he might, having such discretion, refuse to proceed further in a case which ought to be prosecuted. The court to which this discretion is wisely committed is not a partisan. Its duty is to view both sides fairly and impartially. It may familiarize itself with the facts so as to fairly decide whether the prosecution of the charge should or that it should not be pressed after demurrer sustained to the first, or, it may be, the second indictment or information. Its order to the district attorney to proceed further is mandatory upon that official, and failure to obey the order thus made would involve a violation of duty on the part of the prosecuting official for which he could be removed from office or perhaps otherwise punished. Ex parte Williams, supra.

That the construction of section 1008 here given is the true one we think the language of the statute itself clearly bears out, for, it will be noted, the language is, "if the demurrer is allowed, the judgment is final upon the indictment or information demurred to." The language, it will thus be seen, is not, "if the demurrer is allowed the judgment is final upon the offense stated." To all intents and purposes, undoubtedly, in contemplation of said section, the document or instrument upon which the accused is arraigned is no less than what it purports to be—i. e., either an indictment or an information—up to the very point at the least where the court sustains a demurrer thereto, and the judgment which follows and becomes final, unless the order to the district attorney which it is in the discretion of the court to make accompanies the order sustaining the demurrer, is intended to act and operate upon the information or indictment in the form in which it appeared before and at the very time of the making of the order sustaining the demurrer. But we are not altogether without authority for the views here declared concerning the meaning of section 1008 of the Penal Code.

In the case of the State v. Crook, 16 Utah, 212, 51 Pac. 1091, the defendant, having been informed against for the crime of abortion, demurred to the information "upon the ground that the facts shown therein did not constitute a public offense." The court sustained the demurrer, and thereupon ordered the discharge of the prisoner. A second information was, however, filed by the prosecuting attorney, and the defendant tried and convicted thereunder. But the accused had, upon his arraignment upon said new information, in addition to the plea of not guilty, interposed a plea of "former acquittal," alleging, "in specific terms, that he had previously been charged by information with the same identical felony and offense as is charged in this information; that his demurrer to said prior information for the same offense had been sustained by the court, and final judgment entered thereon; and that he had been acquitted and discharged by the court of and from said crime and charge." The defendant appealed to the Supreme Court from the judgment and order, and, reversing the cause, with directions to the trial court to discharge the accused, that court says: "The defendant's plea of former acquittal of the same offense charged in the information, by the judgment of the court sustaining the demurrer, and ordering the defendant discharged, without making an order directing another information to be filed, or that the cause be submitted to the grand jury, was, under the facts shown, a sufficient plea of former acquittal, and a bar to a prosecution under the third information filed. The information to which the demurrer was sustained and the information upon which the defendant was tried stated the same identical offense. The identity of the parties was admitted. We are of the opinion that the instruction of the court to the jury, to the effect that the judgment of the court in sustaining the demurrer to the second information and discharging the defendant thereon, without an order directing another information to be filed, would not amount to an acquittal of the defendant on that information, and that the jury should so find, was error." It may here be remarked that the section of the Utah Code with respect to orders sustaining demurrers to informations and indictments and the duty of the court to direct the prosecuting attorney to proceed further as a prerequisite to that official's right to do so after demurrer sustained is in language precisely the same as that of our section, and it will be noted that that case, as to the facts, is strikingly similar in all essential respects to the case at bar. The effect of the ruling there, as is the result arrived at here, is that the statute ex vi termini operates as a bar where the court, regardless of whether the accusatory pleading states an offense or not, after demurrer sustained, has omitted to direct the district attorney to proceed further with the prosecution of the charge named in the information to which the demurrer was sustained. In that case, as here, no offense was stated, but the court held, from the crime named in the first information and the facts stated in connection therewith, such as the time and place of the commission of the designated crime and the names of the witnesses inserted on the back of the information, etc., it appeared that the new information charged the identical offense designated and attempted to be set forth in the original information and the condition so disclosed was sufficient to bring the case within the terms of the section of the Utah Code, identical, as we have seen, in language, to section 1008 of our Penal Code.

We have examined the question under review from every conceivable angle, with the result that we are unable to discover any ground upon which a different construction of our statute can be justly arrived at. Any other conclusion would not only leave the statute without any practical meaning whatsoever, but would necessitate the insertion therein, by judicial construction, of language that it does not contain.

[4] It has been suggested that the petitioner has an adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law, and that, therefore, he should not be permitted to pursue this summary and extraordinary method of securing his discharge from custody. We do not agree to the proposition thus suggested. The case of Ex parte Williams, supra, furnishes a precedent for the adoption of the writ of habeas corpus as a remedy for the release of a citizen restrained of his liberty under such circumstances as are present here.

The ultimate question submitted here is plainly one of jurisdiction. As we have seen, the further prosecution of the charge unsuccessfully sought to be alleged in the information is barred, under the terms of section 1008 of the Penal Code, by the failure of the court below to direct the district attorney to proceed further against the petitioner in any of the several ways pointed out by said section. It follows, therefore, that the district attorney is absolutely without legal authority to file a new or an amended information or an indictment, charging the same offense, that would confer jurisdiction upon the court to try the accused for said offense. The prosecution is just as completely at an end as if the petitioner had been tried on the charge and acquitted or convicted thereof by a jury, and therefore a trial of the accused for the crime attempted to be stated in the information, which has become functus officio by the ruling on the demurrer, upon a new information charging the same offense would be in excess of the jurisdiction of the court, and while, of course, this question could be raised and adjudicated on appeal, where a plea in bar of the prosecution, based upon section 1008 of the Penal Code, had been interposed by a defendant, yet we have been shown no sound reason for remitting the petitioner to his remedy at law when it is obvious that a verdict of guilty would necessarily have to be set aside. To require him to resort to his remedy by appeal would likely only be to force him to suffer imprisonment until his trial is had, and, in case of conviction, until his appeal could be heard and determined, and all this as the result of a proceeding of which the court has no jurisdiction. Moreover, to require him to go to trial would necessitate the entailment of an unnecessary and no insignificant expense upon the taxpayers of the county of Merced, a consideration which should have some weight in the determination of a question which, in point of fact, involves, in its solution, so far as its importance as a legal proposition is concerned, in this case at least, merely a decision as between "tweedle-dum" and "tweedle-dee."

The remedy by appeal is neither speedy nor adequate in a case where a citizen is restrained of his liberty under an illegal process. Where one is unlawfully imprisoned and it may be made so to appear to a court in an appropriate legal proceeding, there can exist no conceivable reason why he should not be restored to his liberty by the shortest cut recognized by the law, and not be compelled to remain in a county prison, and thus be made to suffer the inconveniences of such restraint until some more dilatory remedy, which may ultimately be available to him, has been put in operation. See Terrill v. Superior Court, 60 Pac. 38.¹

We think the petitioner, for the reasons stated in this opinion, is being restrained of his liberty without legal right, and he is therefore discharged from custody.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

¹ Reported in full in the Pacific Reporter; reported as a memorandum decision without opinion in 127 Cal. xviii.

MIKLAUSCHUTZ v. SUPERIOR COURT
OF LOS ANGELES COUNTY et al.

(Civ. 1,005.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District,
California. May 10, 1911.)

1. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§ 189*)—APPEAL—
STATEMENT OF CASE.

Where there has been no trial in fact before a justice of the peace, there is no evidence to be embodied in a statement of the case on appeal, and the appellate court may reverse for errors appearing in the copy of the justice's docket or in the papers and files.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Dec. Dig. § 189.*]

2. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§ 122*)—ANSWER —WAIVER—STIPULATION FOR TRIAL.

Where parties to an action before a justice treated the case as at issue without an answer and stipulated for a time for trial on the merits, an answer was waived, and it was error to enter judgment by default for want of an answer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Dec. Dig. § 122.*]

3. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§ 189*)—APPEAL —JURISDICTION OF APPELLATE COURT.

The superior court on appeal from a justice's court having jurisdiction to determine whether error appeared from the record and files had jurisdiction to reverse the judgment because of error in entering judgment by default for want of an answer which was the effect of an order vacating the judgment and remanding the case for a new trial, though technically it was improper to direct a new trial when there had been no trial in fact.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Dec. Dig. § 189.*]

Petition by M. Miklauschutz against the Superior Court of California in and for Los Angeles County and others, for a writ of review. Denied.

McKelvey & Sorenson, for petitioner.
George M. Harker, for respondents.

ALLEN, P. J. The record before us discloses that on August 8, 1910, petitioner, as plaintiff, commenced an action in the justice's court against certain defendants. On August 12th following a stipulation was signed by the attorneys for the respective parties setting the action for trial on the 12th of September, 1910. At the same time counsel for defendants directed the attorney for plaintiff, temporarily acting as justice's clerk, to enter a general denial. This the attorney neglected to do. Thereafter, on August 15th, defendants' default was entered, and also judgment entered against defendants. On September 3d defendants moved to set aside the default on the ground that the same was taken after issue made and before time fixed for trial. The court declined to pass and never did pass upon this motion. Thereafter defendants gave notice of an appeal on questions of law and fact, and the papers were certified to the superior court. No statement of the case, however, was filed. The superior court, when a motion was made by counsel for plaintiff for judgment upon the pleadings, denied the same, and upon the hearing vacated the judgment of the justice and remanded the cause for trial upon its merits. Petitioner seeks to have this judgment annulled upon the ground that the court had no jurisdiction in the premises.

[1] Where there has been no trial in fact, there is no evidence to be embodied in a statement of the case, and the court is authorized to reverse the judgment if errors appear in the copy of the justice's docket, or in the papers and files. The papers and files in this case did disclose the error of the justice in rendering the judgment by default, under the circumstances of the case.

[2] Assuming that no duty devolved upon the acting clerk to enter the general denial, nevertheless, the parties treated the case as at issue, and stipulated for a time of trial upon its merits. The necessity of an answer was waived by the stipulation for trial on the matters set forth in the complaint. Bailey, Wood & Co. v. Landingham, 52 Iowa, 415, 3 N. W. 461. More especially should this rule be applicable in a proceeding before a justice, where an oral answer is permissible.

[3] The superior court upon the appeal had jurisdiction to determine whether or not error was apparent from the record and files. Having jurisdiction, it had authority to reverse the judgment. This was the effect of the order made vacating the same, and, while ordinarily it may be that a case cannot be remanded for a new trial where there has been no trial, such rule would not apply whereas in this case, the justice rendered a judgment, without any trial, by default after issue tendered, his duty being to proceed to trial. This duty the superior court properly enjoined upon him by its order.

Writ denied.

We concur: JAMES, J.; SHAW, J.

16 Cal. App. 241

PORTER et al. v. COUNTS. (Civ. 819.)
(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 11, 1911.)

1. BOUNDARIES (§ 37*)—DISPUTED BOUNDARY LINE—EVIDENCE—LOCATION.

Evidence held to establish the location of a disputed boundary line.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Cent. Dig. §§ 184-194; Dec. Dig. § 37.*]

2. EJECTMENT (§ 112*)—BOUNDARIES—NEW TRIAL—GROUNDS.

In ejectment to establish a disputed boundary line, a second new trial will not be granted to enable defendants to employ a more experienced surveyor to ascertain the true line.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Ejectment, Cent. Dig. §§ 346-351; Dec. Dig. § 112.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Humboldt County; Clifton H. Connick, Judge.

Ejectment by Robert Porter and another against Andrew J. Counts. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

E. M. Frost and L. M. Burnell, for appellant. J. H. G. Weaver, for respondents.

CHIPMAN, P. J. This is an action in ejectment; the real issue being to establish the boundary line between adjoining tracts of land claimed by the parties, respectively. The cause was here on appeal from the judgment in favor of plaintiffs at the first trial, and was reversed and sent back with directions to establish more definitely the west boundary of plaintiffs' land, which would also be the east boundary of defendant's land. 6 Cal. App. 550, 92 Pac. 655. At the second trial plaintiffs had judgment, from which and from the order denying his motion for a new trial defendant appeals.

[1] There is no conflict in the evidence, for the findings rest upon the testimony of Surveyor Elsemore, who was the only witness who undertook to make the survey necessary to the ascertainment of the desired line. The point of objection to the finding and judgment is that in making the survey Mr. Elsemore did not follow the rules and regulations prescribed by the United States Land Department. The same point was made on the former appeal, and it was held that, while the evidence was sufficient to show that defendant had encroached upon plaintiffs' land, it was not sufficient to determine to what extent the encroachment went, nor was it sufficient to meet the issue raised by defendant's cross-complaint. The findings and judgment at the first trial were supported by witness Elsemore's testimony, as they are now. But at the second trial his testimony showed that he had made some further surveys, and was able to definitely locate the line to establish which the cause had been remanded for a new trial.

Plaintiffs are the owners of the S. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the N. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ and the E. $\frac{1}{2}$ of the S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 19, and the N. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the N. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 30, township 3 N., range 4 E., Humboldt meridian. Defendant is the owner of lots 2, 3, and 4 of said section 19 and lot 1 of said section 30. It is not deemed necessary to give all the testimony of witness Elsemore showing in detail the method by which he reached his conclusion. He testified that he followed the rules and regulations laid down by the General Land Office in ascertaining the location of corners and boundary lines of sections and subdivisions of sections and we cannot discover, from anything brought out in his cross-examination, or otherwise, that his method was in violation or in disregard of these regulations and directions, nor was it, so far as we can see, likely to result in making an incorrect or unwarranted location of this disputed line.

By taking a township plat and following what we shall briefly show was done by the witness, it will be seen that the court was justified in its findings. All the section corners on the west township line are still in place from section 30 to the northwest corner of section 18. So, also, are the section corners on the south township line east to the southwest corner of section 33. From this latter section corner running north to the southwest corner of section 16 the section corners were found. On the section line north from the southwest corner of section 32, until he came to the quarter corner between sections 7 and 8, the witness found no corners and could find nothing corresponding with the field notes. He found where these missing corners ought to be and was able to locate them on the map, but did not establish them in place as he deemed it unnecessary. He had the section corners to sections 19 and 30 on the township line from which to work, and he had the distance from the known corners two miles east of these. He also had the line from the southwest corner of section 32 to the quarter corner between sections 7 and 8. He made many measurements and established the northeast corner of the S. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the N. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 19. He also established the southeast corner of the N. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the N. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 30. He found the distance from these corners west to the township line and also the distance from the southwest corner of section 19 along its south boundary to a point where plaintiffs' line crosses that boundary. He also located the northwest corner of the S. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the N. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 19 and the southwest corner of the N. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the N. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 30. He testified that he "tied up to the southwest corner of section 19," the corner last above referred to in that section, as was also the corner in section 30. He ascertained by measurements the strip of land in controversy, determining its width on the boundary line between sections 19 and 30, and also the width at its north and south boundaries, and he definitely located the situs of the dividing line between the land of plaintiffs and the land of defendant. This line is now definitely fixed and located in place and by such description in the findings and decree that any person competent to handle surveying instruments can trace it accurately. This, it seems to us, determines the whole controversy. The findings have support in the evidence and support the judgment.

[2] We are asked to grant a new trial in order that a more experienced surveyor can be called upon to ascertain the true line. The case has been tried twice. Witness Elsemore showed himself well qualified, so far as we can now judge. Defendant had full opportunity to call in the services of any surveyor of his choice to do the work preparatory to his defense. The request for a new trial on the ground urged does not appeal to our sense of fairness or justice.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: HART, J.; BURNETT, J.

16 Cal. App. 235

SAN JOAQUIN & K. R. CANAL & IRRIGATION CO., Inc., v. STEVEN-

SON et al. (Civ. 857.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 10, 1911.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 757*)—BRIEFS—INCORPORATION OF PORTIONS OF RECORD.

In the absence of a definite rule for the regulation of the new method of taking appeals prescribed by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 953a-953c, an appeal will not be dismissed for failure to comply with the requirements of section 953c, in that such portions of the record as the appellant desires to call to the attention of the court should be printed on the brief, where the brief specifies the pages on which the testimony which is deemed important may be found, and no great amount of trouble will be placed upon the court in reviewing the points involved.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3092; Dec. Dig. § 757.*]

2. COURTS (§ 81*)—RULES—AUTHORITY TO MAKE.

It is not the duty of the District Court of Appeal to formulate a rule by which the new practice as to appeals prescribed by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 953a-953c, may be uniformly observed and followed; the authority to make rules governing the practice in the District Courts of Appeal and the Supreme Court being vested by the Constitution in the latter tribunal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Dec. Dig. § 81.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Merced County; E. N. Rector, Judge.

Action by the San Joaquin & Kings River Canal & Irrigation Company, Incorporated, against James J. Stevenson (a corporation) and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Motion to dismiss appeal denied.

Frank H. Short, F. G. Ostrander, and Ed-ward F. Treadwell, for appellant. James F. Peck, Joseph C. Campbell, W. B. Bunker, H. A. Van C. Torchiana, F. J. Solinsky, and Page, McCutchen, Knight & Olney, for respondents.

HART, J. [1] This is a motion to dismiss the appeal of plaintiff herein. The ground of the motion is that, having prepared its record on appeal in accordance with the provisions of sections 953a, 953b, and 953c of the Code of Civil Procedure, the appellant failed to file, within 30 days after the filing of the transcript, a brief wherein were printed "such portions of the record as the appellant desires to call to the attention of the court." Section 953c, Code Civ. Proc. The contention is that said section contemplates that the appellant must print in his brief so much of the evidence or other portions of the record as may be necessary to make clear and present fairly and lucidly before the appellate court the legal points upon which he relies for a reversal, and, the appellant here having failed to do as thus required, this court should incontinently refuse to consider its appeal.

But, considering that the alternative system of taking appeals in civil cases as prescribed by the sections mentioned is comparatively a new innovation on the appellate practice and procedure as it existed for many years, and in view of the fact that there has been no definite rule established for the regulation of the new method of taking appeals, nor any decision of the appellate courts involving a definite exposition of what the precise practice should be in such cases, we think that a dismissal of the appeal for the reasons urged by the respondents, assuming that in the absence of any such authority expressly given by the statute or by any rule of court to adopt that course we have a right to make such an order, would involve too harsh a penalty to impose upon appellant, conceding that its brief does not comply with the mandates of section 953c of said Code. Where they deem an examination of the testimony important, counsel for appellant in their opening brief specify the pages on which it may be found. We do not say that this is a compliance with the requirements of the statute, but, in this case, if counsel correctly state in their brief the points relied upon, we do not apprehend that a great amount of extra trouble will be placed upon the court in reviewing said points.

The judgment appealed from here is founded on the order of the court granting a motion for a nonsuit on the conclusion of the introduction of evidence by plaintiff. The motion appears to have arisen and been decided upon the proposition contended for by respondents, according to appellant's brief, that the plaintiff (a corporation engaged in the business of supplying water for purposes of irrigation in the counties of Fresno, Merced and Stanislaus) is not entitled to acquire property for the purposes of its business as stated under the power of eminent domain, the contention of counsel for respondents and the theory upon which the motion was decided being that such a corporation can exercise no such rights "unless," as counsel for appellant put it, "its system is so constructed that it can actually, physically and practically supply water for the irrigation of all the lands in the county, no matter where they are situated, whether in the same watershed or on a higher level than the source of supply of the company." The contention of appellant, as to this proposition, is that all that is required of such corporations is that they shall so conduct said business of supplying water for the purposes stated as that all the inhabitants of the county, as a matter of legal right, may be entitled to and actually enjoy, if they desire to avail themselves of the same, the use of the water so supplied.

The vital questions involved in the proposition as thus stated seem to be whether plaintiff is a public service corporation, and, if so, whether, in order to be entitled to exercise the right to the acquisition of property by proceedings initiated under the power of eminent domain, it must show that its water system is so situated as to be capable of supplying all the land in the county in which its system or continuations thereof are situated with water for irrigation. There is addressed to the first of these questions some evidence, as we judge from the brief of appellant, and it appears to be stated and referred to in said brief by the pages on which it may be found in the reporter's transcript. As stated, we have no fear that the examination of this evidence will entail upon the court a very great amount of extra labor.

[2] The second question is one purely of law, requiring, in its solution, the examination of no evidence other than that which may be found in the record addressed to the proof of the public character of the plaintiff corporation. The same may be said of some other points discussed in appellant's brief. In any event, we are not, as already intimated, prepared to say that we have any authority to dismiss the appeal for the reasons suggested by respondents, and, as stated, if we felt assured that we could exercise that power, we think it would not be proper or just to do so under the circumstances. We may, however, without impropriety, add that we do not conceive it to be the duty of this court, as counsel suggest, to formulate and promulgate a rule by which the new practice as to appeals may be uniformly observed and followed. The authority to make rules governing the practice in this and the Supreme Courts is vested, by the Constitution, in the latter tribunal. We agree with counsel, however, that, since the meaning of the language of section 953c of the Code of Civil Procedure does not seem to be so self-evident as that its true scope is generally understood, there should be some rule of court regulating the administration of the new procedure for taking appeals or at least an authoritative construction of said section that will make clear to the profession generally its true meaning.

It is very clear, as is aptly said in the case of Roussin v. Kirkpatrick, 8 Cal. App. 7, 95 Pac. 1123, "the Legislature did not intend to require the reviewing court to grope through the unprinted transcription of the phonographic report of the trial to find the testimony and documents relied upon by the parties, or that it would be sufficient compliance with the statute for the parties to indicate in their briefs the portions of the record relied on by simply citing the page of this transcription where such portions may be found." See, also, Estate of McPhee, 156 Cal. 335, 342, 104 Pac. 455. It has been said that it would be difficult to lay down a "hard and fast" rule as to the practice under the new sections or one that would meet the exigencies of all cases that are brought to the appellate courts by the alternative method of taking appeals. This would be true, perhaps, if the language of section 953c is to be given a narrow or an unreasonably restricted interpretation.

I feel no reluctance in saying, from the experience thus far had with the "alternative" method, as it has hitherto been followed, that in the place of facilitating the decision of cases on appeal its tendency has been to produce delay in that respect, and that such will always be its effect, unless section 953c is definitely construed to mean (as I think it was intended to mean) that, if necessary to the elucidation of the points relied upon, something in the nature, substantially, of a statement or a bill of exceptions be required, in addition to the filing of the phonographic report of the trial, to be printed in a supplement appended to the brief. The language of the section seems to be mandatory, and I think was intended to be. As we have seen, it reads: "In filing briefs on said appeal, the parties must, however, print in their briefs, or in a supplement appended thereto, such portions of the record as they desire to call to the attention of the court." As stated, it is not within the province of this court to make a rule or to explain the meaning of the statute; still I think that it may safely be laid down as a rule of practice clearly intended by the Legislature to be observed in the preparation of appeals under the alternative system that whatever may be necessary—whether the evidence or the pleadings, the findings, conclusions of law, and judgment or such interlocutory motions and orders as may have been made during the pendency of the litigation and during the trial—to a clear explanation of the points relied upon or to a lucid exposure of the relevancy, pertinency, force, or importance of such points in their bearing upon the ultimate issue submitted for decision should be inserted, in printed form, in a supplement appended to the brief. The "brief" referred to in the section, if prepared as the section prescribes, is much more than the ordinary brief to which we are accustomed under the old practice, because, when prepared as the statute commands, it becomes a part of the record on appeal.

My opinion is that the Legislature, while not intending under the new method so elaborate a printed record as is required under the older system of taking appeals, contemplated that there should be a sufficient record in printed form to enable the appellate courts to review it without the necessity of wading through a mass of irrelevant and redundant matter, and that the stenographer's report of the trial was intended more as an aid to the court in fully satisfying itself upon points as to which, as is often the case with bills and statements, a paucity of information only is furnished by the printed record. In other words, I think it is clear, if the section referred to means anything at all, that the Legislature thus intended a pretty full printed record, and that the transcription of all that has occurred at the trial shall be filed with such record for no other purpose than to assist the court, if necessary, in obtaining a more complete understanding of points as to which the printed record may not be as full and clear as it should be.

These are the individual views of the writer.

However, as declared, we are, under the circumstances as indicated, constrained to deny the motion here made, and such is the order.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

16 Cal. App. 244

McDONALD v. KINGSBURY et al.

(Civ. 974.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. May 11, 1911.)

1. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT (§ 123*)—AUTHORITY OF AGENT—EVIDENCE.

Evidence held to sustain a finding that B., to whom payments on a land contract were made, was the vendor's general agent, not only to make the sale, but also to collect and arrange with reference to payment of unpaid installments, so that payments received by the agent long after they were due and made pursuant to and on the faith of promises that the contract should not be canceled were binding on the vendor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Agent, Cent. Dig. § 429; Dec. Dig. § 123.*]

2. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT (§ 111*)—AUTHORITY.

Where a vendee made payments under a contract after they became due pursuant to representations by the vendor's general agent that they might be so made, and that the vendee would not incur a forfeiture, the vendor was bound by the agent's promises, and could not claim that defendant was guilty of a grossly willful breach of duty within Civ. Code, § 3275, providing that whenever by the terms of an obligation a party incurs a forfeiture, or a loss in the nature of a forfeiture, by reason of his failure to comply with its provisions, he may be relieved therefrom on making full compensation, except in case of a grossly negligent, willful, or fraudulent breach of duty.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Agent, Cent. Dig. § 331; Dec. Dig. § 111.*]

3. QUIETING TITLE (§ 52*)—JUDGMENT.

Where, in a suit by a vendor to quiet title and enforce a forfeiture before the time for completion of the contract had arrived, the court relieved defendant from the forfeiture on payment of the amount due, the legal title subject to the contract remaining in plaintiff, it was improper for the clerk to enter judgment

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes that plaintiff take nothing by the action, under the rule that in such suit the respective parties are entitled to have their rights, claims, and interests finally determined.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Quieting Title, Dec. Dig. § 52.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frederick W. Houser, Judge.

Action by Martha A. McDonald against Rae W. Kingsbury and others. From a judgment in favor of defendants, and from an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Modified and affirmed.

Davis & Rush and Byron C. Hanna, for appellant. Clement L. Shinn and Elizabeth L. Kenney, for respondents.

ALLEN, P. J. The action was one to quiet title. The facts as found by the trial court are these: Plaintiff and defendants' assignor entered into a written contract on January 24, 1905, for the sale and purchase of real property at the agreed price of $900, of which $50 was paid in cash and the residue to be paid in monthly payments of $10 each, with interest at 7 per cent. payable semiannually, upon deferred payments, time being made of the essence. Plaintiff, by contract in writing, extended the time for the payment of the first four installments until May 20, 1905; that on said last-named date defendant paid $40, and subsequent and deferred payments were made, including interest, until September 26th; that no payments were thereafter made until December 5th, when the payments then in default were made and accepted by plaintiff. Thereafter, on February 24, 1906, the deferred payments with interest were again paid and accepted. No further payments were made. The first extension of time was given by one Broderson, the selling agent of plaintiff, which was ratified by plaintiff. Thereafter Broderson, still a general selling agent of plaintiff, represented to defendant that, if necessary, she would carry defendant on account of future payments, and assured her that plaintiff would take no advantage of any failure to pay promptly; that plaintiff did receive payments, one of which was made by the agent, long after the same were due and never refused to receive such past-due payments until November 6, 1906, at which date defendant tendered to plaintiff the amount, with interest, due upon such purchase, which plaintiff refused to accept, and thereafter brought this action. Defendant by answer set up the matters so found by the court in its findings with relation to extension of time and representations of the agent, and the trial court upon the hearing made an order that, if defendant would pay into court for plaintiff all the sums due, judgment would be entered in favor of defendant. Defendant made such payment, and the court found that such payment was a full, just, and equitable compensation to plaintiff for all loss or injury suffered on account of default in payments; that no damage had resulted to plaintiff on account of such default; that defendant had been guilty of no grossly negligent, willful, or fraudulent breach of duty; that defendant had a valid and subsisting right to complete such purchase, and to be relieved from forfeiture. Judgment was entered accordingly, from which, and an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals.

[1, 2] It is contended by appellant that the finding that Broderson was the general agent of plaintiff when she made the representations and assurances to defendant, upon the faith of which she acted has no support. That Broderson was plaintiff's selling agent is not questioned; that, assuming to act for plaintiff, she extended the time for payment of the first four installments and executed a supplemental contract, signed by herself, and plaintiff with full knowledge ratified such act. Plaintiff intrusted to Broderson the duty of looking after defendant's deferred payments, which is clearly shown by her repeated calls upon Broderson to inquire why defendant was lax in payment. That plaintiff had knowledge of Broderson's representations that no advantage would be taken on account of defaulted payments is shown by Broderson's testimony where she says, with reference to such assurances, that "plaintiff made no objection to it when I told her"—a rather indirect statement with reference to such communications, yet it is susceptible of no construction other than that she (Broderson) told plaintiff of such assurances and that she acquiesced therein. We think there is, therefore, sufficient in the record to warrant the trial court in finding that Broderson was a general agent of plaintiff, not only in the sale, but in the matter of collection and arrangement with reference to time of payment; and having knowledge of the representations and assurances of her agent, making no objection thereto, receiving payments long after due, made pursuant thereto and upon the faith of such promises, plaintiff is bound by the action of Broderson in making such agreement and is not in a position to say that defendant is guilty of a grossly willful breach of duty.

The question remains as to the right of the court to relieve defendant from the forfeiture occasioned by a breach of the strict terms of the contract. Section 3275 of the Civil Code provides: "Whenever, by the terms of an obligation, a party thereto incurs a forfeiture, or a loss in the nature of a forfeiture, by reason of his failure to comply with its provisions, he may be relieved therefrom, upon making full compensation to the other party, except in case of a grossly negligent, willful, or fraudulent breach of duty." The assurances and representations of Broderson, of which plaintiff had knowledge, could only have the effect to lull defendant into a sense of security and induce the belief that payments made after strict default would be received as though made in time. Plaintiff relies upon the doctrine of Glock v. Howard, etc., Co., 123 Cal. 15, 55 Pac. 713, 43 L. R. A. 199, 69 Am. St. Rep. 17, and cases therein cited and discussed as establishing plaintiff's right to claim a demand and forfeiture. We do not regard such cases as undertaking to construe the section of the Code above quoted, nor to determine rights thereunder. Glock v. Howard is a learned and exhaustive discussion and determination of the rights of the parties who stand upon and whose rights are dependent alone upon the terms of a written contract. Here the rights are dependent upon the contract and modifications thereof and the effect which should be given the acts of plaintiff as to waiver of terms and conditions expressed, as well as matters involving an estoppel to claim under the strict letter of the agreement. We are of opinion that this case clearly comes within the class contemplated by the section above referred to, and that under such section the court possessed the right from the facts found to relieve from the forfeiture.

[3] When, however, defendant was so relieved, the plaintiff still held the legal title subject to the contract and agreement of purchase. This the court determined. The action being one to determine adverse claims to real property, the respective parties were entitled to have their rights, claims, and interests finally determined. The findings of fact and conclusions of law, which constitute the judgment, when considered in connection with the admissions of the pleadings, may be said to comply with section 738 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and therefore sufficient in form to preserve the rights of all parties. The entry of such judgment, however, which is a requisite to its effective character, contains the recital "that plaintiff take nothing by the action." While such entry is a ministerial act upon the part of the clerk, it nevertheless must be performed before an appeal will lie, and it may not be improper to say that upon it as entered the appeal rests. This entry of judgment should be modified by striking therefrom that part which recites "that plaintiff take nothing." Such recital is not consistent with the judgment as pronounced.

It is therefore ordered that the entry of judgment be modified by striking therefrom the words "that the plaintiff take nothing against the defendants or either of them by this action"; and, as so modified, the judgment and order are affirmed, without costs.

We concur: JAMES, J.; SHAW, J.

16 Cal. App. 351

HOOVER v. LESTER. (Civ. 952.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. May 4, 1911.)

1. JUDGMENT (§ 279*)—ENTRY—JUDGMENT ROLL—MATTERS INCLUDED.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 632, which provides that, upon the trial of a question of fact by the court, its decision must be given in writing and filed with the clerk within 30 days after the cause is submitted, and under section 633, which declares that the facts found and the conclusions of law must be separately stated, and judgment entered accordingly, the findings of fact and conclusions of law are the only papers in connection with the judgment that the trial judge is required to sign and file to make the judgment effectual.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Dec. Dig. § 279.*]

2. JUDGMENT (§ 271*)—ENTRY OF JUDGMENT—NECESSITY.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 664, the making of an entry of the substance of a judgment in the judgment book is an act purely ministerial in its nature, the performance of which devolves on the clerk.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 504-509; Dec. Dig. § 271.*]

3. JUDGMENT (§ 284*)—ENTRY—JUDGMENT ROLL—REQUISITES.

It makes no difference where the clerk procures the form for his entry in the judgment book, or that the signature of the judge appears on the entry; and, where the court has rendered its judgment by signing and filing findings of fact and conclusions of law, the clerk's entry in the judgment book setting forth the names of the parties reciting that the court had theretofore made its findings and conclusions, and stating the amount recovered, sufficiently sets forth the substance of the judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Dec. Dig. § 234.*]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 931*)—REVIEW—PRESUMPTIONS—FINDINGS OF COURT.

On appeal on the judgment roll there being a finding that there was a delivery of goods alleged to have been sold, it will be assumed in support of the finding that evidence on that question was introduced.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3762-3771; Dec. Dig. § 931.*]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 193*)—OBJECTIONS—PLEADING.

Where defendant, by his answer, treated the complaint as tendering an issue as to delivery of goods sold, and denied that plaintiff had delivered the same, and the court found that the goods had been delivered, defendant cannot object for the first time on appeal that the complaint failed to state a cause of action.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1226-1240; Dec. Dig. § 193.*]

6. TRIAL (§ 396*)—SUFFICIENCY OF FINDINGS—DEFINITENESS AND CERTAINTY.

Where plaintiff averred that he "sold to said defendant his crop of lemons," and the court found "that * * * said plaintiff herein sold to said defendant a certain crop of lemons," the finding is sufficient to identify the lemons as being the same as those described in the complaint.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 935-938; Dec. Dig. § 396.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; W. R. Guy, Judge.

Action by L. V. Hoover against A. Lester. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Luce, Sloane & Luce, for appellant. Walker & Sparks, for respondent.

JAMES, J. The appeal in this case is taken by defendant from the judgment, and is presented on the judgment roll alone. Plaintiff sued to recover a balance of $317.01 alleged to be due and unpaid on account of the purchase price of a crop of lemons. The judgment was for the amount prayed for. After trial, the court made and filed its findings of fact and conclusions of law. Thereafter the clerk entered judgment in the following form: "Now on this 25th day of August, 1910, upon and in accordance with the findings of facts and conclusions of law heretofore made and filed by the court in the above entitled and numbered action, it was considered, ordered, and adjudged by the court that the plaintiff, L. V. Hoover, do have and recover of and from said defendant, A. Lester, the sum of $317.00, with interest amounting to $24.00, together with his cost herein taxed at $16.00. W. R. Guy, Judge of Superior Court."

[1] One of the contentions made by appellant is that this entry of judgment is insufficient, and that it amounts only to a certificate of the clerk that the court did prior to the entry thereof make its findings. With this contention we do not agree. Section 632, Code of Civil Procedure, provides that, "upon the trial of a question of fact by the court, its decision must be given in writing and filed with the clerk within thirty days after the cause is submitted for decision." By section 633, immediately following, it is provided: "In giving the decision, the facts found and the conclusions of law must be separately stated. Judgment upon the decision must be entered accordingly." The findings of fact and conclusions of law are the only papers in connection with a judgment that the trial judge is required to sign and file; the signing and filing of these documents constituting the rendering of judgment. There is no other judicial act required to be performed by the court to make the judgment effectual.

[2] The making of the entry in the judgment book of the substance of the judgment is an act purely ministerial in its nature, the performance of which devolves upon the clerk. "If the trial has been had by the court, judgment must be entered by the clerk, in conformity to the decision of the court, immediately upon the filing of such decision. In no case is a judgment effectual for any purpose until so entered." Code Civ. Proc. § 664; Marshall v. Taylor, 97 Cal. 422, 32 Pac. 515; Painter v. Painter, 113 Cal. 375, 45 Pac. 689; First Nat. Bank of Fresno v. Dusy, 110 Cal. 69, 42 Pac. 476; City and County of S. F. v. Brown, 153 Cal. 644, 96

Pac. 281; Crim v. Kessing, 89 Cal. 478, 26 Pac. 1074, 23 Am. St. Rep. 491. The question then to be determined is whether the clerk, in performing the ministerial duty of entering the judgment of the court on the judgment book, made a sufficient statement of what had been decided by the court.

[3] It makes no difference at all from what source that official procured the form which he used in his entry in the judgment book; nor does the fact that the signature of the judge appeared on the entry add anything to the record, and neither would the want of such signature detract from its sufficiency. "With reference to the form of judgments, Mr. Black in his work on the subject (section 115) states the rule as follows: 'It may therefore be stated as the modern rule that the form of the judgment is not very material provided that in substance it shows distinctly and not inferentially that the matter had been determined in favor of one of the litigants, or that the rights of the parties in litigation had been adjudicated.' In discussing the same subject, another law-writer says: 'That whatever appears upon its face to be intended as the entry of a judgment will be regarded as sufficiently formal, if it show (1) the relief granted, and (2) that the grant was made by the court in whose records the entry is written.' Freeman on Judgments, § 50." Hentig v. Johnson, 8 Cal. App. 221, 96 Pac. 390. Here the court had rendered its judgment by signing and filing findings of fact and conclusions of law. The clerk's entry in the judgment book sufficiently set forth the substance of that judgment. It gave the name of the plaintiff and the defendant, recited that the court had theretofore made its findings of fact and conclusions of law, and stated the amount of money ordered to be recovered by the plaintiff from the defendant.

[4, 5] Plaintiff in his complaint failed to aver a delivery of the lemon crop sold to defendant. That such an averment was essential to the statement of a cause of action seems to be admitted by respondent. However, defendant in his answer denied "that said plaintiff has at any time carried out said contract or delivered to said defendant said crop of lemons so contracted for." The court found that the lemons had been delivered. By his answer the defendant treated the complaint as tendering to him an issue as to the delivery of the fruit. On this appeal with only the judgment roll to look to, where the finding is that there was a delivery, it must be assumed in support of this finding that evidence was introduced on that question. Defendant cannot now be heard to object that the complaint was deficient in failing to allege a delivery of the lemons. His answer treated the issue as having been properly made. Evidence was heard on the subject, and the court made its finding in determination of that issue. It is too late, under such conditions, to object for the first time that the complaint fails to state a cause of action in the particular referred to. Merrill v. Pacific Transfer Co., 131 Cal. 582, 63 Pac. 915; Horn v. Hamilton, 89 Cal. 278, 26 Pac. 833; Riverside Water Co. v. Gage, 108 Cal. 245, 41 Pac. 299.

[6] One more point is urged by appellant. He insists that the finding of fact is insufficient where the court finds "that on the 14th day of July, 1909, said plaintiff herein sold to said defendant a certain crop of lemons." The allegation of the complaint upon which this finding was made was in part as follows: "Plaintiff sold to said defendant his crop of lemons." It is the contention of appellant that, as the identity of the lemons sold with those which were delivered was the main issue in the case, the finding of the court that the plaintiff sold a certain crop of lemons is not a finding that plaintiff sold "his" crop of lemons to defendant. The finding seems to be sufficient to identify the lemons as being the same as those described in the complaint. The mere use of the words "a certain crop of lemons," instead of the words employed in the complaint, to wit: "his crop of lemons," is not such a difference in descriptive terms as to warrant an inference being drawn that the crop sold might have been other than that delivered. In their closing brief counsel for appellant suggest on this point that the pleadings call for "his crop of lemons from his lemon orchard near Lakeside." This is hardly a correct statement of the issue. Plaintiff alleged merely that he sold "his crop of lemons." Defendant answered that allegation in the following form: "Admits that on or about the 14th day of July, 1909, said plaintiff sold to said defendant a certain crop of lemons from plaintiff's lemon orchard near Lakeside in the county of San Diego." The phrase, "from plaintiff's lemon orchard near Lakeside," included in the admission found in that paragraph of defendant's answer just referred to, was not an admission of anything that plaintiff had alleged, nor was it an affirmative allegation of any fact. It was a mere recital which should be disregarded.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; SHAW, J.

16 Cal. App. 249

KORANDER v. PENN BRIDGE CO.
(Civ. 976.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. May 11, 1911.)

MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 185*)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—NEGLIGENCE OF FELLOW SERVANT—"MACHINE."

Civ. Code, § 1970, provides that an employer shall be liable for injuries to a servant sustained through the employer's negligence or the default of a co-employee, employed on a machine or other appliance than that on which the employee injured, was employed. Held, that the word "machine" as so used meant an instrument composed of one or more of the mechanical powers, and capable when set in motion of producing by its own operation certain predetermined physical effects, being distinguished from all other mechanical instruments in that its rule of action resides within itself, and hence, where a servant employed to steady piles in front of a pile driver was injured by the negligence of the engineer operating the engine by which the hammer was lifted, the pile driver and the engine being connected only by a rope by which the power was transmitted to the hammer, plaintiff and the engineer were not working on the same machine within such section.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Dec. Dig. § 185.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 5, pp. 4265-4267; vol. 8, pp. 7711, 7712.]

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; W. R. Guy, Judge.

Action by Gus Korander against the Penn Bridge Company. From a judgment for defendant on an order granting its application for a nonsuit, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

J. E. O'Keefe, E. L. Thomas, and C. N. Andrews, for appellant. Eugene Daney, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Action to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been sustained as a result of defendant's negligence.

At the close of plaintiff's evidence, defendant moved for a nonsuit, which motion the court granted. Judgment went accordingly, from which plaintiff prosecutes this appeal.

The complaint contains two counts, the cause of action in one of which (and the only one necessary to here consider) is based upon the alleged negligence of an engineer engaged in operating a steam hoisting engine supplying motive power in operating a pile driver upon which plaintiff was employed. The evidence disclosed by the record clearly tends to show negligence on the part of the engineer; indeed, such fact is not controverted by respondent. The question, then, presented is whether or not this negligence of the engineer can be imputed to the defendant, his employer. By section 1970, Civil Code, it is provided that an employer shall be required to indemnify his employé for losses suffered by the latter through injuries resulting "from the wrongful act, neglect or default of a co-employé * * * employed upon a machine, * * * or other appliance than that upon which the employé is injured is employed." In granting defendant's motion for nonsuit the learned trial judge held that both plaintiff and the engineer whose negligence caused the injury to plaintiff were fellow servants employed upon the same machine or appliance, and hence under said provision of the statute plaintiff was not entitled to recover. In thus ruling we think the court erred.

Briefly stated, the facts are as follows: Plaintiff was an employé of defendant, who was engaged in operating a pile driver mounted upon the end of a lighter, anchored or moored in the bay of San Diego next to and adjoining a wharf where the piles were being driven. This pile driver consisted of a mass of iron, termed the "hammer," weighing upwards of a ton, and was drawn upwards between two timbers, termed "guides," the purpose of which, in addition to supporting the hammer, was to control or guide it in its downward course when permitted to fall upon the pile as it was driven into the ground underneath the surface of the water. For the purpose of raising this hammer, a rope was fastened thereto, and, passing over a pulley at the top of the guides or scaffold, was attached to a drum connected with a portable steam engine, placed upon the lighter some thirty feet distant from the pile driver, and which by causing the drum to revolve raised the hammer to the desired distance above the pile, when, by the action of the engineer in removing the friction, the hammer was permitted to drop upon the timber constituting the pile. Plaintiff was employed as a loftman, his duty, among other things, requiring him to occupy a position on the scaffold near the top of the pile, see that it was kept in position while being driven, and at the proper time "ring" it; that is, place an iron ring somewhat smaller in circumference than the head of the pile, which upon being driven down by a drop of the hammer, encircled the head and prevented the force and weight of the hammer in falling from splitting and otherwise injuring the timber. While thus employed in "ringing" a pile, and using his left hand in holding the ring on top of the pile, he stooped down to get a board used as a lever with which to force the leaning pile into a perpendicular position, and while so engaged the engineer dropped the hammer, causing the injuries for which he asks damages. It was the duty of the engineer to release the hammer only when signaled so to do by the foreman in charge of the work, and this signal the foreman gave when plaintiff indicated to him his readiness to have the hammer drop. The accident was due to the fact that, in the absence of any signal from the foreman or plaintiff and without warning, the engineer released the hammer. "A machine is an instrument composed of one or more of the mechanical powers, and capable, when set in motion, of producing, by its own operation, certain predetermined physical effects. It differs from all other mechanical instruments in that its rule of action resides within itself." Stearns & Co. v. Russell, 85 Fed. 225, 29 C. C. A. 121. The steam engine constituted a complete machine whose only function was to develop power. It was in charge and under the control of the engineer, whose duty it was, by means of operating the engine, to develop and apply the power as needed in raising the hammer, and upon signal only to withdraw the power so applied, thus permitting the hammer to drop. While for the time being it was used in developing the required power, the engine was no part of the pile driver upon which plaintiff was employed, and plaintiff had no control over its operations. This necessary power might be supplied in many ways other than by a steam engine; such, for instance, as electricity, horse power, the explosion of gunpowder, or gasoline. The fact that the power was transmitted by means of a rope connecting the engine and hammer did not constitute the pile driver and engine one machine any more than would an electric plant and saw mill (distant miles apart) constitute one machine because the two were connected by a wire over which the current was transmitted from the one to operate the other. They were distinct and separate machines or appliances, neither one dependent upon the other for performing the work for which each was intended. The cases of Livingston v. Kodiak Packing Co., 103 Cal. 253, 37 Pac. 149, Mann v. O'Sullivan, 126 Cal. 61, 58 Pac. 375, 77 Am. St. Rep. 149, and Bridges v. Los Angeles Pac. Ry., 156 Cal. 492, 105 Pac. 586, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 914, were all decisions rendered prior to the amendment of section 1970, and no doubt the Legislature by said amendment intended to change the rule declared in those cases. It may be, as contended by respondent, that, notwithstanding the amendment, plaintiff, and the engineer must, under the law, still be deemed fellow servants. However this may be, we are of the opinion that the evidence tends to prove that the injury to plaintiff was due to the negligence of the engineer, who was employed upon a machine other than the appliance or machine upon which plaintiff was employed when injured, and hence, under the provisions of section 1970, Civil Code, as amended, such negligence is imputable to the employer.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; JAMES, J.

16 Cal. App. 85

MORGAN et al. v. MUTUAL BENEFIT LIFE INS. CO. (Civ. 863.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. April 25, 1911. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court June 24, 1911.)

1. PROCESS (§ 86*)—PUBLICATION—SERVICE—SUBJECT OF ACTION — "PERSONAL PROPERTY."

Where a foreign insurance company, doing business in the state of New York, issued a policy to a resident, who with the company's consent assigned it to another resident as collateral security for a loan, and the assignee died a resident of the state of New York, and his trustees held the policy as an asset of his estate, the subject-matter of an action by the trustees against the company and the beneficiary to recover the amount advanced, in view of Statutory Construction Law N. Y. § 4 (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 22, § 39), is "personal property," within Code Civ. Proc. N. Y. § 438, subd. 5, authorizing the service of summons on a non-resident defendant by publication, where the complaint demands judgment that the defendant be excluded from an interest in personal property within the state, and the nonresident beneficiaries may be served by publication.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Process, Cent. Dig. § 100; Dec. Dig. § 86.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 6, pp. 5346-5358; vol. 8, p. 7753.]

2. INSURANCE (§ 590*)—RIGHTS TO PROCEED—CHARGE FOR PAYMENT OF PREMIUM.

Where a third person, at the request of insured and the beneficiary, pays the premiums on life insurance, such payments are a lien on the policy and the proceeds thereof, even though the assignment of policy is not effective.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. § 1482; Dec. Dig. § 590.*]

3. JUDGMENT (§ 821*)—FOREIGN JUDGMENT—BAR—RIGHT TO INTERPOSE.

Where a judgment was recovered in another state against an insurance company and the beneficiaries of a life policy, in favor of one who had paid the premiums at the request of the insured and beneficiary, the pleading of such judgment by the company, in an action upon the same policy by those named as beneficiaries, is not setting up in its own favor equities existing in favor of others.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 1492-1495; Dec. Dig. § 821.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John J. Van Nostrand, Judge.

Action by Clara E. Morgan and others against the Mutual Benefit Life Insurance Company. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Transfer of cause for rehearing in the Supreme Court denied 116 Pac. 389.

E. C. Chapman and W. C. Sharpstein, for appellant. M. J. Kuhl, for respondents.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal taken by defendant from a judgment rendered by the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco in favor of the plaintiffs and against the defendant, upon a policy of life insurance issued by defendant to Elizabeth A. Morgan upon the life of her husband, Orson A. Morgan.

To properly discuss the questions of law involved in this case, a somewhat extended statement of the facts will be necessary. They are as follows:

On March 26, 1866, the appellant insurance company, in the state of New York, issued to Elizabeth A. Morgan, mother of respondents, a policy of insurance on the life of her husband, Orson A. Morgan, father of respondents. By the terms of said policy appellant agreed to pay $5,000 to Elizabeth A. Morgan, or assigns, or, in case she should die before Orson A. Morgan, then to the children of said Orson A. Morgan. Being unable to pay the premium due on March 26, 1871, Mr. and Mrs. Morgan, on or about that date, requested one Dayton S. Morgan, since deceased, to pay the same, in order to keep and preserve said policy in force. The said insurance policy was thereupon assigned by said Elizabeth A. Morgan and her husband to Dayton S. Morgan to secure the repayment of that particular premium and also such other premiums as he might thereafter pay, together with interest thereon, until such advances should be repaid. Appellant insurance company assented to this assignment. Thereafter Dayton S. Morgan, each and every year until his death on April 9, 1890, paid the premium on said policy, and after his death the executors and trustees of his estate continued to pay the same until the death of Orson A. Morgan, the assured, which occurred in the year 1905. His wife predeceased him, having died in the year 1904. At the time of the death of Orson A. Morgan the sums advanced by Dayton S. Morgan and his personal representatives in payment of said premiums, together with interest thereon, largely exceeded the face of said policy.

When the policy of insurance was executed and delivered, and at the time of the assignment thereof, Elizabeth A. Morgan and Orson A. Morgan were residents of the state of New York. Dayton S. Morgan at all the times mentioned herein resided in the said state of New York, and the policy of insurance since its delivery has always been in that state, in the possession of Dayton S. Morgan and his personal representatives. At the time of the death of the assured, all his children before mentioned were and ever since have been nonresidents of said state.

The appellant insurance company, as to the state of New York, is a foreign corporation, having its principal office and place of business in the state of New Jersey, but since the year 1866 and prior thereto it has been doing business within the state of New York, having met the statutory requirements of that state.

On October 6, 1905, proofs of the death of the assured having been furnished to the company, the personal representatives of Dayton S. Morgan commenced an action in the Supreme Court of New York against the insurance company and the heirs at law of said Orson A. Morgan, for the purpose of ascertaining the interest of the parties in said policy of insurance, and to establish an equitable lien in favor of the plaintiffs in that action upon said policy and the moneys due thereunder to the extent of the moneys paid by them and their testator upon said policy, and for the recovery of the amount of the policy from the company. The insurance company duly appeared. Thereafter, upon application of the plaintiffs therein (executors of Dayton S. Morgan), an order was granted directing the service of summons upon said heirs at law by publication, and service was made upon them pursuant to that order, but they did not appear in the action. Defendant insurance company answered the complaint, and admitted that it had issued said policy, and that the amount stated in said complaint was owing by it; but it alleged that in the month of November, 1905, the said heirs at law had commenced an action against it in the superior court of San Francisco, Cal., demanding judgment against it for the amount of said policy and interest. The insurance company, after some further references in its answer to the action pending in California, submitted its rights to the judgment of said New York court.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Thereafter said insurance company moved, upon the papers upon which the order of publication was granted, that said order of publication be set aside and canceled upon the ground that the court had no jurisdiction to direct publication of summons against the defendants, said nonresident heirs at law. The motion was denied, and an appeal was taken from such order to the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, where, on May 1, 1907, the order was affirmed (Morgan v. Mut., etc., Ins. Co., 119 App. Div. 645, 104 N. Y. Supp. 185), but leave was granted by that court to appeal to the Court of Appeals of New York. Accordingly the latter court was called upon to decide whether or not jurisdiction of the said heirs at law could be acquired by the New York courts by publication of summons. The New York Court of Appeals, on November 1, 1907, answered the question certified to it by the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court in the affirmative. Morgan v. Mut., etc., Ins. Co., 189 N. Y. 451, 82 N. E. 438.

Subsequent to this decision the case was tried in the Supreme Court upon its merits. The respondents, the said heirs at law, did not appear, and after trial judgment was, on September 16, 1908, duly given that the personal representatives of Dayton S. Morgan were entitled to all the money due under the policy, and that the said heirs at law were barred and foreclosed of all interest in said policy and its proceeds, and that plaintiffs in that action recover of the insurance company the sum of $5,228.88, and costs. Thereafter, to wit, on May 5th, 1909, the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, to which court the insurance company appealed, affirmed this judgment. Morgan v. Mut., etc., Ins. Co., 132 App. Div. 455, 116 N. Y. Supp. 989. The company then appealed to the New York Court of Appeals, which, on February 8, 1910, without an opinion, affirmed the judgment of said Appellate Division. Morgan v. Mut., etc., Ins. Co., 197 N. Y. 607, 91 N. E. 1117.

In November, 1905, as before noticed, the said heirs at law commenced this action. The defendant, in defense thereto, pleaded the judgment of the New York courts, and also set up the facts upon which said judgment was based. After a hearing said superior court rendered judgment against the defendant insurance company, and in favor of the said heirs at law. In due time the insurance company appealed to the Supreme Court, which court, by an order regularly made transferred the cause to this court for hearing and decision. The appellant contends that the New York judgment is conclusive on the respondents here; and, secondly, that even if that be not so, it is entitled to judgment on the facts of the case.

[1] The respondents, on the other hand, in support of the judgment of the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, argue here (as was contended by the insurance company in the New York courts) that the courts of that state acquired no jurisdiction over them by the publication of summons, so that they are not concluded by the judgment rendered by such courts; and furthermore that the assignment of the policy of insurance was void as to them; they being expressly named as beneficiaries of the policy and not having joined in the assignment. The question of whether the courts of New York acquired jurisdiction over the respondents by the publication of summons was considered by the Court of Appeals of that state (Morgan v. Mut., etc., Ins. Co., 189 N. Y. 451, 82 N. E. 438), and in adopting the conclusion there reached we quote quite extensively from the opinion. It is there said:

"The interest of the plaintiff's assignor, Elizabeth A. Morgan, in the policy of insurance was contingent upon her surviving her husband. Bradshaw v. Mut. Life Ins. Co., 187 N. Y. 347 [80 N. E. 203]. As she did not survive her husband, the plaintiffs seek in this action to charge the policy and the proceeds thereof with the amount paid by them, and their intestate for premiums thereon. Pomeroy's Eq. Jur. vol. 3, § 1243; 25 Cyc. 774, 775; Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, vol. 19, p. 90; Mandeville v. Kent, 88 Hun, 132 [34 N. Y. Supp. 622]; Brick v. Campbell, 122 N. Y. 337 [25 N. E. 493, 10 L. R. A. 259]; Conn. Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Burroughs, 34 Conn. 305 [91 Am. Dec. 725]; Lane v. N. Y. Life Ins. Co., 56 Hun, 92 [9 N. Y. Supp. 52].

"The defendants other than the insurance company are proper and necessary parties to this action (citing cases). The defendant insurance company therefore had a standing in court to move to vacate the order of publication. Brandow v. Vroman, 29 App. Div. 597 [51 N. Y. Supp. 943]. This is not disputed by the plaintiffs.

"Service of a summons upon nonresidents of the state of New York may be made as provided by section 438 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It is therein provided as follows: 'An order directing the service of a summons upon a defendant, without the state, or by publication, may be made in either of the following cases: * * * 5.

Where the complaint demands judgment, that the defendant be excluded from a vested or contingent interest in or lien upon, specific real or personal property within the state; or that such an interest or lien in favor of either party be enforced, regulated, defined, or limited; or otherwise affecting the title to such property. * * *

"The term 'personal property' is defined by statute. Section 4 of the statutory construction law (chapter 677, Laws 1892 [Consol. Laws 1909, c. 22, § 39]) provides as follows: 'The term "personal property" includes chattels, money, things in action, and all written instruments themselves, as distinguished from the rights or interests to which they relate, by which any right, interest, lien or incumbrance in, to or upon property, or any debt or financial obligation is created, acknowledged, evidenced, transferred, discharged or defeated, wholly or in part, and everything, except real property, which may be the subject of ownership. The term "chattels," includes goods and chattels.' Revised Stats. pt. 4, tit. 7, c. 1, § 33; Code Proc. § 463; Code Civ. Proc. (1880) § 3343, subd. 7.

"It is not necessary to consider to what extent, if any, the Legislature, simply by statutory definition or provision, can treat intangible personal property as within this state, and subject it to the jurisdiction of our courts as against persons not served with process within our territorial limits, because in this case not only are the plaintiffs as claimants residents of this state, but the debtor and the debt, as well as the written instrument by which the debt was created, acknowledged, and evidenced, are in contemplation of law within this state.

"A foreign insurance company is not allowed to do business in this state until it submits itself fully to the jurisdiction of our courts. It must obtain from our Superintendent of Insurance a certificate authorizing it to do business in this state. It is subject to examination by the insurance department of this state, and it is required to deposit with the Superintendent of Insurance of this state, or with the Auditor, Comptroller, or general fiscal officer of the state by whose laws it is incorporated, stocks and bonds as provided by our statutes to the same amount as required by domestic insurance corporations, which stocks and bonds are held in trust for the benefit of all the policy holders of the corporation. A foreign insurance corporation is also required to appoint our Superintendent of Insurance its attorney in this state upon whom all lawful process in any action or proceeding against the corporation can be served. The authority of such foreign insurance corporation must be revoked in case it applies to remove into the United States court any action brought against it in the court of this state. Our statutes expressly provide that an action against a foreign corporation may be maintained by a resident of the state or by a domestic corporation for any cause of action. Such an action may be maintained in this state by another foreign corporation or by a nonresident, when the action is brought to recover damages for the breach of a contract made within this state.

"The presence of the insurance company in this state is not temporary, but continuous. It is legally and actually here, not only because process has been served upon it and it has appeared in the action, but it is here pursuant to the provisions of our statutes, by authority of which it is doing business and maintaining offices in this state. The contract of insurance was made by it with a resident of this state through its agents so located and doing business here. Every transaction relating to the contract, its assignment, and the payment of premiums thereon has occurred here. The policy of insurance and the claim against the insurance company for the money payable on the policy of insurance are in the control of our court, and any judgment that may be rendered in the action can be enforced and made effectual in this state. As to such a claim, the insurance company should be treated as a domestic insurance corporation and as domiciled in this state. The situs of the debt would consequently be here, and the action is one to define and enforce an interest in specific personal property within the state within the meaning of the Code provision quoted. Whenever a question as to the situs of a similar claim against an insurance company doing business in a state pursuant to the statutes thereof has been directly involved in this court or in the federal courts, and it has been sought to uphold the situs of the claim in the state where the contract was made, it has been sustained.

"In Martine v. International Life Insurance Society, 53 N. Y. 339 [13 Am. Rep. 529], an action was brought upon a policy of life insurance. The defendant was a foreign corporation. The court say: 'The defendant sought and obtained the privilege of establishing and carrying on its business here under the regulations fixed by the statutes of this state. It established a permanent general agency, and conducted its business here as a distinct organization, and was permitted by law to do this in the same manner as domestic institutions. * * * As to the business transacted here, the company must be regarded as domiciled by the residence of its general agent and its local organization. * * *'

The court then reviews the cases of New England Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Woodworth, 111 U. S. 138, 4 Sup. Ct. 364, 28 L. Ed. 379, Sulz v. Mut. R. F. L. Ass'n, 145 N. Y. 563, 40 N. E. 242, 28 L. R. A. 379, and Matter of Gordon, 186 N. Y. 471, 79 N. E. 722, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1089, and cites them in support of its conclusion. Other cases that may be cited in support of the jurisdiction of the

New York court are the following: Loaiza v. Sup. Ct., 85 Cal. 11, 24 Pac. 707, 9 L. R. A. 376, 20 Am. St. Rep. 197; Murray v. Murray, 115 Cal. 266, 47 Pac. 37, 37 L. R. A. 626, 56 Am. St. Rep. 97; Chicago, etc., Co. v. Strum, 174 U. S. 710, 19 Sup. Ct. 797, 41 L. Ed. 1144; Jellenik v. Huron, etc., Co., 177 U. S. 1, 20 Sup. Ct. 559, 44 L. Ed. 647.

[2] 2. It is next argued by respondents in support of the judgment that the assignment of the policy of insurance was as to them void; they being expressly named as beneficiaries under the policy and not having joined in the assignment. The answer of the appellant to this contention is that the assignee of such a policy, who advances the premiums to keep the policy in force, is entitled to a lien on such policy and its proceeds for such advances, even though the assignment is void.

This is the question that was considered by the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court of New York (Morgan v. Mut. Benefit Life Ins. Co., 132 App. Div. 455, 116 N. Y. Supp. 989) and determined adversely to the contention of respondents. That court cites with approval and follows the rule laid down in Pomeroy's Equity Jurisprudence (volume 3, § 1243) as follows: "Where a person, not being the owner of a policy of life insurance, nor bound to pay the premium, but having some claim or color of interest in it, voluntarily pays the premiums thereon, and thus keeps it alive for the benefit of a third party, he may thereby acquire an equitable lien on the proceeds of the policy as security for the repayment of his advances." This equitable rule was applied by our own Supreme Court in the case of Stockwell v. Mut. Life Ins. Co., 140 Cal. 198, 73 Pac. 833, 98 Am. St. Rep. 25, where, even in the absence of an assignment of the policy, one of the beneficiaries, who had advanced premiums for the purpose of keeping the policy alive, was allowed an equitable lien upon the proceeds of the policy for the reimbursement of those advances, as against the claim of one of the other beneficiaries to receive her share of the policy free and without deduction from it of a pro rata of such advances. See, also, Unity, etc., Ass'n v. Dugan, 118 Mass. 219; Harley v. Heist, 86 Ind. 196, 45 Am. Rep. 285; Matlack v. Seventh Ave. Bank, 180 Pa. 360, 36 Atl. 1082; Stevens v. Germania Life Ins. Co., 26 Tex. Civ. App. 156, 62 S. W. 824.

[3] Respondent finally makes the point in support of the judgment that the defendant insurance company cannot set up in its own defense equities alleged to exist in favor of other parties. But we think in the present case the matter set up by the defendant is much more than an equity in favor of other persons. It is a judgment against it, in an action in which the respondents were made parties, and which it is bound to pay.

The judgment is reversed, and, inasmuch as this case was tried upon an agreed statement of facts and a stipulation that judgment should be entered without findings, the court below is directed to enter judgment in favor of the defendant.

We concur: HALL, J.; LENNON, P. J.

16 Cal. App. 85

MORGAN et al. v. MUTUAL BENEFIT LIFE INS. CO. (S. F. 5529.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 24, 1911.)

APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1089*)—AFFIRMANCE ON REHEARING — DECISION OF INTERMEDIATE COURT.

Where a decision by the appellate court was correct, being based upon one valid reason, the error of another reason given in support of the decision will not justify the Supreme Court in transferring the cause.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4293-4301; Dec. Dig. § 1089.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John J. Van Nostrand, Judge.

Action by Clara E. Morgan and others against the Mutual Benefit Life Insurance Company. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Petition for transfer to the Supreme Court denied.

For opinion in Court of Appeal, see 116 Pac. 385.

E. C. Chapman and W. C. Sharpstein, for appellant. M. J. Kuhl, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. In their petition for a rehearing of this cause, the respondents confine themselves to a criticism of the doctrine asserted by the Court of Appeals of New York, in the case of Morgan v. Mutual, etc., Ins. Co., 189 N. Y. 451, 82 N. E. 438, wherein it was held that they were brought within the jurisdiction of the courts of that state by constructive service of summons. If it be conceded that their argument on this point is destructive of the doctrine assailed, it does not follow that the judgment of the District Court of Appeal is erroneous, for it does not rest alone upon the estoppel pleaded in the supplemental answer; it is fully sustained by the allegations (stipulated to be true) of the third defense set up in the original answer. It was upon these identical facts that the courts of New York correctly held that the appellant must pay the amount due on the policy to the representatives of those who, as assignees, had kept it alive by payment of the premiums, amounting with interest to more than the sum insured. Whether the New York decisions sustaining their jurisdiction were correct or not, it is clear that as to the merits of the controversy the final decision there was correct, and for the same reasons that appellant was compelled to pay there it must be exonerated here.

Without determining the question of jurisdiction, the petition for a transfer of the cause to this court for further consideration is denied.

160 Cal. 18

Ex parte WINSTON. (Cr. 1,682.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 27, 1911.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 211*)—PROCEEDINGS BEFORE JUSTICE—COMPLAINT—MISDEMEANORS.

A complaint charging a misdemeanor before a justice of the peace must conform to Pen. Code, § 1426, requiring that such proceeding shall be commenced by a complaint under oath setting forth the offense charged with such particulars of time, place, person, and property as to enable defendant to understand distinctly the character of the offense complained of and to answer the complaint, and need not conform to section 950, providing that an indictment or information shall contain the title of the action, specifying the name of the court in which it is presented, the names of the parties, and a statement of the acts constituting the offense in ordinary and concise language, and in such manner as to enable a person of common understanding to know what is intended.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 420-430; Dec. Dig. § 211.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 252*)—SUMMARY COMPLAINT—SUFFICIENCY.

Under Pen. Code, § 1425, giving justice courts jurisdiction of batteries not charged to have been committed on a public officer in discharge of his duties, or to have been committed with such intent as to render the offense a felony, a complaint, alleging that defendant on or about the 10th day of July, A. D. 1910, unlawfully and willfully did use force and violence on the person of the affiant, all of which was contrary to the form, force, and effect of the statute, etc., alleged every element of a simple battery, defined by Pen. Code, § 242, to consist of any willful and unlawful use of force and violence upon another, and was therefore sufficient to confer jurisdiction on the justice.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 526-536; Dec. Dig. § 252.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 252*)—SUMMARY COMPLAINT—SUFFICIENCY.

It is not essential to the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace to hear and determine a charge of misdemeanor that the complaint be of sufficient definiteness and certainty that the record of the conviction will establish the identity of the offense in case of a subsequent prosecution on the plea of former conviction unaided by evidence aliunde.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 526-536; Dec. Dig. § 252.*]

In Bank. Application for writ of habeas corpus by H. B. Winston. Denied.

Black & Clark, for petitioner.

BEATTY, C. J. This is a petition for the writ of habeas corpus. The prisoner is held by the sheriff of Alameda county by virtue of a commitment issued by a justices' court after a judgment of conviction, which has been affirmed on appeal by the superior court. The imprisonment is alleged to be unlawful for the sole reason that the complaint upon which the prosecution was founded was insufficient to confer jurisdiction on the justices' court. So much of the complaint as is material here reads as follows: "Roland Webb, being duly sworn, deposes and says that H. B. Winston did, in the city of Berkeley, county of Alameda, state of California, on or about the 10th day of July, A. D. 1910, unlawfully and willfully use force and violence upon the person of the affiant, all of which is contrary to the form, force and effect of the statute in such case made and provided, and against the peace and dignity of the people of the state of California." The objections to this charge are that it does not allege the particular acts of force and violence; that it does not conform to the requirements of section 950, or section 1426, of the Penal Code; that it does not state any offense and does not inform the defendant of the nature of the charge against him so that he could plead the judgment thereon as a bar to a subsequent prosecution for the same offense.

[1] In charging a misdemeanor of which justices' courts have jurisdiction it is not necessary that the complaint should conform to the requirements of section 950 of the Penal Code. It is only necessary in such cases to conform to the requirements of section 1426.

[2] Justices' courts have jurisdiction of "batteries not charged to have been committed upon a public officer in discharge of his duties, or to have been committed with such intent as to render the offense a felony." Pen. Code, § 1425. This complaint alleges every element of a simple battery. "Battery is any willful and unlawful use of force or violence upon another." Pen. Code, § 242. A complaint charging a misdemeanor cognizable in justices' courts is sufficient not only to confer jurisdiction, but for every purpose if it is made under oath, and sets forth "the offense charged with such particulars of time, place, person, and property as to enable the defendant to understand distinctly the character of the offense complained of, and to answer the complaint." Pen. Code, § 1426.

[3] This complaint charged, in the language of the statute, every element of the offense of battery, with the particulars of time, place, and person (no property is involved), and the conviction under it can undoubtedly be pleaded as a bar to any prosecution that may hereafter be instituted for the same offense. The record of the conviction, if it is true, might not be sufficient, unaided by evidence aliunde, to establish the identity of this offense with one hereafter charged in different or even in the same words, but that is not a jurisdictional requirement. The cases cited by counsel from the reports of this state in which it is held that a defendant is entitled to have the charge against him set forth with reasonable particularity in order to enable him to plead a conviction or acquittal in bar of a subsequent prosecution tion for the same offense are all appeal cases where the question arose upon special demurrer to the indictment, and the reversals were for error in procedure, not for excess of jurisdiction. People v. Perales, 141 Cal. 581, 75 Pac. 170; People v. Ward, 110 Cal. 369, 42 Pac. 894; People v. Webber, 138 Cal. 145, 70 Pac. 1089. No case involving merely the question of jurisdiction is cited in which the prisoner has been discharged upon the ground here considered.

It must be remembered that in justices' courts nicety of pleading is not exacted in either civil or criminal cases. The rule which confines inferior courts strictly to matters within their jurisdiction does not apply to their proceedings where they are acting within their jurisdiction. Here the complaint clearly charges a simple battery—a case within the jurisdiction of the justices' court, and it charges it with the particulars of time and place and person. It certainly discloses the character of the offense charged, and there was nothing to prevent the prisoner from making any defense he could possibly have proved under a plea of not guilty, or either of the pleas of former jeopardy.

Writ denied.

160 Cal. 80

PEOPLE v. FIGUEROA. (Cr. 1,642.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 2, 1911.
Rehearing Denied July 1, 1911.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1130*)—APPEAL—BRIEFS—REVIEW.

The court on appeal in a capital case will review the rulings and proceedings of the trial court, though the case is submitted without argument or briefs on behalf of accused or the people.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2965-2970; Dec. Dig. § 1130.*]

2. HOMICIDE (§ 339*)—APPEAL—HARMLESS ERROR.

Where the proof that accused had a pistol and shot his wife with it was not contradicted, the error in sustaining an objection to a question, on cross-examination of a witness testifying that on the evening before the killing he saw that accused had a pistol similar to the one found near to decedent's body after the shooting, as to whether the witness was intoxicated that evening, was not prejudicial; the circumstances of the examination indicating that the witness would have denied any intoxication, and counsel for accused not suggesting the contrary.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 714; Dec. Dig. § 339.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank R. Willis, Judge.

George F. Figueroa was convicted of murder of the first degree, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Rehearing denied in bank; Beatty, C. J., dissenting.

Jos. F. Seymour, Jr., and Fred W. Morrison, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Beebe, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

SHAW, J. The defendant was convicted of the crime of murder of the first degree and sentenced to death. He appeals from the judgment and from the denial of his motion for a new trial.

[1] The defendant was accused of the murder of his wife, Sarah M. Figueroa, on the night of May 22, 1910. The case was submitted on appeal without oral argument on behalf of the defendant or the people, and no briefs have been filed by either party. Notwithstanding this failure of counsel to present the case upon appeal, we have, as is our usual practice in capital cases, carefully read the record and considered the rulings and proceedings upon the trial. The defendant was given a fair trial. The evidence of his guilt was clear and satisfactory.

[2] We find but one ruling worthy of notice. It was shown by direct and satisfactory evidence that the defendant shot and killed his wife with a pistol. A witness testified that on the evening before the 22d he saw the defendant and his wife, at their residence, and observed that the defendant had a pistol in his hip pocket, the handle of which was similar to a pistol found near the body of the wife soon after the shooting on the subsequent night. The homicide took place in the residence of the defendant and his wife. On cross-examination this witness stated that he had taken a glass of beer during that evening. He was then asked how many he had taken, and whether or not he had been drinking to excess on that night. An objection that this was immaterial and not proper cross-examination was sustained. We think the questions should have been allowed. If the witness had been intoxicated at the time, it would have been for the jury to consider whether his faculties were as clear as if he had been sober, and whether or not his recollection was correct. But these questions occurred during the course of a long, apparently aimless, and wholly fruitless cross-examination occupying 23 pages of the record on appeal. It was obvious from the entire course of the procedure by counsel that he had no knowledge or information that the witness was intoxicated on that occasion. He did not inform the court that he had expected to elicit an admission to that effect, or that he believed or suspected it to be the fact. The witness had been asked minutely as to his doings during that evening prior to his interview with the defendant, and there was nothing to indicate that he had been drinking intoxicants or that he was under the influence thereof. The question was obvious—ly merely one of a large number of questions asked without any object, other than a hope of discovering something concerning which counsel had neither information nor knowledge and which it was hoped might discredit or confuse the witness. The fact of the possession of a pistol by Figueroa on the evening before the homicide was not an important part of the case of the prosecution. The proof that he had the pistol and shot his wife with it was not contradicted or impeached in any particular. The circumstances of the cross-examination indicate almost with certainty that the witness would have denied any intoxication. Since counsel did not then suggest the contrary and has not seen fit to pursue the appeal further, we are satisfied that the ruling did not prejudice the defendant in any substantial right.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: SLOSS, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.; MELVIN, J.; LORIGAN, J.; HENSHAW, J.

160 Cal. 131

VAN NESS v. ROONEY et al. (Sac. 1,766.)
(Supreme Court of California. June 6, 1911.)

Rehearing Denied July 6, 1911.)

1. MINES AND MINERALS (§ 29*) — MINING CLAIMS—"PROPERTY."

Independent mining claims on the public domain constitute "property" in the fullest sense of the word, so that a valid location of mineral lands, made and kept up in accordance with Act Cong. July 26, 1866, c. 262, 14 Stat. 251, providing for the location of such claims, is in effect a grant by the United States of the right of present and exclusive possession of the land located.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mines and Minerals, Cent. Dig. §§ 66-72; Dec. Dig. § 29.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 6, pp. 5693-5728; vol. 8, pp. 7768-7770.]

2. MINES AND MINERALS (§ 9*) — MINERAL LANDS—LOCATION—RAILROAD GRANTS.

Mineral lands located on the public domain situated within the limits of railroad grants are subject to location, at least up to the time of the issuance of the patent to the railroad company.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mines and Minerals, Cent. Dig. §§ 9-13; Dec. Dig. § 9.*]

3. MINES AND MINERALS (§ 38*)—RAILROAD GRANT—MINERAL LANDS—LOCATION—ACTION TO QUIET TITLE—"SUIT TO INVALIDATE PATENT."

Where a patent for land granted to a railroad company excluded and excepted all mineral lands, should any such be found in the tracts described, exclusive of coal and iron lands, and plaintiff prior to patent had located a quartz mine within the grant, a suit to quiet title against one holding under the railroad grant involved only a construction of the patent to the railroad company, and was not a suit to invalidate the same, within Act Cong. March 2, 1896, c. 39, 29 Stat. 42 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1603), prohibiting actions to annul patents erroneously issued under railroad grants after five years from the passage of the act.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mines and Minerals, Cent. Dig. § 89; Dec. Dig. § 38.*]

4. PUBLIC LANDS (§ 73*)—AID OF RAILROADS—LANDS SUBJECT TO GRANT.

Under Act Cong. July 26, 1866, c. 262, 14 Stat. 251, providing for the location of mineral lands on the public domain, when a locator has discovered a valuable mineral deposit on such land and perfected location in accordance with the law, the United States has no subsequent power to deprive him of the exclusive right to possession and enjoyment of the located claim, and the lands having thereby become mineral lands cannot be granted in aid of railroad construction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Public Lands, Cent. Dig. §§ 236, 237; Dec. Dig. § 73.*]

5. PUBLIC LANDS (§ 78*)—PATENT—RAILROAD GRANT—EXCEPTIONS.

Where a patent to land granted to a railroad company, after describing the land, contained a clause, "yet excluding and excepting all mineral lands should any such be found in the tracts aforesaid * * * but not to include coal and iron land," the patent did not pass title to the railroad company to land within the description of the patent on which, prior to its issuance, was a valid quartz gold location.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Public Lands, Cent. Dig. § 243; Dec. Dig. § 78.*]

6. PUBLIC LANDS (§ 116*)—PATENT—EFFECT—KNOWN MINERAL LOCATION.

The rule that a patent of government land to a railroad company is conclusive of the fact that the land was of such a character as was patentable under the grant, while applicable to vest in the patentee of agricultural land title to all mineral deposits not known to exist when the patent is issued, does not apply so as to vest the patentee with title to known mineral deposits existing in the land at the time of patent, and reserved by an express exception therein.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Public Lands, Cent. Dig. §§ 323, 325-328; Dec. Dig. § 116.*]

7. MINES AND MINERALS (§ 38*)—QUIETING TITLE—RIGHT TO RELIEF.

Where claimant's predecessor had made a valid location of a mining claim on land within the limits of a railroad grant, prior to the issuance of a patent to the railroad company, and plaintiff had performed all assessment work required to continue his right to such location, he was the equitable owner of the mining claim, the title being held by the government in trust for him; and hence he was entitled to maintain a suit to quiet his title thereto against defendants, illegally asserting title under the patent to the railroad.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mines and Minerals, Cent. Dig. § 87½; Dec. Dig. § 38.*]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Trinity County; James W. Bartlett, Judge.

Action by H. J. Van Ness against John Rooney and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

D. J. Hall and Taylor & Tebbe, for appellants. Braynard & Kimball, for respondent.

LORIGAN, J. This action was brought by plaintiff against defendants to quiet his title to a quartz mining claim, known as the "Five Pines Mine," located in Trinity county, and for an injunction restraining defendants from trespassing on or extracting ore therefrom. Plaintiff proved a valid location of the mine by one Edwin Baker, on August 26, 1895, and a conveyance by said locator to plaintiff; that the claim consisted of a piece of land 1,500 feet long by 600 feet wide located partly in section 20 and partly in section 29, township 35 north, range 1 west, M. D. M., about half the surface ground of said claim lying in each of said sections; that the annual work and labor required by law to be done had been performed on said claim each year after its location, and that the claim embraced valuable gold-bearing ore, and contained no deposits of coal or iron.

The defendants asserted title to that portion of the mining claim located in section 29 as successors in interest, under a patent issued by the United States, to the Central Pacific Railroad Company, dated February 14, 1896. This patent purported to convey to said railroad company some 200,000 acres of land in various sections, townships, and ranges in California, including all of said section 29. The descriptive calls in the patent are followed by the granting clause, whereby the United States grants to the Central Pacific Railroad Company "all the tracts of land described in the foregoing, yet excluding and excepting all mineral lands should any such be found in the tracts aforesaid, but this exclusion and exception according to the terms of the statute shall not be construed to include coal and iron lands."

Judgment was entered in favor of plaintiff, declaring him to be the owner and entitled to the possession of the mining ground in question against every one, except the government of the United States; that defendants had no right or title to any part thereof, and enjoined them from trespassing upon the property. Defendants moved for a new trial, which being denied, this appeal is taken solely from the denial of said order.

The judge of the superior court of Trinity county, Hon. J. W. Bartlett, before whom this cause was tried, in ordering judgment for plaintiff filed a written opinion in which he set forth so clearly the questions involved in the suit, with accurate declarations of law bearing on them, that we quote from it extensively.

After referring to the facts, as we have recited them above, including the terms of the patent to the railroad company and the exceptions contained therein, the opinion of said superior judge proceeds:

"What, if any, is the effect of the exception and reservation above set forth in said patent is determinative of the issues involved in this case. Plaintiff's claim is that by virtue of this exception and reservation no title passed by the patent to that portion of the 'Five Pines mine' which lies within that portion of said section 29 of township 35 north, range 7 west, M. D. M., to which defendants allege title. Defendants claim that plaintiff is debarred from making this claim by reason of the provisions of the act of Congress of March 2, 1896 [chapter 39, 29 Stat. 42 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1603)], which prohibits the bringing of actions by the United States to annul patents theretofore erroneously issued under railroad or wagon road grants, after five years from the time of the passage of said act of Congress; that this action is an unauthorized attack upon a United States patent, and that if plaintiff was ever in a position to question the validity of the passing under said patent of the title to said section 29 he has lost his rights by not bringing his action within five years from the time the patent was issued. Defendants also claim that the excepting clause is inserted in the patent without any authority of law, and is void and of no effect.

"These questions are of momentous importance, for on their proper solution depends the validity of titles of locators on much of the mineral lands in the mining districts of Trinity county and in other of the mining counties of the state of California. While a great number of authorities on questions relating to the scope and effect of patents issued by authorized officers of the government of the United States were cited in the argument of counsel at the trial of this action, none have been presented, and after much research this court has not as yet found any decision of United States Supreme Court, federal court, or state Supreme Court, clearly or directly determining the questions urged by defendants, and in this action it is compelled to solve those matters largely through a construction and application of the United States statutes governing the transfers of public lands and those governing the locating and holding of mining claims situate on the public domain.

"From its inception it has been the policy of the United States government to retain the mineral lands of the United States for mining purposes, and not to allow title to them to pass to pre-emptors, homesteaders, timber applicants, grantees under wagon road or railroad grants, or in any case, save where patents were secured in pursuance of the provisions permitting the purchase directly of mineral lands. This is evidenced by all the statutes of the United States relating in any way to the disposal of public lands, by the requirements in final proofs when made by claimants for any variety of land, and by various resolutions of the Congress of the United States, declaring that mineral lands were not intended to be granted under the guise of grants in aid of the construction of wagon roads and railways. In the recitals of the patent involved in the case at bar, it is specified that the act under which the patent is issued does not pass mineral lands, and the exception and reservation in question indicate that the officers authorized to make disposition of the lands by patent were desirous of preserving for the people of the United States any mineral lands that might be found in the large portion of the public domain which was being given for all time into the hands of a private corporation.

"By the mining statutes of the United States passed in 1866 [Act July 26, 1866, c. 262, 14 Stat. 251], the right of entering upon and locating and appropriating lands valuable for their mineral deposits was conferred upon every citizen of the United States, and those who might declare their intention to become such citizens. By the discovery of mineral and marking of boundaries and compliance with such rules as local mining districts or state Legislatures might enact, not to conflict with the United States laws, the locator of a quartz mining claim was given the exclusive right to the possession of the lands and the mineral therein contained within the boundaries of his claim. Only one condition was imposed upon him, and that was in every calendar year he must perform in work and labor and improvements upon his mine at least $100 in value. If he did not do this, he was liable to lose his mine, in the event some other qualified locator made a location of the claim before the original locator had resumed work. His claim did not become forfeited to the government because of failure to do the work, as he could resume operations and rely upon his original title by location at any time before another had located. Under these mere locations, much of the valuable mining lands of the United States have been held and worked, and are still held and worked, and the title kept alive by the required work in each year has always been regarded as a perfectly safe and secure title. No provision has ever been enacted compelling any miner to patent his claim, and time and again these locations have been held to have all the effect and incidents of a grant from the government. As said by the Supreme Court of the United States in Forbes v. Gracey, 94 U. S. 767 [24 L. Ed. 313]:

[1] "Mining claims on public land are property in the fullest sense of the word." In the case of Gwillim v. Donnellan, 115 U. S. 49 [5 Sup. Ct. 1112 (29 L. Ed. 348)], the same court holds: 'A valid location of mineral lands, made and kept up in accordance with statute, has the effect of a grant by the United States of the right of present and exclusive possession of the lands located.'

[2] "Mineral lands situated within the limits of railroad grants are subject to location up to the time of the issuance of the patent, clearly determined in the great case of Barden v. N. P. R. R. Company, 154 U. S. 288 [14 Sup. Ct. 1030, 38 L. Ed. 992] by the Supreme Court of the United States, and this court is the final arbiter of all the questions arising in cases like the one before this court, and this decision alone precludes this court from finding that plaintiff's grantor, was not entitled to this land when the patent under discussion was executed to the Central Pacific Railroad Company.

[3] "The argument of defendants that plaintiff is debarred from the relief he seeks because of the provisions of the act of Congress of March 2, 1896, is wholly without merit. Plaintiff is not seeking in this action to annul or avoid a patent issued by the government of the United States. The effect of granting the relief he asks does not in any way invalidate the patent in question. It is an interpretation of the instrument that will be brought about by the judgment in this action, which will determine what, if any, lands in section 29 of township 35 north of range 7 west, M. D. M., are included in the reserving clause of the patent. It is safe to presume that when the President of the United States was about to sign the patent, if it had been called to his attention that there was on said section 29 a quartz claim which has been duly located, which was being worked, which had defined bounds, or could be identified and defined, that he would have refused to sign the patent until these lands had been expressly excepted. But to except such lands it was not necessary for him to know that an actual location had been made. That could be an actual fact, as in this instance it was, without the knowledge reaching the land department or the President prior to the issuance of the patent. By virtue of such location, and because of the mining statutes, and by reason of the interpretation made by the Supreme Court of the United States as to the effect of such location, the lands embraced in the location had passed into the possession and control of the locator; his location had as effectually given him a right to the possession of the located claim, as if it had been granted to him by the government of the United States.

[4] "The moment the locator discovered a valuable mineral deposit on the lands and perfected his location in accordance with law, the power of the United States government to deprive him of the exclusive right to the possession and enjoyment of the located claim was gone; the lands had become known mineral lands, and they were exempted from lands that could be granted to any railroad company. On August 25, 1895, a lode had been found to exist on the section in controversy in this action, mineral lands had been found in one of the tracts mentioned in the patent, and by force of the reserving clause therein these lands never passed from the government by reason of the patent.

"The case of Noyes v. Mantle, 127 U. S. 348, 8 Sup. Ct. 1132, 32 L. Ed. 168, is most convincing that such is the construction that should be placed on the reservation in the patent. In this case the Supreme Court of the United States says: 'Where a location of a vein or lode has been made under the law, and its boundaries have been specifically marked on the surface so as to be readily traced, and notice of the location is recorded in the usual books of record within the district, we think it may safely be said that the vein or lode is known to exist, although personal knowledge of the fact may not be possessed by the applicant for a patent of a placer claim. The information which the law requires the locator to give to the public must be deemed sufficient to acquaint the applicant with the existence of the vein or lode. A copy of the patent is not in the record, so we cannot speak positively as to its contents; but it will be presumed to contain reservations of all veins or lodes known to exist pursuant to the statute. At any rate, as already stated, it could not convey property which had already passed to others. A patent of the United States cannot, any more than a deed of an individual, transfer what the grantor does not possess.'

[5] "Plaintiff's predecessor in interest having duly located the Five Pines mine, before the issuance of the patent here in question, that portion of said mine which lies within the west half of the northwest quarter of section 29 of township 35 north of range 7 west, M. D. M., must be held to be not included in the lands conveyed by the patent to the Central Pacific Railroad Company because of the reservation contained in the granting clause of the patent, and judgment in this action should be in favor of the plaintiff, as prayed for in his complaint."

The affirmance of this appeal might be rested upon the legal principles announced in this opinion of the trial judge and further consideration of the matter made unnecessary, if it were not that some points and authorities cited by appellant here are to be noticed, as well as some decisions, other than those referred to by the trial judge, to be cited.

The principal claim of the appellants is that the patent of the government to the railroad company was conclusive of the fact that the land was such as was patentable under the grant; that, as land which was mineral in character (save coal and iron lands) could not be granted, the issuance of the patent, accompanied by the presumption that the land department had done its duty, conclusively established that the lands as described in the patent were nonmineral in character, and the exception and reservation of mineral land contained therein amounted to nothing.

As a general proposition, and as applied to the disposition of its public lands by the government of the United States, the rule contended for by appellants is undoubtedly true. The land department is vested with special power to determine the claims of different persons to public lands it is authorized to dispose of. The duty is cast upon it to determine the character of the public lands, as to whether it is mineral land reserved under the provisions of the general law from sale, or agricultural or other land of which it may make disposition. The determination of this question of the character of the land being given to the land department, the general rule is that the issuance of a patent is a conclusive determination that the land is agricultural, or such other character as might be disposed of under the general law providing for the disposition of public lands, and not mineral land reserved from sale, and the effect of the issuance of a patent to the land as agricultural land is to transfer to the patentee all mineral deposits which may be subsequently discovered within its boundaries, but which were not known to exist at the time the patent was issued. While this is the general rule as to vesting in the patentee of agricultural land the title to all mineral deposits, the existence of which were unknown when the patent was issued, the rule is equally established that mineral deposits known to exist in the land at the time the patent was issued do not pass under it. In this state this was held to be the rule in cases involving patents issued to railroad companies under the same general act of Congress making such grants, and which explicitly excluded and excepted from the operation thereof grants of mineral lands, and with similar express exclusion and exception in a patent as to mineral land, should any be found in the premises granted.

The first case (McLaughlin v. Powell, 50 Cal. 64) was ejectionment; plaintiff deraining title under a patent of the United States to the Western Pacific Railroad Company of California, issued in 1870. This patent, as does the one here, excluded and excepted mineral land, should any be found to exist on the tracts described in the patent. Defendant offered to prove that a portion of the land described in the patent and of which plaintiff sought to recover possession was mineral land, and that he had held it as a mining claim since 1866. The trial court refused to permit him to do so, and the court, reversing the cause for this refusal, said: "The exception contained in the patent introduced by the plaintiff is part of the description, and is equivalent to an exception of all the subdivisions of the land mentioned which were 'mineral' lands. In other words, the patent grants all of the tracts named in it which are not mineral lands. If all are mineral lands, it may be that the exception is void; but the fact cannot be assumed, as by its terms the exception is limited to such as are mineral land, and does not necessarily extend to all the tracts granted. We think the defendant should have been allowed to prove that the demanded premises were mineral lands."

In Chicago Quartz M. Co. v. Oliver, 75 Cal. 194, 16 Pac. 780, 7 Am. St. Rep. 143, the action was brought by plaintiff to quiet its title to a quartz mining claim to which the defendant asserted title as successor in interest under a patent issued to the Central Pacific Railroad Company in 1870, and which patent contained a provision, as in the patent involved here, excepting and excluding all mineral land, should any be found in the patented premises. The trial court found that the Chicago Quartz Mining Company's quartz mine was valuable gold-bearing ing mineral land, and had been notoriously known and frequently worked as such ever since 1861, and thereupon made a decree in favor of plaintiff, quieting its title. On appeal here, the same point was made as is urged now that the patent was conclusive, and not subject to collateral attack. In affirming the judgment, this court discussed the acts of Congress under which these grants to the railroad company were made, and the duty of the land department relative to issuing patents thereunder. In connection therewith, it said: "In the original act (granting lands to railroads in aid of the construction of their roads) all mineral lands are expressly excepted from its operation, and in the amendatory act it is enacted that the grant shall not include mineral lands, or any lands returned and denominated as mineral lands. 'Whatever is included in the exception is excluded from the grant; and it therefore often becomes important to ascertain what is excepted, in order to determine what is granted.' Leavenworth, etc., R. R. Co. v. U. S., 92 U. S. 733 [23 L. Ed. 634]. It is not claimed that the officers on whom was devolved the duty of issuing the patents to the lands granted could add anything to the grant. But it is claimed that the patent is conclusive evidence that the grant included all the land covered by the patent. The Supreme Court of the United States has said: 'A patent may be collaterally impeached in any action, and its operation as a conveyance defeated, by showing that it had no jurisdiction to dispose of the lands; that is, the law did not provide for selling them, or that they had been reserved from sale or dedicated to special purposes, or had previously been transferred to others.' Smelting Co. v. Kemp, 104 U. S. 636 [26 L. Ed. 875]. This is quoted approvingly in the opinion of the court, delivered by Field, J., in Wright v. Roseberry, 121 U. S. 488 [7 Sup. Ct. 985, 30 L. Ed. 1039]." And following the rule announced in McLaughlin v. Powell, supra, it was held that such a patent only grants lands which are nonmineral in character; that the exception of mineral lands in the patent is part of the description and equivalent to an exception therefrom of all lands that were mineral, and that the Chicago Quartz Mining Company had a right to show that the land that it claimed was known mineral land at the time of and long prior to the issuance of the patent to the railroad company, and was land within the exception in the patent.

Aside from the cases in our court dealing particularly with patents under grants of Congress to railroad companies, the rule appears to be general that mineral deposits do not pass under a patent issued for land subject to disposal or sale where, at the time of the issuance of the patent, such mineral deposits are known to exist. Reynolds v. Iron Silver Min. Co., 115 U. S. 687, 6 Sup. Ct. 601, 29 L. Ed. 774; Davis' Adm'r v. Weib- bold, 139 U. S. 507, 11 Sup. Ct. 628, 35 L. Ed. 238; Kansas Min. & Mill. Co. v. Clay, 3 Ariz. 326, 29 Pac. 9; Loney v. Scott (Or.) 112 Pac. 173.

In Reynolds v. Iron Silver Min. Co., supra, a patent was granted for a placer mine within the boundaries of which, when the patent was issued, a quartz mine was known to exist. Speaking of the effect of the grant to the placer claim patentee under this circumstance, the court said: "He (the placer claim patentee) takes his surface land and his placer mine, and such lodes or veins of mineral matter within it as were unknown, but as to such as were known to exist he gets by that patent no right whatever. The title remaining in his grantor, the United States, to this vein, the existence of which was known, he has no interest in it as authorizes him to disturb any one else in the peaceable possession and mining of that vein. When it is once shown that the vein was known to exist at the time he acquired title to the placer, it is shown that he acquired no title or interest in that vein by his patent. Whether the defendant has title or is a mere trespasser, it is certain that he is in possession, and that it is a sufficient defense against one who has no title at all, nor ever had one." It was therefore held that no title to the quartz ledge passed to the placer claim patentee, but the title thereto remained in the United States government. In the case of Davis' Adm'r v. Weibbold, supra, it was likewise held that as to known mineral land no title passed to the patentee. And to the same effect are the other authorities referred to by us.

Certain California cases are cited by appellant under which they claim that the patent to the railroad company is conclusive against the attack of respondent. These are particularly: Gale v. Best, 78 Cal. 235, 20 Pac. 550, 12 Am. St. Rep. 44; Saunders v. La Purisima, etc., Co., 125 Cal. 159, 57 Pac. 656; Paterson v. Ogden, 141 Cal. 43, 74 Pac. 443, 99 Am. St. Rep. 31; and Jameson v. James, 155 Cal. 275, 100 Pac. 700. But an examination of these cases shows that the attack on the patent was made by junior claimants. As to such claimants, it is clear, as pointed out in those authorities, that the patent to the land as agricultural land is conclusive.

But the plaintiff here is not a junior claimant. He had made a valid mining location and initiated his title to his mining claim in the quarter section in question nearly six months before the issuance of the patent to the railroad company, and, as the law is that mineral deposits whose existence are known when the patent is issued do not pass under it, the patent was ineffectual to transfer any title to the appellants as to the mining claim of the respondent.

[6, 7] As to the right of the respondent to have his title quieted as against defendants, we have no doubt. Respondent was in possession of his mining claim under a valid location made prior to the issuance of the patent under which appellants claim, and was, therefore in privity with the United States. He is the equitable owner of the mining claim, and while the government holds the legal title it holds it in trust for him, to issue a patent therefor, if he should elect to obtain one upon his complying with the provisions of the law entitling him to such issuance. Under such circumstances, while respondent's title to the mining claim is only an equitable one, and though the legal title is in the government, he is entitled to have such equitable title quieted against appellants who, though they acquired no title whatever to the mining claim of respondent under the patent to the railroad, are nevertheless asserting title to it against respondent.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: HENSHAW, J.; MELVIN, J.

160 Cal. 72

BRENNER v. CITY OF LOS ANGELES.
(L. A. 2,519.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 2, 1911.)

1. TAXATION (§ 542*)—PAYMENT UNDER PROTEST—STATUTES.

Pol. Code, § 3819, provides that at any time after the assessment book has been received by the tax collector one who claims that the assessment is void, in whole or in part, may pay the same under protest, and payment shall not be regarded as voluntary, but such owner, within six months after payment, may bring an action against the county to recover the taxes, etc. Held, that such section was not limited to cases in which the taxpayer had vainly applied for relief before the assessor had closed his books, and before the board of equalization had adjourned, but authorized the recovery of taxes paid under protest on nontaxable property, without prior application to such officer or board.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. §§ 1003-1005; Dec. Dig. § 542.*]

2. TAXATION (§ 542*)—PAYMENT UNDER PROTEST—RECOVERY—STATUTES.

Pol. Code, § 3819, providing for the recovery of taxes paid under protest, does not furnish an exclusive remedy; section 3804 providing for the refunding of taxes illegally collected, authorizing the recovery of taxes assessed on property not subject to taxation, though paid without protest.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. §§ 1003-1005; Dec. Dig. § 542.*]

3. TAXATION (§ 535*)—TAXES ILLEGALLY COLLECTED—REFUNDMENT—STATUTES—"MAY."

Pol. Code, § 3804, provides that any taxes, penalties, and costs paid more than once, or erroneously or illegally collected, may, by order of the supervisors, be refunded. Held, that the duty to refund was mandatory; the word "may" being construed to mean "must," under the rule that, where persons or the public have an interest in having an act done by a public body, the word "may" is to be so construed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. §§ 991-995; Dec. Dig. § 535.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 5, pp. 4418-4447; vol. 8, p. 7719.]

4. TAXATION (§ 542*)—TAXES ILLEGALLY ASSESSED—PROPERTY NOT SUBJECT TO TAXATION—UNIVERSITY MORTGAGE.

Plaintiff owned property on which there was a large mortgage to the regents of the state university. The assessor in valuing the property for assessment did not deduct the amount of the mortgage, though it was not subject to assessment, and made no application to plaintiff for a statement of the value of such property. Plaintiff had no knowledge that the mortgage indebtedness was not deducted until after time to apply to the assessor and to the board of equalization had expired, when he sought relief without success, by petition to the city council, and then paid the taxes under protest and sued to recover the same. Held that, since the taxes, in so far as they were collected on the mortgage, were in effect a tax on the state's own property, which was exempt from taxation, plaintiff was entitled to recover such part of the amount paid as taxes under a double assessment due to mistake, authorized by Pol. Code, § 3804.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. §§ 1003-1005; Dec. Dig. § 542.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; George H. Hutton, Judge.

Action by Gustave Brenner against the City of Los Angeles. Judgment for plaintiff and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Leslie R. Hewitt, City Atty., Emmet H. Wilson, Chief Deputy, for appellant. Denis & Loewenthal, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. Plaintiff sued to recover certain taxes paid under protest to the city of Los Angeles. A general demurrer to his complaint was overruled, and defendant declining to answer, judgment by default was rendered in favor of the plaintiff. From said judgment, the city of Los Angeles prosecutes this appeal.

The complaint is drafted in two counts, both based on sections of an ordinance of the city of Los Angeles providing for the assessment and collection of city taxes, and the said ordinance is fully set forth in the complaint. The essential facts disclosed by the complaint are that on the 1st of March, 1906, plaintiff was the owner of certain real property in the city of Los Angeles upon which a recorded mortgage for $60,000 was held by the regents of the University of California. No part of this mortgage had been paid. The assessor in making his assessment for the year 1906 placed the valuation of the property of plaintiff at $82,000 and failed to deduct $60,000 for the mortgage, although he had done so in his assessment of the year before. The ordinance provided that the city might exact from each taxpayer a statement, under oath, setting forth under appropriate headings his various kinds of property, and the complaint contained an averment that no demand had been made upon plaintiff at any time by the city assessor of the city of Los Angeles for such declaration of his taxable possessions. There is also an allegation that not until May 28, 1907, did the plaintiff know that the assessor had failed to deduct $60,000 from the total assessable value of his land. Then follow averments that the taxes were paid under protest on June 23, 1907; that on the same day plaintiff filed with the city council of Los Angeles a petition asking for a return of the portion of the said taxes improperly assessed against him; that on December 27, 1907, he filed with said city council a duly verified claim for the return to him of said taxes so erroneously charged against him; and that the city council refused such repayment. The second count contains all matters set forth in the first one, and the additional allegation that the tax collector of the city of Los Angeles had erroneously and illegally collected from plaintiff the amount of taxes and penalties properly chargeable against the mortgage held by the regents of the University of California.

Appellant's attorneys rely upon the authority of Henne v. County of Los Angeles, 129 Cal. 297, 61 Pac. 1081, in which it was held that certain taxes paid under protest upon an assessment similar to the one here considered could not be recovered, because steps for their repayment had not been taken by the taxpayer within the time provided by law. In that case, as here, the mortgage was held by the regents of the University of California as mortgagees, and no part of it had been paid, yet the county assessor had placed a valuation upon the realty covered by the mortgage without reference to the security which, under the Constitution (article 13, § 4), was to be assessed to the owner thereof. The assessment was made March 1, 1898. On July 23, 1898, plaintiff, Henne, demanded that the assessor correct the assessment by deducting the amount of the mortgage. The assessor refused to comply with this demand. On November 23, 1898, plaintiff filed a verified petition, asking the board of supervisors to refund the portion of the taxes which had been levied on the mortgage, and, this petition having been subsequently denied, the plaintiff paid the full amount of the taxes under protest. The reasoning of the court in that case in upholding the action of the assessor and the board of supervisors was based upon the fact that the taxpayer made application to the former for relief after the assessor's books had been closed and a statement of his year's work had been transmitted to the state board of equalization, and that the board of supervisors had fully performed their duty of equalization according to the statute and had sent the completed assessment to the auditor before they were asked to refund the excessive amount paid for taxes. Assuming that the taxpayer had full notice of the assessor's alleged mistake (and there was nothing in the pleadings to the contrary), the court held that he had failed to avail himself seasonably of the remedies provided by law. The last sentence of the opinion indicates the rationale of the decision. It is as follows: "It was the fault of the plaintiff himself in this case that he did not obtain relief by one or the other of the modes indicated, inasmuch as his application was too late in both cases."

Respondent's counsel point out several differences between the case of Henne v. County of Los Angeles, supra, and the case at bar. In the former case, as the opinion indicated, there was insufficient allegation with reference to the overvaluation of plaintiff's interest by the assessor. The court said: "The value of the property, aside from the assessment, is not stated in the complaint, and for aught that appears the assessment may have been for the value of such property over the amount of the mortgage." In the case before us, there was not only the averment in the complaint that the assessor failed to deduct the amount of the mortgage, but there was the statement, also, that $82,000 was the full value of the property at the date of the assessment. Another difference between this and the Henne Case is that in the latter it did not appear whether or not the assessor demanded a statement from the taxpayer; while in the case at bar there was an allegation that no statement had ever been required of plaintiff. In the Henne Case the court said: "There is no averment in the complaint that the assessor failed to make a demand on the plaintiff as a taxpayer for a statement of his property as required by law, nor is there any averment that the plaintiff as a taxpayer made and delivered to the said assessor a statement under oath." In the Henne Case it affirmatively appears that the plaintiff therein, after his demand on the assessor on July 23, 1898, waited until November 3d before seeking aid from the supervisors, and that therefore there was probably time, after the discovery of the assessment of the property to himself without deduction for the mortgage, in which he might have brought his grievance before the board of supervisors sitting as a board of equalization. Here it appears that Brenner had no notice of the assessor's error until long after the possibility of seeking relief from the board of equalization had passed. In the absence of any request for a statement of his taxable property, he had the right to assume that the assessor had properly performed official duty and had deducted the value of the recorded mortgage from the assessed valuation of plaintiff's property. Another marked difference between the two cases is that in Henne v. County of Los Angeles the court treated the application as one made under the provisions of section 3819 of the Political Code, and, even if we should regard that case as authority against the plaintiff's claim as set forth in his first count in the case now before us, we would still have to examine the second count, which is based upon section 63 of the ordinance attached to the complaint.

But we are of the opinion that, in so far as Henne v. County of Los Angeles places in the same category the mere overvaluation of property in an assessment thereof, and the inclusion in such an assessment of property not taxable at all, that case should be overruled. The case was properly decided, because the record failed to show that the property was not assessed for its value "over the amount of the mortgage"; but we think it is time to renounce the doctrine that money paid under protest for taxes on property not liable to assessment cannot be recovered, unless application is made for correction of the assessor's error before the period of equalization fixed by law has passed.

We think that perhaps the court in the Henne Case adopted some language from the opinion of the Supreme Court of Massachusetts without a sufficient examination of the law of that state. The case was Osborn v. Inhabitants of Danvers, 6 Pick. (Mass.) 98. Plaintiff had properly submitted to the assessors a list of his possessions, but before acting, the assessors added items of property situated in another state. The court declined to decide the question as to the validity of the taxes, but decided against the plaintiff strictly in accordance with the peculiar statute of Massachusetts. This language is used in the opinion: "The remedy, and the only remedy, for an overvaluation and assessment is under the statute of 1785, c. 50, § 10, by which it is provided that, whenever any person shall be aggrieved by being overrated in the assessment of any tax, he may apply to the assessors to make a reasonable abatement; and, if they refuse so to do, complaint is to be made, in nature of an appeal, to the court of general sessions of the peace, who are authorized to relieve him. This is an adequate and convenient remedy; but great mischiefs would follow, if we were to hold that an excess of valuation would render an assessment illegal and void. And it is immaterial whether the excess is caused by including in the valuation property of which the person taxed is not the owner, or that for which he is not liable to be taxed. In both cases the remedy is the same. As the plaintiff was liable to taxation for his personal property, the assessment was valid, although he was assessed for more than his due proportion. His only remedy is by application for an abatement; for when a new right is created by statute, which at the same time provides a remedy for any infringement of it, that remedy must be pursued."

[1] The latter part of the quotation, beginning with the words "but great mischiefs," was adopted in the Henne Case, but the language preceding it shows that the real basis of the decision was the exclusive remedy furnished by the statute there considered. Osborn failed to invoke the only remedy given him by law within the time strictly limited in that enactment; while in the case at bar, and in the Henne Case, suit was brought in the tribunal having jurisdiction, and under the very terms of the statute (section 3819, Pol. Code). That section is not limited, in its application, either by its language or by other statutes, to cases in which the taxpayer wishing to avail himself of it has vainly applied for relief before the assessor has closed his books, and before the board of equalization has adjourned. That part of the opinion in Henne v. County of Los Angeles, supra, which seeks to limit a taxpayer in a case like this to the remedies open to him before the assessment has become final by the closing of the assessor's books and by the termination of the period of equalization is overruled.

[2] Returning now to a consideration of section 63 of the ordinance of Los Angeles, we find that this section, which is analogous to section 3804 of the Political Code, provides for the return of taxes "erroneously or illegally collected" upon a verified claim filed within six months after the payment of said taxes. In Stewart Law & Collection Co. v. County of Alameda, 142 Cal. 660, 76 Pac. 481, it was held that section 3819 of the Political Code did not furnish an exclusive remedy, and that section 3804 might be invoked, even when the taxes were paid without protest. See, also, Lauman v. County of Des Moines, 29 Iowa, 310. The proper application of section 3804 of the Political Code was discussed in Pacific Coast Company v. Wells, 134 Cal. 471, 66 Pac. 657. In that case the problem under consideration was the attempted repayment by the city and county of San Francisco of taxes upon $100,000 erroneously levied by reason of a clerical error of plaintiff's bookkeeper, which was followed by the assessor. Although the taxes had been voluntarily paid, the board of supervisors, upon presentation of the facts, ordered the restoration of the sum charged against the taxpayer by reason of the erroneous assessment. The auditor refusing to allow the claim thus authorized by the supervisors, this court held that a writ of mandate should issue to compel his obedience to the resolution of the board directing such repayment. This language, which is very pertinent to the problem presented by the case at bar, is used in the opinion: "Petitioner has paid all its just taxes, and this sum in addition. No doubt, if the assessor had called the attention of petitioner to the statement it had given in, the footings would never have been changed. It was a clerical error that could easily have been explained. When the attention of the assessor was called to it, he recommended that the mistake be corrected. The board of supervisors, representing the county, after investigation, made an order to correct it. Shall the city and county keep the $1,625, regardless of all this? It surely would be in violation of honesty and fair dealing for them to do so. Is it in violation of law for them to refund it? We think not. The board were authorized to order the money refunded, under section 3804 of the Political Code, which provides: 'Any taxes, penalties, and costs paid more than once, or erroneously or illegally collected, may, by the order of the board of supervisors, be refunded by the county treasurer.' This being a remedial statute, it should be liberally construed, so as to carry out its intent and object." It is worthy of note that the opinion in Pacific Coast Company v. Wells is signed by Mr. Justice Van Dyke, the author of the opinion in Henne v. Los Angeles County, and by Mr. Justice Harrison, who concurred in that opinion.

In Hayes v. County of Los Angeles, 99 Cal. 74, 33 Pac. 766, the plaintiff was seeking to recover the amount of money paid upon a delinquent sale of property which had been doubly assessed, the taxes having been paid by the real owner, and the delinquent sale having followed the supposed default of the person to whom the property had been mistakenly assessed. In that case section 3804 of the Political Code is thus expounded: "Section 3804 was enacted to do justice in a class of cases where, but for its provisions, the application of the doctrine of caveat emptor would work a hardship to citizens who had paid money which it was inequitable for the county to retain. I am of the opinion that the doctrine of caveat emptor has no proper application to that class of cases in which the attempted sale of real property for taxes is absolutely void by reason of the tax having been previously paid. This view is sustained by a large number of the late authorities, but for present purposes the question is not of moment; the inquiry being directed to plaintiff's right of recovery under the statute.

[3] "It is urged by respondent that the Code, by providing that the board of supervisors may by order provide for refunding taxes, etc., paid more than once, made it optional with that body whether to do so or not, and that the board in this instance, having refused to refund, its action is conclusive upon the plaintiff. Where the public interest or private right requires that the thing should be done, then the word 'may' is generally construed to mean the same as 'shall.' People v. Supervisors, 68 N. Y. 119. Where the statute directs the doing of a thing for the sake of justice or the public good, the word 'may' is the same as the word 'shall.' Rex v. Barlow, 2 Salk. 609. Where a statute directs a thing to be done for justice's sake, 'may' means 'shall.' Silvey v. United States, 7 Ct. Cl. 334. Where persons or the public have an interest in having the act done by a public body, 'may' in such a statute means 'must.' Phelps v. Hawley, 52 N. Y. 27; People v. Supervisors, 51 N. Y. 401. See Estate of Ballentine, 45 Cal. 696." See, also, Palomares Land Co. v. County of Los Angeles, 146 Cal. 537, 80 Pac. 931.

[4] It seems to us that taxes erroneously collected upon the state's own property which is exempt from taxation fall very properly and logically into the category of those paid because of a double assessment, due to the mistake of a public servant. Ever since 1888, when the case of People ex rel. Attorney General v. Board of Supervisors of City and County of San Francisco, 77 Cal. 136, 19 Pac. 257, was decided, it has been the settled law that a mortgagor is entitled, upon proper application, to a return of taxes paid, in cases where the assessor has failed to notice a mortgage held by the state. In that case the court said: "But the state should not expect to collect taxes on her own property; much less should she expect somebody else to pay them."

By the judgment of the superior court herein, the city of Los Angeles lost not a cent of taxes rightfully due upon plaintiff's property, while upon the opposite conclusion plaintiff would be mulcted, not for taxes due from some one else which, through error or carelessness, he had paid, but for a charge upon property free from any legitimate assessment by the city at all. In our opinion the plaintiff was entitled to recover the amount found by the court to be due.

The judgment is therefore affirmed.

We concur: SLOSS, J.; SHAW, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.; LORIGAN, J.; HENSHAW, J.

160 Cal. 43

PETERS v. SOUTHERN PAC. CO.

(Sac. 1,802.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 1, 1911.
Rehearing Denied July 1, 1911.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1061*)—HARMLESS ERROR—REFUSAL OF NONSUIT.

Refusal of a nonsuit is harmless error, if upon conclusion of the whole case the evidence warrants submission to the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4210; Dec. Dig. § 1061.*]

2. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 198*)—FELLOW SERVANTS—RAILROAD EMPLOYEES.

The engineer of a passenger train and the brakeman of a construction train were fellow servants, as affecting the liability of their employer for death of the engineer, whose engine ran into a switch left open by the brakeman and collided with the construction train.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 493-514; Dec. Dig. § 198.*]

3. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 170*)—RAILROADS—EMPLOYEES—SELECTION.

The ordinary care which railroad companies must use in selecting their employees, as affecting liability for death caused by negligence of a coemployee, is measured by the perils to be encountered by employees and the consequences reasonably to be expected to follow engagement of an incompetent or unskillful servant.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 336; Dec. Dig. § 170.*]

4. MASTER AND SERVANT (§§ 276, 279*)—RAILROADS—DEATH OF LOCOMOTIVE ENGINEER—NEGLIGENCE—EVIDENCE.

In an action for the death of a locomotive engineer whose engine ran into an open switch, evidence held to sustain findings that the accident was proximately caused by incompetency of the brakeman of a construction train, who left the switch open, and that the company was negligent in ascertaining his qualifications and in failing to instruct him concerning his duties.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 970, 973; Dec. Dig. §§ 276, 279.*]

5. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 164*)—RAILROADS—BRAKEMEN—EMPLOYMENT—COMPANY'S DUTY.

A railroad company is not only bound to devise a proper method under which its student brakemen may be properly instructed, and whereby their competency can be determined, but must see that those who are charged with duty in the matter perform it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 331; Dec. Dig. § 164.*]

6. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 271*)—RAILROADS—COMPETENCY OF EMPLOYÉES.

That a railroad employé is ignorant of important rules governing discharge of hazardous duties assigned to him is evidence of his incompetency.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 928; Dec. Dig. § 271.*]

7. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 287*)—RAILROADS—COMPETENCY OF EMPLOYÉ.

Whether an employer has taken reasonable precautions to instruct a prospective employé in the proper discharge of the duties of a position he desires to fill, or whether reasonable investigation into his qualifications has been made before assigning him to duty, are peculiarly matters to be determined by the jury from all the circumstances disclosed by the evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 1051-1067; Dec. Dig. § 287.*]

8. EVIDENCE (§ 514*)—EXPERT TESTIMONY—SUBJECTS—RAILROADS—BRAKEMEN—COMPETENCY OF BRAKEMAN.

On an issue of competency of a brakeman through whose act in leaving a switch open plaintiff's decedent was killed, old and experienced brakemen and switchmen were properly permitted to testify as to what experience is required to qualify them for their occupations.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 2319-2323; Dec. Dig. § 514.*]

9. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 271*)—RAILROADS—BRAKEMEN—COMPETENCY—EVIDENCE.

On an issue of the competency of a brakeman through whose negligence plaintiff's decedent was killed, testimony showing that the place where the accident occurred was a particularly difficult place to switch in was properly admitted; the issue not being determined by considering the average place or the whole road.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 928-931; Dec. Dig. § 271.*]

10. DEATH (§ 57*)—DAMAGES—ISSUES—EVIDENCE.

In an action for negligent death, evidence of decedent's average rate of wages at the time of his death was properly admitted under an allegation of general damages.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Death, Cent. Dig. § 74; Dec. Dig. § 57.*]

11. DEATH (§§ 57, 86*)—DAMAGES—MEASURE—ISSUES—EVIDENCE.

The pecuniary loss which the wife and children suffered by being deprived of the benefit of what the husband would have probably earned and accumulated during the residue of his life, had he not been killed, is damage sustained as a natural and ordinary effect of his death, and is one of the elements of damage which may be proven under a general allegation of damages.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Death, Cent. Dig. §§ 74, 112; Dec. Dig. §§ 57, 86.*]

12. DEATH (§ 86*)—DAMAGES—RIGHTS OF SURVIVING CHILDREN.

In an action for negligent death, brought for the benefit of the widow and children, it was proper to instruct that the pecuniary interest of children in the lives of their parents does not necessarily end at majority.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Death, Cent. Dig. § 112; Dec. Dig. § 86.*]

13. TRIAL (§ 295*)—INSTRUCTIONS—CONSIDERING AS A WHOLE.

In determining whether error appears in instructions, they must be considered as a whole.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 703-717; Dec. Dig. § 295.*]

14. DEATH (§§ 85, 95*)—DAMAGES—ELEMENTS.

A successful plaintiff in an action for wrongful death is entitled to recover for the pecuniary loss sustained, and in determining the amount thereof the jury are entitled to consider the loss which the wife and children have sustained through loss of decedent's society, support, comfort, and protection.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Death, Cent. Dig. §§ 111, 112, 116; Dec. Dig. §§ 85, 95.*]

15. DEATH (§ 104*)—INSTRUCTIONS—DAMAGES.

In an action for negligent death, an instruction that the children might recover for probable loss of any benefit of a pecuniary value they would probably have received after reaching their majority; that damages were not limited to the actual pecuniary damage sustained by the widow through loss of decedent's services; that damages must be confined to the pecuniary loss suffered, including the comfort, society, support, and protection of decedent; and that grief, mental suffering, and sorrow could not be compensated—was not erroneous, as giving the jury unrestrained latitude.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Death, Cent. Dig. §§ 142-148; Dec. Dig. § 104.*]

16. DEATH (§ 99*)—DAMAGES—EXCESSIVENESS.

Thirty thousand dollars is not excessive recovery for negligent death of a locomotive engineer, in a suit for the benefit of his widow and two minor children.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Death, Cent. Dig. §§ 125-130; Dec. Dig. § 99.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Solano County; L. G. Harrier, Judge.

Action by Julia L. Peters, Herman L. Peters' administratrix, against the Southern Pacific Company. From an order denying a new trial on judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Frank McGowan and McGowan, Squires & Westlake (William F. Herrin and P. F. Dunne, of counsel), for appellant. William J. Herrin and C. H. Garoutte, for respondent.

LORIGAN, J. Plaintiff, the surviving widow of Herman L. Peters, deceased, brought this action under the statute, as administratrix of his estate, to recover damages sustained by her and the two minor children of deceased through the death of the latter, alleged to have been occasioned through the negligence of defendant.

Herman L. Peters was the engineer on a passenger train of defendant known as the Oregon Express which, on its route, passed through the town of Suisun, in Solano county. On December 31, 1904, this train being late, and having the right of way in passing through said town, ran into an open switch on the main line of defendant, colliding with a construction train on a side track, with the result that the engine and a portion of the passenger train were demolished and said engineer, Peters, instantly killed.

The complaint alleged that the accident resulting in the death of Peters was occasioned through the main line switch being left open by one Leo J. Sheridan, head brakeman on the construction train with which the passenger train collided, and as a basis of her right to recover it was alleged that at the time of the accident the said Sheridan was inexperienced as a brakeman, unfamiliar with switching, and incompetent to discharge the duties thereof assigned him; that before employing said Sheridan the defendant did not exercise ordinary care in instructing him how to perform the work of brakeman and switchman, and did not use ordinary care and prudence in selecting him to perform that work to which he was assigned.

The jury returned a general verdict in favor of plaintiff for $30,000.

Interrogatories, in the nature of a special verdict, were propounded to the jury, and in answer thereto they found that Sheridan left the main switch open after the construction train had backed into the side track; that when employed by defendant Sheridan was a man of ordinary intelligence, but that he had not received the usual course of instruction by defendant as to his duties as brakeman before being employed by it as such; that he was not then a competent or experienced switchman or brakeman; that he had not sufficient training and experience to properly perform the duties of head brakeman in a place like Suisun; that he was not sufficiently conversant with the rules of the defendant to properly perform the duties of head brakeman at that place; and that defendant had not exercised ordinary care and prudence at the time it employed Sheridan to perform the duties of brakeman.

Judgment having been entered in favor of plaintiff upon the verdict, defendant moved for a new trial, which being denied, it takes this appeal from the denial of that order alone.

As grounds for reversal, it is insisted that the court erred in denying the motion of defendant for a nonsuit, and that, aside from this, the evidence on the whole case is insufficient to sustain the verdict. It is further claimed that the court erred in its rulings on the admission of evidence and in its instructions to the jury, and that the damages awarded were excessive.

[1] We shall not examine into the correctness of the ruling of the court in denying the motion for a nonsuit. After the order made, the defendant introduced evidence on its defense. It is well settled that an order denying a motion for a nonsuit will not be disturbed, although the evidence at the close of plaintiff's case was so weak that it might properly have been granted, if, upon the trial, the defect is overcome by evidence subsequently introduced. If, upon the conclusion of the whole case, there is evidence upon the material issues warranting the submission of the cause to the jury, the question of whether the court erred in denying a nonsuit becomes of no consequence. Lowe v. San Francisco Ry. Co., 154 Cal. 573-576, 98 Pac. 678, and cases therein cited. In fact, while the point is made here that the court erred in the ruling on the nonsuit, it is not particularly pressed, because the broader position is taken that the evidence, even treated as a whole, does not sustain the verdict in several essential respects.

The rule of law under which it was claimed that the defendant was liable for the death of Peters is found in section 1970 of our Civil Code, as it stood when the accident occurred, and which declared that: "An employer is not bound to indemnify his employé for losses suffered by the latter in consequence of the ordinary risks of the business in which he is employed, nor in consequence of the negligence of another person employed by the same employer in the same general business, unless the negligence causing the injury was committed in the performance of a duty the employer owes by law to the employé, or unless the employer has neglected to use ordinary care in the selection of the culpable employé."

[2] It must, of course, be conceded that Sheridan and the deceased were fellow servants, employed in the same general business of defendant in operating its railroad, and that, if the death of deceased was the result of simple negligence on the part of Sheridan in leaving the main switch open, being otherwise entirely competent to discharge the duties of a brakeman with reference to switching, no recovery could be had against the defendant. This being true, necessarily the plaintiff, in order to recover, was required to make out a case bringing it within the provision of the statute just quoted from, making defendant liable where "the employer has neglected to use ordinary care in the selection of the culpable employé" by whose act, in the discharge of the duties assigned him, the death of plaintiff's intestate resulted.

[3] It is so well settled as to need no particular discussion nor citation of authority that, while railroad companies are only bound to the exercise of ordinary care in the selection of their employés, this ordinary care to be exercised is to be measured by the perils to be encountered in the discharge of the duties of the employment, and the consequences which might reasonably be expected to follow where an incompetent or unskillful employé is engaged. The general rule in this respect is clearly stated in Still v. San Francisco, etc., Ry. Co., 154 Cal. 559, 567, 98 Pac. 672, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 322, 129 Am. St. Rep. 177, which involved, as here, the question as to the ordinary care to be exercised by a railroad in the selection of its employés. It is there said: "Under all the authorities, the term 'ordinary care,' as used in this connection, means that degree of care that a man of ordinary prudence would use in view of the nature of the employment and the consequences of the employment of an incompetent person—a degree of care commensurate with the nature and danger of the business and the grade of service for which the servant is intended, and the hazards to which other servants are to be exposed from the employment of a careless or incompetent person. Wood on Law of Master and Servant, §§ 417, 418. In accord with this rule, it is generally declared that, where the service in which the servant is employed is such as to endanger the lives and persons of co-employés if the servant is not competent, an employer is bound, in the exercise of ordinary care, upon the plainest principles of justice and good faith, to make a reasonable investigation into his character, skill, qualifications, and habits of life. See 1 Labatt on Master and Servant, § 194; Bailey's Personal Injuries, § 1407; Western Stone Co. v. Whalen, 151 Ill. 472, 38 N. E. 241, 42 Am. St. Rep. 244; Mann v. Delaware, etc., Co., 91 N. Y. 495. The question whether he has made such investigation as is reasonable under all the circumstances is peculiarly one for the jury."

[4] Under the allegations of her complaint, and to bring her right to recover within the rule of liability announced, the plaintiff undertook to prove that Sheridan, when employed by defendant, was in fact incompetent to act as a brakeman; that the accident causing the death of Peters was proximately caused by such incompetency; and that defendant, before assigning him to the discharge of the duties of brakeman and switchman, had failed to use proper diligence or care in instructing him as to his duties in such position, or to exercise ordinary care and diligence to ascertain his qualifications to discharge the duties of that position before assigning him to it. The jury found by its special and general verdict in favor of the claim of plaintiff in all these respects, and in every particular the claim of appellant is that such findings of fact are not supported by the evidence. On the contrary, appellant claims that the evidence affirmatively shows that the main line switch was not left open by Sheridan, nor was, in fact, open at the time the Oregon Express passed through it; that the evidence shows Sheridan to have been a competent and experienced brakeman; that the defendant took all reasonable care and precaution, not only to instruct Sheridan as to his duties as brakeman and switchman, but before accepting him as an employé had made special examination into his qualifications as such, with satisfactory results. The claims of appellant being thus stated, brings us to an examination of the evidence.

Sheridan, who was 20 years of age at the time of the accident, and known among his fellow employés as "Kid Sheridan," had never had any experience in railroading when he made application to the defendant as a student brakeman, which, as the term imports, was to learn the duties of the position which he desired to assume with the company. This application was made October 3, 1904, and he went into the employ of the defendant as such a student on November 21, 1904. The accident resulting in the death of Peters occurred on December 31, 1904. Sheridan was not then an accepted employé of the defendant, nor had he any regular employment with it, except as a student, until about a week before the accident. He was, however, put upon the pay roll of the company December 1, 1904, although he then did not work every day, being only employed as an extra man and when occasion required. About a week before the accident, he was put on as an extra man, as head brakeman on a construction train under the control of Conductor Brown, the crew of which, in railroad parlance, was known as the "Chain Gang." The term "head brakeman" does not indicate superiority in rank over any other brakeman, but was merely used to designate the one whose position was at the front of the train, as distinguished from the rear brakeman. On the morning of the accident, Sheridan was engaged in making up the construction train, consisting of some 32 cars loaded with dirt, and which were situated on various side tracks of the defendant at its depot in Suisun. To make up this train and hold it on one of the side lines known as the "fruit line," to await the passage of the Oregon Express, which was known to be due, and had the right of way, Sheridan, as was his duty, attended to the switching, which necessitated the opening of the main line switch and side line switches, in order to get the train on the fruit line. In order to get upon the side line track and make up the construction train in readiness to pass out after the Oregon Express had gone through,

Sheridan opened the main line switch, so as to allow the engine of the construction train to pass from the main track to the side lines. As the engine passed in from the main line, Sheridan jumped on it and proceeded through the side lines, opening up the necessary inside switches. The evidence warranted the jury in finding that he never returned to the main line switch after he had opened it and the engine had passed through it. After he had coupled up the various cars on the side lines and had made up the train and got it in readiness to proceed after the Oregon Express had passed, he left the train and went down to the depot, where he remained, with no particular object in view, for a short while and returned to the construction train, on the engine of which he, with the other employés, was seated, when the Oregon Express came down the line and passed through the open switch, with the resulting collision and death of Peters.

There was evidence showing that the railroad premises at Suisun were considered among railroad men as a very difficult place to switch in on account of the many main line trains coming in and going out, trains being due in the morning and afternoon, and branch tracks running in and out of the place; that the situation there was complicated, and there was not much time in going in and out on the main line; that on account of these conditions it required skillful, experienced, and alert men to meet them, and that, considering the training Sheridan was shown to have had as head brakeman up to the time of the accident, he was not sufficiently experienced to discharge the duties of head brakeman at a place like Suisun.

It was shown in evidence that one of the rules promulgated by the defendant pertaining to the duties of a brakeman in switching, and numbered 336, provided that: "At points where trains meet or pass, an employé attending the switch will, after locking it to the main track, take position on the opposite side of the track from the switch, stand and remain there until the expected train has passed." While the application of Sheridan to be permitted to go into the probationary employment of the defendant recited that he had received a copy of the rules, the fact is that defendant never furnished him with them. Nor does it appear that any one instructed him as to these rules or his duty under them in switching, or that he had ever possessed a copy of the book of rules, or had read them, or knew anything about this one relative to his duties in main line switching.

As to how far Sheridan had been instructed in his duties as brakeman, the experience he had, and the precautions which had been taken by defendant to determine his qualifications to act as such before assigning him to that position, various experienced conductors of the defendant, who had served as head brakemen before their advancement as conductors, together with one of the brakemen who worked on a train with Sheridan, and the examining agent of the defendant, were produced as witnesses. The student brakemen are placed in the charge and under the direction of conductors. Sheridan was originally placed with Conductor Brown, and served under him for 30 days prior to November 12, 1904, on a run between Oakland and Port Costa. This was his main, continuous student service. On November 14, 1904, he made one trip with Conductor Rumsey between Tracy and Oakland. On November 15, 1904, he made another trip with Conductor Miller of some eight or ten hours between Lathrop and Fresno. On November 16, 1904, he made a run with Conductor Phillips between Sacramento and Oakland. All of these conductors—Brown at the end of 30 days, and the others at the end of the respective runs on which Sheridan accompanied them—gave him certificates to the superintendent of the division of the defendant, setting forth the fact that Sheridan had been with them for the periods above indicated, and that either his work was very satisfactory, or seemed to be. Scott, a rear brakeman under Conductor Hughes, and the only brakeman called who had been upon any train on which Sheridan was a student, testified that during the 30 days of Sheridan's studentship he performed the duties which were assigned to him "very nicely." The testimony of this particular witness may be dismissed, however, with the statement that under his testimony it does not appear that he knew of any duty which was assigned to Sheridan, or that he ever saw him do anything. The duties of this witness were those of a rear brakeman; Sheridan was not under his supervision and did not work with him, but was with the other brakemen on the train, of whom there were several.

[5] As to the conductors. Under the system of the defendant, these conductors were required to take care and supervision of the student brakemen and to see that they were properly instructed in their duties; to observe their work and determine whether they displayed sufficient intelligence and became sufficiently skillful and proficient in the discharge of their duties to warrant a satisfactory report to the superintendent. Having devised this system for determining the capability and competency of men seeking employment in situations where the safety of employés in the operation of its road and of passengers upon its trains was imperiled, the responsibility for neglect upon the part of its conductors to take reasonable precautions and care to determine the qualifications of such prospective employés must be borne by the defendant. It was not only the duty of the railroad company to devise a proper method under which its student brakemen might be properly instructed in the duties of their position, and whereby, after such probationary period, it could be determined whether they were sufficiently competent to be intrusted with those duties, but the duty further devolved upon the railroad company to see that those who were charged with this duty performed it. When we examine the testimony of the conductors whose duty it was to supervise the work of Sheridan and to instruct him and observe how far he became proficient in their discharge before reporting to the superintendent in his favor, we find that, aside from their testifying that Sheridan appeared to be an intelligent young man, it does not appear that they ever saw Sheridan perform any of the duties of a brakeman.

Take the testimony of Conductor Hughes, under whose supervision Sheridan is supposed to have mainly acquired whatever knowledge of his duties he possessed at the time of the accident. This conductor testified that Sheridan appeared to be an intelligent young man, and as far as his testimony discloses, or that of any of the other conductors with whom he afterwards made short trips, this, aside from the fact that he was with them at the time and on the trips above referred to, is apparently all they knew about him. None of them appeared to have taken any interest in him or any supervision over him, except such as followed from his presence on their train with the other brakemen, and as far as any instructions in his duties are concerned, if any were given him (and even Sheridan himself does not say he was given any), they were received from the other brakemen on the train, none of whom, with the exception of Scott, testified in the case. None of these conductors appear to have ever given Sheridan any instructions or to have observed his work; none of them claim to have seen him perform any of the duties of a brakeman—head or rear—nor that they ever saw him at a switch, either opening or closing it, or assisting others in doing so, or that any switch work was done while Sheridan was under their supervision. Hughes gave Sheridan his certificate of competency, not on any knowledge that he himself had acquired of the capacity of Sheridan from an examination of him or observation of his work, but solely at the request of Scott, the rear brakeman above referred to, and simply on the assurance of the latter that he thought Sheridan was entitled to it.

As far as the testimony of Sheridan is concerned, it was only of a general character, to the effect that, while in the service of the defendant prior to being employed on the construction train, he assisted the brakemen in performing their duties. What the duties of a brakeman are does not appear from the evidence. They doubtless involve switching, but, for all the evidence discloses, may have required other duties in the operation of trains. However, it does not appear that prior to the day of the accident Sheridan ever turned or assisted in turning a switch. As far as the evidence shows, the morning of the accident was the only time he had done so. Conductor Brown, in whose charge the construction train was, and who had control over Sheridan, gave him no instruction whatever when he assigned him to the duty of head brakeman that morning, and in testifying to the capability of Sheridan while in his employ during the week preceding the day of the accident, testified that "in reference to his duties as brakeman he acted as an ordinary man with that amount—with what we would term a green man would act; nothing unusual in his actions."

The only other evidence in the case introduced for the purpose of supporting the claim of appellant that proper care had been exercised to determine the competency of Sheridan before his employment was that of J. H. Burnham, who, on November 21, 1904, was the examiner for the defendant, and who certified that on that date he had examined Sheridan, and that the latter "fully understood all of the rules required in his position of brakeman."

Having set forth the evidence brings us to a consideration of the particulars above set forth, in which it is contended by appellant that it is insufficient to sustain the verdict.

On the point that the evidence did not show that Sheridan left the main switch open, in addition to what we have set forth on that subject, Brown, who was conductor of the construction train on the morning of the accident and a witness for defendant, stated that some 15 minutes before the accident he looked up the track from the depot, a point some 800 or 1,000 feet from the main switch, and knew that the switch was closed from the fact that the red target or disc located at the switch, and which by its position would indicate whether the switch was open or closed, showed him it was closed. This was the basis for his statement, as he did not pretend to be able to state whether in fact the switch was open or closed, as when it is open its width is but about a quarter of an inch, and its actual condition unobservable by a witness at the distance he was from it. Littlejohn, the engineer of the construction train, also a witness for defendant, did not know who opened the main line or side line switches to make up the construction train on the side line; whether it was Sheridan or some other employé on the construction train. He testified, however, that Sheridan closed the main switch after they had gotten through with the switching on the side track. According to the testimony of this witness, while Sheridan closed the switch, there is no doubt that at the time the Oregon Express came along it was in fact open. This witness, with other employés was seated on the engine of the construction train waiting for the Express to arrive, and as it came along he looked ahead and saw that the main switch was open; that the Express was coming through, and called on the others who were with him, including Sheridan, to jump and save themselves from the collision, which was inevitable. On the other hand, Sheridan, the man charged with leaving the switch open, is not so certain after opening it whether he closed it or not. He testified in response to the inquiry, "Who opened those switches (referring to the main switches and side switches)?" "I think I did. I think I closed them. I am not sure about that. I don't know whether I closed them or the other brakeman closed them." Again, after stating that he knew it was his duty to line the switches up on the main track after the engine had passed through it, and that as far as he knew he did so, he testified that there was a possibility that he might have left the main switch open, and, on inquiry as to whether there was not a probability that he had failed to close it, answered: "Well, I don't know as to that, I don't know. It might have been, and it might not have been." In addition to this there was produced a written report, made to the defendant immediately after the accident, which stated that Sheridan had caused it.

Now the fact is that the main switch was open when the Oregon Express came along; that the only one who handled this switch was Sheridan; that after he opened it, and the construction engine was backed down upon the track, he left it open and never went back to it. It is not pretended that any one else, except Sheridan, was seen in the vicinity of the switch at any time after the construction engine passed through it, or that any one else had anything to do with opening or closing it. Under these circumstances, notwithstanding the testimony of other witnesses that they observed the switch closed, the jury were not bound to believe them. The express train could not have gotten through, except the switch was open. It would be idle to discuss the suggestion of appellant that the Oregon Express may have run into the switch, because the "locomotive may have jumped the track, or (on account of) many other contingencies which might be suggested." What these other contingencies might be is not suggested. One would be at a loss to conjecture what they might be, and the suggestion that the locomotive of the Express may have jumped the track is disposed of by the uncontradicted evidence that certainly at the time the Express entered the siding through the main switch that main switch was open. How it happened to get open, if Sheridan closed it, might be a question, but in view of the fact that it was undoubtedly open when the Express approached, that Sheridan was the only person who operated it, that he had opened it and was doubtful as to whether he had closed it or not, the jury were warranted in finding that he had in fact not closed it, and the accident was due to negligence on his part in that respect.

The jury being warranted in finding that Sheridan had failed to close the main line switch brings us to the next proposition advanced by appellant, namely, that, assuming the finding of the jury that Sheridan left the main switch open is supported by the evidence, still the evidence shows that Sheridan in fact knew what his duties were relative to the main line switching, and that his negligence respecting it was an act of mere personal negligence on his part, for which the defendant was not responsible.

It is no doubt true that where an employé has been for years engaged in the performance of duties and has theretofore performed them properly—in other words, where full knowledge of his duties is to be presumed from years of employment in their discharge—a single act of negligence on his part may be attributable to remissness in discharging known duties, rather than attributable to ignorance and incompetency respecting their proper performance. But no such situation was presented here. Sheridan had but recently gone into the employment of defendant, and the very question under consideration by the jury on this branch of the case was whether when accepted as an employé of defendant he had sufficient knowledge of the duties of a brakeman, derived from either instruction, experience, or familiarity with the rules of the company. It bore on the fact of incompetency, independent of any question whether the defendant had exercised ordinary care and prudence in ascertaining the qualifications of Sheridan. And the finding of the jury that Sheridan was in fact incompetent to properly discharge the duties of head brakeman and switchman at the time of the accident was fully warranted from the evidence alone, showing that he was entirely ignorant of the requirements of rule 336 of the defendant relative to his duties in main line switching, and which ignorance directly contributed to the accident. That rule expressly required, as we have quoted it above, that "at points where trains meet or pass, the employé attending the switch will, after locking it to the main track, take position on the opposite side of the track from the switch, stand and remain there until the expected train has passed."

The situation on the morning of the accident was exactly that which called for the knowledge by Sheridan of his duties as brakeman respecting it, so that such duty might be performed as the rule prescribed. The switching from the main track had been done for the purpose of making up the construction train, and, as made up, it was waiting under orders the arrival and passage of the Oregon Express, to allow it to pull out and proceed on its way on the main track. It is hardly open to discussion that this rule is one of the most important governing the conduct of employes respecting switching. The extreme peril to the lives of coemployes and to passengers upon trains occasioned through main track switching called for the greatest precaution upon the part of the railroad company, in order to prevent accidents through the negligent operation of such switches. The defendant recognized that danger and attempted, as far as possible, to prescribe a rule for switchmen which would prevent accident from open switches. Sheridan was entirely ignorant of this rule, in as far as it required him, even after he had locked the switch to the main track (which, of course, the jury found, and was warranted in finding, he did not do), to take a position on the opposite side of the track from the switch and remain there until the Oregon Express had passed. It may be conceded, as Sheridan testified, that he knew it was his duty to close the switch and lock it after the construction train had passed through, and it may be further conceded that a failure to do this alone would have been but an act of personal negligence—negligence committed by the employe with knowledge of how he should have properly discharged his duty. But the duty cast upon Sheridan under the rule required more than to close and lock the switch; it required him to take his post at the switch, even if he had in fact locked it. This was the explicit requirement of the rule, and its purpose is obvious. The company recognized that employes will be careless, and the rule was to provide as great precaution against such negligence as possible. Had Sheridan known of this rule and taken his position at the other side of the switch, as the rule required, it is hardly conceivable that the accident would have happened. If he had assumed the position which a knowledge of his duty would have required, he would undoubtedly have discovered that the switch was open long before the express approached, and the accident would have been averted.

[6] It goes without saying that an employe of a railroad company who is ignorant of important rules governing the discharge of hazardous duties assigned to him is an incompetent employe, and the jury upon this evidence alone, to which we have called immediate attention, was warranted in finding that Sheridan was so incompetent.

The jury being warranted under the evidence in finding that Sheridan was in fact incompetent to act as a head brakeman in switching, by reason of his ignorance of the essential rules prescribed by the defendant for the proper discharge of his duties as such, leaves little to be discussed upon the claim of appellant that the evidence shows that it had taken reasonable care and precaution to either instruct Sheridan as to his duties or to ascertain his skill and qualifications before assigning him to a performance of them.

[7] Whether an employer has taken reasonable precautions to instruct a prospective employe in the proper discharge of the duties of a position he desires to fill, or whether reasonable investigation into his qualifications has been preliminarily made before assigning him to duty, are peculiarly matters to be determined by a jury from all the circumstances disclosed by the evidence. We have already set forth all that was done by the defendant during the period when Sheridan was under the control of its conductors, serving out his probationary period as a student brakeman. We make no question about the soundness of the system devised by the defendant for making its contemplated employes practically familiar with the duties of the positions they desire to fill. It provides for actual work by the student brakemen in the operation of the road, under competent employes, who are capable of instructing them in the proper discharge of their duties, at the same time that it provides for a final examination, after the probationary period, by an examining officer of the defendant, whose duty it is to inquire into the qualifications of the applicant for acceptance into the service of defendant. When followed, this system of instruction and examination doubtless affords as efficient a method as might be devised for insuring the employment of those who are skillful and competent. Under the evidence here, however, the jury were warranted in finding that there was a theoretical, instead of a practical, application of the system, at least in the case of Sheridan. While he made some trips, which were supposed to give him practical instruction, by assisting in the work of brakeman, it does not appear definitely that he ever did anything, except to make the runs. It does not appear that he ever opened any switch, or assisted in doing so, on any trip he took, and none of the conductors issuing him certificates of competency ever saw him perform any of the duties of a brakeman. They issued the certificates in his favor, not because they were satisfied from any work they saw him do that he understood how to do it, but because they were told by some of their brakemen that he appeared to be all right. It does not appear that he was given any instruction by any one. He was not furnished with a book of rules; was never instructed as to any of the rules; never read them; and as to the important rule 336, defining his duties as switchman with reference to the main switch, under the situation of the trains presented on the morning of the accident, he had never been instructed as to it, or knew anything about it.

It is true that the jury in response to one of the special interrogatories submitted to them, found that Sheridan had passed "a satisfactory examination as to qualifications for the position as brakeman." This had reference to the examination which Sheridan took before the examining officer of the defendant, J. H. Burnham, on November 21, 1904. As to the extent of this examination, the only evidence offered respecting it was the certificate of Burnham, which recited that "I have examined J. L. Sheridan on the rules and regulations which took effect June 15, 1903, and I find that he understands all of the rules required in his position as brakeman."

In view of the general verdict of the jury and its special findings that Sheridan was not sufficiently conversant with the rules of the defendant to discharge the duties of switching brakeman, and that defendant had not exercised ordinary care and prudence at the time that it employed him to perform the duties as such brakeman, the finding as to a satisfactory examination cannot be taken as meaning anything more than that the examination that Burnham made was satisfactory to himself. But this is not the test to be applied. The examination or investigation on the part of the employer must be of such a reasonable affirmative character as will disclose, as a fact, whether the employé has such knowledge of his duties that he may safely be intrusted with employment.

Now, while the jury found that the examination by Burnham satisfied him that Sheridan possessed the necessary qualifications for the position of brakeman, the evidence warranted them, as the general verdict and the other special findings determined, that this examination did not measure up to that reasonable investigation and examination that the law requires. Burnham was trainmaster of the defendant. He did not remember Sheridan, or that he had examined him. He had never served in the capacity of a brakeman and his examination was made solely from the rules of the company—a theoretical examination. As the fact is that Sheridan never read the rules and knew nothing about the requirements of rule 336, the jury were well warranted in ignoring Burnham's certificate that Sheridan "understood all the rules required in his position as brakeman," and in concluding that any examination Burnham put Sheridan through was such an extremely limited and perfunctory one that it could not be characterized at all as a reasonable investigation, under which the capability of Sheridan could be or was determined, because, as he did not know rule 336, Burnham, if he had examined him respecting it, would have discovered his ignorance. This disposes of all of the points made by appellant on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence, and, as we find none of them well taken, we proceed to consider other points made for reversal.

[8] Complaint is made by appellant that the court erred in admitting testimony. Certain railroad men—old and experienced brakemen and switchmen—were permitted to testify as to what experience was required to fit a person as brakeman and switchman. We perceive no error in admitting this testimony. The management and operation of trains is a matter outside the experience and knowledge of ordinary jurors, and it is therefore a proper subject for expert testimony. Our Code (Code Civ. Proc. § 1870, subd. 9) provides for receiving the opinion of witnesses on questions of science, art, or trade, where the witness is skilled therein. The occupation of a railroad brakeman is a trade, and the preparation and experience necessary to make a person competent to discharge its duties is peculiarly within the knowledge of experienced railroad men, particularly those who have followed that occupation. While it is true that the jury was to pass upon the question whether Sheridan was competent to discharge the duties of a brakeman when employed by defendant, it could ordinarily have no knowledge of what preparation and experience was necessary to render a brakeman competent. Only experts—men skilled and experienced in the trade of brakeman—could clearly inform the jury as to the preparation and experience necessary to make one competent in the trade, and their opinion in that respect was admissible.

[9] Appellant likewise complains of the admission of testimony showing that Suisun was a particularly difficult place to switch in. We have set out the testimony in this matter above. The position of appellant is that in determining the competency of Sheridan the average place or the whole road could alone be taken into consideration. But we think not. While the defendant was required to engage only men of average competency, that competency was to be measured by the condition and character of the duties they were to perform, wherever they might be assigned on the road to do it, and, if the conditions at Suisun presented difficulties and complications in switching different from these occurring in other parts of the defendant's road, plaintiff had a right to show it, as the duty of defendant was to assign an employé to discharge the duties of switchman at Suisun who was competent to meet the conditions existing there.

[10, 11] Nor is there any merit in the claim that the court erred in admitting evidence to prove the average rate of wages which the deceased was receiving at the time of his death. There was, it is true, as appellant asserts, no allegation in the complaint as to the earning capacity of the deceased. The allegation was that by reason of the death of deceased plaintiff had suffered damages in the sum of $50,000. It was not necessary to specially aver the particular loss sustained to the wife and minor children of the deceased by being deprived of the benefit of his future wages through his death. This was not a matter for special pleading. Loss of the benefit of earnings which the deceased might have secured by his trade, and which would have gone to the benefit of his heirs or personal representatives—his wife and children here, for whose benefit this action was prosecuted under the statute—is one of the elements of damage which, with loss of comfort, society, and protection of which the family were deprived by his death, go to make up the whole damage proximately caused by his death, and for which recovery may be had. Civ. Code, § 3333. The pecuniary loss which the wife and children suffered by being deprived of the benefit of what the husband would have probably earned and accumulated during the residue of his life, had he not been killed, is damage sustained as a natural and ordinary effect of his death, and is one of the elements of damage which may be proven under a general allegation of damages. Bond v. Electric Railway Co., 113 Pac. 366. We are not cited to any authority by appellant sustaining its contention to the contrary, and have found none.

[12] Appellant questions the correctness of some of the instructions of the court, but we deem it necessary to examine in that respect but one claim. This is an attack on an instruction of the court as to the rule to be applied by the jury in assessing damages, should they find for plaintiff, and in this respect instruction 17 is particularly criticised. That instruction, as far as pertinent, reads as follows: "Pecuniary interest of children in the loss of their parents does not necessarily end with their arrival at the age of majority, but the jury may allow for the probable loss of any benefit, if any, of a pecuniary value, which a child would probably receive from its parent after arrival at majority. Such damages are not limited to the actual pecuniary damage sustained by the plaintiff by reason of loss of services of deceased. Damages must be confined to pecuniary loss suffered, including comfort, society, support, and protection of the deceased. * * * Grief, mental suffering, and sorrow cannot be awarded for."

The first point made is against that portion of the instruction just quoted contained in the sentence which declares that "the pecuniary interest of children in the lives of their parents does not necessarily end with their arrival at the age of majority," etc. Counsel concedes that this portion of the instruction, as far as it bears on the subject of pecuniary damage, is similar to one considered and sustained in Redfield v. Oakland C. S. Ry. Co., 110 Cal. 288, 42 Pac. 822, 1063, but questions the correctness of the rule as laid down in that decision. The accuracy of this rule has, however, come up for consideration several times since the Redfield Case was decided, and has been sustained. Valenti v. Sierra Ry. Co., 111 Pac. 97; Simoneau v. Pac. E. R. Co., 115 Pac. 320; Bond v. United Railroads, supra. So that it must now be considered as the settled law in this state on the subject.

[13] Particular exception is taken, however, by appellant to that portion of the instruction which reads: "Such damages are not limited to the actual pecuniary damage sustained by the plaintiff by reason of loss of services of deceased." It is claimed by appellant that under this instruction the jury are not limited to a consideration of pecuniary damage alone, but it permitted them, while considering one element constituting it, namely, loss of service, to determine for themselves what other elements might be taken into consideration, and thereby permitted an unrestrained latitude for the play of emotional influences on the part of the jury, even to the extent of assessing punitive damages against the defendant. Whatever criticism this particular sentence of the instruction may be subject to standing alone, it is the established rule in this state that it is not the fair test in considering whether the jury has been properly instructed in a given case to take into consideration excerpts from a particular instruction, or a single instruction, given in a cause. On the contrary, the rule is firmly established here that the correctness of instructions to a jury is not to be determined by taking particular portions of one instruction or another and considering it alone. All of the instructions which are given must be considered, taken as a whole, and if, when so examined, they lay down a correct rule for the ascertainment of damages, that is all that is required. When such consideration is given to the instructions here, in their entirety, it is quite apparent that the jury were properly instructed.

[14] It is too well settled in this state to be now open to question that in actions of this character the plaintiff is entitled to recover for all pecuniary loss sustained, and as elements in determining that pecuniary loss the jury are to take into consideration the loss which the wife and children have sustained through being deprived of the comfort, society, support, and protection of the deceased by the wrongful act of the defendant. Beeson v. Green M. G. M. Co., 57 Cal. 35; Redfield v. Oakland C. S. Ry. Co., 110 Cal. 277, 42 Pac. 822, 1063; Dyas v. Southern Pac. Co., 140 Cal. 296, 73 Pac. 972; Valenti v. Sierra Ry. Co., supra; Bond v. United Railways, supra.

[15] That the jury were told that they should take these elements into consideration alone in determining the pecuniary loss, and should take no other matters into consideration, is quite clear from instruction 17, taken in its entirety. But if there might be any doubt upon that subject, it is dissipated when all the instructions given as to the rule for measuring damage are considered.

After instructing the jury that the action which they were trying was a statutory one, enacted for the purpose of allowing the heirs to recover for pecuniary damages suffered by the loss of a relative, the court then proceeded in instruction 17 to instruct them that pecuniary damage was not limited to that sustained by them by loss of the services of the deceased, but that they were entitled to damage for pecuniary loss suffered, including comfort, society, support, and protection of the deceased, and that grief, mental suffering, and sorrow could not be awarded for. By instruction 19 they were told that as an element in determining such pecuniary loss they could take into consideration "what the deceased would probably have earned and accumulated by his labor in his business or calling during the residue of his life, and which would have gone to the benefit of his heirs and personal representatives, taking into consideration his age, health, habits of industry, ability, and disposition to labor, and the probabilities of his length of life." By instruction 20 they were told that the measure of damages is not alone this pecuniary loss sustained, as just explained in instruction 19, but in addition they could take into consideration the pecuniary loss, if any, sustained by them by being deprived of the comfort, society, support, and protection of the deceased.

Now, taking these instructions as a whole, it appears that the jury was instructed that damages for pecuniary loss were all that could be awarded. This was the standard by which the damages were to be measured, and the elements which were properly to be taken into consideration in determining those damages, they were told, was the pecuniary loss sustained through being deprived of the support of the deceased, because the instruction regarding pecuniary loss through being deprived of the earnings of the deceased which would have inured to the benefit of the family had reference to support, together with the pecuniary loss of being deprived of the comfort, society, and protection of the deceased. But one standard for measurement of the damages was given to the jury—the standard of pecuniary loss—with a proper statement of the several elements going to make up the standard, namely, loss of support, as one element; the other element, loss of comfort, society, and protection. They were expressly instructed that grief, mental suffering, and sorrow could not be considered. Hence, taking the instructions as an entirety, the jury were properly confined by them to a consideration of the proper elements under which to determine pecuniary loss, and pecuniary loss alone, which the plaintiff might have sustained, and they were cautioned as to those matters which might not be taken by them into consideration at all. In this view there is no merit in the criticism of appellant directed against the instructions.

[16] The claim that the verdict is excessive is not based on any suggestion that if plaintiff was entitled to recover the amount of the award was improper. The peculiar claim in this respect is that the verdict must have been excessive because, as asserted by appellant, there was no evidence upon which a verdict could under any circumstances be awarded, which claim, if it required any answer from us at all, is answered by our discussion of the evidence and the conclusion which we have reached respecting its sufficiency to sustain the verdict. There are no other points made requiring consideration.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; MELVIN, J.; SLOSS, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.; HENSHAW, J.

160 Cal. 237

ZIBBELL v. SOUTHERN PAC. CO. et al.
(S. F. 5.075.)(Supreme Court of California. June 20,
1911. Rehearing Denied July
20, 1911.)1. NEGLIGENCE (§ 136*)—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—QUESTION FOR JURY.

Whether one suing for a personal injury is guilty of contributory negligence is generally a question of fact, and is a question of law only when the evidence supports no other legitimate inferences than that of contributory negligence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Negligence, Cent. Dig. §§ 277-306; Dec. Dig. § 136.*]

2. NEGLIGENCE (§ 122*)—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—BURDEN OF PROOF.

Contributory negligence is an affirmative defense, and defendant has the burden of proving it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Negligence, Cent. Dig. §§ 221-234; Dec. Dig. § 122.*]

3. TRIAL (§ 143*)—QUESTION FOR JURY—"CONFLICTING EVIDENCE."

A conflict in the evidence, within the rule that, where the evidence is conflicting, the question is for the jury, must be real; and, where the testimony of a witness is contradicted by all the other evidence and the physical facts, there is no conflict.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 342, 343; Dec. Dig. § 143.*]

4. EVIDENCE (§ 588*)—WEIGHT—CREDIBILITY OF WITNESS—QUESTION FOR JURY.

The jury is not bound by a mere declaration of a witness, irrespective of how improbable or impossible it may be, but the weight of the evidence is for the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 2437; Dec. Dig. § 588.*]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 996*)—QUESTIONS REVIEWABLE—FINDINGS.

The court in reviewing a finding of the jury exonerating one suing for a personal injury from the charge of contributory negligence must bear in mind that of the reasonable inferences from the evidence those which supported freedom from contributory negligence were adopted by the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3908-3911; Dec. Dig. § 996.*]

6. RAILROADS (§ 350*)—INJURIES AT CROSSINGS—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—QUESTION FOR JURY.

Whether a person struck by a train at a crossing was guilty of contributory negligence held, under the evidence, for the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 1152-1192; Dec. Dig. § 350.*]

7. RAILROADS (§ 267*)—INJURIES AT CROSSINGS—LIABILITY.

An engineer of a train who approaches a crossing without ringing the bell or sounding the whistle, and runs his train at an undue speed while unable to see the conditions in front of the train, is guilty of actionable negligence and liable for injuries received by one struck by the train at the crossing.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 859, 860; Dec. Dig. § 267.*]

8. RAILROADS (§ 267*)—INJURIES AT CROSSINGS—LIABILITY.

A brakeman of a switching crew who has no control over the acts of his associates, and who does not fail in any duty which the law exacts from him, is not responsible for the acts of his fellow employes, and is not responsible for their negligence resulting in injury to a person struck by a train at a crossing.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 859, 860; Dec. Dig. § 267.*]

9. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1173*)—REVERSAL—ONE OR MORE PARTIES.

Code Civ. Proc. §§ 578, 579, providing that judgment may be given for or against one or more of several defendants, etc., modify the common-law rule that, where an entire judgment against several joint tort-feasors must be reversed as to one, it must be reversed as to all, so that a judgment against a railroad company and its servants may be sustained as against the company and some of the servants, though it is erroneous as to one of the servants.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4562-4572; Dec. Dig. § 1173.*]

10. DAMAGES (§ 173*)—PERSONAL INJURIES—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

Where one suing for a personal injury showed his experience in the breeding and training of standard bred horses, evidence of salaries paid to trainers of horses possessing his skill and experience was admissible as bearing on the general damages.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Cent. Dig. §§ 490-501; Dec. Dig. § 173.*]

11. DAMAGES (§ 173*)—PERSONAL INJURIES—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

Under a plea of general damages and to prove a loss of earning capacity, it is permissible to show what wages would be open to one suing for personal injuries in a business or profession which he understands, and which he might follow were it not for his injuries.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Cent. Dig. §§ 490-501; Dec. Dig. § 173.*]

12. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1050*)—HARMLESS ERROR—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

Where the court erroneously permitted plaintiff to ask a witness whether a third person had made a statement and the witness answered in the negative, and no attempt was made to follow the question and prove the statement, the error was not prejudicial to defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4153-4166; Dec. Dig. § 1050.*]

13. EVIDENCE (§ 155*)—DECLARATION OF WITNESS—ADMISSIBILITY.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1854, providing that, when a part of a declaration is given in evidence by one party, the whole on the same subject may be inquired into by the adverse party, defendant was entitled to all of the testimony in a former deposition of a witness at the trial bearing on a question concerning which he was examined by the plaintiff, but not to the introduction in evidence of other extraneous matter which the deposition contains.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 445-453; Dec. Dig. § 155.*]

14. DAMAGES (§ 216*)—PERSONAL INJURIES—INSTRUCTIONS.

Where, in an action for personal injuries, the court charged that the measure of damages was the amount which would compensate plaintiff for all the detriment proximately caused by the accident, and charged that, if plaintiff sustained the injuries complained of through the negligence of defendant and without negligence on his part, the jury should find for plaintiff, and assess the damages "in such sum as you (jury) believe, under all the circumstances of this case in evidence," he ought to recover, was not objectionable, as authorizing the assessment of damages in such sum as the jury believed plaintiff should recover, instead of such damages as would compensate him under the evidence, as required by Civ. Code, §§ 3281, 3333.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Cent. Dig. §§ 548-555; Dec. Dig. § 216.*]

15. DAMAGES (§ 216*)—PERSONAL INJURIES—INSTRUCTIONS.

A charge in a personal injury action that the jury should not consider profits of any business in which plaintiff might have engaged in estimating the amount of his damages, and a charge that, in estimating his damages, the loss of the earnings which he would have earned, if any, by reason of the injuries, were not conflicting, for the first charge directed the jury not to give damages for loss of profits, while the second charge authorized a recovery for loss of earnings as a direct loss resulting from the injury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Cent. Dig. §§ 548-555; Dec. Dig. § 216.*]

16. NEW TRIAL (§ 143*)—MISCONDUCT OF JURY—EVIDENCE.

The declaration of a juror that a majority of the jury had visited the scene of the accident in issue, but that they did not go there in a body, but separately, is hearsay, and amounts to merely a statement that he himself had visited the scene.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 290-296; Dec. Dig. § 143.*]

17. TRIAL (§ 317*)—MISCONDUCT OF JURY—WAIVER.

Where the defeated party knew during the progress of the trial that a juror had been guilty of misconduct in visiting the scene of the accident in issue, but he did not complain, and both parties were apparently desirous that the jurors should visit the premises, the misconduct was not ground for reversal under the rule that the failure to object to the misconduct of jurors as soon as knowledge thereof has been obtained, and opportunity to object is presented, is a waiver of the right to object.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 751, 752; Dec. Dig. § 317.*]

18. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1004*)—PERSONAL INJURIES—EXCESSIVE DAMAGES.

The court, in deciding whether passion and prejudice of the jury governed the award of damages in a personal injury case, must compare the amount of the verdict with the evidence of the personal injuries, and the mere fact that a verdict is largely in excess of the largest verdict ever rendered in the state in a similar case does not show passion or prejudice.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3944-3947; Dec. Dig. § 1004.*]

19. DAMAGES (§ 95*)—PERSONAL INJURIES—AMOUNT OF RECOVERY.

The jury in awarding damages for a personal injury must award compensation for the physical and mental suffering caused, and to be caused, by the injury, and the partial or total impairment of earning capacity and the duration thereof, and, while loss of earning capacity may be approximated with reasonable exactness, no fixed amount can enter into an award for physical and mental suffering, but the jury cannot estimate such damages by determining what they would take to endure such suffering.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Cent. Dig. §§ 222-229; Dec. Dig. § 95.*]

20. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1004*)—PERSONAL INJURIES—EXCESSIVE DAMAGES.

It is only where the verdict in a personal injury action is so grossly disproportionate to any reasonable compensation warranted by the facts as to shock a sense of justice and raise a strong presumption that it is based on passion that the court may interpose its judgment against that of the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3944-3947; Dec. Dig. § 1004.*]

21. DAMAGES (§ 132*)—PERSONAL INJURIES—EXCESSIVE DAMAGES.

A person 27 years old, in perfect health, of robust constitution, skilled in the breeding and training of horses, earning about $2,500 a year in that vocation, and with reasonable expectation of continued earning capacity in that vocation, sustained a personal injury resulting in the loss of both arms and one leg. Held, that a verdict of $100,000, reduced to $70,000, by a conditional order of the trial court, was not excessive.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Cent. Dig. §§ 372-396; Dec. Dig. § 132.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; Geo. E. Church, Judge.

Action by Willard R. Zibbell against the Southern Pacific Company and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Judgment and order reversed as to defendant F. M. Pope, and affirmed as to the other defendants.

L. L. Cory (Peter F. Dunne, of counsel), for appellants. Sullivan & Sullivan, J. Roche, and Everts & Ewing, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. This is an action to recover damages for personal injuries. The defendants are the Southern Pacific Company and certain of its employés in the charge and operation of a switch engine with the cars thereto attached, by which the injuries were inflicted. The verdict of the jury was in favor of the plaintiff against all of the defendants. The appeal from the judgment and from the order denying their motion for a new trial is taken by all of the defendants.

The question most earnestly and elaborately argued by all the parties to this appeal is whether or not the evidence establishes the contributory negligence of plaintiff. The determination of this question necessarily involves consideration of the facts in evidence. Before entering upon this consideration, however, the rules of law governing the doctrine of contributory negligence require brief—though very brief—statement. We say very brief, for, while the zeal, industry, and research of counsel have been tireless in the collocation and presentation of the cases bearing upon the question, in a jurisdiction such as this, where the subject has by this court received frequent and elaborate exposition, little can be gained by going afield for authorities. And this is so because of the very nature of the question involved.

[1] Whether or not a plaintiff has been guilty of contributory negligence is similar to the question whether or not the evidence in a criminal case is sufficient to sustain a verdict of guilty. It is usually a question of fact. It is a question of law only when the evidence is of such a character that it will support no other legitimate inference than that in the one case the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, in the other case that there was not sufficient evidence to sustain the verdict. But even in such cases, while the question is said, and properly said, to be one of law, it is never a question of pure law. The real decision of the question by the court is a decision of fact. When the evidence is such that the court is impelled to say that it is not in conflict on the facts, and that from them reasonable men can draw but one inference, and that an inference pointing unerringly to the negligence of the plaintiff contributing to his own injury, then, and only then, does the law step in and forbid plaintiff a recovery. It must follow, therefore, that cases from other jurisdictions can be of value to such a consideration only when one may be found which parallels in all its essential features the case under consideration. This, in the nature of things, can never, or rarely, happen. And, even if such a case be found, it cannot in any true sense be said to settle the law. Its value will come from its persuasive force and reasoning—not upon the law—but upon the facts to which the law forbidding the recovery has been applied.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[2] The law of this state is so well settled that it may be briefly summarized. Contributory negligence is a defense the burden of proving which rests upon defendant. Schneider v. Market St. Ry. Co., 134 Cal. 482, 66 Pac. 734; Hutson v. Southern California Ry. Co., 150 Cal. 701, 89 Pac. 1093. Therefore in this state it is not incumbent upon the plaintiff—as it is in certain other jurisdictions—to establish affirmatively that he was free from negligence. It is incumbent upon the defendant to establish the existence of his contributing negligence. Again, the question of whether or not a plaintiff has been guilty of contributory negligence is usually one of fact for the jury's verdict. "It is only where no fact is left in doubt, and no deduction or inference other than negligence can be drawn by the jury from the evidence, that the court can say as a matter of law that contributory negligence is established. Even where the facts are undisputed, if reasonable minds might draw different conclusions upon the question of negligence, the question is one of fact for the jury." Johnson v. S. P. R. Co., 154 Cal. 285, 97 Pac. 520; Seller v. Market St. Ry. Co., 139 Cal. 268, 72 Pac. 1006; Herbert v. S. P. Co., 121 Cal. 227, 53 Pac. 651.

[3] Finally, it is to be pointed out that, while in every case of a true conflict in evidence the determination and decision is for the jury, the conflict must, in fact, be real.

This has application to that class of cases where the plaintiff, struck by an approaching train, testifies that he did look, and did listen, and did not see, and did not hear, the approaching train; yet all the other evidence, including the physical facts and conditions is such as necessarily forces the conclusion, either that he did not look and did not listen (or he must have seen or heard the train), or that, if he did look and did listen, he looked with unseeing eyes and listened with unhearing ears.

[4] This is in accord with the general rule touching the weight of evidence that neither court nor jury is bound by the mere declaration of a witness—no matter how improbable, incredible, or impossible, that declaration may be. It is a principle recognized in all cases. County of Sonoma v. Stofen, 125 Cal. 35, 57 Pac. 681; Quock Ting v. United States, 140 U. S. 417, 11 Sup. Ct. 733, 851, 35 L. Ed. 501; The William Gray, Fed. Cas. No. 17,694, 1 Paine, 116; Nelson v. Betts, L. R. 5 Eng. Ir. App. Cas. 1, 20. The matter is briefly and vigorously summed up by Lord Stowell, in The Odin, 1 A. Rob. 248, when he says: "It is a wild conceit that any court of justice is bound by the mere swearing. It is swearing credibly that is to conclude its judgment."

In railroad damage cases, as in all other classes and kinds of cases, this rule has been applied when and as in the judgment of the judges it should be applied. And it is sufficient to refer to such cases as Hook v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 162 Mo. 569, 63 S. W. 360; Artz v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 34 Iowa, 154; Browne v. New York Central R. Co., 87 App. Div. 206, 83 N. Y. Supp. 1028; Fox v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 195 Pa. 538, 46 Atl. 106; Chicago, etc., Ry. Co. v. Kirby, 86 Ill. App. 57; Peters v. Southern R. Co., 135 Ala. 533, 33 South. 332; Wardner v. Great Northern Ry. Co., 96 Minn. 382, 104 N. W. 1084; Chicago, etc., Ry. Co. v. Andrews, 130 Fed. 65, 64 C. C. A. 399; Blumenthal v. Boston, etc., R. Co., 97 Me. 255, 54 Atl. 747. The subject is well summarized by the Supreme Court of Missouri in Hook v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., supra, as follows: "When to look is to see, the mere utterance that one did look and could not see will be disregarded as testimony by the court, and no additional value is to be given to the utterance because of the fact that a jury, under the direction of the trial court, has predicated a finding thereon. As the law does not permit a witness to blind his eyes to the sight of an approaching train in full view of a crossing he is to pass, neither will the eye of the law become blinded to the true situation of the case merely because of the absurd statement of a witness or witnesses, 'I looked and could not see,' or the jury's indorsement of it by a finding predicated thereon, when to look was to see." It is in the category of the cases last referred to that appellants insist the case at bar belongs. Their contention, in brief, is that, giving all the credit to plaintiff's testimony to which it is entitled, the physical facts and circumstances demonstrate that he could not have met with the accident without contributing fault of his own.

[5] We are thus brought to a consideration of the evidence, and, since the jury's determination from that evidence was to exonerate plaintiff from the charge of contributory negligence, we must, in considering it, bear in mind that, of the reasonable inferences which the evidence will bear, those supporting plaintiff's contention are to be regarded as having been adopted by the jury.

The accident occurred about half past 9 o'clock in the evening of July 12th. Plaintiff's occupation was the breeding and training of trotting horses. He was expecting certain of his horses by railroad, and was going with a companion to the railroad yards to see whether they had arrived. The two were proceeding westerly along the southerly line of Tulare street, a public highway in the city of Fresno. Tulare street crosses the right of way of the defendant company at practically right angles thereto—the street extending east and west, the railroad tracks north and south. Tulare street is the main artery leading from the city proper to the west side (meaning west of the railroad tracks), which was plaintiff's destination. Tulare street, going from the east side to the west side crosses eight lines of track in the freight-yards of the Southern Pacific Company. There are varying distances between these lines of track. Numbering these tracks successively, and naming the easterly one track 8, there were about 28 feet between track 8 and 7, about 20 feet between track 7 and 6, about 13 feet between track 6 and 5, and about 58 feet between track 5 and 4. It was while crossing track 5 that plaintiff was injured. Plaintiff, with his companion, had proceeded along the southerly line of Tulare street, across track 8, track 7, and track 6, and was struck by a box car which with two other cars was being pushed ahead of a freight engine from the south, northerly along track 5. No gates were maintained at Tulare street, and the flagman was over near track 4, which is 58 feet west of track 5. Upon track 4, at this time, was a freight train, several blocks in length, extending completely across Tulare street. The engine was attached, the train was about ready to proceed, and the flagman was talking to some men at or near this freight train. The night was dark. An electric light about 30 feet above the street was located on the southerly curb line of Tulare street between tracks 7 and 8, and about 60 feet from the point of the accident, but "it was not a very good light." Nothing else illuminated the scene. The shadows were deepened by warehouses to the south of and on the westerly side of Tulare street, and by freight cars standing here and there upon the easterly and westerly tracks. It was the busy season of the year in the Fresno freightyard, and there were a number of such cars standing about. The effect of the electric light on one standing in its radiance and looking out was to intensify the outer gloom as it is intensified to one looking from a lighted room into the outer darkness. The tracks to the south of Tulare street seemed all to stretch away in clear-cut parallel lines, but a lead track, or "lead," used for convenience in switching cars from one track to another, extended in a long diagonal from track 2 at the warehouses of the Earl Fruit Company, about 800 feet south of Tulare street, northerly, cutting at an acute angle tracks 3 and 4, and coming into track 5 at a point 59 feet southerly from the southerly curb line of Tulare street, and 45 feet southerly from the southerly property line of Tulare street. It was up this lead and into track 5 that the car which struck the plaintiff was propelled. At the place where Zibbell was struck, as he approached track 5, and under the conditions there existing, there was nothing to call one's attention to the existence of this lead into track 5, and the lead itself, and its connection with track 5, were obscurely visible, if visible at all. Plaintiff's testimony is that it was a very dark night. He and his companion, McMahan, on approaching the railroad tracks from the east, stopped and looked them up and down. They saw and heard the freight train in front of them on track 4. They heard the noise of two engines working—one the freight train engine, the other seemingly a switch engine to the south. They could see the engine of the freight train on track 4. They could hear the puffing of the switch engine to the south, and judged it to be a block and a half away. Plaintiff had no knowledge of the tracks or their condition other than was afforded by his inspection on that night. He did not know of the existence of the lead from track 2, where the freight engine then was, to track 5, upon which he was struck. Just before reaching track 5, at a distance of about 3 feet from the first rail, he and his companion came to a stop, and again glanced up and down the tracks, which seemed perfectly clear. They were then standing, however, in the glare of the electric light. Plaintiff looked down the track and could see no light. The tracks which he could see and so far as he could see them were clear. Then as he walked on, hearing the sound of a locomotive in front, he looked in that direction. This locomotive was attached to the freight train, and was in the act of starting the train to proceed on its journey. It made much noise. No noise from the south was audible. No bell was rung, no whistle was sounded, no warning shouted, no lantern or other light displayed, when suddenly he and his companion were struck by the box car which, as has been said, with two other cars, had been pushed along the 800-foot lead onto track 5 by an engine placed at the far end of the cars, which engine itself was not puffing or using steam, but, after having given momentum to the cars by the use of steam, under the headway thus gathered, was silently "drifting along."

Even in this brief statement it must be apparent that this case differs radically from those where all of the other testimony contradicts the plaintiff's testimony that he did look and listen, by establishing that, if he did look or listen, he must have seen or heard. The testimony in this case as to the existing conditions is not even that of plaintiff alone. His statements are supported by disinterested witnesses bearing testimony to the same facts. In addition, the evidence shows, though under conflict, that these cars were not only being thus silently propelled across the public highway in the nighttime, but that the approaching car carried no warning light of any kind, nor even a brakeman to give a warning, the brakeman seemingly having dropped off to turn the switch to make the connection between the lead and track 5. Plaintiff in glancing down the tracks and using both sight and hearing could not see, for the absence of a train light; could not hear, because of the silence of the train, the failure to ring the bell or sound the whistle, and the noise which the freight train and its engine on track 4, immediately in front of him, were making. The situation was further complicated by reason of the fact that the track which he was about to cross was, in fact, clear, and there was nothing to direct his attention to the fatal circumstance that the lead 60 feet away was bringing unlighted freight cars swiftly and silently onto the clear track for his destruction. We say "swiftly"; for, while the estimated speed of the train as given by a witness was "about 9 or 10 miles an hour," yet, taking into consideration the evidence of defendants that the train was checked as soon as possible upon discovery of the accident, the evidence as to the time and place of the discovery, the evidence as to the distance within which that train going at a given rate of speed could be checked, and the distance which the train actually traversed beyond the place of the accident before it was stopped, all would justify an inference that the rate of speed was even greater than that estimated by the witness. Appellants seek by a mathematical calculation and demonstration to show that plaintiff could not have looked to the southward, when standing at the place he designates, or he would have seen the approaching train. The argument upon this point cannot, in the nature of things, be conclusive. It cannot serve to remove the case from the domain of questionable fact which is the jury's province to that of positive demonstration, where alone the law withdraws the consideration from the jury.

Under this statement we think it unnecessary to enter upon an elaborate exposition of the conflicting evidence. Suffice it to set forth brief extracts from the testimony of two of the witnesses, Brooks and Cochrane.

Brooks says: "Prior to the time I turned around, having heard the noise, I did not hear any one call out, only the freight pulling out, just about to pass when they got run over, the freight to Mendota. I did not see any signals given there at that time." Cochrane says: "When I looked, I was about 80 feet away. I saw this train of cars backing up there with no light on the back car and I heard no warning at all, nobody holloed, and no warning was given. I am sure of that. The cars were rolling upon the Tulare street crossing as I looked up. I saw Mr. Zibbell and Mr. McMahan walking along together, no noise being made, nothing to warn the men at all as they walked along, they walked right square into a death trap which caught them."

[6] Clearly, therefore, the question of the contributory negligence of plaintiff was properly submitted to the jury, and the case belongs in the category of those like Henavie v. N. Y. Central R. R. Co., 166 N. Y. 280, 59 N. E. 901; Calwell v. Minneapolis Ry. Co., 138 Iowa, 32, 115 N. W. 605; Meyers v. Central Ry. Co., 218 Pa. 305, 67 Atl. 620; Sullivan v. N. Y., etc., Ry. Co., 73 Conn. 203, 47 Atl. 131; Baltimore Ry. Co. v. State, 104 Md. 76, 64 Atl. 304; Baltimore, etc., Ry. Co. v. Cumberland, 176 U. S. 232, 20 Sup. Ct. 380, 44 L. Ed. 447; Johnson v. S. P. R. Co., 154 Cal. 285, 97 Pac. 520; Antonian v. S. P. Co., 9 Cal. App. 718, 100 Pac. 877.

The employes of the defendant railroad who were made parties defendant in this action are M. C. Williams, foreman of the "switching crew" in charge of the train which caused the injury, G. E. Lawrence, the engineer of the locomotive engine, and F. M. Pope, a brakeman. It is insisted that the verdict and judgment against Lawrence and Pope are unsupported by the evidence. Lawrence, however, was the engineer.

[7] It is inferable from the evidence, and must have been inferred by the jury from their verdict, that he was operating his train as it approached the crossing without bell or whistle, that he was moving at undue speed, that he was coming into a straight track from a dangerous side lead, and that by reason of the cars and of the angle of this lead he could not himself see the conditions in front of his train. There was sufficient in this to uphold the verdict and judgment.

[8] It does not, however, appear that defendant Pope was responsible. True, he was a member of the switching crew, but his position was a subordinate one. He was a brakeman. It does not appear that he had the slightest control over the acts of his fellows, or that he was in authority to do other than what he might be directed to do. It is not perceived that he failed in any duty which the law exacted of him. Not being responsible for the conduct of his fellow employes, not being in such supervision or control over them that the doctrine of respondeat superior could apply, Pope could be responsible only for his own personal negligence, and such negligence has not been shown. Against him, therefore, this judgment may not be sustained.

[9] But the contention of appellant that from this the whole judgment must be reversed, under the common-law rule that, where an entire judgment against several joint tort-feasors must be reversed as to one, it must be reversed as to all, is not sound. The early rule has been relaxed by judicial decision and modified by statute. And in this state it does not exist. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 578, 579; Nichols v. Dunphy, 53 Cal. 605; Fowden v. Pacific C. S. Co., 149 Cal. 151, 86 Pac. 178; Cole v. Roebing Construction Co., 156 Cal. 443, 105 Pac. 255.

[10] It was shown that plaintiff had experience and skill in the breeding and training of standard bred trotting horses. Plaintiff's father, an expert in the same business, was asked: "In 1906 what was the salary paid to trainers possessing the skill and experience of your son." Over objection and exception he answered: "Well, the least I ever heard was $2,500, any professional trainer, from that up." Plaintiff also was permitted to testify: "It (the salary) varies from $2,000 to $2,500 up to $8,000 and $10,000 a year." These questions were directed—not to the prospective profits of a business, but to the loss of earning capacity of the plaintiff by reason of his injuries. The answers, if admissible at all, were therefore admissible under the plea of general damage. Not going to the element of prospective profit from a business they did not come within the rule of Lombardi v. California St. Ry. Co., 124 Cal. 319, 57 Pac. 66.

We think the evidence was properly admitted; its weight, of course, being for the jury. The plaintiff had proved what was his chosen vocation in life, and the nature of his skill and experience in following that vocation. The jury, in ignorance of the salary, emoluments, and financial returns going to one pursuing this vocation, were entitled to be advised upon the matter. This did not mean, and it cannot be supposed that the jury construed it to mean, that they were from this evidence to say that, if incapacitated by his injuries, the plaintiff lost $2,500, or $6,000, or $10,000 a year, but they were entitled to consider that, if wholly incapacitated, he was excluded from the field of activity in which the usual compensations and rewards to men of his knowledge and experience reached a maximum of $10,000 a year. The evidence was within the purview of the rule declared in Treadwell v. Whittier, 80 Cal. 575, 22 Pac. 266, 5 L. R. A. 498, 13 Am. St. Rep. 175; Bonneau v. North Shore R. R. Co., 152 Cal. 413, 93 Pac. 106, 125 Am. St. Rep. 68; Shaw v. S. P. Co., 157 Cal. 242, 107 Pac. 108; Fisher v. Jansen, 128 Ill. 549, 21 N. E. 598; Rayburn v. Cent. Iowa Ry. Co., 74 Iowa, 644, 38 N. W. 521; Mo., etc., Ry. v. St. Clair, 21 Tex. Civ. App. 345, 51 S. W. 666;

Peterson v. Seattle Traction Co., 23 Wash. 615, 63 Pac. 539, 65 Pac. 543, 53 L. R. A. 586; S. P. Co. v. Hall (C. C. A.) 100 Fed. 760; Northern Pac. Ry. Co. v. Wendel, 156 Fed. 336, 84 C. C. A. 232.

[11] The rule is that, under the plea of general damages and to prove a loss of earning capacity, it is permissible to show what wages, salary, or emoluments would be open to the plaintiff in a business, vocation, trade, or profession which he understands, and which he would have the right and ability to follow were it not for his incapacitating injuries. In this view the evidence was pertinent and permissible. It bore directly upon an occupation for the pursuit of which plaintiff had shown himself fitted and qualified and which he was following; and the rule as we have stated it is not at all in conflict with the other rule which forbids testimony of mere hopes or mere prospects of advancement, the rule declared in such cases as Richmond & Danville R. R. Co. v. Elliott, 149 U. S. 266, 13 Sup. Ct. 837, 37 L. Ed. 728, and Richmond, etc., Ry. Co. v. Allison, 86 Ga. 145, 12 S. E. 352, 11 L. R. A. 43. Thus in the former of the two cases just cited the obnoxious evidence was to the effect that the plaintiff "thought he would be promoted" and "if promoted would receive an increased salary." In holding this evidence inadmissible the Supreme Court of the United States declared that: "Promotion was purely a matter of speculation, depending not simply upon the occurrence of a vacancy, but upon the judgment or even whim of those in control." In the latter case, where like testimony was introduced, the Supreme Court of Georgia very properly says: "To allow the jury to assess damages in behalf of the plaintiff on the basis of a large income arising from a public office which he has never received, which is merely in expectancy and might never be received, or if received at all, might come to him at some remote and uncertain period, would be wrong and unjust to the defendant."

[12] The witness, Hamilton, was asked the following question: "Did Mr. Cowley tell you in discussing this case that he had testified before the coroner's jury that he saw that train come to a dead standstill before reaching that switch and saw Williams climb down off the side step in front of the train, turn that switch, and come back again and give the signal to go ahead, and climbed up again?" After objection overruled and exception taken, he answered in the negative. As disclosed by the record, the question was improper. It does not appear to have been designed for impeachment, or for any other permissible purpose; but the answer was in the negative, the inquiry was collateral, plaintiff was foreclosed by the answer, no attempt was made to follow the question and introduce the matter in evidence, and it is clear that injury was not worked to defendants.

[13] The same witness, Hamilton, being interrogated as to the distance traveled by the train after the signal to stop, there was read to him the testimony upon this point which he had given at the coroner's inquest. On redirect examination defendants' attorney offered in evidence all of the witness' testimony given at the inquest. It was refused admission, and it is contended that this ruling was error under the familiar principle enunciated in the Code, that when part of an act, or declaration, or conversation, or writing, has been given in evidence, all of it may be shown. But this rule is, of course, subject to the very proper limitation expressed in section 1854, Code of Civil Procedure, that it is all "on the same subject," which may be developed and put in evidence. Thus defendants were entitled to all of the testimony from Hamilton's deposition, bearing upon the single question concerning which he was interrogated, namely, the distance traveled by the cars; but they were not entitled to the introduction in evidence of other different and extraneous matter which the deposition contained. The ruling was therefore proper. Vance v. Richardson, 110 Cal. 414, 42 Pac. 909.

[14] Complaint is made of an instruction which states to the jury that: "If you believe from the evidence that the plaintiff sustained the injuries complained of in his complaint through the carelessness and negligence of the defendant, without negligence on his part, then you should find for the plaintiff Willard R. Zibbell, and assess the damages in such sum as you believe, under all the circumstances of this case in evidence, the plaintiff ought to recover, not exceeding the amount claimed in said complaint." The instruction is criticised upon the ground that it authorizes the jury to assess damages in such sum as they believed plaintiff should recover, whereas the jury could only assess such damages as under the evidence would compensate plaintiff for the detriment proximately caused. Civ. Code, §§ 3281, 3333. This was but one instruction. The jury was repeatedly accurately and carefully instructed that "the measure of damages is the amount which will compensate plaintiff for all the detriment proximately caused by the accident." As employed in the instruction, the use of the word "believe" in connection with "all the circumstances of the case in evidence" was a clear equivalent to the words "find" or "determined," and could not have misled the jury into the misconception that they were entitled to award anything other than compensatory damages in an amount established to their satisfaction by the evidence. Herein the case differs essentially from that of Fries v. American Lead Pencil Co., 141 Cal. 610, 75 Pac. 164, where the one vital instruction upon the question of damage was an instruction to the jury that it was their "duty" to "give the child such amount of damages as you feel it is entitled to"; for, under the Fries Case, the instruction was positive that it was the duty of the jury—not to give damages in compensation for the injuries, but to give such damages as through their feelings, and not through their judgment, upon the evidence, they thought the child should have.

[15] By one instruction the jury was told that it could not consider the profits of any business in which the plaintiff may have been engaged, in estimating the amount of his damage. In another instruction they were told that they could consider, in estimating plaintiff's damage, the loss of the earnings which he would have earned, if any, by reason of his injuries. It is contended that these instructions are in radical conflict. But we do not so view them. Plaintiff not having charged in special damage for loss of profits, the jury was properly instructed that this element of special damage should not enter into their computation. But, upon the other hand, a loss of earnings—a direct loss, as distinguished from profits—a special and prospective loss—was a loss which the jury could properly consider under the general ad damnum clause. Whittier v. Treadwell, supra; Bonneau v. North Shore R. R. Co., supra.

Toward the close of the trial, suggestion was made that the jury visit the scene of the accident. Discussion between counsel followed as to whether the visit should be made in the daytime or at night, under circumstances as nearly as possible like those existing at the time of the accident. The court then asked the jurors to indicate if they wished to view the premises. No juror seemingly so desired. The following then took place: "Mr. Cory: I think in any event they ought to go down there and look at the conditions. Mr. Roche: I am perfectly willing to stipulate now that they may go down there at any time or under any circumstances and observe the conditions, the tracks together or alone, or any other way. Juror Bennett: I think, if the court please, the majority of the jury have been down there, not together, but separately. Mr. Cory: Do I understand that you have been down there? Mr. Bennett: No, sir, not at one time, I was there." Upon this showing neither party made any objection to the conduct of the jury, nor suggested nor asked any action upon the part of the court. It is now contended that the misconduct of the jury was such as to necessitate a new trial. All that appears is shown by the statement, and not by affidavits. Respondent insists that the matter not having been presented upon affidavits is not cognizable by this court. Section 657, Code of Civil Procedure, provides that a new trial may be had "(1) for irregularity in the proceedings of the court, jury, or adverse party, by which either party was prevented from having a fair trial." Section 658 of the same Code declares that: "When the application is made for a cause mentioned in the first subdivision of the last section, it must be made upon affidavits." See Benjamin v. Stewart, 61 Cal. 608; Saltzman v. Sunset T. & T. Co., 125 Cal. 501, 58 Pac. 169; Gay v. Torrance, 145 Cal. 144, 78 Pac. 540.

[16] The present case, however, is distinguishable from the cases cited, in that the asserted misconduct appears as fully of record in the statement on appeal as it could be made to appear by affidavits. But we need not pause to consider whether the rule prescribed by section 658, Code of Civil Procedure, is designed to apply to a case such as this; for upon the merits we do not think that the appellants' proposition can be sustained. Juror Bennett's declaration to the effect that a majority of the jury had visited the scene of the accident was hearsay, as he further states, that they did not go there in a body, but separately. His declaration then amounts merely to a statement that he himself visited the spot.

[17] This was made known to the appellants during the progress of the trial, and yet no action was taken, and no suggestion made that the court should take any steps to correct any apprehended injury. Both parties to the action seemed desirous that the jury should visit the premises, and the statement that they had done so was apparently accepted and acquiesced in without demur as a substitute for a formal visit under direction of the court. That this was irregular may not be doubted, but that it was injurious is a very different question. And in this state, and in many other states, the rule is that, when knowledge of such irregularity is made known in time to apply to the court to remedy or correct it, a party may not sit by in silence, taking chances of a favorable verdict, and after a hostile verdict, then, for the first time, be heard to complain. In People v. Hope, 62 Cal. 291, a criminal case, it was held that the bare fact that a juror had visited the premises where the crime had been committed was not sufficient ground for discharging the jury. In Sheehan v. Hammond, 2 Cal. App. 371, 84 Pac. 340, defendant and his counsel, knowing of an asserted irregularity upon the part of the jury, failed to call the court's attention to it, but made their objection after the trial was over, and it was said: "The defendant cannot be allowed to remain quiet and take the chances upon a favorable verdict, and then raise a point that he knew of and could have raised during the progress of the trial." This declaration is abundantly supported by our other decisions, as witness: Monaghan v. Rolling Mill Co., 81 Cal. 194, 22 Pac. 590; Wood v. Moulton, 146 Cal. 317, 80 Pac. 92; Doolin v. Omnibus Cable Co., 140 Cal. 375, 73 Pac. 1060. And in other jurisdictions the construction to this effect is so uniform that it is laid down as a rule in the following language in 17 American and English Encyclopedia of the Law, p. 1206: "Failure to object to the misconduct of jurors as soon as knowledge thereof is obtained and opportunity to object is presented is a waiver of the right to object, and the objection cannot be thereafter presented, as by a motion for a new trial." The jury's verdict in favor of the plaintiff was for the sum of $100,000. Upon motion for a new trial, the court, with the consent of the plaintiff, remitted $30,000 of this amount. These appeals are taken therefore from a judgment in the sum of $70,000. It is contended that the damages are so excessive as to force the conclusion that they were given under the influence of passion and prejudice. And herein it is said that the verdict is twice the amount of the largest judgment ever rendered in the state of California in a similar case, and is the largest verdict ever presented to an appellate court for review.

[18] It has been decided by this court that the only means of discovering the existence of passion and prejudice as influencing a verdict is by comparing the amount of the verdict with the evidence before the trial court. To say that a verdict has been influenced by passion and prejudice is but another way of saying that the verdict exceeds any amount justified by the evidence. Doolin v. Omnibus Cable Co., supra. Damages in cases such as this are not liquidated.

[19] No fixed amount may be recovered, no exact proof of any fixed amount can, from the nature of the case and of the elements which enter into the award of damage, ever be made. The principal elements of damage for which compensation may be awarded are the physical and mental suffering caused and which will be caused by the injury, and the partial or total impairment of earning capacity likewise caused by the injury. To the latter the law may apply a measure—a rude and inexact measure it is true, but still a measure. The extent of the partial loss of earning capacity, the duration of that partial loss of earning capacity, the total loss of earning capacity, and the earning capacity of the plaintiff himself, may all be approximated with reasonable exactness. But to put a monetary value upon the elements of physical pain and mental suffering, their nature, extent, and continuance is a much more difficult and delicate matter. It is, of course, improper for the jury to attempt to measure the damage occasioned by the injury and the sufferings attendant upon it by asking themselves what sum they would take to endure what the plaintiff has endured, and must endure. Says the Supreme Court of Wisconsin in Heddles v. Chicago & Northwestern Railway Company, 74 Wis. 239, 42 N. W. 237: "No rational being would change places with the injured man for an amount of gold that would fill the room of the court, yet no lawyer would contend that such is the legal measure of damages." Appellate tribunals have frequently been called upon to review verdicts under the objection here presented.

[20] It is by this court said to be the correct rule "that it is only where the verdict is so grossly disproportionate to any reasonable limit of compensation warranted by the facts as to shock the sense of justice, and raise at once a strong presumption that it is based on prejudice or passion rather than sober judgment, that the judge is at liberty to interpose his judgment as against that of the jury." Harrison v. Sutter St. Ry. Co., 116 Cal. 156, 47 Pac. 1019.

[21] Viewing the evidence in contemplation of this principle of law, the character of the injuries to plaintiff first call for mention. Those injuries are admitted by the pleadings, and are as follows: "His left arm was crushed and torn below the shoulder; his right hand and wrist were crushed and torn. His left foot and ankle were crushed. The bone of one of the toes of his right foot was broken and crushed. His right heel was crushed and torn to such an extent as to almost sever it from the foot. His right leg was fractured between the knee and ankle, and the flesh on said right leg between the thigh and ankle was torn, cut, bruised and lacerated. His back, sides and shoulders, face and head were cut, bruised, and wounded, and he sustained a severe nervous shock. By reason of said injuries to said left arm, it became necessary to amputate the same, and the said arm was on said 12th day of July, 1905, amputated below said shoulder. By reason of said injuries to said left foot, it became necessary to amputate the same, and the said left foot was on said last-mentioned date amputated a short distance above the ankle. By reason of said injuries to said right hand and wrist, it became necessary to amputate the said right hand at the wrist, and the said right hand was on the 13th day of July, 1905, amputated at the wrist. By reason of said injuries, plaintiff has suffered, and will continue for a long period of time to suffer, great pain and mental anguish."

At the time of these injuries plaintiff was 27 years old, in perfect health, of robust constitution, skilled and experienced in the breeding and training of horses, earning about $2,500 a year in that vocation, and with a reasonable expectation and fair prospect of an increase of earning capacity and a betterment of financial conditions within his chosen vocation. By the accident his condition is changed from one of virile activity and competency to helpless incompetency. There is no occasion to picture the pain, the grief, the mortification, the disfigurement, and the helplessness which have resulted, all of which will continue through the rest of his life, a period, within the mortality tables, of more than 38 years. And so it must be said that, while the damages awarded in this case are very great, the shocking character of the injuries, the loss of both arms and one leg, the permanent loss of earning capacity, the inevitable disabilities and the suffering endured, and necessarily to be endured, for more than 38 years, present a case where the injuries are as grave as the damages are great, or, at least, a case where there is no such marked disproportion between the character of the injuries and the award made for them as to suggest at once that the award was influenced by prejudice, passion, or corruption.

For which reasons the judgment and order as to defendant Pope are reversed and as to the other defendants they are affirmed.

We concur: MELVIN, J.; LORIGAN, J.; SHAW, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.; SLOSS, J.

160 Cal. 217

PEOPLE v. BYRNE. (Cr. 1,597.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 20, 1911.
Rehearing Denied July 20, 1911.)

1. HOMICIDE (§ 253*)—MURDER—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

Evidence held to sustain a conviction of murder in the first degree.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 523-532; Dec. Dig. § 253.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 938*)—NEW TRIAL—NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE.

Applications for new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence are disfavored.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2306; Dec. Dig. § 938.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 939*)—NEW TRIAL—NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE.

One is not entitled to a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence where the evidence was known to him and obtainable at the trial, or would have been known to him had he used diligence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2318-2323; Dec. Dig. § 939.*]

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 945*)—NEW TRIAL—NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE—JUDICIAL DISCRETION.

On application for new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence, determination of the weight to be given the evidence supporting the motion, the truth of the matters shown thereby and their materiality and probability of their effect to change the result, if believed to be true, lies within the sound discretion of the trial court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2334; Dec. Dig. § 945.*]

5. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 939*)—NEW TRIAL—NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE.

It was not an abuse of discretion to refuse a new trial to one convicted of murder, asked on the ground of newly discovered evidence tending to show that accused was at his lodging place the entire evening of the homicide, and that a third person, claimed by accused to be the murderer, appeared there just after the homicide, wounded and apparently a fugitive; the evidence, if true, having been available at the trial in the exercise of reasonable diligence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2318-2323; Dec. Dig. § 939.*]

6. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 945*)—NEW TRIAL—NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE.

Where one convicted of murder was partly identified by a blue bandanna handkerchief worn by the murderer and found on accused, who claimed that a third person committed the offense, it was not an abuse of discretion to refuse a new trial asked on the ground of newly discovered evidence that such third person and his coemployés had been given similar handkerchiefs, and that he did not spend all of his evenings at home as he had testified.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2324-2327, 2336; Dec. Dig. § 945.*]

7. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 945*)—NEW TRIAL—NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE.

It was not an abuse of discretion to refuse a new trial to one convicted of murder, asked on account of newly discovered evidence, that a state's witness, who had positively identified accused as one of the murderers, had seen accused's claimed companion the night before with another man, and was unable to state whether that man was accused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 945.*]

8. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1156*)—APPEAL—NEW TRIAL—NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE—JUDICIAL DISCRETION.

An order denying a new trial asked on the ground of newly discovered evidence, is conclusive in the absence of a clear showing of abuse of discretion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3067-3071; Dec. Dig. § 1156.*]

9. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 407*)—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIONS BY SILENCE.

Whether circumstances are such as to render accused's failure to reply to a statement made in his presence an admission, is, in the first instance, a question for the trial court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 899, 963; Dec. Dig. § 407.*]

10. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 407*)—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIONS BY SILENCE.

In a murder trial, the prosecution can show that after accused was taken in charge, but before his arrest, a bystander told a police officer, in accused's presence, that he had the right man, and that the bystander saw accused with another known to have been one of the two murderers, to show an admission by accused through failure to reply to the statement.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 898-900; Dec. Dig. § 407.*]

11. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 407*)—EVIDENCE—IMPLIED ADMISSIONS—EXPLANATION.

One against whom evidence of failure to deny an accusation has been introduced as an implied admission is entitled to explain his silence by showing that a few minutes previously he denied a similar accusation to the police officer having him in charge when the second accusation was made.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 899; Dec. Dig. § 407.*]

12. HOMICIDE (§ 339*)—HARMLESS ERROR—EXCLUSION OF TESTIMONY.

In a murder trial, it was not prejudicial error to exclude a showing by accused that he had denied participation in the offense when taken in charge by police officers, offered to explain why accused did not reply to a statement made shortly afterward by a bystander to one of the officers, that the officer had the right man, and that the bystander had, the night before the crime, seen accused with another who was identified as one of the murderers.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 714; Dec. Dig. § 339.*]

13. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 404*)—DEMONSTRATIVE EVIDENCE—PISTOL.

In a murder trial, it was not error to admit in evidence a pistol found under the steps leading to the place where accused lodged; the pistol having been identified as the one with which decedent was killed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 891; Dec. Dig. § 404.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; William P. Lawler, Judge.

John Byrne was convicted of murder, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Sullivan & Sullivan, Theodore J. Roche, and Breen & Kelly, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., Wm. H. Cobb, Deputy Atty. Gen., J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., C. M. Fickert, Dist. Atty., and F. L. Berry, Asst. Dist. Atty., for the People.

ANGELLOTTI, J. The defendant was charged by information filed February 12, 1907, with the crime of murder, committed November 15, 1906. His trial was concluded April 13, 1907, the jury rendering a verdict of guilty of murder of the first degree. A motion for new trial was made, and this was decided by the trial court on July 11, 1908, the motion being denied. On July 25, 1908, judgment of death was pronounced. A bill of exceptions was settled and approved by the trial judge in December, 1909, and the transcript on appeal was filed in this court on March 30, 1910. The appeal is from the judgment and from an order denying a new trial.

[1] While it is claimed that the evidence given upon the trial was legally insufficient to warrant the verdict, a claim that we are satisfied is not well founded, the main contention of counsel for defendant is that a new trial should have been granted upon the ground of newly discovered evidence. This claim is pressed with great ability and earnestness by counsel who are apparently convinced of the innocence of the defendant. For a proper understanding of the questions presented in this connection, it is essential that some of the facts be stated.

On November 15, 1906, between 8:20 and 8:30 p. m. the saloon of John O'Connell, at the northeast corner of Sixth and Brannan streets, San Francisco, was entered almost simultaneously by two men, one through a door opening on Brannan street, and the other through a door opening on Sixth street. Each was masked by a handkerchief, which was blue with white dots, and each was armed with a revolver. The man who entered by the Brannan street door was put by the witnesses as being a man about five and a half feet in height, as weighing from 140 to 155 pounds, and as wearing a dark coat and a soft black hat. The Sixth street door man was considerably taller. There were several men in the saloon at the time, one of them being George O'Connell, the deceased, who had been a member of the police force. The masked men ordered all present to throw their hands up. The deceased drew his own revolver, and firing immediately ensued on the part of deceased and the two masked men, with the result that deceased, and another man in the saloon, named Lynch, were killed, and still another was severely wounded. The whole affair occupied only a few seconds. The two masked men at once left the saloon, the Sixth street man getting no further than the southeast corner of Brannan and Sixth streets, his dead body being found there very shortly after. He was discovered to be one Frank Burke, a young man well known in the vicinity. The Brannan street man ran south, along the easterly side of Sixth street, between Brannan and Townsend street, a hundred feet or so, and thence across the street, encountering in his flight a pile of tin, scrap iron and debris, on which he either fell or stepped, to a point on the westerly side of Sixth street near a five-foot alley between a small one-story wooden shack known as the Sullivan saloon, fronting on Sixth street, and another small wooden shack occupied for saloon purposes by one Dillon. The Dillon saloon had then been closed for the night. The Sullivan saloon was still open, and Thomas Sullivan, one of the brothers of Patrick Sullivan, the proprietor, and several men, were in the front room of the building, which was the bar-room. A pistol was a little later, between 10 and 11 p. m., found under the steps of a rear entrance to the Sullivan shack. It contained one empty chamber, two empty shells and three loaded shells. A comparison of the bullet which had caused the death of O'Connell, with the bullets remaining in the pistol, showed that they were all of the same make and size, all being bullets of 44 caliber, Winchester rifle cartridges. There was evidence to the effect that the Brannan street man fired two shots.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

The Sullivan shack contained, in addition to the barroom, two little rooms which were used for lodging purposes by a number of men who were permitted by Sullivan to occupy the same. The lodgings thus afforded were of the crudest character, being simply two small rooms, upon the floors of which, with the aid of an old mattress or two and old bed wear, some nine or ten men were permitted to sleep. It was claimed that the lodgers were men whose work compelled them to be in that vicinity, and who, by reason of the conditions following the great fire of April 18, 1906, were under the necessity of occupying some such place.

The defendant, who had known the Sullivans for some time, had been one of these lodgers for about two weeks next preceding the murder of deceased. A little after 10 o'clock on the night of the murder, the Sullivan saloon building, which had then been closed for the night, was entered by police officers, Captain Duke being in charge. The defendant was found in one of the rooms together with five other men, all lying partially dressed, as was the custom, upon the mattress or rugs upon the floor. The men other than defendant were Kelly, Canning, McGee, Morrissey, and a man named Rudolph, also known as Russell, all of whom were much larger than defendant, and who in no way tallied with the description of the Brannan street man given by the witnesses of the attempted robbery and murder. In the other room were three men, Frank McDevitt, Gallagher, and Considine, none of whom resembled the defendant in appearance. In another room in front were Peter J. Sullivan and Thomas Sullivan, brothers of the proprietor, who were barkeepers in the saloon. After some investigation, the defendant, Morrissey, and McGee were taken by the officers to the corner of Brannan and Sixth streets and put in a patrol wagon. Defendant, on being told to dress, had put on a dark coat, and a soft black hat which was declared by the witnesses to the shooting to resemble the hat worn by the Brannan street man. There was nothing about defendant's appearance to indicate that he had been engaged in an affray of any kind. While these men were in the patrol wagon, defendant was pointed out by a bystander named Poole as being a man seen by him with Burke the night before, and he was taken from the wagon and searched. In one of his pockets was found a blue handkerchief with white dots, declared by the witnesses to be similar to the one worn as a mask by the Brannan street robber. According to the testimony of the officers, one of the corners of this handkerchief was twisted somewhat and another diagonally opposite twisted a little, the idea conveyed by this testimony being that the two ends had recently been knotted together. Captain Duke called defendant's attention to this saying, according to defendant's own testimony, "That looks as if it had been twisted," and the defendant's only response was to the effect that the twisted appearance was caused by nasal discharges. This explanation Captain Duke declared was untrue in point of fact. The officers then took defendant back to Sullivan's, and it was on this visit that the pistol was found. The witnesses of the shooting agreed upon the proposition that the defendant in size and build resembled the Brannan street robber in appearance. Defendant's weight, however, did not actually exceed about 120 pounds.

The evidence warranted the conclusion that Burke, the dead robber, was an habitué of the Sullivan saloon, was at times one of the lodgers there, and was well known to all the inmates thereof. While evidence of any special intimacy between him and defendant prior to November 14, 1906, is wanting, according to his own testimony defendant had known him for six or seven weeks and had first seen him in Sullivan's saloon.

An officer testified that he had once seen defendant in Burke's company on the street. Mrs. O'Connell, wife of the proprietor of the Sixth and Brannan streets saloon, lived over the saloon, and from a bay window the night before the robbery, had observed two men apparently skulking in the neighborhood. Being sufficiently apprehensive as to the safety of her husband to send a message to him telling him about two men hanging about whose actions indicated to her an intent to hold up his place, she observed them carefully. She was apparently quite positive that the two men were Burke and the defendant. Poole, as to whom we have already referred, said that the man he saw with Burke the evening before the shooting, resembled the defendant in size and build. He further said that such man was not Hogan, whom he had worked with and knew very well. Heffernan, a railroad man living at the Buffalo Hotel, which was at the northwest corner of Brannan and Sixth streets, was positive that he saw Burke and defendant together about 8 p. m. of November 15, 1906, about 20 minutes before the shooting. He said that he saw them approach the side entrance of that hotel and look in, and then walk toward Brannan street, coming within eight or ten feet of him. He looked particularly at these men, thinking they might be persons he knew, and testified that he could not be mistaken as to the defendant being the smaller man of the two. The smaller man, he said, had on a dark coat and a black soft hat. He subsequently heard the shooting, and saw Burke come out of the Sixth street door of the saloon. He said that he had never seen the defendant prior to this occasion.

The evidence warranted the conclusion that defendant had not been working at all since his discharge from the city and county hospital early in October, or endeavoring to obtain work. He was in the city and county hospital from September 20th or 22nd to October 11th, suffering, he said, from lead poisoning. While much was made by the defense of the fact that he was administrator of the estate of his father, who lost his life by reason of the earthquake and fire of April, 1906, it was apparent that his duties in this behalf were not of such a nature as to occupy his time, and there was no pretense that the estate was of such a character as to supply him with any appreciable amount of money, or that he had any expectation of realizing anything from the estate. It was fairly inferable from the evidence that he was without means of support, and at the same time without the disposition to work.

The trial of defendant was commenced on March 18, 1907, and continued, without intermission, to and including March 25, 1907. The defendant testified as a witness on the last-named day, his examination being concluded, and the district attorney reserving the right to recall him for further cross-examination if desired. Owing to the sickness of two of the jurors, the trial was not resumed until April 9, 1907. Up to the time of this adjournment, defendant had contented himself with stating simply that, during the whole of the evenings and nights of November 14 and 15, 1906, from as early as 6:30 until Sullivan's saloon was closed for the night, he was in the barroom of that resort, leaving it only to go to bed when the saloon closed. His evidence was of such a nature as to preclude the idea that a man named Hogan, who will hereafter be referred to, came to the saloon at all that evening, and the record forbids the conclusion that he had ever intimated to his counsel or any other person, anything about Hogan, or the remarkable event portrayed in his subsequent evidence, given when the trial was resumed on April 9, 1907. That evidence was substantially that about 8:30 o'clock of the evening of November 15th, a man named Hogan, who did not live at the saloon, but who frequently came there and was a friend of the Sullivans and known to those frequenting the place, appeared at a door leading from the saloon into the hallway, with a gunshot wound on the right side of his jaw, at one end of which was a bullet which one of those present knocked out of his jaw with a finger, causing it to fall to the floor. Defendant picked up the bullet, looked at it, and threw it out of the door. Hogan said, "Frankie dropped" or "Frankie fell." Hogan at once left the saloon in the company of Peter Sullivan and Joe Liddy. It was made to appear on the motion for a new trial that defendant made a similar statement to his counsel between March 25th and April 9th, and, by arrangement of his counsel, had submitted to an examination before the district attorney, in which he told a substantially similar story. His expressed reasons for having previously suppressed what he claimed to be the truth in a matter most vital to himself were his fear of Hogan and the other inmates of the place who were friendly to Hogan, and his indisposition to involve another man. When during the intermission in his trial he found that Thomas Sullivan, the barkeeper on duty in the Sullivan saloon from 7 p. m. until the saloon closed, and upon whose testimony he relied to show his own continuous presence there, had disappeared, he concluded, so he said, to divulge these important facts.

This testimony having been given, much of the remainder of the trial was devoted to an investigation of the claim of Hogan's participation in the affair. No witness on the trial corroborated the remarkable story so told by defendant. Peter Sullivan, who was said by defendant to have left the saloon in company with Hogan, said that he went to his room at 7 o'clock on being relieved from duty as barkeeper, stayed there until the officers invaded the place, and heard nothing about the affair until then. Canning, one of those present in the saloon the whole of the evening after 7:10, testified for defendant to the effect that defendant was present during all of the time, but positively denied the alleged Hogan episode, and also denied that Joe Liddy was there at all. Liddy testified that he was not at the saloon at all that evening. These appear to be the only persons claimed to have been in the saloon during the whole of the evening of November 15th who were examined on the trial, although others present were accessible.

Hogan was a married man, living with his wife and child on San Jose avenue at a point somewhat remote from Sullivan's saloon. He was a horseshoer by occupation, and had been working in San Francisco as such for a man named Krouse, almost continuously for about 3½ years prior to November 15th. Krouse's place of business was 410 Brannan street. Hogan resembled defendant somewhat in height and build, but was a little heavier and a little taller. It appears to be conceded, also, that he was a man of dark complexion, while defendant was light. As before stated, Hogan frequently visited Sullivan's saloon and was well known there. He had known Burke for a long time, and was intimate enough with him to have gone, according to his own testimony, on a hunting trip of some days' duration with him, and another person, a few weeks before November 15th. At the time of the trial he had a scar on his jaw, the result of a wound inflicted within at least a few weeks of November 15th. Hogan's testimony on the trial was to the effect that the wound was due, not to a bullet, but to a kick inflicted by another man some time before November 15th, and the evidence of Dr. Bacigalupi, based upon an examination of Hogan at the time of the trial was strongly in support of the claim that the scar was not the result of a bullet wound. There was evidence on the trial to support Hogan's claim that he was at his home during the whole of the evening of November 15th, and none opposed thereto except the evidence of defendant hereinbefore referred to. The question of the possibility of Hogan's participation in the affair of November 15th was gone into at great length on the trial, his own examination on the part of learned counsel for defendant being most searching.

While a mere reading of the record in this case necessarily leaves one in grave doubt on the question of the defendant's guilt, there is certainly enough in the evidence to sustain the conclusion of the jury and trial judge who saw and heard the various witnesses, and who were in a much better position to determine the truth than a court that does not possess such an advantage.

An apparently very strong showing was made for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence, but in the light of the well-settled rules applicable in the consideration of appeals from orders of trial courts denying such motions, we do not see how it can properly be held that the trial court abused its discretion in denying the motion.

[2, 3] The claim of newly discovered evidence warranting a new trial is universally looked upon by the courts with distrust and disfavor. Public policy demands that a litigant should be compelled to exhaust every reasonable effort to produce at his trial all existing evidence in his behalf. It has been said that the circumstance that the testimony has just been discovered when it is too late to introduce it is so suspicious that courts require the very strictest showing of diligence. People v. Freeman, 92 Cal. 366, 28 Pac. 261. It is recognized, however, that despite the exercise of such effort, cases will sometimes occur where, after trial, new evidence most material to the issue and which would probably have produced a different result, is discovered. For such cases, the remedy of motion for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence has been given. As declared by our Penal Code, the court may grant a new trial "when new evidence is discovered material to the defendant, and which he could not, with reasonable diligence, have discovered and produced at the trial." It is well settled that a party who relies upon that ground must have made reasonable effort to produce all his evidence at the trial, and that he will not be allowed a new trial for the purpose of introducing evidence known to him and obtainable at the time of the trial, or which would have been known to him had he simply exercised reasonable effort to present his defense. See People v. Freeman, 92 Cal. 359, 28 Pac. 261; People v. Rushing, 130 Cal. 454, 62 Pac. 742, 80 Am. St. Rep. 141; People v. Sullivan, 3 Cal. App. 513, 86 Pac. 834.

In accord with these principles it has been held by this court that the testimony of a witness absent from the trial because his whereabouts were then unknown, the existence and materiality of which were known to defendant before the trial, was not newly discovered evidence on account of which a new trial could be granted, although defendant had endeavored to find the witness before the trial. The court said: "Knowing of the importance of his testimony, defendant should have moved for a continuance, and, failing to do so, it must be held that it entered upon the trial at its peril." Germania Trust Co. v. San Francisco, 128 Cal. 589, 61 Pac. 178.

In Berry v. Metzler, 7 Cal. 418, it was said: "A party is bound to know the materiality of testimony known to him, except in cases of surprise at the trial. And when the party discovers new testimony before the trial, but too late to procure it, he should apply for a continuance."

[4] When due diligence on the part of defendant to produce at the trial all evidence in his favor has been shown, the trial judge is still called upon, in the exercise of a wise

discretion, to determine the weight to be given to the evidence produced upon the motion for a new trial, the truth of the matters shown thereby, and the materiality and probability of the effect of them if believed to be true. People v. Weber, 149 Cal. 350, 86 Pac. 671. That counter affidavits to rebut the showing made by defendant on such a motion, by discrediting the newly discovered witnesses, or by disputing the alleged facts testified to by the new witnesses, may be presented on such a motion, was declared in People v. Sing Yow, 145 Cal. 1, 78 Pac. 235, where the court said that the law does not contemplate the granting of a new trial on this ground simply to enable the defendant to go through the form of another trial, "where there is no reasonable probability that the newly discovered evidence will change the result, and where it does not appear that by reason of such evidence the result ought to be different." In the case last cited, the duty and power of the trial court, in the determination of a motion on this ground, and the limited functions of an appellate court in reviewing the action of the trial court, were defined as follows: "The question as to the effect upon the case of the newly discovered evidence is from its nature peculiarly one that is addressed to the discretion of the trial court, and, of course, should be determined by that court with a full realization of the responsibility involved, and the motion should undoubtedly be granted where the showing is such as to make it apparent to the trial court that the defendant has, without fault on his part, not had a fair trial on the merits, and that by reason of the newly discovered evidence the result would probably be, or should be, different on a retrial. But unless the appellate court can plainly see that this discretion has been abused, that the showing made was of such a character as to make it manifest that the case would or should result differently on a new trial, in view of the newly discovered evidence, the order of the trial court refusing a new trial will not be disturbed."

[5] In the light of what has been said, the alleged newly discovered evidence to the effect that defendant was not absent from Sullivan's saloon at any time after 6:30 p. m. on November 15, 1906, and that Hogan appeared at Sullivan's just after the attempted robbery, wounded and apparently a fugitive, was not such as to warrant a reversal of the order of the trial court. The alleged newly discovered evidence in this regard was that of William A. Rudolph, Edward McKee, and John Morrissey, all lodgers in the Sullivan saloon, on the night of November 15, 1906, and Thomas Sullivan, barkeeper on duty therein on that night from 7 o'clock to the time when the saloon was closed. Rudolph, who at Sullivan's place went by the name of "Russell" or "Whitey," by affidavit, made May 28, 1907, in great detail corroborated defendant's evidence as to his presence in the saloon during the whole of the evening of November 15th, and the appearance of Hogan therein wounded. He further declared that prior to this, about 7:30 p. m., Burke and Hogan came into the saloon together, when Burke treated the house and he himself talked with Hogan, and that they left the place after a stay of about 20 minutes. He said that he heard pistol shots, and shortly after Hogan appeared bleeding profusely, declaring that "they got Frankie" and "me too." He declared, however, contrary to defendant's evidence, that he had seen no bullet. He said that he left San Francisco about December 4, 1906, and had failed to disclose the facts within his knowledge because afraid of Hogan and his friends. It was shown on the motion for a new trial that on or about August 11, 1907, Rudolph was killed at Redding, Shasta county, by falling under a moving railroad car while he was attempting to leave the same. The affidavit of Edward McKee corroborated defendant as to his being in Sullivan's saloon during the whole of the evenings of November 14th and 15th, and as to Hogan appearing shortly before the closing of the saloon, with a wound in the jaw bleeding profusely, declaring "They got Frankie," or "Frankie fell," and "They got me too," and corroborated Rudolph by declaring that Burke and Hogan came into the saloon together between 7 and 7:30 p. m., when Burke treated. He had been in San Francisco all of the time between November 15th and the close of the trial, had been kept in custody during a portion of the time in order that he might be available as a witness, and said that he had kept silent as to the Hogan episode because he knew that all parties in the saloon knew that Byrne was innocent, did not think it possible that he could be convicted, and did not desire to implicate Hogan. The affidavit of John Morrissey declared that defendant had been in the Sullivan saloon during the whole of the evenings of November 14th and 15th, but said nothing about the Hogan episode. Thomas Sullivan had been subpoenaed as a witness for the trial, and had been in attendance up to the time of the intermission, but had disappeared during such intermission. He had declared to counsel for defendant that defendant was in Sullivan's saloon during the whole of the evening of November 15th. He does not appear to have been discovered up to the time of the denial of the motion for a new trial. No request was made of the trial court during the trial for any continuance on account of his absence. This is also true of the witness Rudolph. McKee and Morrissey, though present at the trial, were not called as witnesses.

Of course, none of this evidence was really discovered after the trial. If defendant and Rudolph, McKee, and Morrissey were speaking truthfully in regard to the matter of defendant's presence in Sullivan's saloon and the Hogan episode, defendant knew just as much about the existence of this material evidence before the trial, as he did after. Under ordinary circumstances, his failure to call Morrissey and McGee as witnesses and his failure to ask for a continuance for the purpose of procuring the presence of Rudolph would show such want of diligence in the matter of obtaining this testimony as would preclude consideration of it as newly discovered evidence. But it is earnestly urged that as defendant had learned that those present in the Sullivan saloon on the evening of November 15th would not testify to the Hogan episode, a fact shown in the case of Canning, who when called as a witness by him, denied that Hogan appeared there that evening, he was justified in refraining from calling them at the trial, and is now entitled to rely on their evidence as newly discovered evidence. If we assume this to be true, a matter we do not deem it necessary to decide here, and if we further assume that Rudolph's affidavit might properly have been taken into consideration by the trial court, notwithstanding his death and the consequent impossibility of introducing his evidence on a new trial, we still cannot say that there was an abuse of discretion on the part of the trial court in refusing to allow a new trial on account thereof.

The witness Morrissey, who still remained silent as to the Hogan episode, was discredited by evidence of inconsistent statements. On the night of the shooting, when examined in the Sullivan saloon by Captain Duke, in the presence of Sergeant Regan, he had said that he went to bed before 7 p. m., and knew nothing about the affair. On December 2, 1906, he had signed a statement to the same effect. On August 16, 1907, he said to Captain Duke, referring to defendant, "You've got the right man, and that's all there is to it," and later on the same day he said to Captain Duke, in the hearing of Sergeants O'Connell and Tobin and Officer McEntie, referring to defendant, "He did it; and that is all there is to it." The witness McGee had stated to Captain Duke on the night of November 15th, that he went to bed before 8 o'clock that night, that he did not know whether defendant went out of the saloon after he went to sleep, and that he knew nothing concerning the shooting of O'Connell. On December 2, 1906, he subscribed a written statement to the effect that he went to bed about 23 minutes to 8. On April 3, 1907, he stated in the presence of Captain Duke and Mr. O'Gara, that no one, to his knowledge, had come into Sullivan's saloon on the night of November 15th with any wound upon his jaw, chin, or face, and declared that he had not seen Hogan in said saloon at any time on the night of November 15th. On June 19, 1907, he stated to Mr. O'Gara, in the presence of Captain Duke, that Hogan was not at the saloon that night, and that he did not know that any affidavit signed by him contained a statement to that effect, and it was shown beyond the possibility of controversy that he was fully informed of the contents of his affidavit before he signed it.

Rudolph had told Captain Duke in the presence of Sergeant Regan, when questioned on the night of the shooting, that he knew absolutely nothing of the shooting, and that he had been in bed and asleep from 7:30 p. m. This statement found some support in the evidence given by Canning on the trial, wherein he testified that, when he went to bed, Rudolph was already there, asleep. According to his own story he had subsequently left San Francisco, knowing that an innocent man was in custody charged with the murder of O'Connell, willfully concealing information that would at once establish his innocence, and enable the authorities to develop the facts establishing the guilt of the real perpetrator. In his affidavit, which was surprisingly specific as to every detail that could bear in favor of defendant, even to the hearing of the pistol shots in O'Connell's saloon, just prior to Hogan's appearance, he contradicted all the evidence in the case on the question of the handkerchief, saying that a blue handkerchief with white dots was taken from defendant in the saloon, while all the evidence showed that no handkerchief was found on defendant until after he had been removed from the saloon and taken to the corner of Sixth and Brannan streets. The trial court may very reasonably have inferred that this statement was made to serve as a basis for his following statement that such handkerchiefs were in common use in San Francisco among laboring men. Shortly subsequent to the making of his affidavit, he stated to Mr. O'Gara, in the presence of defendant's attorney, that the man who came wounded into Sullivan's saloon was of fair or light complexion and about five feet four inches in height, whereas Hogan's complexion was dark and his height was at least five feet six inches. His expressed reason for his previous silence, namely, fear of Hogan and his friends, might well be regarded by the court as false. There was nothing to indicate any real reason for such fear, and nothing to show why the reason, if good, did not still obtain.

In view of all the circumstances, it can only be said as was substantially said in People v. Weber, supra, that potent as these affidavits may have been, if believed, it may not be said by this court that the trial court did not exercise a sound discretion in absolutely discrediting them.

[6] Another line of alleged newly discovered evidence relied on in support of the motion was evidence tending to show that Hogan and the other employes of Mr. Krouse had each been given some months before November 15, 1906, a blue bandanna handkerchief with white dots, and also evidence tending to impeach Hogan's evidence that he spent all of his evenings at home, by showing that on several occasions he had been out in the evening with one of his fellow employes. The mere fact that Hogan may have been the possessor of a blue handkerchief with white dots was of little significance. It does not appear to be questioned that such handkerchiefs were quite common in San Francisco at that time, and the important thing in regard to the handkerchief found on defendant was, not only that it appeared to the witnesses to be similar in color and design to that worn by the Brannan street robber, but that it also appeared to the officers, when found upon defendant, to have been twisted at two ends, so as to indicate that such ends had recently been knotted together. The showing tending to impeach Hogan's evidence as to his habit of staying at home evenings was very slight, and altogether entitled to little, if any, weight in the determination of the motion by the trial court.

[7] A more important matter, probably, was the showing tending to affect the evidence given by the witness Heffernan, the witness who positively identified defendant as being the man in company with Burke at the corner of Sixth and Brannan streets a few minutes before the shooting. This testimony of Heffernan was very important to the prosecution, as he was the witness who on the trial most positively identified defendant as being in the company of Burke on that night. So far as the new evidence tended to show Heffernan to be a man unworthy of credit, it need only be said that very little was thereby added to what had been shown on the trial, and the trial court was amply warranted in concluding that even that little was so explained by the counter affidavits as to make the showing of no importance.

The real question in regard to the Heffernan matter arises from the discovery by defendant's attorney of the fact that Heffernan saw Burke in the O'Connell saloon on the night of November 14th, about 10 o'clock, when Burke came in with another man, about five feet six inches in height, and of light complexion, and had a drink at the bar, and that he could not tell whether or not such other man was the defendant. Heffernan's affidavit to this effect was presented by defendant on the motion for a new trial. He had not been questioned about this when examined on the trial, the defendant having no reason to suspect that he had seen Burke on November 14th. The importance of this testimony lay in the fact that the two men so visiting the O'Connell saloon on the night of November 14th were the same men whom Poole testified to seeing at the Buffalo Hotel door that night, and thereafter in the O'Connell saloon, one of whom, he said, resembled the defendant in appearance, and were possibly the two men referred to in the testimony of Mrs. O'Connell, and also in the doubt that might reasonably arise concerning the identification by Heffernan on the night of the 15th, if he was unable to identify the same man on the night of November 14th. There were also presented the affidavits of counsel for defendant, to the effect that Heffernan had stated to them, first in July, 1907, and again in January, 1908, when questioned by them, that he had looked particularly at the features of the smaller man of the two in O'Connell's saloon, on November 14th, and that such smaller man was not the defendant, and that he in fact resembled Hogan more than defendant, but that on the latter occasion he would not say whether he was Hogan "or looked like Hogan." No counter showing was made to rebut the statement made by counsel in these affidavits.

We have given the claims of learned counsel as to the showing in this behalf our most earnest consideration, but cannot escape the conclusion that we are not warranted in disturbing the action of the trial court thereon. Heffernan, who was examined and cross-examined at great length on the trial, did not appear to have in any way changed his views as to the identity of the man whom he saw with Burke on the evening of November 15th, or to have made any statement inconsistent with his testimony in that regard given on the trial. That he should be able to identify the man he saw on November 15th just a few minutes before the shooting, while not able to say he was the same man he saw in the saloon the night before, is not at all incredible, and the judge of the trial court was better able than we are to determine as to the probable and proper effect of such an inability on his part. It is not at all clear that the man with Burke in O'Connell's saloon on November 14th, whom Poole and Heffernan saw, was the same man whom Mrs. O'Connell saw with Burke that evening. In fact, the testimony of Poole and Mrs. O'Connell rather indicates that they were speaking of different periods of time, Poole seeing his two men go to the Buffalo Hotel door after the place had closed for the night, and Mrs. O'Connell seeing her two men enter that place before it was closed. It may well be that the man in the O'Connell saloon on November 14th, who, according to Poole, was not Hogan, and resembled defendant, was not the defendant at all, and that Heffernan was correct in his evidence given on the trial to the effect that he had never seen defendant prior to the night of November 15th. Assuming, then, that it could be clearly shown that the man who was with Burke in O'Connell's saloon on November 14th, was not the defendant, and also was not Hogan, as is established by Poole's evidence, it cannot be doubted that the question of the probable and proper effect of such showing, as well as the question arising because of inconsistencies in statements made by Heffernan, were exclusively for the trial court.

This disposes of all substantial claims in regard to newly discovered evidence. Learned counsel say substantially that if the showing here made is not sufficient to require a reversal, it is difficult to conceive of a case where such a showing can be made. This we are by no means prepared to concede. But it is undoubtedly true, in view of the settled law relative to the discretion of the trial judge in the disposition of motions based on this ground, that such cases will necessarily be rare.

[8] While allowing such motions, it is the settled rule in this state, based on the soundest reasons of expediency and public policy, that the decision thereon of the trial court, the tribunal best fitted to correctly determine as to the genuineness and effectiveness of the showing, shall be conclusive in the absence of a clear showing of abuse of discretion. The record in the case at bar shows that the trial judge allowed the defendant unusual opportunity for the making of his showing in support of his motion, and apparently gave most careful consideration to the same and to the argument of counsel in support thereof. The case is not such as to warrant us in holding that he was wrong in his conclusion.

[9] Evidence of Captain Duke, Sergeant Regan, and Sergeant O'Connell was admitted, to the effect that while defendant, McGee and Morrissey, were in the patrol wagon at Sixth and Brannan streets, Poole told Captain Duke that he had the right man in the wagon, the one in the middle. According to Regan, Poole pointed at defendant while he spoke, and said, further, "I saw this man with Burke last night, trying Garry Welch's door." Duke also testified to the latter statement, all agreeing that defendant remained silent in the face of Poole's statement. Up to this time, defendant had not been formally arrested for this crime or searched, but had simply been taken in charge, with McGee and Morrissey, for further investigation. This evidence was received on the theory that defendant's silence in the face of the accusation was proper as tending to show a tacit admission on his part of the truth of the accusation. It has been uniformly held in this state that an accusation may naturally call for a reply even from a person under arrest. Whether the circumstances are such as to make the failure to reply proper evidence tending to show an admission, is, in the first instance, a question for the trial court.

[10] We are of the opinion that the evidence here was sufficient to support a conclusion on the part of the trial court that it, prima facie, showed that Poole's statement was made in the presence and hearing of defendant, that defendant understood its meaning and bearing, that it was one that might under all the circumstances shown be held to naturally call for some action or reply on his part, and that the occasion and circumstances were such as to afford him an opportunity for reply. This being so, the evidence was admissible as tending to show an admission by defendant (see People v. Amaya, 134 Cal. 531, 536, 66 Pac. 794), the question of its weight in that behalf being purely for the jury. While the record does not indicate to us that defendant's silence under such circumstances would be considered of much importance, we cannot say that there was error in the admission of the evidence. It should be remarked in this connection that defendant, in his evidence, said that after he had been taken from the wagon, Poole said in his presence and hearing, "He looks like the man, looks like the fellow that was with Burke last night," or something to that effect, and that he replied to Poole: "Now, you make sure, and don't say it was me unless you are positive." The record indicates that defendant was speaking of the same occasion that was testified to by the officers, for it may well be concluded therefrom that Poole made only one statement in regard to the matter. According to his own testimony, then, he did hear what Poole said, apparently understood it, and deemed the situation such as to call for a reply.

[11] We have no doubt that a defendant against whom evidence of a failure to deny an accusation has been introduced, is entitled to show as a circumstance tending to explain his silence and rebut any possible prejudicial effect thereof, that he had within a few minutes previous thereto denied a similar accusation to the police officers who had him in charge at the time of the making of the second accusation. That he had already so recently fully denied an accusation to such officers might be considered a circumstance tending to explain failure to deny the second accusation, made by another party.

[12] Both Sergeant Regan and Captain Duke were asked on cross-examination to detail any conversation had with defendant in the Sullivan saloon prior to first taking him to the corner of Brannan and Sixth streets, and objections of the district attorney on the ground that the proposed evidence was "incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial, and not cross-examination and calling for self-serving declarations" were sustained. No evidence had been given by either of them on direct examination as to any conversation in Sullivan's saloon. It is claimed here that the object of counsel in asking these questions was to show a denial of participation in the attempted robbery and murder for the purpose of explaining defendant's silence in the face of the accusation made by Poole. It is doubtful if any such purpose was as clearly stated to the trial court as it should have been. Certainly there was no intimation in the lower court and there is no claim here that it was expected to show that anything had been said in the conversation in Sullivan's saloon in relation to the matter of defendant being with Burke the night before, which was really the whole effect of Poole's accusation, as testified to by both Duke and Regan. In effect, Poole had simply said that he had seen defendant with Burke the night before, and that consequently he must be the right man. The showing of a mere previous denial by defendant of participation in the attempted robbery and murder would not have tended to explain his silence in the face of the charge that he was with Burke the night before. It is therefore manifest that defendant could not have been prejudiced by a refusal to allow him to show a previous denial of participation in the attempted robbery and murder.

[13] There was no error in admitting in evidence the pistol found under the steps leading to Sullivan's rear entrance. It had been sufficiently identified as the pistol that had been used by the Brannan street robber and that had caused O'Connell's death.

We find no prejudicial error in the action of the trial court in striking out portions of the affidavits presented on motion for a new trial. There was no error in the rulings on cross-examination of Thomas Hogan and Catherine Hogan or in the action of the court in the matter of instructions.

We find no other matter requiring mention.

The judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.; HENSHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.; MELVIN, J.

(160 Cal. 143)

DAVIS v. HEARST et al. (L. A. 2,509.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 6, 1911.
Rehearing Denied July 6, 1911.)

1. LIBEL AND SLANDER (§ 4*)—CIVIL ACTION—ELEMENTS—MALICE—"LIBEL."

Civ. Code, § 45, defines "libel" which may be the subject of a civil action for damages as a false and unprivileged publication by writing, printing, picture, effigy, or other fixed representation to the eye, which exposes any person to hatred, contempt, ridicule, or obloquy, or which causes him to be shunned or avoided, or has a tendency to injure him in his occupation. Held, that malice, under such definition, is not an ingredient of a cause of action for a civil libel, and that a recovery of full and compensatory damages may be had, though absence of malice is proved.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Libel and Slander, Cent. Dig. § 111; Dec. Dig. § 4.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 5, pp. 4112-4125.]

2. LIBEL AND SLANDER (§ 154*)—CRIMINAL PROSECUTION—ELEMENTS OF OFFENSE—MALICE—"LIBEL."

Pen. Code, § 248, defines "libel," the basis of a criminal prosecution, to consist of a malicious defamation, expressed either by writing, printing, signs, pictures, or the like, tending to blacken the memory of one who is dead, or to impeach the honesty, integrity, virtue, or reputation, or publish the natural or alleged defects of one who is alive, and thereby expose him to public hatred, contempt, or ridicule. Held, that while malice is an essential element of the offense of libel so defined, prima facie proof of such malice is made by evidence that an injurious publication concerning another has been made without justifiable motive, whereupon the law presumes malice sufficient to support a criminal charge, as provided by section 250.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Libel and Slander, Cent. Dig. § 429; Dec. Dig. § 154.*]

3. LIBEL AND SLANDER (§ 4*)—CIVIL LIABILITY—COMPENSATORY DAMAGES—MALICE.

Since malice is not a necessary ingredient of a civil libel, nor essential to a full recovery of compensatory damages, a newspaper publisher was equally liable for compensatory damages, whether the libel was malicious or resulted from mere inadvertence, as from a proof reader's or compositor's error, or from a clerical mispension.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Libel and Slander, Cent. Dig. § 111; Dec. Dig. § 4.*]

4. WORDS AND PHRASES—"MALICE"—"MALICE IN FACT"—"MALICE IN LAW."

"Malice," as usually understood, has its foundation in ill will, and is evidenced by an attempt wrongfully to vex, injure, or annoy another. This is "malice in fact," and is that referred to in Pen. Code, § 7, subd. 4, declaring that the words "malice" and "maliciously" import a wish to vex, annoy, or injure another person. There is another sort of malice, the presumption of the existence of which is raised by the law in certain cases on certain proofs, and this is the malice described in the same section as "an intent to do a wrongful act, established either by proof or presumption of law." This is a malice of pleading and proof made necessary by the exigencies of definitions of offenses against the law, and may exist with malice in fact, but may also exist independent thereof, and in some instances is conclusively presumed against a defendant, while in others the presumption is rebuttable.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 5, pp. 4298-4304; vol. 8, pp. 7712, 7713; vol. 5, pp. 4306, 4307.]

5. LIBEL AND SLANDER (§ 154*)—CRIMINAL PROSECUTION—MALICE.

In a criminal prosecution for libel, the malice essential to establish the offense is presumed from the injurious publication alone, but such presumption is disputable and may be overcome by establishing a justifiable motive, as provided by Pen. Code, § 250.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Libel and Slander, Cent. Dig. § 429; Dec. Dig. § 154.*]

6. LIBEL AND SLANDER (§ 120*)—MALICE—EXEMPLARY DAMAGES—STATUTES—CONSTRUCTION—"EXPRESS OR IMPLIED."

Civ. Code, § 3294, permits exemplary damages in an action not arising from contract, where the defendant has been guilty of oppression, fraud, or malice, express or implied. Held, that the words "express or implied," as used in such section, have reference only to the evidence by which the malice is established, and that such section does not authorize exemplary damages for libel, in the absence of proof of malice in fact, as distinguished from malice in law, consisting of the actual existence of hatred and ill will, actuating the defendant in the publication.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Libel and Slander, Cent. Dig. §§ 350, 351; Dec. Dig. § 120.*]

7. LIBEL AND SLANDER (§ 112*)—EXEMPLARY DAMAGES—MALICE—PROOF.

While malice in fact is essential to exemplary damages in a civil action for libel, it may be proved either by direct or circumstantial evidence.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Libel and Slander, Cent. Dig. §§ 325-341; Dec. Dig. § 112.*]

8. LIBEL AND SLANDER (§ 51*)—"MALICE"—INFERENCE FROM PUBLICATION—"PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATION."

Civ. Code, § 47, defines a "privileged communication" as one without malice, to a person interested therein, by one who is also interested; one who stands in such relation to the person interested as to afford a reasonable ground for supposing the motive innocent, or who is requested by the person interested to give the information; and section 48 declares that the "malice" so referred to is not inferred from the communication or publication. Held, that "malice" as used in section 47 meant malice in fact, or a libel published with an actual, malicious intent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Libel and Slander, Cent. Dig. §§ 149-150; Dec. Dig. § 51.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 6, pp. 5591-5598; vol. 8, p. 7764.]

9. LIBEL AND SLANDER (§ 120*)—EXEMPLARY DAMAGES—MALICE—PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.

Since malice in fact must be shown to exist in every case before an award of exemplary damages may be made against a defendant, a principal may not be held in such damages for the act of his agent, unless the particular act is within the principal's specific directions or general suggestions, or the act is subsequently ratified.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Libel and Slander, Cent. Dig. §§ 350, 351; Dec. Dig. § 120.*]

10. LIBEL AND SLANDER (§ 120*)—NEWSPAPER PUBLICATION—EXEMPLARY DAMAGES—LIABILITY OF PUBLISHER.

Where the proprietor of a newspaper has given his subordinates carte blanche to do anything and everything that will make the paper a financial success and demonstrate its superior enterprise as a news disseminator, the proprietor's authority to publish libels might be inferred, and would afford strong evidence of malice in fact on which to base a recovery of exemplary damages against the proprietor, though he had no personal knowledge of the particular libel.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Libel and Slander, Cent. Dig. §§ 350, 351; Dec. Dig. § 120.*]

11. LIBEL AND SLANDER (§ 120*)—NEWSPAPER PUBLICATION—MALICE IN FACT.

Malice in fact, to authorize a recovery of exemplary damages against the proprietor of a newspaper for the publication of a libel, is not imputable merely from the act of an employé in making such publication.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Libel and Slander, Cent. Dig. §§ 350, 351; Dec. Dig. § 120.*]

12. LIBEL AND SLANDER (§ 101*)—MALICE—BURDEN OF PROOF.

The burden of proving malice in fact, to sustain a recovery of exemplary damages against a newspaper publisher for a libel, is on the plaintiff.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Libel and Slander, Cent. Dig. §§ 273-280; Dec. Dig. § 101.*]

13. LIBEL AND SLANDER (§ 123*)—EXEMPLARY DAMAGES—MALICE—QUESTION FOR JURY.

Whether malice in fact, sufficient to authorize a recovery of exemplary damages in an action for libel, has been proved is for the jury, except that the court, in a proper case, may instruct that there is such an absence of evidence of malice in fact as to forbid exemplary damages.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Libel and Slander, Cent. Dig. § 363; Dec. Dig. § 123.*]

14. LIBEL AND SLANDER (§ 112*)—MALICE IN FACT—EVIDENCE.

In an action for libel, malice in fact may be proved by direct evidence, such as declarations, acts, and conduct of the defendant showing personal ill will toward plaintiff, or by circumstances indicating a general course of conduct, including the internal evidence furnished by the character of the libel, from which the existence of actual malice may be logically inferred.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Libel and Slander, Cent. Dig. §§ 325-341; Dec. Dig. § 112.*]

15. LIBEL AND SLANDER (§ 5*)—MALICE IN FACT—PRESUMPTIONS.

The legal presumption of malice in fact in an action for libel does not arise from the mere falsity and libelous character of the publication, though it may be inferred from the intrinsic evidence of malice which the publication affords, since the presumption referred to by Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, that an unlawful act was done with an unlawful intent, and that a person intends the ordinary consequences of his voluntary act, so far as libel is concerned, refers to malice in law, and not to malice in fact.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Libel and Slander, Cent. Dig. § 278; Dec. Dig. § 5.*]

16. LIBEL AND SLANDER (§ 5*)—MALICE IN FACT—PRESUMPTION.

The only presumption touching malice in fact, as applied to the law of libel, is that prescribed by Code Civ. Proc. § 1962, declaring as a conclusive presumption the existence of a malicious and guilty intent from the deliberate commission of an unlawful act for the purpose of injuring another; such presumption arising only after the jury has found the commission of an unlawful act; that its commission was deliberate; and that it was committed with a deliberate purpose of injuring another.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Libel and Slander, Cent. Dig. § 278; Dec. Dig. § 5.*]

17. LIBEL AND SLANDER (§ 101*)—NEWSPAPER PUBLICATION—OWNER'S LIABILITY—EXEMPLARY DAMAGES.

It was no defense to a newspaper owner's liability for exemplary damages for the publication of a libel that he was absent from the state at the time the libelous articles were published and had no foreknowledge thereof; the burden being on him also to prove that the publications were unauthorized, either by general or particular instructions, and that neither by act nor conduct did he ratify them when he learned of their publication.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Libel and Slander, Cent. Dig. §§ 273-280; Dec. Dig. § 101.*]

18. LIBEL AND SLANDER (§ 120*)—EXEMPLARY DAMAGES—JOINT TORT-FEASORS.

Civ. Code, § 3333, provides that for breach of an obligation not arising from contract the measure of damages, except where otherwise expressly provided, is the amount which will compensate for all the detriment proximately caused thereby. Held, that though in an action for a joint tort there can be no apportionment of damages, yet where the proof of malice in fact, authorizing the recovery of exemplary damages, exists only as to part of the defendants, compensatory damages may be assessed against all the joint tort-feasors found culpable, and a specific sum, or sums, by way of exemplary damages, may be assessed against each of the tort-feasors actuated by malice in fact.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Libel and Slander, Dec. Dig. § 120.*]

19. LIBEL AND SLANDER (§ 124*)—EXEMPLARY DAMAGES—INSTRUCTIONS.

Where exemplary damages were sought to be recovered for libel as against a newspaper publisher and a reporter, an instruction that the proprietor of a newspaper in which a libel is published, though he has no knowledge of the publication at the time, is as responsible for it as he would have been had it been done by him personally, or under his direct supervision, and it is no defense that it was published in his absence by an employé, however competent, while abstractly correct as to the law governing the award of compensatory damages, was misleading, in so far as the case involved exemplary damages.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Libel and Slander, Dec. Dig. § 124.*]

20. LIBEL AND SLANDER (§ 124*)—EXEMPLARY DAMAGES—MALICE—INSTRUCTIONS.

Since exemplary damages in an action for libel can only be recovered on proof of malice in fact, an instruction that malice in law consisted in that which the law regards as a sufficient invasion of plaintiff's rights to sustain exemplary damages, by reason of the carelessness, negligence, or willful disregard of plaintiff's rights, was erroneous.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Libel and Slander, Dec. Dig. § 124.*]

21. LIBEL AND SLANDER (§ 124*)—INSTRUCTION.

Since exemplary damages are wholly within the discretion of the jury, and on the clearest proof of malice in fact in an action for libel the jury may still refuse them, an instruction that on the jury's finding malice in fact plaintiff was "entitled" to recover exemplary damages was erroneous.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Libel and Slander, Dec. Dig. § 124.*]

22. LIBEL AND SLANDER (§ 124*)—EXEMPLARY DAMAGES—MALICE—INSTRUCTIONS—PRESUMPTIONS.

An instruction that defendant was permitted to show the lack of express malice, and such circumstances by way of mitigation as would "overcome the presumption, raised by law, of malice," by showing all the steps taken by him prior to the publication of the libel to learn the truth of the charge, or to relieve him entirely from exemplary damages, or reduce the amount of exemplary damages which the jury may decide to assess, was erroneous under the rule that malice in fact is the only malice sufficient to sustain a recovery of exemplary damages, which malice cannot be presumed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Libel and Slander, Dec. Dig. § 124.*]

23. LIBEL AND SLANDER (§ 111*)—CIRCUMSTANCES IN MITIGATION—EVIDENCE—MALICE IN FACT.

Circumstances in mitigation in an action for libel may be pleaded and proved, ordinarily to overcome evidence of malice in fact, and ordinarily have no other place in an action for libel; the exceptions being when offered in mitigation to rebut evidence of special damage, and evidence of bad reputation to lessen the award of compensatory damages.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Libel and Slander, Cent. Dig. §§ 315-324; Dec. Dig. § 111.*]

24. LIBEL AND SLANDER (§ 124*)—INSTRUCTIONS—LIBELOUS CHARGE—REPUBLICATION.

An instruction that, when a defendant republishes a libelous charge by making it a record of the court, he does so at his own risk, and if at the trial he fails to prove the truth of parts of the record alleged in his answer, and did not in good faith expect to prove the truth, he intensifies the original wrong, was not misleading as declaring that in such cases the republication of the language implied an increase of compensatory damages; whereas, it was to be considered only as evidence of the existence of malice to support the award of compensatory damages.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Libel and Slander, Dec. Dig. § 124.*]

25. LIBEL AND SLANDER (§ 111*)—EVIDENCE—RUMORS.

Where alleged libelous articles asserted the existence of rumors reflecting on plaintiff, evidence of the existence and character of the rumors was inadmissible in mitigation of compensatory damages, or to negative malice in fact as a basis for exemplary damages.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Libel and Slander, Cent. Dig. §§ 315-324; Dec. Dig. § 111.*]

26. LIBEL AND SLANDER (§ 111*)—REPUTATION—EVIDENCE—RUMORS.

Though defendant in an action for libel may impeach plaintiff's reputation generally, or as to the particular qualities embraced in the libel, to mitigate compensatory damages, he may not do so by showing either rumors of general ill repute, or rumors of ill repute as to the particular matter charged in the libel.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Libel and Slander, Cent. Dig. §§ 315-324; Dec. Dig. § 111.*]

27. LIBEL AND SLANDER (§ 124*)—LIBELOUS PUBLICATION—REFERENCE TO PLAINTIFF—INSTRUCTION.

Where an alleged libelous publication was not ambiguous in so far as its reference to plaintiff was concerned, whether it did refer to plaintiff was for the jury to determine, and the court properly charged that the jury must not return a verdict for plaintiff, unless they were convinced by the evidence that the matter referred to, or was understood by readers to refer to plaintiff, and properly refused to charge that, if any of the defamatory matter referred to the board of education of the city where the libel was published at a time when plaintiff was not a member of the board, they should not consider it, except with the modification, "unless the readers of defendant's paper understood and had reasonable right to understand from the wording of the article that the text and context of the several parts referred to plaintiff."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Libel and Slander, Dec. Dig. § 124.*]

28. LIBEL AND SLANDER (§ 105*)—EVIDENCE—ACTUAL INTENT.

In an action for libel, defendant's actual intent to charge plaintiff is material only where the reference to plaintiff is so veiled, obscure, and ambiguous that the jury cannot say, without extrinsic evidence, that plaintiff was aimed at and was injured, and where defendant seeks in mitigation to repel the charge of malice in fact.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Libel and Slander, Cent. Dig. § 283; Dec. Dig. § 105.*]

29. LIBEL AND SLANDER (§ 105*)—LIBELOUS PUBLICATION—REFERENCE TO PLAINTIFF—EVIDENCE.

Where an alleged libel was not ambiguous as to its application to plaintiff, evidence that readers understood the article to refer to plaintiff was immaterial.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Libel and Slander, Cent. Dig. § 283; Dec. Dig. § 105.*]

30. LIBEL AND SLANDER (§ 103*)—REPUTATION—PROOF OF GOOD REPUTATION.

Affirmative evidence of plaintiff's good reputation in advance of any attack thereon by defendant, is inadmissible in an action for libel.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Libel and Slander, Dec. Dig. § 103.*]

31. LIBEL AND SLANDER (§ 124*)—PLAIN-TIFF'S REPUTATION—INSTRUCTION.

In an action for libel, an instruction that there had been evidence as to plaintiff's reputation prior to the publications in question, and that it was for the jury to determine from the evidence whether plaintiff bore a good reputation for honesty and integrity in the community where he lived prior to the publication, and that a man with a good reputation for integrity and honesty could be more seriously damaged by such publication than would a man having a bad reputation for honesty and integrity, was erroneous, since defendants, not having attacked plaintiff's reputation in advance of plaintiff's introduction of evidence to sustain the same, were entitled to have the case go to the jury on plaintiff's presumed reputation for honesty and integrity alone.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Libel and Slander, Dec. Dig. § 124.*]

32. LIBEL AND SLANDER (§ 103*)—EVIDENCE—SCOPE.

Where, in an action for libel consisting of a newspaper publication referring to plaintiff's acts as a member of a board of education, the headlines stated that the "exposures made by Examiner (the newspaper) were found to be true," though the body of the article seemed to contain but one specific matter, which the mayor had investigated, plaintiff was not limited to an examination of the mayor concerning the single specific matter, but was properly permitted to ask him whether in the investigation of the affairs of the school board he found any school graft, or graft at all, and whether he had found any misappropriation of moneys or school funds.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Libel and Slander, Dec. Dig. § 103.*]

33. LIBEL AND SLANDER (§ 15*)—NEWSPAPER PUBLICATION—CAPTIONS AND HEADLINES.

The captions and headlines of a libelous newspaper article are a part of the libel.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Libel and Slander, Dec. Dig. § 15.*]

34. LIBEL AND SLANDER (§ 100*)—MATTER IN MITIGATION—PLEADING—NECESSITY.

Code Civ. Proc. § 461, provides that in libel defendant in his answer may allege, both the truth of the matter charged as defamatory and any mitigating circumstances, to reduce the amount of damages, and whether he prove the justification or not he may give in evidence the mitigating circumstances. Held, that such section should not be construed to mean that, whenever any circumstances in mitigation going to the truth of the charge are relied on, they must be pleaded, but to require that if a defendant pleads justification he may at the same time plead with his affirmation of good faith and honest belief all facts and circumstances within his knowledge at the time of the publication which support that knowledge and belief, even if they tend to establish the truth of the charge; that if he desires to plead justification, and also truth or partial truth in mitigation, he must plead such facts and circumstances in mitigation, in which event they will be considered on the question of malice, even though proof of justification fail, and that, while evidence tending to prove the truth of the charge must be pleaded, all other circumstances in mitigation, not tending to establish the truth, may be proved without being pleaded.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Libel and Slander, Cent. Dig. §§ 246-272; Dec. Dig. § 100.*]

35. TRIAL (§ 241*)—INSTRUCTIONS—DISCUSSION OF DIFFERENT CASE.

An instruction consisting of an argumentative discussion by the Supreme Court of the law of qualified privilege as a defense to libel, taken from an opinion in another case, was improper.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 562, 563; Dec. Dig. § 241.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; F. W. Houser, Judge.

Action by M. W. Davis against William Randolph Hearst and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed and remanded.

Davis & Rush and Garret W. McEnerney (Andrew F. Burke, of counsel), for appellants. J. H. Merriam and Edwin A. Meserve, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. Plaintiff brought this action to recover damages for certain alleged libelous matters published of and concerning him in the Los Angeles Examiner. Of the defendants, W. R. Hearst is the proprietor and publisher of the paper, Henry Lowenthal the business manager, and James T. Belcher a reporter and author of the defamatory articles. Trial was had before a jury. The action was dismissed as to the defendant Lowenthal, and proceeded to verdict and judgment against the remaining defendants. The verdict awarded plaintiff compensatory damages in the sum of $10,000, and exemplary damages in the sum of $25,000, against both defendants. The judgment followed the verdict.

The complaint contained three causes of action, based upon three separate publications, one and all directed against the acts and conduct of plaintiff as a member of the board of education of the city of Pasadena and the clerk of that board. The first publication was made upon September 13th, under headlines declaring that the "School Board Faces Rigid Investigation.

"Demand for Inquiry into Mismanagement and Waste of Public Money May be Made."

The article itself purported to deal with the exposure which the Examiner had made "of the extravagance and reckless, if not criminal, waste, of public school funds by the Pasadena Board of Education." It declared that it was an easily demonstrated fact that there had been bad management, "if nothing worse," in connection with the erection of almost every school building during the past few years, and that rumors had been rife for many months reflecting upon the management of the public business by the board of education. It asserted that the school board "had been braggingly active in politics," had furnished misleading reports to the press, and that charges of favoritism in the awarding of public contracts had been hinted at time and time again. It asserted the existence of a growing distrust amongst the people touching the management by the board of education of the affairs intrusted to it. It declared that whenever there had been such a report of trouble in connection with the construction of a new school the secretary, M. W. Davis, and other members of the board, when appealed to, falsely asserted that there was nothing amiss, and that "something more than mere denial will be necessary to explain the waste of so many thousands of dollars in the Garfield school, money which was wasted as completely as if it had been actually thrown into the public streets." It also declared that as soon as the Examiner's exposure became known the board of education put in practice its "usual tactics" of making excuses through a friendly press, "with the evident purpose of hiding the real seriousness of the case." It stated that "the Examiner's articles have charged plainly and unqualifiedly" certain enumerated matters showing extravagance, incompetency, and waste of the public funds.

The second cause of action sets forth the publication of another article upon the day following, which is here quoted at length.

"School Graft Would Make a Ruef Blush.
Pasadena Citizen Declares Education Board Has Juggled Funds for Years.

"Pasadena, Sept. 14.—No matter what may be the outcome of the evident waste of public funds by the Board of Education, there is hope that the people of Pasadena have at last awakened to the necessity of demanding a more general and satisfactory explanation of the way the School Board attends to its public duties. There is no longer any concealment of the fact that there have been ugly stories afloat concerning the alleged misconduct in office of men who were expected to be protecting the public school interests. It is true that there have been allegations of 'graft' made freely in connection with almost every expenditure of the school funds for several years past, both with the present and previous Boards of Education.

"The members of the Board at present are Benjamin E. Page, who is also president; M. W. Davis, who is the clerk; C. E. Chamberlain, J. B. Beardsley and W. W. Ogier. The last two were elected recently to succeed D. W. Lewis of North Pasadena and C. M. Parker, who had served terms of four years each. Messrs. Ogier and Beardsley have had nothing to do with the erection or awarding of contracts for the building of any new schools since their induction in office, although they are officially connected with the later questionable transactions at the Garfield schools.

"With the uncovering of the manner in which money has been expended in this connection, there is a revival of alleged mismanagement and waste of public money at other school buildings. These reports are numerous. At the Lincoln School, for instance, the fact is pointed out that sewer pipe of vitrified brick was laid in face of the advice of men familiar with such work and such material. The School Board was advised to install iron pipes that would last a lifetime, but they decided to lay vitrified brick. Even Contractor Buckins, who had the job, recommended iron pipes, which would have cost but a small sum more than the brick. No attention was paid to these recommendations, and after a period of about three years new pipe had to be laid to replace the original pipe, as the latter had become worthless.

"At the McKinley School even a more serious mistake was made, a mistake that imperiled the health of several hundred children. 'Fresh air' was carried into the school rooms that was carried across the heaters in the toilet rooms.

"Every well informed citizen in Pasadena William H. Reeves, who has had much to do with the new school buildings in connection with his official duties, 'that the condition of affairs in the different school buildings is simply rotten. That is all there is to it.'

"As usual it is difficult to have proper officials discuss the situation for publication, but a man familiar with the Board of Education's method of doing business during the past four years, said today to the 'Examiner' correspondent:

"Every well informed citizen in Pasadena is aware that school funds have been recklessly wasted for years past. The members of the Board seem to feel that they are not responsible to anybody for what they may do. They prate of providing for the future needs of the schools, while as a matter of undeniable fact, they have never kept within years of the present needs. There has been scandal in connection with every school building erected in recent years, members of the Board have scorned the advice of men informed as builders and architects, and yet they seem never to have profited by their past mistakes. If some citizens of standing would bestir themselves and force an open and public investigation, some of these gentlemen of the School Board might feel inclined to hang their heads in shame. It is simply incredible that the taxpayers will tolerate the misuses of money that should go for the education of the boys and girls in this city. Every dollar that is wasted, as money has evidently been wasted in the Garfield Schools, is nothing more or less than robbing the rising generation of just that much educational opportunity.

"The great trouble here has been that a certain element or clique of men, whose integrity is not so immaculate that we may not even look at it, have sneered at the people and laughed at all opposition and all questioning of their public acts as members or officials of the Board of Education. It is only a few years ago that members of the Board begged the taxpayers for funds for new schools, specified plainly what they wanted the money for and after getting it voted to their uses as outlined by them, they deliberately used the money for other purposes. These men are prone to talk of their integrity, but such misrepresentations and juggling of public funds would make Abe Ruef blush for shame. If the members of the Board of Education are under bonds for the efficient discharge of their public duties they should be proceeded against. If they are not under bonds, they should be compelled to give them or be forced to resign from office.

"M. W. Davis, clerk of the Board, is generally regarded as the worst offender against the public interests in connection with the schools. It is charged against Clerk Davis as an example of his manner of discharging his official duties, that in the year 1905 he was notified by Building Inspector A. C. Shaver that the plumbing in the Franklin School, that was at that time in course of construction, was not good or sanitary, and that at the time of the final inspection he would be compelled to condemn it. The Building Inspector also took occasion to notify Clerk Davis that the specifications were not being lived up to, and that the material being used was not up to the quality called for. This notice was served in writing and after verbal notice had been given. No attention was paid, as usual, but when the plumbing was condemned by the City's Inspector of Buildings, as he had notified Davis would be done, the work was changed and done over again after the building had been practically completed."

The third cause of action charged upon a publication made upon October 7th following, whose headlines read as follows:

"Mayor Investigates the Board of Education's Acts.

"Exposures Made by 'Examiner' Found to be True.

"Pasadena Council Will Act."

The body of the article declared that as the result of the exposures made in the Examiner in regard to the loose manner of "doing business that has been in vogue in the Board of Education it is reported tonight that the City Council will be asked at its meeting tomorrow to enforce more stringent regulations to protect the taxpayers.

"Upon information obtained from the 'Examiner' Mayor Earley on Saturday afternoon visited the office of City Auditor and Assessor Kellogg and inspected the bills filed in that office by M. W. Davis, member and Clerk of the Board of Education.

"The Mayor found that Clerk Davis has been making copies of all bills submitted to him, that he approves the same, swears to their correctness, and it is said, has been collecting the money and making it his personal business to pay the person holding the claim against the Board of Education. The Mayor was doubtful that such a loose practice was in vogue, but a brief conference with Auditor Kellogg convinced him of the truth of the statements that have been made in the 'Examiner' in this connection."

The complaint contained appropriate innuendos as to the meaning of the alleged libelous matter and of its designed application to plaintiff, and charged that it was published with express malice on the part of each of the defendants directed against the plaintiff. The answer by denial raised the general issue. It pleaded also justification and certain matters in mitigation. It pleaded the absence of Mr. Hearst from the city of Los Angeles and from the state of California at the time of these publications, and his employment during his absence of skilled, careful, and competent men, and that the defendant James T. Belcher was such a man. Defendants all joined in one answer, and it was specifically averred that neither the defendant Hearst nor the defendant Lowenthal had any personal knowledge whatsoever of the publication of the articles or of the statements therein contained.

The questions brought up for review upon appeal are numerous. It is impossible even to enter intelligently upon their consideration in advance of a clear understanding of certain fundamental principles, propositions, and even words, which throughout must guide, control, and govern the discussion. And it should be said that this discussion, except where it is otherwise specifically pointed out, is addressed to the civil law of libel. For at the outset it is to be remembered that not only are the defenses to a criminal libel different from those permissible in a civil action of libel, but the very definitions of civil and criminal libel vary radically.

[1] A libel upon which a civil action may be founded is: "A false and unprivileged publication by writing, printing, picture, effigy, or other fixed representation to the eye, which exposes any person to hatred, contempt, ridicule, or obloquy, or which causes him to be shunned or avoided, or which has a tendency to injure him in his occupation." Civ. Code, § 45.

[2] A libel as the foundation for a criminal action is "a malicious defamation, expressed either by writing, printing, or by signs or pictures, or the like, tending to blacken the memory of one who is dead, or to impeach the honesty, integrity, virtue, or reputation, or publish the natural or alleged defects of one who is alive, and thereby to expose him to public hatred, contempt, or ridicule." Pen. Code, § 248.

Under our law of civil libel, therefore, malice forms no ingredient of the offense, and a recovery of full compensatory damages may be had in every case, even where an absence of malice is positively established. Upon the other hand, in criminal law, malice is made a necessary ingredient of the offense, though to make prima facie proof of it it is only necessary for it to appear that an injurious publication has been made without justifiable motive. Thereupon the law raises a presumption of the malice sufficient to support the criminal charge. Pen. Code, § 250.

[3] Malice, as has been said, is not a necessary ingredient of a civil libel nor essential to the full recovery of compensatory damages. If a libel results from mere inadvertence, from a proof reader's or compositor's error, or from any clerical misprision, the liability upon the publisher is just as great, and no greater, for compensatory damages than the liability that would be cast upon him if the same publication were most evilly and malignantly designed. Civ. Code, § 3333. Thus we are brought at the outset to a consideration of the part which malice plays in actions for civil libel. Because of the many definitions which have been given to this word, of the many varying attributes which have been accredited to it, of the many jurisdictions which have been called upon to deal with the law under as many different definitions of libel itself, because, also, of the inevitable confusion which has arisen by a failure carefully to distinguish between the law of civil libel and the law of criminal libel, and, finally, because of the decisions of those jurisdictions where punitive or vindictive damages have been or are allowed without an express statute controlling the award, the word "malice," it has been aptly said, has come to be the "bugbear of the law of libel." Says Gaynor, J.: "The jumble in some modern text-books on slander and libel concerning malice, actual malice, malice in law, malice in fact, implied malice, and express malice (all derived from judicial utterances, it is true) is a striking testimony of the limitations of the human mind." Ullrich v. New York Press Co., 23 Misc. Rep. 168, 171, 50 N. Y. Supp. 788, 790. Says a learned judge, in Abrath v. Northeastern R. Co., 11 App. Cas. 247, 253: "That unfortunate word 'malice' has got into cases * * * for libel. We all know that a man may be the publisher of a libel without a particle of malice or improper motive. Therefore the case is not the same as where actual and real malice is necessary. Take the case where a person may make an untrue statement of a man in writing, not privileged on account of the occasion of its publication; he would be liable, although he had not a particle of malice against the man." And in Odgers on Libel & Slander (4th Ed.) p. 320, it is said: "It is true that the word 'malicious' is usually inserted in every definition of libel or slander, that the pleader invariably introduces it into every statement of claim, and that the older cases contain many dicta to the effect that 'malice is the gist' of an action of libel or slander. But in all these cases the word 'malice' is used in a special and technical sense; it denotes merely the absence of lawful excuse; in fact, to say that defamatory words are malicious in that sense means simply that they are unprivileged, not employed under circumstances which excuse them. But I have thought it best to drop this technical and fictitious use of the word altogether—a use which has been termed 'unfortunate' by more than one learned judge."

Malice in Law and Malice in Fact.

It has been said and cannot be said with too much emphasis, that a full recovery in compensatory damages may be had under our civil law of libel without the pleading of malice, without the proof of malice, and without the existence of malice. The doctrine that malice is the gist and essence of a charge of libel grew up in those jurisdictions where the definition of the wrong embraced the element of malice, as it still does in this state in the definition of criminal libel, and thus we find in our own cases such language as the following: "Malice in law may be defined as a wrongful act done intentionally without just cause or excuse. Such malice is necessary to the life of every cause of action for libel, and is conclusively presumed in publications of the character here involved." Childers v. Mercury Pub. Co., 105 Cal. 284, 38 Pac. 903, 45 Am. St. Rep. 40. In endeavoring to follow this case, the learned commissioner, in Taylor v. Hearst, 107 Cal. 262, 40 Pac. 392, declares: "To constitute libel, there must be malice, actual or implied, on the part of the publisher. Actual malice exists when the publication is made through motives of ill will, and with intent to injure or defame, and the law presumes malice when the article published is libelous per se. Such malice is called malice in law, and it signifies a wrongful act intentionally done." But as an evidence of the inextricable confusion which has arisen from the use of this word, it may be pointed out that in this case, while it is seemingly declared that malice existed, and that it is known as malice in law, elsewhere in the opinion it is stated that it was proved that the publication was made "by mistake and without any malice toward the plaintiff." The case itself is illustrative of the proposition that malice is not an essential to our civil law of libel, and that plaintiff's right to recover is based simply upon the tort and the damages which it has caused him, even though the tort consist of negligence, pure and simple. In Taylor v. Hearst the libelous article charged a fraud upon the public in connection with furnishing basalt blocks to the city, and accused J. W. Taylor of the fraud. A mistake had occurred. J. W. Taylor had no connection with the fraud. J. N. Taylor was the person meant to be charged. A prompt retraction and explanation was made by the newspaper upon discovery of this typographical error, completely exonerating J. W. Taylor. In the action brought by J. W. Taylor all these facts were established, with many more, showing the care of the paper in gathering the news and presenting it to the public, and by this court it was said that the libel was based wholly upon a mistake, "without any malice toward the plaintiff; the middle initial of Taylor's name being printed 'W,' when it should have been 'N'." An oft-quoted definition of malice in law is that it is a wrongful act, done intentionally, without just cause or excuse. It is plain that the act of defendant in Taylor v. Hearst did not in fact measure up to this definition, since the wrongful act was done not intentionally, but unintentionally. But in law the act did measure up to the definition, since the publication (the act) was wrongful, was intentional, and the defendant would not be permitted to rebut the presumption of malice in law by proof that the publication was misdirected. The truth is that an understanding of the law of civil libel has been much embarrassed by this fiction of legal malice. And still more has the law been complicated by the varying definitions which have been given of this legal malice.

[4] "Malice," as universally understood by the popular mind, has its foundation in ill will, and is evidenced by an attempt wrongfully to vex, injure, or annoy another. This malice may be designated "malice in fact." It is the malice described in section 7, subd. 4, of the Penal Code, where it is said: "The words 'malice' and 'maliciously' import a wish to vex, annoy or injure another person." There is still another malice, the presumption of the existence of which is raised by the law in certain cases upon certain proofs. That is the malice described in the same section of the Penal Code, when it further declares that "malice" is shown by "an intent to do a wrongful act, established either by proof or presumption of law." This a malice of pleading and proof made necessary by the exigencies of definitions of offenses against the law. This malice may exist with malice in fact; but, upon the other hand, it may exist quite independent of it. In some instances this latter malice—malice in law—is conclusively presumed against the defendant. In other instances the presumption is disputable. Thus, in those jurisdictions where malice, by force of the definition of libel, is held to be essential to the action, it is conclusively presumed from the publication.

[5] In our own criminal action, it is presumed from the injurious publication alone, but the presumption is disputable and may be overcome by establishing a justifiable motive for the publication. Pen. Code, § 250. If any terms of description were universally understood and accurately and uniformly employed, there would be no occasion for cavil. But employed, as they are, in different jurisdictions with different meanings, all possibility of accurate reasoning and fair exposition is at once destroyed. In those jurisdictions where malice is of the essence of a civil libel, this malice is considered to be in its nature a pure legal fiction, conclusively established by proof of the falsity and nonprivileged character of the matter. This but introduces another embarrassment in the law—an embarrassment which we need not take upon ourselves, in view of the fact that neither in the pleadings nor in the proof is malice necessary to sustain a charge of civil libel. And it must very often happen that, aside from this fictional malice of the law, the constructive malice of the law, presumed from the intentional doing of a wrongful act without just reason or excuse, will exist where there is an entire absence of malice in fact, and where the tortious act of libel arose through pure negligence. The instance of Taylor v. Hearst, above cited, is typical of this class of cases. So, in Bigelow on Torts (7th Ed.) § 319, it is said: "It is indeed common to say that malice is presumed or implied upon proof of the publication; but that means nothing, and is only misleading, for the presumption or implication cannot be overthrown by evidence of want of malice. Malice touching the making of a prima facie case is only a name arbitrarily applied—simply a fiction." And Lord Justice Brett, in Clark v. Molyneux, 3 Q. B. D. 246, treating of the malice which destroys a qualifiedly privileged communication, says: "Malice does not mean malice in law, a term in pleading, but actual malice; that which is popularly called malice. * * * It has been decided that if the word 'maliciously' is omitted in a declaration for libel, and the words 'wrongfully' or 'falsely' substituted, it is sufficient, the reason being that the word 'maliciously' as used in a pleading has only a technical meaning; but here we are dealing with malice in fact, and malice then means a wrong feeling in a man's mind." So, too, most instructive is the language in Wrege v. Jones, 13 N. D. 267, 100 N. W. 705, 112 Am. St. Rep. 679, where the court is discussing the malice which the law presumes in civil actions for libel. Says the court: "But the conclusion that, because in such cases it is said that malice is conclusively presumed, evidence upon the question of actual malice (that is, as to the motive or intent with which the publication was made) is incompetent, when offered under a sufficient answer, is entirely erroneous. The malice which by legal fiction is thus presumed to exist is known as 'legal malice,' as distinguished from actual or express malice, or malice in fact. * * * In many cases there may be no malice at all, and no intent to injure, or, at most, thoughtlessness or negligence. It is well settled that in such cases the absence of actual malice will not defeat the action, and the party injured may recover his actual damages. In other words the absence of malice is never a complete defense. But where actual malice is charged in the complaint, and more than compensatory damages are claimed for the injury—and that is this case—the actual motive or intent with which the publication was made becomes an important, and indeed a vital, fact, from which to determine the amount of damages to be awarded." But still further to complicate the consideration, even greater confusion results from the fact that in some jurisdictions the malice which is a legal fiction is termed "implied malice," as in New York, where the definition of libel is "a malicious publication," etc. See Ullrich v. New York Press Co., 23 Misc. Rep. 168, 50 N. Y. Supp. 788; Van Ingen v. Star Co., 1 App. Div. 429, 37 N. Y. Supp. 114; Walker v. Best, 107 App. Div. 304, 95 N. Y. Supp. 151; Krug v. Pitass, 162 N. Y. 154, 56 N. E. 526, 76 Am. St. Rep. 317; Prince v. Brooklyn Daily Eagle, 16 Misc. Rep. 186, 37 N. Y. Supp. 250. In the last case cited, a protest against the misuse and confounding of terms is voiced in the following language: "The confusion in respect of the meaning of the word 'malice' in actions for libel and slander, involved in trying to distinguish between two kinds of malice, whereas there is and can be in such actions only one kind, seems to be preserved now only because it has existed so long, even though against many protests. The only malice there is in actions for libel or slander is such as is proved. When such malice exists, punitive damages may be given for it."

It must therefore be apparent without more prolonged exposition that even our own law of libel cannot be satisfactorily discussed without an understanding of the meaning that is to be given to words and phrases; and we shall, for the purposes of this discussion, define malice as it is defined by section 7 of the Penal Code—a state of mind arising from hatred or ill will, evidencing a willingness to vex, annoy, or injure another person. We shall call this "malice in fact." We shall bear in mind that it may be established either by direct proof of the state of mind of the person, or by indirect evidence so satisfying to the jury that they may from it infer and find the existence of this malice in fact.

We shall define "malice in law" as being that malice which the law presumes (either conclusively or disputably) to exist upon the production of certain designated evidence, which malice may be fictional and constructive merely, and which, arising as it usually does from what is conceived to be the necessity of proof following a pleading, which in turn follows a definition, is to be always distinguished from true malice or malice in fact. The following brief quotations—and they could be indefinitely multiplied—will show how the courts have been compelled to struggle with the meanings and definitions of malice. In Hemmens v. Nelson, 138 N. Y. 517, 34 N. E. 342, 20 L. R. A. 440, the court was speaking of the malice necessary to be shown in an action for words uttered under a qualified privilege (the malice which we have designated "malice in fact"), and it says: "This kind of malice which overcomes and destroys the privilege is of course quite distinct from that which the law in the first instance imputes with respect to every defamatory charge, irrespective of motive." And in Templeton v. Graves, 59 Wis. 95, 17 N. W. 672, the court, discussing what we have termed "malice in fact," under the designation of "express malice," says: "Such malice may be inferred from all the circumstances of the case; indeed, it would ordinarily be very difficult to prove its existence by direct evidence. But it is not to be inferred from the facts alone that the words are false and injurious to the plaintiff, although malice is implied from those facts."

Exemplary Damages.

[6] It has been said that malice is not a necessary ingredient, and is no part of the gist, of our civil action for malice. No particular harm can be worked by the declaration that malice is a necessary part of every action for libel, if it be understood that the particular malice there referred to is the constructive or fictional malice which we have designated "malice in law." There is, however, a general provision of the law allowing punitive damages in the discretion of the jury, in an action not arising from contract; in other words, in any action sounding in tort, "where the defendant has been guilty of oppression, fraud, or malice, express or implied." Civ. Code, § 3294. Enough has been said to show what a fertile field for error is the language just quoted, when attempt is made to apply it to malice, express or implied, under all their varying definitions. Thus "express malice" is sometimes employed synonymously with what we have designated "malice in fact." Implied malice is as frequently used to designate the fictional malice of the law. So construed, section 3294 of the Civil Code, would allow damages in libel suits in any and every case without regard to the actual existence of malice in fact. The manifest injustice of such an interpretation becomes at once apparent, when it is considered that the publisher of a libel is responsible for compensatory damages, even if the libel be published without his knowledge and against his will or assent, if so published by his authorized agents or employes. Such a construction of the law would make him also liable for punitive damages. It should be apparent that the malice, and the only malice, contemplated by section 3294 is malice in fact, and that the phrase "express or implied" has reference only to the evidence by which that malice is established; "express malice" thus meaning that the malice is established by express or direct evidence going to prove the actual existence of the hatred and ill will; "implied malice" referring to the indirect evidence from which the jury may infer the existence of this malice in fact. We say this should be evident from the reading of the section itself, under the maxim of noscitur a sociis. It is in those cases where the defendant has been guilty of oppression or fraud, or of a malice akin to oppression and fraud, that punitive damages may be awarded. But throughout the whole history of the law, whatever may be the mode of proving the existence of malice in fact, it is only upon some showing regarded by the law as adequate to establish the presence of malice in fact (that is, the motive and willingness to vex, harass, annoy, or injure) that punitive damages have ever been awarded. And this the adjudications abundantly and without controversy establish.

When consideration is paid to the fact that the sole object of an action at law is to return full compensation in terms of money for a legal wrong inflicted upon a plaintiff, and when in any action a plaintiff has been made whole, in contemplation of law, by the receipt of such an award in damages, it is indeed an anomaly to find that in any case more than full compensation may be awarded him. And it is well said in Haines v. Schultz, 50 N. J. Law, 481, 14 Atl. 488, that "the ingrafting of this notion (punitive damages) into personal suits has resulted in an anomalous rule; the doctrine of punitive damages being a sort of hybrid between a display of ethical indignation and the imposition of a criminal fine; but, whether we regard it in the one light or the other, it is the wrongful personal intention to injure that calls forth the penalty." And this is necessarily so, for the law, having made full compensation for the act, can thereafter be concerned solely with the motive of the act. The wrongful act has been redressed by full compensation. The improper motive which actuated it may be punished by an award of exemplary damages. "Malice in fact," says this court, in Childers v. Mercury Pub. Co., supra, "is only material in libel as establishing a right to recover exemplary damages, or to defeat defendant's plea that a publication is privileged." And while in the cases this malice, the existence of which we have declared to be essential to a recovery in punitive damages, is sometimes called express malice, sometimes actual malice, sometimes real malice, and sometimes true malice, it is always in its analysis malice of the one kind—the malice of the evil motive. Witcher v. Jones (Com. Pl.) 17 N. Y. Supp. 491; Union Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Thomas, 83 Fed. 803, 28 C. C. A. 96; Minter v. Bradstreet Co., 170 Mo. 486, 73 S. W. 668; 18 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law (2d Ed.) p. 1093; French v. Deane, 19 Colo. 504, 36 Pac. 609, 24 L. R. A. 387; Inman v. Ball, 65 Iowa, 543, 22 N. W. 666; Miller v. Kirby, 74 Ill. 242; Sedgwick, Dam. § 363.

[7] While such malice in fact is essential to an award of exemplary damages, it may be proved directly or indirectly; that is to say, by direct evidence of the evil motive and intent, or by legitimate inferences to be drawn from other facts and circumstances in evidence. To this proposition reference may be made to the cases of Nailor v. Ponder, 1 Marv. (Del.) 408, 41 Atl. 88, and French v. Deane, 19 Colo. 504, 36 Pac. 609, 24 L. R. A. 387. Thus, in Brewer v. Jacobs (C. C.) 22 Fed. 217, it is said: "It is express malice where the party evinces an intention to do a wrong, and implied where it is inferred from the character of the facts proven." It is precisely in this sense that the words "express" and "implied" are used in the section of the Code limiting the award of exemplary damages, and it is no other or different from the malice which must always be established to maintain an action for malicious prosecution. Thus, in Gonzales v. Cobliner, 68 Cal. 151, 8 Pac. 697, this court quotes from Harkrader v. Moore, 44 Cal. 153, to the following effect: "Malice in fact must be shown in order to support the action (malicious prosecution) * * * and while the jury may find the fact of malice from the circumstance of the want of probable cause, or from other circumstances established in the case, they are not to be told that a wrongful charge made without probable cause is per se malicious in fact." In Humphries v. Parker, 52 Me. 502, it is said: "There is no doubt that malice in fact, as distinguished from malice in law, is essential to the maintenance of an action for malicious prosecution." And the principle is recognized and announced in the English courts in such cases as Hicks v. Faulkner, 8 Q. B. Div. 167, where it is said: "It is true, as a general proposition, that want of probable cause is evidence of malice; but this general proposition is apt to be misunderstood. In an action of this description the question of malice is an independent one—of fact purely—and altogether for the consideration of the jury, and not at all for the judge. The malice necessary to be established is not even malice in law, such as may be assumed from the intentional doing of the wrongful act (see Bromage v. Prosser, per Bailey, J.), but malice in fact—malus animus—indicating that the party was actuated, either by spite or ill will towards an individual, or by indirect or improper motives, though these may be wholly unconnected with any uncharitable feeling towards anybody."

[8] It should be added that when the Civil Code (section 47) speaks of privileged publications, and in section 48 declares that malice is not inferred from the publication of such matters, it means nothing but this malice in fact, as abundantly appears from the authorities above cited, and as is expressly laid down in such cases as Hemmens v. Nelson, 138 N. Y. 517, 34 N. E. 342, 20 L. R. A. 440, and Clark v. Molyneux, 3 Q. B. Div. 246. And, finally, it should be remarked that in all classes and kinds of cases in which exemplary damages are sanctioned, there must be made to appear to the satisfaction of the jury the evil motive—the animus malus—shown by malice in fact, or by its allied malignant traits and characteristics evidenced by fraud or oppression.

Imputed Malice in Fact.

[9] Since the animus malus must be shown to exist in every case before an award in punitive damages may be made against a defendant, since the evil motive is the controlling and essential factor which justifies such an award, it follows of necessity that no principal can be held in punitive damages for the act of his agent, unless the particular act comes within the principal's specific directions or general suggestions, or unless the principal has subsequently ratified it; such ratification presupposing, it is said, original authorization. As to specific directions, of course nothing need be said.

[10, 11] Under general suggestions would come that class of cases where the policy and conduct of a newspaper show that its proprietor has given his subordinates carte blanche to do anything and everything that will make the paper a financial success and demonstrate its superior enterprise as a news disseminator. Herein is implied a willingness of the proprietor to publish libels against anybody, and it would, of course, afford strong evidence of malice in fact, closely allied to oppression, in the case of each victim. Upon this, our own cases present a line of unbroken authority, and the decisions elsewhere are overwhelming. Upon the general proposition, reference may be made to Wardrobe v. California Stage Co., 7 Cal. 118, 68 Am. Dec. 231; Nightengale v. Scannell, 18 Cal. 315; Turner v. North Beach, etc., Co., 34 Cal. 594; Wade v. Thayer, 40 Cal. 586; Warner v. S. P. Co., 113 Cal. 105, 45 Pac. 187, 54 Am. St. Rep. 327; Trabing v. California Nav. Co., 121 Cal. 137, 53 Pac. 644; Nixon v. Rauer, 66 Pac. 221; Foley v. Martin, 142 Cal. 256, 71 Pac. 165, 75 Pac. 842, 100 Am. St. Rep. 123; Railway Co. v. Prentice, 147 U. S. 101, 13 Sup. Ct. 261, 37 L. Ed. 97; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Brown, 58 Tex. 170, 44 Am. Rep. 610. While to the specific proposition that malice in fact is not imputable to the master merely from the act of the employe, reference may be made to Haines v. Schulz, 50 N. J. Law, 481, 14 Atl. 488; Detroit, etc., Co. v. McArthur, 16 Mich. 447; Eviston v. Cramer, 57 Wis. 570, 15 N. W. 760; Krug v. Pitass, 162 N. Y. 154, 56 N. E. 526, 76 Am. St. Rep. 317; Clark v. Newsam, 1 Exch. 131; State v. Mason, 26 Or. 273, 38 Pac. 130, 26 L. R. A. 779, 46 Am. St. Rep. 629, and note; and Odgers on Libel and Slander (4th Ed.) 367, where it is said: "In all these cases the malice proved must be that of the defendant. If two persons be sued, the motive of one must not be allowed to aggravate the damages against the other. * * * Nor should the improper motive of an agent be matter of aggravation against the principal."

Burden of proof and nature of proof of malice in fact.

[12, 13] It follows necessarily from the foregoing that, since malice in fact goes to the state of mind and evil motive of the defendant, the burden of proving the existence of that state of mind is, in every case, upon the plaintiff who seeks an award of punitive damages based upon its existence. The fact, like every other fact in issue, is to be determined by the jury, though there is always the reserved power and duty in the court, in a proper case, to instruct the jury that there is such an absence of evidence of the malice in fact as to forbid an award in punitive damages. Taylor v. Hearst, 107 Cal. 269, 40 Pac. 392; Trabing v. California Nav. Co., 121 Cal. 138, 53 Pac. 644.

[14] As to the nature of the evidence as has been said, it may be direct (or express, as the Code names it), going to declarations, acts, and conduct of the defendant, showing personal ill will toward the plaintiff; but it will more usually be indirect or inferred (the implied malice in fact of the Code definition), and to this end of proving the malice inferentially all legitimate evidence is admissible bearing upon the general course of conduct of the defendant toward the plaintiff, the internal evidence furnished by the character of the libel, and any other specific facts and circumstances not in direct proof of the malice, but from which the existence may be logically inferred, herein including the circumstance, if it be found to exist, of wanton recklessness and heedlessness of plaintiff's rights. When malice in fact is found to exist, an award based upon it should bear relation to the gravity of that malice. For, surely, the man who in mere wantonness slaps another upon the cheek in not actuated by the same degree of malice as would be shown, if, brutally, and without provocation, he shot him down.

Presumptions Touching Malice.

[15] Malice in fact does not arise as a legal presumption from the mere falsity and libelous character of the publication. It may be inferred from the intrinsic evidence of malice which the publication affords; but whether it does or not is for the jury to say. The presumptions that an unlawful act was done with an unlawful intent, and that a person intends the ordinary consequences of his voluntary act (Code Civ. Proc. § 1963) are, in libel, presumptions going to malice in law, and not to malice in fact. They are important in libel only in those jurisdictions where, as has been said, malice is considered as the gist of the action. Says Folkard, (Slander & Libel [7th Ed.] p. 206): "Where a libel has been published of the plaintiff by which actual or presumptive damage has been occasioned, the malice of the defendant is a mere inference of law from the very act; for the defendant must be presumed to have intended that which is the natural consequence of his act. In such instances, therefore, it is unnecessary to give evidence of malice in fact, except for the purpose of enhancing the damages." And Odgers, who, it will be remembered, in his learned work declines to consider the existence of any malice but malice in fact, sums up the English law as follows: "Mere inadvertence or forgetfulness, or careless blundering, is no evidence of malice. Brett v. Watson, 20 W. R. 723; Kershaw v. Bailey, 1 Exch. 743; 17 L. J. Ex. 129; Pater v. Baker, 3 C. B. 831; 16 L. J. O. P. 124. Nor is negligence or want of sound judgment (Hesketh v. Brindle [1888] 4 Times L. R. 199), or honest indignation. Shipley v. Todhunter, 7 C. & P. 690. That the words are strong is no evidence of malice, if on defendant's view of the facts strong words were justified. Spill v. Maule, L. R. 4 Ex. 232; 38 L. J. Ex. 138; 17 W. R. 805; 20 L. T. 675. That the statement was volunteered, if it was defendant's duty to volunteer it, is no evidence of malice. Gardner v. Slade et ux., 13 Q. B. 796; 18 L. J. Q. B. 336. That the statement is now admitted or proved to be untrue is no evidence that it was made maliciously (Caulfield v. Whitworth, 16 W. R. 936; 18 L. T. 527), though proof that defendant knew it was untrue when he made it would be conclusive evidence of malice. Fountain v. Boodle, 3 Q. B. 5; Clark v. Molyneux, 3 Q. B. D. 237; 47 L. J. Q. B. 230. 'If you want to show that a statement was malicious, it is not sufficient to show that it was not true.' Per North, J., in Hayward & Co. v. Hayward & Sons, 34 Ch. D. at p. 206. And see the observations of Williams, J., in Harris v. Thompson, 13 C. B. at p. 352."

[16] The only presumption touching malice in fact is that announced in section 1962, Code of Civil Procedure, which declares as a conclusive presumption "the existence of a malicious and guilty intent from the deliberate commission of an unlawful act for the purpose of injuring another." But before this presumption arises, the jury is to find as facts (1) the commission of an unlawful act; (2) that its commission was deliberate; and (3) that it was committed with the deliberate purpose of injuring another. In these three findings it will be noted are all the elements of malice in fact. With the enunciation of these principles and the understanding of these definitions, we may enter upon a consideration of the questions advanced for determination upon this appeal with reasonable confidence and expectation of conveying a meaning free from uncertainty and doubt.

[17] 1. It is argued that the defendant Hearst is not liable for exemplary damages under the evidence. Herein it is said: "The fact that the defendant Hearst was absent from the scene of publication at the time of the publication, did not actually participate therein, and had no knowledge of any of the acts complained of precluded any award of punitive damages against him." Such a state of facts would unquestionably exempt a newspaper proprietor from liability for punitive damages in the absence of evidence, direct or indirect, that the publication, of libelous matter, though not of the particular libelous matter, was authorized by him, or sanctioned and ratified by him after knowledge of the fact. Plaintiff had established the publication of a series of articles containing grave charges and reflections upon his official and personal character and conduct. He had shown that the defendant Hearst had affirmed the truth of these charges by justification in his answer. Their falsity upon trial was sufficiently established. These and other facts and circumstances afforded evidence from which the jury could legitimately have inferred the existence of malice in fact, and more proof was required by the defendant to repel this inference than was actually offered. It was not sufficient merely to show—and to this extent only does the showing go—that the defendant was absent from the state and had no foreknowledge of the actual publication of these particular articles. Such a state of facts, in the mind of the jury, could well coexist with positive instructions to attack the plaintiff's character, leaving it to the employé to select the mode of attack. We are not to be understood as implying that such instructions did exist, but as stating merely the incontrovertible fact that, where the evidence offered by the plaintiff is such that from it the jury may infer the existence of malice in fact, the burden is cast upon the defendant of destroying this inference by proof that, neither by general nor particular instructions, were the publications authorized, and that, neither in fact nor by his conduct, were they ratified when knowledge of their publication was brought home to him. To this extent the evidence of defendant failed to go, and for this reason it cannot be said that the evidence of plaintiff was insufficient to sustain a verdict against the defendant Hearst in punitive damages.

[18] 2. The court instructed the jury as follows: "You can only give as exemplary damages such sum as you believe to be the amount that should be assessed against the defendant against whom the lowest amount of exemplary damages should be given. If you find that exemplary damages are justified as against only one of them, you must not add anything at all for exemplary damages." This instruction is more favorable to the appellants than the law warrants, and of course the appellants are not here complaining of it; but in contemplation of the new trial which must be ordered it becomes necessary to say that the instruction is mistaken in its law. In an action for compensatory damages against joint tort-feasors (the action contemplated by the Civil Code, § 3333), the law will not permit an apportionment of the damages, since it will not attempt to measure the degrees of culpability of the joint tort-feasors; nor in an action for malicious prosecution, where the existence of malice in fact must be found against every tort-feasor, before any judgment can be rendered against him, will the law, for the same reason, admit or permit an apportionment of damages. Also, in those jurisdictions, as in England, where the verdict must be for a single sum, and there is included in it damages, both compensatory and punitive, there can be, from the nature of the practice, but a single verdict against all defendants. But, under our system of procedure where the jury may, and upon the request of defendant must, segregate and make separate awards of compensatory and punitive damages, the reason for the rule we have been considering ceases to exist. There is nothing in our system to prevent the award of compensatory damages against all joint tort-feasors who are found culpable, and to add a specific sum or sums, by way of punitive damages, against such of the tort-feasors as the jury shall find to have been actuated by malice in fact. Not only is this permissible, but it tends to simplicity and avoids the multiplicity of actions which otherwise would become necessary. Particularly applicable is this principle to cases of punitive damages sought against both principal and agent, where the agent has been guilty of malice, fraud, or oppression, but where, as above pointed out, the improper motive of the agent is not made matter in aggravation against the principal. There is a scarcity of authority upon this proposition, but we think the principle as we have enunciated it is sound. In Mauk v. Brundage, 68 Ohio St. 89, 67 N. E. 152, 62 L. R. A. 477, the court had under consideration an instruction to the effect that if the jury awarded exemplary damages they must find that all the defendants had actual malice, and the court says: "On the other hand, if it was intended, as we think it was, to instruct that in no event could compensatory damages be awarded against some and exemplary damages against others, then we think the instruction incorrect. Perhaps the question is not without difficulty, but it would appear practicable to allow a recovery of an amount against all as compensatory damages, and a further amount against some as exemplary damages (and such verdict would be just if the evidence warranted it), and it would not seem impracticable to so shape the verdict as to bring about this result." This, we think, enunciates the true rule.

[19] 3. In connection with, and as a part of its instructions upon the subject of exemplary damages, the court instructed the jury as follows: "The proprietor of a newspaper in which a libel is published, though he has no knowledge of the publication at the time, is as responsible for it as he would have been had it been done by him personally, or under his direct supervision, and it is no defense to a libel that it was published in the absence of the proprietor by an employé, however competent said employé may be." This instruction is unobjectionable as a rule of law governing the award of compensatory damages in an action for libel. It is misleading and mistaken as a part of the law governing the award of punitive damages, in which latter connection it was employed. The instruction was one proposed and given in the case of Dunn v. Hearst, 139 Cal. 239, 73 Pac. 138, where the plaintiff was seeking compensatory damages alone. For support of the soundness of the instruction, that court made reference to the case of Taylor v. Hearst, 107 Cal. 269, 40 Pac. 392, which, as has been shown, was a case not involving punitive damages, and where the instruction to the jury forbade the award of punitive damages.

4. The court instructed the jury as follows: "In order to recover exemplary or punitive damages, it is necessary that there should be on the part of the defendant malice toward the plaintiff, and this malice is of two kinds: First, express malice, or, as it is known in the law, malice in fact; and, second, that malice which is not connected by any personal feeling on the part of the defendant, but which the law regards as a sufficient invasion of the rights of the plaintiff to sustain exemplary damages by reason of the carelessness, negligence, or willful disregard of the rights of the plaintiff by the defendant as to impute to the defendant what is known in law as implied malice or malice in law, as distinguished from express malice. In order to recover exemplary damages, in addition to actual or compensatory damages, it is necessary for you to find from the evidence, either express malice or implied malice, as above defined, on the part of the defendants, or the particular defendant or defendants against whom such exemplary damages are assessed, for without such malice, either express or that which the law implies by reason of the carelessness or negligence of the defendant or defendants, exemplary damages may not be awarded."

It will be noted that by these instructions the trial court defined express malice to be malice in fact, and implied malice to be malice in law, and further declared that exemplary damages could be awarded by the jury upon a finding of either malice in fact or malice in law. That the court in this fell into the common error of confounding the different meanings given to malice, must be apparent from what has already been said. It was the equivalent, as has been pointed out, of telling the jury that malice in law (which is always conclusively presumed from the publication of an article libelous per se in those jurisdictions where malice is of the essence of a civil libel) was sufficient as the basis of an award for punitive damages; and thus, in effect, declared that in the case of every false and libelous publication punitive damages could be awarded. But, to remove the question from possible doubt in the minds of the jury, the court further instructed them as follows: "Malice in law is defined as a wrongful act done intentionally without just cause or excuse"—and thus declared to the jury in terms that punitive damages could be awarded upon their finding of this malice which the law always when necessary conclusively presumes to exist.

[20] What has already been said establishes the serious substantive error of these declarations. But further the court in the same instruction advised the jury that malice in law consists in that "which the law regards as a sufficient invasion of the rights of the plaintiff to sustain exemplary damages, by reason of the carelessness, negligence or willful disregard of the rights of the plaintiff by defendant." From this the jury could only have understood that the law regards carelessness or negligence as establishing malice in law, and that malice in law will support an award in punitive damages. But the truth is that mere negligence or mere carelessness can never be evidence of malice in fact. In the same act they cannot even coexist. Malice necessarily imports an evil purpose. Negligence necessarily implies an absence of intent or purpose, or is at least independent of either. The train dispatcher who inadvertently or mistakenly telegraphs instructions from which a wreck ensues is guilty of no evil motive, but of negligence, pure and simple. If he sends the same message designedly, there is no element of negligence. He is guilty of malice in fact. It is sometimes said that malice in fact may be inferred from "gross negligence"—a phrase somewhat in vogue in the earlier cases, but now practically abandoned in the learning and literature of the law. Milwaukee, etc., Ry. Co. v. Arms, 91 U. S. 489, 23 L. Ed. 374; Wilson v. Brett, 11 Mees. & W. 113. But even in those cases the gross negligence was defined as negligence that evidenced a wanton and reckless disregard of the consequences and of the rights and of the feelings of others. And herein, and by this very definition, it is shown that the gross negligence thus meant in itself displayed an active and evil intent. Thus it is said in Philadelphia, etc., Ry. Co. v. Quigley, 21 How. 202, 16 L. Ed. 73, discussing the liability of a defendant for exemplary damages in a civil action for libel: "Whenever the injury complained of has been inflicted maliciously or wantonly and with circumstances of contumely or indignity, the jury are not limited to the ascertainment of a simple compensation for the wrong committed against the aggrieved person, but the malice spoken of in this rule is not merely the doing of an unlawful or injurious act. The word implies that the act complained of was conceived in the spirit of mischief or of criminal indifference to civil obligations." And to the effect that negligence is not to be confounded with malice, and that proof of negligence does not justify an inference of malice, see Moody v. McDonald, 4 Cal. 297; Yerian v. Linkletter, 80 Cal. 135, 22 Pac. 70; Badostain v. Grazide, 115 Cal. 425, 47 Pac. 118; Spencer v. San Francisco Brick Co., 5 Cal. App. 126, 89 Pac. 851; Jenkins v. Gilligan, 131 Iowa, 176, 108 N. W. 237, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1087; Arkansas, etc., Ry. Co. v. Stroude, 77 Ark. 109, 91 S. W. 18, 113 Am. St. Rep. 130; East Tennessee, etc., Ry. Co. v. Lee, 90 Tenn. 570, 18 S. W. 268; Peterson v. Western Union Tel. Co., 72 Minn. 41, 74 N. W. 1022, 40 L. R. A. 661, 71 Am. St. Rep. 461.

[21] 5. The jury was instructed as follows: "If you should find that the article or articles in question was or were published wantonly, recklessly, and with an utter disregard as to whether true or false, then I charge you the plaintiff is entitled to recover exemplary or punitive damages, as well as compensatory." The vice of this instruction is that it tells the jury that, upon finding malice in fact, the plaintiff is entitled, as of right, to an award of punitive damages. A plaintiff, upon establishing his case, is always entitled of right to compensatory damages. But even after establishing a case where punitive damages are permissible, he is never entitled to them. The granting or withholding of the award of punitive damages is wholly within the control of the jury, and may not legally be influenced by any direction of the court that in any case a plaintiff is entitled to them. Upon the clearest proof of malice in fact, it is still the exclusive province of the jury to say whether or not punitive damages shall be awarded. A plaintiff is entitled to such damages only after the jury, in the exercise of its untrammelled discretion, has made the award. It follows, therefore, that the courts have felt compelled rigidly to suppress such an invasion of the jury's prerogative, and we find, in Railroad Co. v. Castineau, 83 Ky. 119, that it was held error to instruct the jury that if the defendant was guilty of willful neglect they ought to award punitive damages. In Hawk v. Ridgway, 33 Ill. 473, it was held error to instruct the jury that they must, after finding the fact, give exemplary damages. In Boardman v. Goldsmith, 48 Vt. 403, where the evidence was sufficient to support a judgment in exemplary damages, it was held error to instruct the jury that they must give them. In Ferguson v. Moore, 98 Tenn. 342, 39 S. W. 341, it was held error to instruct the jury that it was their duty to award punitive damages. In Gambrill v. Schooly, 93 Md. 48, 48 Atl. 730, 52 L. R. A. 87, 86 Am. St. Rep. 414, it was held that it was error to reject defendant's instruction, "since thereby the jury were practically told that they must give exemplary damages, and, where there is evidence sufficient to uphold a verdict for exemplary damages, the question whether they shall be given or not is one for the jury." Further, says the court: "In no case has a plaintiff any legal right to exemplary damages." In Railroad Co. v. Rector, 104 Ill. 296, the jury was instructed, as here, that, if the plaintiff was wantonly, willfully, and maliciously expelled from the train, "then the plaintiff is not limited in his recovery to such actual damages sustained, but plaintiff is entitled, in addition thereto, to such additional damages as the jury may in their judgment assess by way of punishment for such act." In holding the instruction erroneous, the court said: "But it is not understood the injured party is 'entitled' to such damages as a matter of right, and that instruction that tells the jury, as a matter of law, the injured party is 'entitled' to such damages goes too far, and is for that reason vicious." To the same effect are Snow v. Carpenter, 49 Vt. 426; Kenyon v. Cameron, 17 R. I. 122, 20 Atl. 233; Berg v. St. Paul City Ry., 96 Minn. 513, 105 N. W. 191; Burkhardt v. Press Pub. Co., 130 App. Div. 22, 114 N. Y. Supp. 451; Robinson v. Superior, etc., Co., 94 Wis. 345, 68 N. W. 961, 34 L. R. A. 205, 59 Am. St. Rep. 897, where many cases are reviewed; and 25 Cyc. 536. Justification for the giving of this instruction is sought to be found in Graybill v. De Young, 140 Cal. 328, 73 Pac. 1067. There this court had under consideration an instruction to the following effect: "If you find that the article in question was published wantonly, recklessly and with an utter disregard as to whether it was true or false, then I charge you that plaintiff is entitled to recover exemplary and also compensatory damages." But in the Graybill Case no attack was made upon this instruction because of the use of the word "entitled." The question was not before the court, and therefore was not considered by the court, nor decided by the court. The sole ground of attack on the instruction was that it was directed against the defendant, De Young, who, at the time of the publication, was absent in Europe, and knew nothing about it. In answer to this attack it was said that the language employed was general and was designed to "state the general proposition of law as to the circumstances under which punitive damages may be permitted." Elsewhere and repeatedly the jury were told in effect that nothing but compensatory damages could be allowed, "unless they found from the evidence that in publishing the article the defendant, Mr. De Young, was actuated by malice in fact, actual or presumed." At the time of this decision the section touching punitive damages read "malice, actual or presumed," where now it reads "express or implied." In Childers v. San Jose Mercury Pub. Co., supra, it was held that the malice, actual or presumed, was always malice in fact, and the equivalent of what we have heretofore considered and described as malice in fact, express or implied. Hearne v. De Young, 132 Cal. 357, 64 Pac. 576.

[22] 6. Upon the subject of exemplary damages, the court further instructed the jury as follows: "The defendant is permitted the fullest opportunity to show, first, the lack of express malice on his part, and, second, such circumstances by way of mitigation as would overcome the presumption raised by the law of malice, by showing all the steps taken by him prior to the publication of the article, to learn the truth of the charge therein contained in order to relieve him entirely from exemplary damages, or to reduce the amount of such exemplary damages as you may from the evidence decide to assess against him."

[23] Circumstances in mitigation are allowed to be pleaded and proved, usually to overcome evidence of malice in fact. Circumstances in mitigation ordinarily have no other place or purpose in an action for libel; the exception being the use of evidence in mitigation to rebut evidence of special damage, and evidence of bad reputation to lessen the award in compensatory damages. Therefore, when the court instructed the jury that the circumstances in mitigation would "overcome the presumption raised by the law of malice," it could only mean the presumption raised by the law of malice in fact. But presumptions are wholly creatures of the law. And, unless some law does declare that the presumption of malice in fact is raised or created by certain specific evidence, it is error for the court to do so, first, because it is violative of section 19 of article 6 of the Constitution, which provides that judges shall not charge juries with respect to matters of fact, and, second, because there is worked an unlawful invasion of the province of the jury in that by such an instruction they are told that the law erects from certain evidence a presumption which they are to follow; whereas in fact the utmost that the law has done has been to say that from that evidence the jury may, if it sees fit, draw an inference of the existence of the fact. "A presumption is a deduction which the law expressly directs to be made from particular facts." Code Civ. Proc. § 1959. Therefore in this state, presumptions can be only such deductions as the law enumerates. "An inference is a deduction which the reason of the jury makes from the facts proved, without an express direction of law to that effect." Code Civ. Proc. § 1958. In the case of a presumption, the jury must make the deduction which the law directs. In the case of an inference, the jury may make any logical, reasonable deduction which the facts permit. "A presumption, unless declared by law to be conclusive may be controverted by other evidence, direct or indirect; but, unless so controverted, the jury are bound to find according to the presumption." Code Civ. Proc. § 1961.

It is therefore a matter of substance and consequence that the distinction, between inferences and presumptions should be carefully maintained. Frequently the inexact use of the word "presumption" by courts, where it is not meant to declare an evidentiary presumption of law, but rather the inference which court or jury draws or may draw, has led to confusion. And this was appreciated by the Supreme Court of Vermont, in Sheldon v. Wright, 80 Vt. 298, 67 Atl. 807, where it is said: "In view of the doctrine in this state that a true legal presumption is in the nature of evidence and is to be weighed as such, unguarded and inexact expressions about presumptions should here be scrupulously avoided." In Kauffman v. Maier, 94 Cal. 269, 29 Pac. 481, this court said: "That deduction called a 'presumption,' which the law expressly directs to be made from particular facts, is uniform, and not dependent upon the varying conditions and circumstances of individual cases. To weigh the evidence and find the facts in any case is the province of the jury, and that province is invaded by the court whenever it instructs them that any particular evidence which has been laid before them is or is not entitled to receive weight or consideration from them." In Scott v. Wood, 81 Cal. 398, 22 Pac. 871, it is declared: "Under our system the court is not allowed to instruct the jury as to what inference of fact they are to draw, though of course the court may instruct as to the presumptions which the law draws." In People v. Walden, 51 Cal. 588, where the court instructed the jury that the possession by the defendant, unexplained, of certain incriminatory articles raised "a reasonable presumption," etc., it was said: "In no view can this charge be sustained. If it be said that it was an attempt to charge in respect to a legal presumption, it was clearly error, since no such presumption would arise from the fact stated, as a matter of law. If it was an attempt on the part of the court to instruct the jury that the existence of one fact, in view of the ordinary experience of mankind, and connection of events, must be presumed from the existence of another, this was an interference with what, as we have shown, is the exclusive province of the jury. It was charging the jury 'with respect to matters of fact,' and was in contravention of section 17, art. 6, of the Constitution of the state." To the same effect is Stone v. Geyser Quicksilver Co., 52 Cal. 315; People v. Wong Ah Ngow, 54 Cal. 151, 35 Am. Rep. 69; Helbing v. Svea Ins. Co., 54 Cal. 156, 35 Am. Rep. 72; Wallace v. Sisson, 114 Cal. 42, 45 Pac. 1000; Linforth v. San Francisco Gas & E. Co., 156 Cal. 58, 103 Pac. 320; State v. Pilling, 53 Wash. 464, 102 Pac. 230, 132 Am. St. Rep. 1080; Stooksberry v. Swan, 85 Tex. 563, 22 S. W. 963; Cox v. Aberdeen, etc., Co., 149 N. C. 117, 62 S. E. 884.

Countenance is given to this instruction by the misconception of the language employed in the case of Childers v. San Jose Mercury Printing Co., 105 Cal. 284, 38 Pac. 903, 45 Am. St. Rep. 40. The law governing punitive damages then described the malice as actual or presumed, and we have pointed out, and the Childers Case points out, that that means malice in fact; "actual" being the equivalent of "express," and "presumed" being the equivalent of "implied," as the words are at present employed in section 3294 of the Civil Code. The court was there considering an instruction to the effect: "As I have already charged you, the law presumes the existence of malice from the fact of the publication of the false, unprivileged, and defamatory article in the newspaper regarding the person so charged." It is said of the instruction from which the extract is quoted that it correctly tells the jury that if malice in fact, actual or presumed (express or implied), has been proven, exemplary damages may be recovered; but then commits the error of saying that the publication is such that malice is presumed; in other words, conclusively presumed. "This is true of malice in law, but the court in this instruction was dealing with malice in fact, as bearing upon exemplary damages, and the presumption of malice in fact from the libelous character of the publication is not conclusive, but disputable." Elsewhere in that case it is with accuracy said of presumed malice (implied malice in fact) that: "It is an inference of fact to be drawn from the libelous character of the publication; and, if the article is libelous per se, we see no reason why the law should not declare that upon its introduction in evidence a prima facie case of malice in fact is established." Of this last language no criticism need be made; for to say that an inference of malice may be drawn from the character of the publication is quite within the reason of the law. To say that that inference makes out a prima facie case does not mean that the jury is bound to find in plaintiff's favor upon such evidence, but that they may do so if the evidence satisfies them. Upon the other hand, however, to say that from those same facts a presumption arises is to instruct the jury that, in the absence of rebutting evidence, they not only may find for plaintiff, but must do so, since "the jury are bound to find according to the presumption," if not controverted. Code Civ. Proc. § 1961. In Tingley v. Times-Mirror Co., 151 Cal. 1, 89 Pac. 1097, it is said with exactness that the malice in fact "may be proven by the article published itself," but where later the opinion declares that, "where the publication is libelous per se the law presumes malice in fact in its publication," the statement is stronger than the law warrants. There is no such presumption of law declared by our Codes or statutes, and for the court to say that it exists is for the court itself to usurp the legislative function by creating such a presumption, and then invade the province of the jury by forcing its acceptance upon them. So in Westerfield v. Scripps, 119 Cal. 607, 51 Pac. 958, the discussion was addressed to the evidence from which malice in fact might be inferred by the jury, and to the sufficiency of that evidence in overcoming the positive testimony upon the part of the defendants as to their ignorance of the publication of the original article. It was said with accuracy that this evidence and these facts were circumstances "which the jury could consider as tending to contradict the testimony on behalf of defendants upon the question of malice, and the publication of the article in question was also a circumstance tending to contradict such evidence." And further it is said: "As we have seen, there was evidence upon which the jury were at liberty to find the existence of actual malice; and in that view the question was correctly submitted to the jury." But the expression employed in the opinion that the "publication (of the libelous article) was presumptive evidence of that fact (malice in fact), the burden of overcoming which rested with them" (the defendants) as we have said and shown, overstates the law, if it be construed as meaning that a presumption of law does in fact arise. Such presumption, as we have seen, does not arise. That such a presumption does arise could not be justly declared by the court, in the absence of a statutory declaration to that effect. And what is meant—and all that can be accurately stated—is that such evidence is sufficient to support an inference of malice in fact if the jury shall so infer. The truth is that malice in fact is never presumed, but is always to be proved, and the utmost limit of the law is reached when it is declared that by proof of the unprivileged character of a publication, libelous per se, the jury may infer the existence of this malice. Erber v. Stickler & Dunn (C. C.) 12 Fed. 526; Smith v. Singles (Del.) 72 Atl. 977; Todd v. Evening Printing Co., 6 Pennewill (Del.) 233, 66 Atl. 97; Nailer v. Ponder, 1 Marv. 408, 41 Atl. 88; Carpenter v. New York Journal Pub. Co., 111 App. Div. 266, 97 N. Y. Supp. 478; Parker v. Parker, 102 Iowa, 500, 71 N. W. 421; Wright v. Hayter, 5 Kan. App. 638, 47 Pac. 546; McGowan v. McGowan, 122 N. C. 145, 29 S. E. 97; Wyatt v. Burdette, 43 Colo. 208, 95 Pac. 336; Ton v. Stetson, 43 Wash. 471, 86 Pac. 668.

We have heretofore pointed out that the malice in fact, to sustain exemplary damages in civil libel, is the same malice in fact necessary to support every action for malicious prosecution. Touching this question, this court has said: "Malice in fact must be shown in order to support the action, and the instruction as given would seem to mean that such malice must necessarily be inferred from the want of probable cause. * * * The jury may find the fact of malice from the circumstances of the want of probable cause, or from other circumstances established in the case. They are not to be told that a wrongful charge made without probable cause is per se malicious in fact." Harkrader v. Moore, 44 Cal. 144. And in Griswold v. Griswold, 143 Cal. 617, 77 Pac. 672, the jury was instructed on the question of malice as follows: "You are instructed that malice is a question of fact for you to determine; but that it may be inferred by you from the circumstances proved, and may be presumed to exist from the want of probable cause." The court, holding this instruction erroneous, said: "This instruction is somewhat ambiguous. If it means that the legal presumption of malice followed proof of want of probable cause, it is erroneous. A jury may infer malice from want of probable cause, but the former is not a necessary legal presumption from the latter." So in the civil action or libel the jury may infer the existence of malice in fact from the unprivileged publication of a false article, libelous per se, as it may infer the fact from other circumstances addressed to this end. But the inference is always an inference to be drawn by the jury, and is not a presumption which the law has made, or which the court can make for the control of a jury. Thus it is said in McCarthy v. Weir, 113 App. Div. 435, 99 N. Y. Supp. 372: "And the existence of malice is always a question exclusively for the jury. It must be found by them, or the action cannot be sustained. Hence it must always be submitted to them, to find whether it existed. The court has no right to find it, nor to instruct the jury that they may return a verdict for the plaintiff without it. Even the inference of malice from the want of probable cause is one which the jury alone can draw."

[24] 7. The court instructed the jury as follows: "When a defendant republishes a libelous charge by making it a record of the court, he does so at his own risk. If at the trial he fails to prove the truth of the parts of the article in his answer alleged to be true, and did not in good faith expect to prove their truth, he intensifies the original wrong." This language was approved in Westerfield v. Scripps, 119 Cal. 607, 51 Pac. 958, and later in Dauphiny v. Buhne, 153 Cal. 757, 96 Pac. 880, 126 Am. St. Rep. 136. The attack upon this instruction is that it declares that the original wrong is intensified under the circumstances given; that this language implies an increase of compensatory damage;

whereas the matter is to be considered by the jury only as evidence of the existence of malice in fact, to support an award of punitive damages. That such is the purpose, and the sole purpose, for which the evidence may be considered is unquestionable. Norris v. Elliott, 39 Cal. 72; Chamberlin v. Vance, 51 Cal. 75; Schoonover v. Rowe, 7 Blackf. [Ind.] 202; Meyer v. Bohlring, 44 Ind. 238; Register Newspaper Co. v. Worten, 111 S. W. 693, 33 Ky. Law Rep. 840; Sickra v. Small, 87 Me. 493, 33 Atl. 9, 47 Am. St. Rep. 344; Murphy v. Hobbs, 7 Colo. 541, 5 Pac. 119, 49 Am. Rep. 366; Bee Publishing Co. v. World Pub. Co., 59 Neb. 713, 82 N. W. 28; Wabash Printing & Publishing Co. v. Crumrine, 123 Ind. 89, 21 N. E. 904; Browning v. Powers (Mo.) 38 S. W. 943. But it does not follow that because the instruction could have been more explicit, it is necessarily misleading. In jurisdictions such as England and our own states which still follow its practice, the jury renders a single general verdict, including in its award both compensatory and exemplary damages. It has been the very accurate custom in those jurisdictions to speak of all evidence tending to show malice in fact as evidence in aggravation of damage, since it is precisely the function which such evidence performs. It makes heavier the general award. So, too, upon the theory that there is a direct consequence of malice in fact which justifies the award for punitive damages to the plaintiff as a solatium, and not to the state as a penalty, and that that direct consequence is the increased mental suffering of plaintiff because of the malice in fact (Welsh v. Ware, 32 Mich. 84), it is common to speak of evidence of such malice as "intensifying the wrong." It is true that the damages are aggravated and the wrong intensified in this sense only by the malice in fact, and that compensatory damages as such should not be increased thereby. But we do not think the jury could have failed to perceive the true meaning and application of the phrase in question.

[25] 8. The libelous articles contained in various forms the assertion of the existence of rumors reflecting on plaintiff. Thus: "Rumors have been rife for many months that reflect on the management of the public business by the board of education;" "charges of favoritism in the award of public contracts have been hinted at time and again;" "there have been ugly stories afloat of the alleged misconduct in office of men who were expected to be protecting the public school interests." The court refused to admit evidence of the existence and character of these rumors, which evidence, it is insisted, was admissible in mitigation both on the question of compensatory damages, and to negative malice as the foundation for exemplary damages. For neither purpose, however, was the evidence admissible.

[26] It is, of course, well settled that defendant may impeach the reputation of plaintiff generally, or as to the particular qualities embraced in the libel, for the purpose of reducing compensatory damages. But it is equally well settled that he may not do this by showing either rumors of general ill repute, or rumors of ill repute as to the particular matter charged in the libel. If the rumor exists, and is believed, bad repute would follow from the belief, and this bad repute may be shown. If the rumor exists and is not believed, it does not affect plaintiff's reputation, and is therefore valueless in mitigation. Odgers on Libel & Slander, p. 376. Nor can the existence of the rumor be shown to negative malice, even if the statement in the libel be predicated upon the existence of such rumor; for if the rumor be true the truth may be proved, and there is an end to the matter. But if it be not true it does not dispel an inference of malice for a defendant to show that he has aided in and added to the dissemination of the defamatory report. Such is the rule in this state, consistently adhered to. Wilson v. Fitch, 41 Cal. 363; Preston v. Frey, 91 Cal. 110, 27 Pac. 533; Edwards v. Publishing Co., 99 Cal. 436, 34 Pac. 128, 37 Am. St. Rep. 70; Hearne v. De Young, 132 Cal. 362, 64 Pac. 576; Tingley v. Times-Mirror Co., 151 Cal. 26, 89 Pac. 1097. The one relaxation of it noted by Odgers in the English cases is that, where on the face of the libel it appears that it was founded on an article in a newspaper, or where in uttering the libel the defendant gave the name of his authority for it, in the one case the defendant may show the newspaper publication and his belief in its truth; in the other he may show that in fact he was informed by the party named, and that he believed the information, not, of course, as a defense, but in mitigation to dispel the idea that the defamation originated with himself.

[27] 9. The court instructed the jury as follows: "You must not return a verdict for this plaintiff, unless the evidence convinces you that the said matter referred to, or was understood by its readers to refer to, this plaintiff." The defendant requested the following instruction: "If you find from the evidence that any of the alleged defamatory matter published in the articles complained of referred to acts of the board of education at a time when the plaintiff was not a member of such board, then the truth or falsity of such matter is immaterial in this action, and you are not to take any such matter into consideration in arriving at your verdict," which the court gave with the following modification: "Unless you find that the readers of the paper understood, and had a reasonable right to understand from the wording of the articles and the text and context of the several parts thereof, that the same did refer to the plaintiff." The error assigned in the giving of these instructions is that the actual intent of the defendant is the foundation of his liability, while the instruction made that foundation the understanding of the readers. It is further declared that the effect of the instructions was to make defendants liable for defamatory matter referring to acts of the board of education when plaintiff was not a member of that board, so that reference to him could not have been intended. This all has to do with the following portion of the article above quoted: "It is only a few years ago that members of the board begged the taxpayers for funds for new schools, specified plainly what they wanted the money for and after getting it voted to their uses as outlined by them, they deliberately used the money for other purposes. These men are prone to talk of their integrity, but such misrepresentations and juggling of public funds would make a Ruef blush for shame." It is admitted that there was a bond issued before plaintiff became a member of the board, and one after he became a member. It is admitted that everything touching the latter was regular and proper. It is insisted "that the misrepresentations and juggling" had reference to the bond issue antedating plaintiff's membership on the board, and therefore could not have been intended to refer to him.

[23] The actual intent of defendant to charge the plaintiff becomes of consequence in but two instances; the first where the reference to plaintiff is so veiled, obscure, and ambiguous that the jury cannot see and say, without extrinsic evidence, that the plaintiff was aimed at and was injured; the second where defendant seeks in mitigation to repel the charge of malice in fact. In the first instance evidence is offered by those who, familiar, as the jury is not, with the veiled allusions and obscure references, testify to their understanding that plaintiff was meant. A very learned discussion of the purposes for which evidence of the understanding of the readers of a libel may be considered is found in Smart v. Blanchard, 42 N. H. 137, decided in 1860, but the earlier cases have been much modified, and the rule now stands more in consonance with reason. The rule is that the question under such circumstances is not one of defendant's intent. It is not, did the defendant intend to injure plaintiff? But did he in fact injure plaintiff's reputation? Folkard, Libel & Slander (7th Ed.) p. 77. The inquiry is not as to the meaning intended to be conveyed, but as to the meaning in fact conveyed. Fisher v. Clement, 10 B. & C. 472. Says Folkard (Slander & Libel [7th Ed.] p. 276): "But, where the libel is covertly expressed or ambiguously worded, evidence is required to show that the plaintiff is the party to whom it applies, or was intended to apply. But, whatever the intention, if the jury find that any person to whom it was published would understand it as applying to the plaintiff, that will be sufficient to sustain the verdict." As to the second employment of evidence of intent, whether the reference in the libel be ambiguous or not, defendant may offer evidence that he did not intend to refer to the plaintiff, to negative malice in fact. Upon this nothing further is required than a reference to Taylor v. Hearst, where the libel clearly referred to plaintiff, but the intent to refer, not to him, but to another, was established to destroy any inference of malice.

[29] If it can be said that in the case at bar ambiguity exists, it did not arise from the fact that plaintiff was not a member of the board at the time of the bond issue, which defendants plead was the only one meant. If defendants had in terms charged that plaintiff was a member of the board of education in 1904, and that the members of the board "juggled funds" in a way "that would make Abe Ruef blush with shame," it would raise no ambiguity if defendants pleaded and proved that plaintiff was not a member of the board at that time, and so argue therefrom that there could have been no intent to refer to him. The whole article was before the jury, with its declarations that the "school graft would make a Ruef blush;" that "a Pasadena citizen declares education board has juggled funds for years;" that "it is true that there have been allegations of graft made freely in connection with almost every expenditure of the school funds for several years past, both with the present and previous board of education;" and that "M. W. Davis, clerk of the board is generally regarded as the worst offender against the public interests in connection with the schools." The jury was therefore properly charged that it was for them to say whether the newspaper article would be understood by its readers as referring to plaintiff. Nor was the testimony of outside readers to this point required. The jurymen themselves became the readers. No other evidence was offered or needed than the article itself.

[30, 31] 10. The court allowed evidence upon the hearing of plaintiff's case in chief to the effect that he bore a good reputation. That affirmative evidence of good reputation in advance of any attack upon it by defendant is inadmissible is supported by a practical unanimity of authority. Morgan v. Barnhill, 118 Fed. 24, 55 C. C. A. 7, and note; Shipman v. Burroughs, 1 N. Y. Super. Ct. 442; Chubb v. Gsell, 34 Pa. 114; Blakeslee v. Hughes, 50 Ohio St. 490, 34 N. E. 793; Hitchcock v. Moore, 70 Mich. 112, 37 N. W. 914, 14 Am. St. Rep. 474; Miles v. Vanhorn, 17 Ind. 245, 79 Am. Dec. 477; Hall v. Dairy Co., 15 Wash. 542, 46 Pac. 1049; Kennedy v. Holladay, 25 Mo. App. 503; Cooper v. Phipps, 24 Or. 357, 33 Pac. 985, 22 L. R. A. 836; Mayo v. Samples, 18 Iowa, 306; Houghtaling v. Kilderhouse, 1 N. Y. 530; Wright v. Schroeder, 2 Curt. 548, Fed. Cas. No. 18,091; Odgers, Libel & Slander, p. 366; Folkard, Libel & Slander, p. 260. There is nothing in our decisions to lend support to the contrary view. In Edwards v. Pub. Society, 99 Cal. 431, 34 Pac. 128, 37 Am. St. Rep. 70, relied upon by respondent, it is said that: "The defendants were entitled to an instruction, if they requested it, that in fixing the amount of damages the jury might consider the previous character of the plaintiff as they might believe it to be from the evidence." This was in a case where the plaintiff's reputation had been attacked by the defendant and the attack met, or attempted to be met, by the plaintiff. Of course, in such a case, either party is entitled to such an instruction as this court was there considering. In Turner v. Hearst, 115 Cal. 394, 47 Pac. 129, no question of reputation was involved, nor was any evidence addressed to it. The court merely declared that in estimating general compensatory damages the jury was entitled to know "plaintiff's position and standing in society, and the nature and extent of his professional practice." The rule of all the authorities is that the good reputation of the plaintiff is assumed, and that he can, and must, rest upon this, until his reputation is attacked. "The plaintiff cannot give evidence of general good character in aggravation of damages merely, unless such character is put in issue on the pleading, or has been attacked by the cross-examination of the plaintiff's witnesses; for until then the plaintiff's character is presumed good." Odgers, Libel & Slander, p. 366. In this case the defendants did not attack the plaintiff's reputation. They were entitled to have the case of plaintiff rested upon the presumption of good reputation which the law accords. Yet the court instructed the jury as follows: "There has been evidence given as to the reputation of the plaintiff prior to the publications involved in this case, and it is for you to determine from the evidence whether or not plaintiff bore a good reputation for honesty and integrity in the community where he lived prior to the time of the publication. A man with a good reputation for integrity and honesty could be more seriously damaged by such publication than would be a man having a bad reputation for honesty and integrity."

[32,33] 11. The third cause of action was based upon an alleged libel, fully quoted above. It will be seen that the headlines charged that the mayor investigated the board of education's acts and the "exposures made by Examiner were found to be true." The body of the article seemingly contains but one specific matter, which the mayor investigated—the making copies of the bills, etc., by plaintiff. The mayor of Pasadena was called as a witness, and the court permitted him to be specifically examined as to the "exposures" and as to the matters which he found to be true. Thus he was asked whether in his investigation of the affairs of the school board he had found any school graft, or any graft at all; whether he had found any misappropriation of moneys or school funds, with much other matter of the same import. To all these inquiries the mayor answered in the negative, testifying in effect that he had discovered no wrongs or improprieties, and had never reported that he had discovered them. All of this evidence was admitted under objection, though it was subsequently, upon the court's own motion, stricken out. It is to be noted in this connection that the statement in the publication is general that the mayor had investigated the acts of the board of education (meaning all the acts which had been charged in the paper), and that the exposures (meaning all the exposures which the paper had made or purported to have made) had been by the mayor found to be true. While the falsity of defamatory matter will be presumed, still it is competent for the plaintiff, if he so desires, to offer affirmative evidence showing that falsity. It was therefore competent for the plaintiff to show the fact that in that investigation which the mayor made he did not find the exposures to be true, and did not so report. This evidence, of course, was not to be considered by the jury upon the question of the truth or falsity of the matters themselves, but was pertinent to be considered upon the question as to whether the mayor, as charged, did find the exposures to be true and did so report. The mere fact that in the body of the article the mayor's investigations are limited to a single charge is not controlling. The captions and headlines of a libelous article are themselves a part of the libel. Bishop v. Latimer, 4 L. T. 775; Odgers, Libel & Slander, p. 109.

[34] 12. The court excluded certain offered evidence in mitigation, upon the ground that the offered evidence had not been pleaded in mitigation. The case, in short, was tried upon the theory that the defendant could prove in mitigation only that which he had pleaded in mitigation. Aside from the question as to whether some of the offered evidence was competent evidence in mitigation, the court's ruling that no evidence could be received in mitigation, unless pleaded, first demands attention. The Code provision upon the subject is found in section 461 of the Code of Civil Procedure, where it is said: "The defendant may in his answer allege both the truth of the matter charged as defamatory, and any mitigating circumstances to reduce the amount of damages; and whether he prove the justification or not he may give in evidence the mitigating circumstances." This is a re-enactment of section 63 of the earlier practice act. It will be found that this section is a remedial section, and, as it is the duty of a court in dealing with remedial statutes so to construe them as to suppress the mischief and advance the remedy, the mischief which the statute sought to suppress, and the method by which it may be suppressed, must first be clearly understood. To this understanding, a consideration of the common-law rules becomes necessary. At common law, if a defendant proposed to plead in bar of the action, he alleged that his utterance or publication was true. This was the plea of justification, and, if successfully maintained, resulted in a verdict in his favor. But the plea was a dangerous one, in that it was required that "the justification should be as broad as the libel," and if the justification failed in any material particular, malice in fact to aggravate the damages was conclusively presumed against the defendant. Resort to the plea of justification was therefore never had, except in the clearest of cases, and the defendant usually rested his defense upon the general issue under which he was allowed to prove any circumstances repelling the inference of malice in fact, thus mitigating the damages. All of this class and kind of evidence became known as evidence in mitigation. It did not constitute a defense to the action since evidence offered in mitigation necessarily admitted the falsity of the publication; the offer being merely to dispel from the minds of the jury a belief in the malicious character of the utterance. As these circumstances in mitigation did not constitute a defense, they were not pleaded, and, indeed, under the English system, could not have been pleaded. They were probative facts, and therefore had no place in a pleading. It was always permissible for a defendant, amongst other circumstances, in mitigation to show that at the time of his utterance or publication he entertained an honest belief in the truth of the matter charged, and to give evidence of the foundations upon which that belief rested. Thus it was always permissible, under the general issue, to prove facts and circumstances going to the truth of the matter charged, even if they completely established the truth. Not, as has been said, in bar of the action (for to work this result a plea in justification was necessary), but by showing the solid and substantial foundation for the belief, to dispel, as has been said, the idea that defendant was actuated by malice.

Such continued to be the English rule until the case of Underwood v. Parks, 2 Strange, 1200, was decided by the judges. There the defendant, under the plea of not guilty, offered to prove the truth of the words, in mitigation of damages. The Chief Justice refused to permit it, saying: "At a meeting of all the judges upon a case that arose in the common pleas, a large majority of them had determined not to allow it for the future, but that it should be pleaded, whereby the plaintiff might prepare to defend himself, as well as to prove the speaking of the words." Here, for the law of libel, was the opening of a Pandora's box of evils. The case soon came to be construed (or misconstrued) as forbidding, under the general issue, not alone truth, but any evidence tending to establish the truth. What, then, was the result? The defendant could no longer offer any evidence tending to establish the truth in mitigation, and thus could offer no evidence in support of his declaration of his good faith and honest belief in the truth at the time of the publication. If, on the other hand, forced out of this opportunity, he had resort to the plea of justification, he did so under the grave peril of having malice in fact conclusively presumed against him by a failure fully to justify. Since failure fully to justify was regarded as conclusive evidence of malice in fact in aggravation of damages, it followed, necessarily that, having pleaded justification, he was put to his proof upon it at the outset. If he failed then, no evidence in mitigation of any kind was available to him, because of the conclusive presumption of malice which sprang up by reason of his failure. If he successfully established his justification, then no evidence of any kind in mitigation was necessary. Such was the condition at common law in England, and in the states of the United States which made the common law the basis of judicature. The grave hardship to defendants was recognized and severely denounced. Instructive upon this point are such cases as Bush v. Prosser, 11 N. Y. 346; Bisbey v. Shaw, 12 N. Y. 67; Huson v. Dale, 19 Mich. 17, 2 Am. Rep. 66; and Van Derveer v. Sutphin, 5 Ohio St. 293. It is appropriate here to quote the learned Justice Selden, in Bush v. Prosser, supra:

"First, then, malice was presumed from the falsity of the charge; to this the plaintiff might superadd proof of positive malice, and thus aggravate the damages, while the defendant was precluded, by the rule which excluded all proof of facts tending to establish the truth of the charge, from giving any evidence to rebut malice in mitigation. Upon what did this rule of exclusion rest? Certainly, not upon the intrinsic impropriety of the evidence. This is clear from the positions already established. It must have had some other foundation. What was it? The answer to this question is both simple and certain. The rule is merely an unforeseen consequence of that which excluded proof of the truth of the charge, under the general issue, in mitigation of damages; a rule which originated with the case of Underwood v. Parks, 2 Strange, 1200. The courts have implicitly followed that case, without even seeming to consider that the rule it laid down was not only a departure from the principles of the common law, and a pure piece of judicial legislation, but that, in its consequences, it must necessarily deprive defendants of all power to mitigate the verdict.

"Prior to that case, defendants in this class of actions were permitted to prove, not only the absence of malice, but the truth of the charge itself, in mitigation. This is shown by the case of Smithies v. Harrison, 1 Lord Raym. 727. The reception of this evidence was in perfect accordance with the general principles of law. Courts have sometimes, in their speculations upon this subject, seemed to suppose that there was some inherent legal objection to proving, in mitigation merely, that which might amount to a justification; and have applied the rule which excludes proof of the truth of the charge in mitigation, as though that were its foundation. This, however, is an obvious error. It was never any objection to evidence in mitigation that under a different state of the pleadings it would amount to a full defense; the rule in Underwood v. Parks was not put upon any such ground. That was an action of slander. The defendant, under the plea of not guilty, offered to prove the words to be true, in mitigation of damages; the Chief Justice refused to permit it, saying that: 'At a meeting of all the judges upon a case that arose in the common pleas, a large majority of them had determined not to allow it for the future, but that it should be pleaded, whereby the plaintiff might be prepared to defend himself, as well as to prove the speaking of the words.' The very terms here used show that this was the introduction of a new doctrine by the common consent of the judges. It is clear, from the reason given, that the intrinsic propriety or impropriety of the evidence had nothing to do with the adoption of this rule. It was a rule of pleading merely, having no other object than to prevent plaintiffs from being taken by surprise, upon the trial, by evidence of the truth of the charge. It was not designed to deprive defendants of the benefit of such evidence, or any evidence, but simply to secure due notice to the plaintiff of what he would be required to meet. This was all very well, in cases where the defendant was prepared to justify, which cases alone the judges had in view in adopting the rule; but when the doctrine came to be applied to cases where all the defendant could or desired to do was to mitigate the damages, by showing the absence of malice, it operated unjustly. It took away the right altogether, since the rules of pleading did not allow anything short of a complete defense to be spread upon the record. The whole difficulty would have been obviated if the judges had simply added to this rule a clause permitting defendants to give, with the general issue, a notice of the facts intended to be proved in mitigation of damages. It would have been no greater stretch of power to have done this, than was required to prescribe the rule itself. But they evidently failed to foresee the conflict which must necessarily arise between the conceded right of the defendant to mitigate the damages, by showing the absence of malice, and the rule they adopted; a conflict which can be clearly traced from that day to the present. The right and the rule were directly repugnant to each other, and no question has ever given rise to a more protracted struggle.

"The courts in England, under a sense of the admitted right, have in a number of cases decided that facts and circumstances falling short of proving, although tending to prove, the truth of the charge might be received in mitigation. Knobell v. Fuller, Norris' Peake, Append. 32; Leicester v. Walter, 2 Camp. 251. But the courts in this state and in Massachusetts, with less justice, but better logic, have uniformly held that a rule which excluded proof of the truth of the charge, must necessarily exclude evidence tending to prove it. But it is a little surprising to observe how often judges have asserted in the same paragraph both the right to mitigate by disproving malice and the rule which effectually precluded the exercise of the right, without any apparent consciousness of the conflict between the two. I will refer to a few only out of the many instances. In the case of Root v. King, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 613, Judge Savage says that the defendant 'may show in evidence, under the general issue, by way of excuse, anything short of a justification which does not necessarily imply the truth of the charge or tend to prove it true, but which repels the presumption of malice arising from the fact of publication.' The same judge, in Purple v. Horton, 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 9, 27 Am. Dec. 167, says: 'Facts and circumstances may be shown in mitigation, when they disprove malice, and do not tend to prove the charge, or form a link in the chain of evidence to prove a justification.' Again, Judge Bronson, in Cooper v. Barber, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 105, says: 'Facts and circumstances which tend to disprove malice, by showing that the defendant, though mistaken, believed the charge true when it was made, may be given in evidence in mitigation of damages; but if the facts and circumstances offered tend to establish the truth of the charge, or form a link in the chain of evidence going to make out a justification, they are not admissible in mitigation of damages.' It does not appear to have occurred to either of these eminent judges that there was any incongruity between the two branches of the proposition thus asserted by them. But it is certainly difficult to comprehend how a defendant is to disprove malice, by showing 'that he believed the charge true when it was made,' without giving evidence tending to establish its truth, since a belief based upon information derived from others cannot be shown."

It is to be noted that one of the just complaints made by the courts, of the hardship thus worked to defendants was that, under the English system, where nothing but a complete defense was allowed to be pleaded, defendants were not allowed to plead their honest belief and the foundations for it, and, of course, under the interpretation of Underwood v. Parks, they could not prove anything which tended to establish the truth. It was recognized that the rule in this regard must be relaxed. It was relaxed in some jurisdictions by declarations that, to show honest belief, evidence under the general issue could be given, even if that evidence went to establish the truth of the charge, so long as it did not fully establish the charge. It was met in other jurisdictions, such as our own, by statutory provision, allowing the defendant to plead, in mitigation, his belief in the truth of the charge and his foundation for that belief. So the section of the Code, in the light of the evil sought to be remedied, is not to be construed as allowing the circumstances in mitigation going to the truth of the charge to be pleaded and proved only where justification is pleaded, but it is to be construed as a declaration quite foreign to and in derogation of the common-law rule that, even where justification is pleaded, the defendant still may prove facts and circumstances going to the truth of the charge in mitigation of damages, or, in other words to negative malice in fact. It is clear, therefore, that the design of the section was to correct the abuses and broaden the rules of common law. It was not designed to narrow those rules. But it is to be remembered that at common law, even under its narrowest and harshest doctrine, it was always permissible, without pleading, to prove any and all other circumstances in mitigation that did not go to establish the truth of the charge.

To construe section 461, therefore, as meaning that in this state, whenever any circumstances in mitigation are relied on, they must first be pleaded, is to that extent a contraction of the common-law rule. What the section then means is, to summarize, this: If a defendant pleads justification, he may at the same time plead with his affirmation of good faith and honest belief all facts and circumstances within his knowledge at the time of the publication which support that knowledge and belief, even if they tend to establish the truth of the charge. Moreover, if he desires to plead justification, and also the truth or partial truth in mitigation, he must plead these facts and circumstances in mitigation, in which event they will be considered (as they never were or could have been at common law after Underwood v. Parks). Even if the justification fails, these matters will be considered by the jury upon the question of malice. Moreover, as at common law after Underwood v. Parks, there was much contrariety of opinion as to whether evidence tending to prove the truth of the charge could be given under the general issue, the Code provision is designed to declare the rule that such evidence, if it goes to the truth of the charge, may be proved, but must be pleaded. But, upon the other hand, where the common law itself was liberal, the Code section was not designed to impair that liberality, and, as at common law all other circumstances in mitigation, excepting those tending to establish the truth of the charge, could be proved under the general issue, so in this state all other circumstances in mitigation may be so proved without pleading them.

Thus, at great length, though we trust not at unnecessary length, we come to a consideration of the evidence rejected in this case. But, before taking up that consideration, it is proper to add that the plea in mitigation considered in Tingley v. Times-Mirror Co., 151 Cal. 1, 89 Pac. 1097, is precisely such a plea as we have said the section of the Code contemplates must be made; that is to say, it was a plea directed to showing the good faith and honest belief of the defendant at the time of the publication, with the facts and circumstances upon which the belief was founded. But there is in this case no declaration and no intimation to the contrary of what has been here stated, namely, that circumstances in mitigation, other than those which go to establish the truth of the libel, need not be pleaded.

Certain of the evidence rejected was evidence of the existence of rumors. If, in fact, evidence of the existence of rumors was admissible in mitigation, as the mere existence of rumors does not go to the truth of the charge, the evidence would be admissible without pleading; but, as has been before shown, the evidence of rumors was not under the circumstances admissible at all. This, of course, is not in derogation of the rule which permits evidence to be given of a reliable source of information, and the due investigation of the matter before publication. Tingley v. Times-Mirror Co., 151 Cal. 1, 89 Pac. 1097. Evidence was rejected which was offered to show that, in other respects than in those specified in the articles, the recommendation of the plumbing inspector and health officer had been disregarded by the board of education. This evidence was offered in mitigation as tending to prove the truth of the charge of loose methods, etc. Therefore it could and should have been pleaded in mitigation with an allegation of the knowledge of the defendants of the fact at the time of the publication. For there is this broad distinction between a plea in justification and evidence of the truth given in mitigation: The truth, whenever discovered, is a complete defense to the defendant. But to repel the conception of malice in the publication only so much of the truth as the defendant knew at the time of the publication can avail him. The same ruling of the court was proper in reference to evidence directed to specific acts of favoritism which had not been pleaded in justification. The offered evidence to show that the manner of filing demands from the school board and the delivery of the warrants in favor of the claimants had been changed since the publication could not, of course, be evidence tending to repel the existence of malice at the time of the publication. And, if the charge against plaintiff in this regard was libelous, the evidence could only be considered as tending to show the truth of the charge, and was properly rejected as not having been pleaded in mitigation. Evidence to substantiate the charge that plaintiff, as a member of the school board, gave out false information could have been shown under a plea in mitigation, specifically naming the persons to whom such false information was given. Odgers, Libel & Slander, p. 591. But, in the absence of such a plea in mitigation, the evidence was properly excluded.

[35] There was given to the jury, as an instruction, an argumentative discussion by this court in Dauphiny v. Buhne, 153 Cal. 757, 96 Pac. 880, 126 Am. St. Rep. 136, where there was under consideration the question of qualified privilege as a defense to libel—a question not in this case at all. In the Dauphiny Case it is pointed out that "It is always injudicious to take the language of a court, in discussing a proposition of law, as correct instruction to be given to a jury." This is necessarily so, for it is always proper and frequently imperative upon a court of review, in answering arguments pro and con, itself to indulge in argumentative discussion, which is appropriate to the question under consideration, but has no place in an instruction to a jury. Moreover it frequently happens that the Legislature passes an unjust law, which sleeps upon the books until such time as this court is called to rule upon it. In declaring the law as the Legislature has enacted it, it is proper for the reviewing opinion to point out the hardship or injustice which the law may work, as being a most appropriate way of advising the legislative department of its need of correction or amendment. An instance of this, indeed, may be seen in this very case, in the language of Selden, J., quoted from Bush v. Prosser, supra. But it does not follow that because a reviewing court may point out the hardship and injustice of an existing rule of law, primarily to the end that the legislative attention may be directed to it, the same statements can be made by a trial judge to the jury, where the effect of them would be an implied invitation to the jury to disregard the law because of its injustice. So in this case the argumentative discussion of this court, dealing with the question of qualified privilege, has no place in an instruction to a jury, especially in a case where no such question of privilege is involved.

We have thus considered all of the questions presented which appear to merit attention, in contemplation of the new trial which must be ordered, and for the reasons given the judgment and the order denying a new trial are reversed, and the cause remanded.

We concur: SHAW, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.; LORIGAN, J.; MELVIN, J.

159 Cal. 742

JENSEN v. DORR. (L. A. 2,616.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 12, 1911.
On Application for Rehearing in Bank, June 9, 1911.)

1. PLEADING (§ 204*)—COMPLAINT—SUFFICIENCY.

A complaint containing several counts is good as against general demurrer on the ground that the complaint does not allege facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, where one count states a cause of action.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 486-490; Dec. Dig. § 204.*]

2. MARITIME LIENS (§ 19*)—STATUTES—CONSTRUCTION.

Civ. Code, § 3060, providing that debts of at least $50 contracted for the benefit of ships are liens, construed in connection with Code Civ. Proc. § 813, giving a lien for materials and services furnished for the construction of vessels, contemplates an existing completed vessel, and refers only to such debts as are contracted for the benefit of a completed vessel, and section 813 gives a lien for construction work, regardless of the amount.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Maritime Liens, Cent. Dig. §§ 24, 25; Dec. Dig. § 19.*]

3. MARITIME LIENS (§ 19*)—"CONSTRUCTION WORK"—"SHIP."

Everything originally done in making a vessel complete and ready for use as an instrument of commerce or navigation is construction work, and a structure becomes a ship within the maritime law only when construction work has been fully completed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Maritime Liens, Cent. Dig. §§ 24, 25; Dec. Dig. § 19.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 2, pp. 1465-1468; vol. 7, pp. 6485-6488.]

4. MARITIME LIENS (§ 74*)—ENFORCEMENT—COMPLAINT.

A complaint to enforce a lien for work and materials furnished on a vessel which shows that the services and materials were not only furnished in the actual construction of the vessel, but for use in such construction, states a cause of action for the enforcement of a lien given by Code Civ. Proc. § 813 et seq.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Maritime Liens, Dec. Dig. § 74.*]

5. MARITIME LIENS (§ 74*)—ENFORCEMENT—COMPLAINT—"ACCOUNT."

A complaint to enforce a lien for work and materials for the construction of a vessel which does not specify the amount due, respectively, for labor and material is not demurrable for uncertainty, for the word "account" in Code Civ. Proc. § 454, providing that the items of an account need not be set forth in a pleading, but the party relying thereon must furnish the same to the other party on demand, includes such demands as are stated in the complaint.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Maritime Liens, Dec. Dig. § 74.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 1, pp. 86-96; vol. 8, p. 7561.]

6. PLEADING (§ 345*)—JUDGMENT ON PLEADINGS—ISSUES.

In a suit to enforce liens for labor and materials for the construction of a vessel furnished by plaintiff and his assignors, an answer alleging that defendant has no information or belief sufficient to enable him to answer the complaint, and, basing his denial on that ground, he denies each and several the allegations thereof, raises issues, and a judgment on the pleadings is erroneous, for the matters of the alleged assignments at least are not presumably within the knowledge of defendant; so the form of denial is permissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 1055-1059; Dec. Dig. § 345.*]

7. BANKRUPTCY (§§ 421, 433*)—DISCHARGE—EFFECT.

A discharge in bankruptcy bars a personal judgment against the bankrupt for debts incurred in the construction of a vessel, but does not bar the lien given by Code Civ. Proc. § 813 et seq., giving a lien for work done or materials furnished for the construction of vessels.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bankruptcy, Dec. Dig. §§ 421, 433.*]

8. PLEADING (§ 280*)—SUPPLEMENTAL PLEADING—ALLOWANCE—DISCRETION OF COURT.

It is an abuse of discretion to refuse leave to a defendant to set up by supplemental answer a bankruptcy discharge obtained subsequent to the commencement of the action as a bar to any personal judgment, where proper application is made therefor within a reasonable time.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Dec. Dig. § 280.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; T. L. Lewis, Judge.

Action by Lawrence Jensen against Fred Dorr. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded.

See, also, 9 Cal. App. 18, 98 Pac. 45; 157 Cal. 437, 108 Pac. 320.

Wilbur Bassett, for appellant. Patterson Sprigg, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an appeal from a judgment given in favor of plaintiff upon motion for judgment on the pleadings. The complaint was in 19 counts, each of which set up a cause of action for services or material furnished in this state, at the special instance and request of defendant, for the yacht Yankee Girl, in the construction of said yacht, owned by said defendant. Three of said counts set up causes of actions for services and materials furnished by plaintiff, and the remaining counts were for services and materials furnished by various other persons who had assigned their respective claims to plaintiff. Some of these claims were for less than $50. The total sum sought to be recovered was $4,001.76. Each count stated facts sufficient to warrant a judgment in personam against defendant for the alleged value of the services and material, but plaintiff stated in his complaint that he "claims a lien in and upon said yacht Yankee Girl under and by virtue of section 813 of the Code of Civil Procedure of the state of California as to each and all of said causes of action herein set forth." The action was commenced in the year 1907, which was within one year from the time each cause of action accrued. Judgment was given October 21, 1909. By the judgment it was decreed that plaintiff have judgment against the defendant for the sum of $4,001.76 with interest and costs, and, further, that said yacht Yankee Girl be sold to satisfy such judgment, and that execution be issued against said yacht or whatever securities had been given in lieu of the attachment levied in the action, and payment of the amount due plaintiff under the judgment be made from the proceeds of the sale.

It is not questioned that an attachment was levied on the vessel at the inception of this action under section 817 et seq., Code of Civil Procedure, or that an order refusing to dissolve this attachment was reversed by this court on March 28, 1910, on the ground that the writ of attachment issued, under which the sheriff made his levy, was not in substantial compliance with the requirements of section 819, Code of Civil Procedure. Jensen v. Dorr, 157 Cal. 437, 108 Pac. 320. It will be assumed for all the purposes of this decision that there never was any valid attachment of the vessel. The demurrer to the third amended complaint was properly overruled.

[1] There is no basis for the claim that such complaint does not state a cause of action. If a cause of action were stated in only one of the nineteen counts, it would be sufficient as against the demurrer on this ground, which is simply "that said complaint does not allege facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action." But we are satisfied that each count sufficiently states a cause of action against defendant personally, and also states facts sufficient to serve as a basis for a claim of lien on the vessel under section 813, Code of Civil Procedure.

[2] The principal contention of defendant in this behalf is that some of the causes of action are for a less sum than $50, and that no lien is given unless the debt amounts to $50. This contention is founded on section 3060 of the Civil Code, enacted in 1872, providing that "debts amounting to at least fifty dollars, contracted for the benefit of ships, are liens in the cases provided by the Code of Civil Procedure." But section 813 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as adopted at the same time, gives a lien for materials and services furnished in connection with steamers, vessels, and boats, in certain specified instances, regardless of the amount of the demand therefor, among which specific instances is that of "work done or materials furnished in this state for their construction, repair or equipment" (subdivision 3). It may be conceded that section 3060, Civil Code, and section 813, Code of Civil Procedure, are to be considered together as though they had been "passed at the same moment of time, and were parts of the same statute." Sec. 4480, Pol. Code; St. Louis Nat. Bank v. Gay, 101 Cal. 288, 35 Pac. 876; The Louis Olsen, 57 Fed. 845, 6 C. C. A. 608. But we do not think that section 3060 should be construed as applicable to debts contracted in the original construction of a vessel. The section is limited by its express terms to debts "contracted for the benefit of ships," just as the section giving a lien to the master of a ship (section 3055, Civ. Code) is limited by its terms to advances made or liabilities incurred "for the benefit of the ship." This language appears to contemplate an existing, completed vessel, the marine entity known as a ship after she has been completed and made ready for use as an instrument of commerce or navigation, and the section reasonably construed refers only to such debts as are "contracted for the benefit" of such a completed vessel.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[3] The weight of authority is in favor of the proposition that everything originally done in making a vessel complete and ready for use as an instrument of commerce or navigation is construction work, and that a structure becomes a ship within the meaning of the maritime law only when such construction work has been fully completed. See 26 Cyc. 761, 762, 763. Construing section 3060 as we do, it in no way conflicts with or affects the provision of section 813, Code of Civil Procedure, giving a lien for construction work, regardless of the amount of the debt. How it may affect any other provision of that section it is unnecessary here to determine.

[4] Each count sufficiently shows as against a general demurrer that the services and materials were not only furnished in the actual construction of such vessel, but also were furnished to be used in such construction. This sufficiently answers any objection based on the decision in Bennett v. Beadle, 142 Cal. 239, 75 Pac. 843.

[5] There is no force in the points made in defendant's brief in support of his special demurrer for uncertainty, ambiguity, and unintelligibility. The facts alleged in each count clearly show the right to a lien under subdivision 3 of section 813, Code of Civil Procedure, for work done and materials furnished in this state for the construction of the vessel. Basing his claim upon the fact that in four of the counts in which the charge is for both material and labor there is no specification of the amounts due, respectively, for labor and materials, it was urged by the defendant that the complaint is uncertain, etc., in that it cannot be ascertained therefrom what part of the claim is for labor and what part is for materials. These counts were for $60.35, $38.85, $344.35, and $36.10, respectively, and each may be taken as indicating but a single claim rather than two different causes of action. McFarland v. Holcomb, 123 Cal. 84, 55 Pac. 761. The words "the account" as used in section 454, Code of Civil Procedure, providing that the items of an account need not be set forth in a pleading, but that the party relying thereon must furnish the same to the other party if the same be demanded, included such demands as are stated in this case (Long Beach, etc., v. Dodge, 135 Cal. 407, 67 Pac. 499), and the demurrer on this ground was properly overruled (Long Beach, etc., v. Dodge, supra; McFarland v. Holcomb, supra; Pleasant v. Samuels, 114 Cal. 34, 45 Pac. 998; Wise v. Hogan, 77 Cal. 184, 19 Pac. 278). The case of Minor v. Baldrige, 123 Cal. 187, 55 Pac. 783, decides nothing that would make the complaint here bad in the face of the special demurrer interposed.

Regardless of the question of the correctness of the action of the trial court in refusing to allow defendant to file a supplemental answer, to which question we shall refer later, it must be held that the court erred in granting the motion for judgment on the pleadings.

[6] All of the allegations of each count of the complaint were denied by the answer, the following being the form of denial as to the first count: "For answer to the first cause of action herein defendant has no information or belief sufficient to enable him to answer the allegations of said complaint, and, basing his denial upon that ground, he denies each and several the allegations thereof." The denial as to each of the other causes of action was in precisely the same language; the number of the cause of action being stated in each case. Whatever we might think of this form of denial were the question a new one in this state, it is settled by the decisions that as to matters not presumably within the knowledge of a defendant such a form of denial is permissible, and that a specific denial of each of the allegations as to such matters is not essential, notwithstanding that the complaint is verified. Section 437, Code Civ. Proc. See Etchas v. Orena, 121 Cal. 270, 53 Pac. 798; Read v. Buffum, 79 Cal. 77, 21 Pac. 555, 12 Am. St. Rep. 131. This is recognized in Raphael Weill & Co. v. Crittenden, 139 Cal. 488, 73 Pac. 238, the granting of the motion for judgment on the pleadings being sustained in that case upon the theory that all of the material matters alleged in the complaint were presumably within the knowledge of the defendant, and the case being expressly distinguished from the cases above cited by reason of that fact. In 16 of the 19 causes of action set forth in the complaint at bar, the plaintiff was not the original owner of the claim alleged, but sued as assignee, alleging as to each an assignment from the original claimant. Whatever may be said as to any other allegation, it is clear that it cannot be held that the matters of the alleged assignments were presumably within the knowledge of defendant. See Read v. Buffum, supra. This being so, it necessarily follows, in view of the decisions cited, that issue was properly joined on the question of assignment at least, and plaintiff was not entitled to judgment upon any of the alleged assigned claims without proof made of the fact of assignment. We are not to be understood as deciding that the allegations as to assignment are the only matters alleged in the complaint not presumably within the knowledge of the defendant. The error of the trial court in this behalf is such as to necessarily require a reversal of the judgment.

[7] Defendant asked leave to file a supplemental answer setting up bankruptcy proceedings instituted by him on August 12, 1908, resulting in a decree made by the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of California on July 26, 1909, discharging him from all debts and claims made provable by law against his estate and existing on August 12, 1908. This covered all the debts embraced in this action so far as any personal liability on the part of defendant was concerned. The only answer to this application was a showing of the levy of an attachment on the vessel under the writ which was held defective in Jensen v. Dorr, 157 Cal. 437, 108 Pac. 320, and the trial court refused leave to file the supplemental answer. Nevertheless the court, in addition to judgment for the enforcement of the liens on the vessel, gave a personal judgment against the defendant for the full amount of the claims sued on. While plaintiff may have been entitled to enforce the liens on the vessel regardless of the bankruptcy proceedings, he was not entitled to a personal judgment against defendant in the face of such a decree; and, in view of the nature of the judgment actually given, the refusal of the trial court to permit the filing of the supplemental answer was prejudicial error.

[8] It cannot be doubted that it is an abuse of discretion for a trial court to refuse leave to a defendant to set up by supplemental answer a bankruptcy discharge obtained subsequent to the commencement of the action, as a bar to any personal judgment, where proper application is made therefor within a reasonable time after obtaining such discharge.

For the purpose of possible future proceedings in this case, it is proper to consider some other points made by defendant.

By his reply brief certain points are made, based upon the assumption that there was never any valid attachment of the vessel, an assumption that we shall concede is well based. We, however, regard that fact as immaterial so far as the portions of the judgment enforcing the lien are concerned. The existence of the liens declared by section 813, Code of Civil Procedure, is not dependent upon an attachment of the vessel. The claimant has such a lien which he may enforce by action, whether he attaches or not; the attachment remedy being given simply for purposes of more adequate security. This was early determined in this state in the light of certain sections of the practice act differing in no respect material to this question from section 813 et seq., Code of Civil Procedure. See Meiggs v. Scannell, 7 Cal. 408. The views expressed in the case last cited have never been departed from.

There is no force in the claim that without an attachment of the vessel plaintiff's liens expired with the expiration of one year from the time his cause of action accrued, although this proceeding to enforce the liens was instituted within such year. It is true that the statute expressly provides that "such liens only continue in force for the period of one year from the time the cause of action accrued." This is the only provision as to the time within which a claimant must take any step to preserve and enforce his lien. It can reasonably be taken as meaning no more than that the lien will expire at the end of the year unless a legal proceeding has then been instituted and is still pending to enforce it, and any proceeding instituted for that purpose within the year must be determined, so far as the question of the existence of a lien is concerned, upon the facts as they existed at the time of the commencement of such proceeding. We see no warrant in the statute for any other conclusion.

We see no reason why the trial court, in a proceeding of this character, may not by its judgment order the sale of the vessel to satisfy the liens adjudged, even though no attachment has been levied on the vessel, and no other execution is essential to enable the officer to carry out the judgment than a certified copy of such judgment.

It is further to be observed that, the attachment having been discharged, any bond previously given by defendant to procure the release of the vessel from the invalid attachment is also invalid, and cannot be resorted to, as the judgment now directs, for the purpose of satisfying the judgment.

The judgment is reversed and the cause remanded for further proceedings not inconsistent with the views herein expressed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.

On Application for Rehearing.

ANGELLOTTI, J. Referring to the matters set up in defendant's petition for rehearing:

(1) Regardless of the question of the expiration of the liens, the case must be remanded for further proceedings. It has not yet been determined in this case that defendant was ever adjudged a bankrupt, or discharged as a bankrupt from all debts and claims existing on August 12, 1908. He sought to tender this issue, but was denied the right to do so. We have held that he should have been allowed to make this defense. But we cannot assume that the allegations of his proposed supplemental answer in that behalf are true. That is a matter to be determined by the trial court on a new trial, if such supplemental answer is presented.

(2) In view of the argument contained in the petition for rehearing, we are not entirely satisfied as to the correctness of some of the statements made in the opinion, in discussing, for the purpose of possible future proceedings, certain points made by defendant. As the case must, in any event, be remanded for further proceedings, we deem it preferable to strike out the portion of the opinion referring to such points, rather than to grant a rehearing solely for the purpose of now reconsidering the matter therein contained.

The opinion heretofore filed is modified by striking out all that portion thereof commencing with the words, "for the purpose of possible future proceedings in this case," etc., and ending with the words, "as the judgment now directs, for the purpose of satisfying the judgment."

The petition for a rehearing is denied.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.

160 Cal. 106
WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH CO. v.
HOPKINS, County Assessor.
(L. A. 2,445.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 5, 1911.)

1. TAXATION (§ 276*)—FRANCHISES—PLACE OF ASSESSMENT.

The franchise granted by Civ. Code, § 536, authorizing telegraph or telephone corporations to construct telegraph or telephone lines on any public highway, etc., vests when actually accepted by the exercise of the right granted, and is assessable only in the place where such franchise is exercised.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. §§ 453-468; Dec. Dig. § 276.*]

2. TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES (§ 10*)—RIGHTS IN STREETS—"POST ROADS"—WHAT ARE.

Under Rev. St. U. S. § 3964 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2708), declaring that all letter carrier routes established in any city for the collection and delivery of mail shall be post roads, and Code Civ. Proc. § 1875, subd. 3, requiring the courts to take judicial notice of acts of the executive departments of the United States, the streets of a city kept up and maintained as such are letter carrier routes established in the city for the collection and delivery of mail, and are post roads; and a telegraph company maintaining telegraph lines on the terms imposed by Act Cong. July 24, 1866, c. 230, 14 Stat. 221, empowering any telegraph company accepting the obligations of the act to construct, maintain, and operate telegraph lines over any military or post roads of the United States, has such right to the streets of a city, constituting post roads, as are granted by the act, and such rights constitute a federal franchise.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Telegraphs and Telephones, Dec. Dig. § 10.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 6, p. 5473.]

3. TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES (§ 10*)—FRANCHISES—STATE AND FEDERAL.

The right of a telegraph company granted by Act Cong. July 24, 1866, c. 230, 14 Stat. 221, empowering telegraph companies to construct and operate lines over military and post roads, and Civ. Code, § 536, authorizing telegraph corporations to construct telegraph lines on any public road, to use the streets of a city organized under Pol. Code, § 4354 et seq., exists independently of any grant by the city, where the company had established its system in the streets prior to the incorporation of the city, and the city cannot add to its right in that behalf, and anything enjoyed by the company not covered by the act of Congress must be derived from Civ. Code, § 536.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Telegraphs and Telephones, Dec. Dig. § 10.*]

4. COURTS (§ 97*)—CONTROLLING DECISIONS—FEDERAL QUESTIONS.

The question of the extent and character of the rights granted by Act Cong. July 24, 1866, c. 230, 14 Stat. 221, empowering any telegraph company accepting the obligations of the act to construct and operate telegraph lines over military or post roads, is exclusively a federal question on which the decisions of the federal Supreme Court are final.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Cent. Dig. §§ 329-334; Dec. Dig. § 97.*]

5. TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES (§ 10*)—FRANCHISES—RIGHTS ACQUIRED UNDER FEDERAL ACT.

Act Cong. July 24, 1866, c. 230, 14 Stat. 221, empowering any telegraph company accepting the obligations of the act to construct and operate telegraph lines over military or post roads of the United States, though preventing a city from absolutely prohibiting a telegraph company accepting the act from operating under the act, does not permit the company to appropriate to its exclusive use portions of highways without being subject to the charges on behalf of the state by way of compensation for such use, as the state has a property interest in its public highways which is not divested by a grant under the act.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Telegraphs and Telephones, Cent. Dig. § 6; Dec. Dig. § 10.* Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1487.]

6. TAXATION (§ 276*)—TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES—FRANCHISES—STATE FRANCHISE.

Where the state grants to a telegraph company having a franchise under Act Cong. July 24, 1866, c. 230, 14 Stat. 221, empowering any telegraph company accepting the act to construct and operate telegraph lines over military or post roads, the right to exclusive possession of portions of its public highways without compensation, the company obtains a franchise having, for purposes of assessment, a local situs, and is assessable in the particular city or county in which the streets so occupied are situated.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. §§ 453-468; Dec. Dig. § 276.*]

7. TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES (§ 10*)—FRANCHISES—ACCEPTANCE.

Where a valid state statute purports to grant to a telegraph company, having a franchise under Act Cong. July 24, 1866, c. 230, 14 Stat. 221, to construct and operate telegraph lines on military or post roads, the right to the exclusive possession of portions of its public highways without compensation, the exclusive occupation by the company of portions of public highways for the authorized purposes is an acceptance by it of the offered franchise.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Telegraphs and Telephones, Dec. Dig. § 10.*]

8. TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES (§ 10*)—FRANCHISES—STATUTES—EFFECT.

Under Pol. Code, § 2618, defining highways, and section 4408, empowering the council of any city to regulate the streets in the city and the use thereof, a city may not exclude a telegraph company from such use of its streets as is expressly authorized by Civ. Code, § 536, nor exact compensation for such use, but it may make regulations for the use incident to a proper exercise of the police power.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Telegraphs and Telephones, Cent. Dig. § 6; Dec. Dig. § 10;* Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1487.]

9. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 71*) — STREETS—LEGISLATIVE CONTROL.

The state in its sovereign capacity may control all public streets, and, except as the control is relinquished to municipalities, it remains with the state Legislature to be exercised in a manner not prohibited by the state Constitution.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 175; Dec. Dig. § 71.*]

10. TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES (§ 10*) — FRANCHISES—STATUTES—CONSTRUCTION.

Civ. Code, § 536, empowering telegraph corporations to construct telegraph lines on any public highway, grants to a telegraph company, having a franchise under Act Cong. July 24, 1866, c. 280, 14 Stat. 221, empowering any telegraph company accepting the obligations of the act to construct and operate telegraph lines over the military or post roads of the United States, a franchise in addition to the franchise given by the federal act, and the state franchise includes the right to such exclusive occupation by a telegraph company of parts of the streets as is maintained for the purpose of its system.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Telegraphs and Telephones, Dec. Dig. § 10.*]

11. TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES (§ 10*) — FRANCHISES—CONSTRUCTION.

A franchise granted by the state to a telegraph company to construct and operate telegraph lines over public highways necessarily implies the right to maintain such lines.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Telegraphs and Telephones, Dec. Dig. § 10.*]

12. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 101*) — EMINENT DOMAIN (§ 85*) — FRANCHISES—GRANTS—ACCEPTANCE—VESTED RIGHTS.

Where a telegraph corporation constructed its telegraph lines in the streets of a city prior to Civ. Code, § 536, empowering telegraph companies to construct lines over public highways, and it continued to maintain its lines after the adoption of the Code, the continued maintenance of exclusive possession of portions of highways without compensation was an acceptance of the franchise, and it acquired vested rights, and, in the absence of any right of revocation reserved in the Code, its rights could not be taken away without compensation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Dec. Dig. § 101;* Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. §§ 221-226; Dec. Dig. § 85.*]

13. STATUTES (§ 72*) — GENERAL APPLICATION — NECESSITY.

Civ. Code, § 536, empowering telegraph companies to erect telegraph lines over public highways, is not in conflict with Const. 1849, art. 1, § 11, providing that all laws of a general nature shall have a uniform operation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. § 72; Dec. Dig. § 72.*]

14. STATUTES (§ 79*) — GENERAL AND SPECIAL LAWS.

Civ. Code, § 536, empowering telegraph or telephone corporations to erect lines over public highways, is not in conflict with the present Constitution, prohibiting special legislation because limited to corporations, and not including natural persons or partnerships.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. §§ 84, 85; Dec. Dig. § 79.*]

15. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 48*) — STATUTES — VALIDITY—PRESUMPTIONS.

To warrant the court in adjudging legislation void on the ground of special legislation, it must clearly appear that there is no sufficient reason to warrant the Legislature in finding a difference and making a discrimination, and every presumption is in favor of the validity of the act.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. § 46; Dec. Dig. § 48.*]

16. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 101*) — VESTED RIGHTS—FRANCHISES.

Const. 1879, art. 12, § 6, declaring that all existing franchises under which an actual organization has not taken place shall have no validity, does not affect Civ. Code, § 536, empowering telegraph corporations to erect lines over public highways, for, so far as any corporation has not at the time of the adoption of the Constitution accepted the provisions of the section, there is no existing franchise to be annulled.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Dec. Dig. § 101.*]

17. TAXATION (§ 117*) — FRANCHISE—POWER OF STATE.

A tax on the franchise of a telegraph corporation granted to it by Civ. Code, § 536, empowering telegraph corporations to erect lines over public highways, is solely on property within the state, and the franchise is taxable, though the corporation possesses a federal franchise which is not taxable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. § 214; Dec. Dig. § 117.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; George H. Hutton, Judge.

Action by the Western Union Telegraph Company against Ed. W. Hopkins, county assessor of the county of Los Angeles. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

J. D. Fredericks, Dist. Atty., and Hartley Shaw, Chief Deputy, for appellant. Beverly L. Hodghead (Brown & Wells and Geo. H. Fearons, of counsel), for respondent. Leslie R. Hewitt, City Atty., J. P. Wood, City Atty., W. B. Mathews, John W. Shenk, Wm. J. Carr, and Pillsbury, Madison & Sutro, amici curie.

ANGELLOTTI, J. The assessor of Los Angeles county levied an assessment against the plaintiff for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, in the sum of $50,000, upon its "franchise granted by the state of California to use the public highways of the city of Los Angeles," fixed a tax on said assessment at the rate of taxation applicable to property as to which he was authorized to collect taxes, the same amounting to $520, and was proceeding, in accordance with the law relative to enforcement of the tax in cases where he was authorized to collect, to seize, and sell certain personal property of plaintiff in satisfaction of the tax. This action was thereupon commenced by plaintiff to enjoin him from proceeding with the collection of such tax, on the ground that said assessment and tax are void. This claim of plaintiff was sustained by the trial court, and judgment was accordingly given in favor of plaintiff. This is an appeal by defendant assessor from such judgment. The case was submitted to and decided by the trial court upon an agreed statement of facts. No question is made as to the propriety of the remedy by injunction in this case, "if in fact the assessment made against plaintiff was invalid." The question presented for our determination on this appeal is the validity of this assessment upon the agreed facts.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Plaintiff, a New York corporation engaged in an interstate telegraph business, on June 12, 1867, duly accepted the terms and privileges, restrictions, and obligations of the act of Congress approved July 24, 1866, (chapter 230, 14 Stat. 221), entitled "An act to aid in the construction of telegraph lines, and to secure to the government the use of the same for postal and military and other purposes." That act provides that any telegraph company accepting in writing the restrictions and obligations required by the act "shall have the right to construct, maintain, and operate lines of telegraph through and over any portion of the public domain of the United States, over and along any of the military or post roads of the United States which have been or may hereafter be declared such by act of Congress, and over, under, or across the navigable streams or waters of the United States; provided, that such lines of telegraph shall be so constructed and maintained as not to obstruct the navigation of such streams and waters, or interfere with the ordinary travel on such military or post roads." Plaintiff ever since its acceptance of this act has been entitled to the privileges granted thereby. In the year 1870 plaintiff first constructed its telegraph system in the city of Los Angeles, and has ever since maintained and operated it therein, repairing, reconstructing, adding thereto, and changing the location of its wires in some cases from one street to another, all as the demands of its business in said city required. For many years last past, it has continuously maintained its lines of telegraph through, over, and upon the public roads, streets, and highways, kept up and maintained as such in the county of Los Angeles, in the city of Los Angeles, in the state of California, and elsewhere throughout the United States. On the first Monday of March, 1907, it had erected and was maintaining and operating on certain streets and highways of said city, kept up and maintained as such, as a part of its general telegraph system, poles with wires strung thereon, all so placed as not to interfere with ordinary travel on said streets or highways, and also a little less than one mile of underground conduit underneath the surface of said streets. Plaintiff has never obtained or received any franchise from the city of Los Angeles for the use of any of its streets for the construction or maintenance of its telegraph system, and it has no franchise whatever for such use of the streets of the city other than its federal franchise granted by the act of Congress of July 24, 1866, and other than such franchise, if any, as it has under section 536 of the Civil Code of California. Plaintiff has never claimed to have or to have exercised any franchise under said section 536 of the Civil Code.

It is to be borne in mind that the only right or franchise here involved is the one granted by the state, if any, to use the public highways of the city of Los Angeles, the assessment being limited by its terms to that particular right, and not including the right to use public highways in the county of Los Angeles outside of said city.

[1] The franchise alleged to have been so granted was one for the construction of lines of telegraph along and upon any public road or highway by any telegraph corporation, which like the grant made by section 19 of article 11 of the Constitution regarding the use of streets for water or gas pipes, would vest only when actually accepted by the exercise of the right granted and would be assessable only in the place where such exercise is had. Stockton, etc., Co. v. San Joaquin Co., 148 Cal. 318, 83 Pac. 54, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 174.

[2] It was erroneously stated in the opinion of Mr. Justice McFarland in Western Union Co. v. Visalia, 149 Cal. 744, 87 Pac. 1023, that section 3964 of the Revised Statutes of the United States provides that "all public roads and highways while kept up and maintained as such are declared to be post roads." That section contains no such provision; it being limited so far as public streets or roads are concerned to certain roads during the time mail is carried thereon. The provision referred to in that opinion is in another act of Congress, and is incorrectly quoted in that the words "post routes" are used in the act instead of "post roads." 23 U. S. Stats. 3 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2708). It has been held that the terms are not synonymous, and that letter carrier routes in cities were not post roads until declared such by said section 3964, although they were post routes. Blackham v. Gresham (C. C.) 16 Fed. 611. Said section 3964 provides that "all letter carrier routes established in any city or town for the collection and delivery of mail matter" shall be post roads. We think that we are warranted in assuming that the streets of the city of Los Angeles kept up and maintained as such are letter carrier routes established in such city for the collection and delivery of mail matter, and consequently are post roads under section 3964, U. S.

Revised Statutes. Code Civ. Proc. § 1875, subd. 3. If this be so, it is unnecessary to determine the effect of the statute declaring all public roads and highways to be post routes. What we have said in this matter is called forth by the claim of defendant that, as the agreed statement of facts does not state whether the streets of the city of Los Angeles occupied by plaintiff are letter carrier routes, plaintiff has failed to show that its federal franchise granted by the act of July 24, 1866, covers such streets, a question considered material in determining whether as to the streets of the city of Los Angeles plaintiff has acquired any valuable right under section 536 of the Civil Code of this state.

It was held by the United States Supreme Court in the case of Pensacola Tel. Co. v. Western Union Tel. Co., 96 U. S. 1, 24 L. Ed. 708, that the act of July 24, 1866, is not limited to such military and post roads as are upon the public domain, but extends to all in the United States, including those in the various states. It was said: "These are all within the dominion of the national government to the extent of the national powers, and are, therefore, subject to legitimate congressional regulation." The power to make such provision as to military and post roads situated in the various states was held to be included in the powers granted to the national government to regulate commerce among the several states and to establish post offices and post roads. There has been no modification of these rules by any subsequent decision of that court, which, of course, is the final arbiter on such questions. It is clear, therefore, that plaintiff has under this act of Congress such rights in regard to the streets of the city of Los Angeles as are granted by the act in regard to military or post roads. Such rights constitute its federal franchise. There is no pretense that this federal franchise may be assessed for taxes by the state, county, or municipality, and the assessment here involved does not purport to include it, being confined in terms to an alleged franchise granted by the state of California.

The claim of grant of franchise by the state is based solely on section 536, Civil Code. That section as originally adopted in 1872 was as follows: "Telegraph corporations may construct lines of telegraph along and upon any public road or highway, along or across any of the waters or lands within this state, and may erect poles, posts, piers, or abutments for supporting the insulators, wires, and other necessary fixtures of their lines, in such manner and at such points as not to incommode the public use of the road or highway or interrupt the navigation of the waters." A very similar provision was to be found in our laws relating to telegraph companies or associations organized under laws of the state of California for many years prior to the adoption of the Code. See Stats. 1850, p. 369, and Stats. of 1857, p. 171. This section has never been expressly repealed or amended in any particular except by expressly extending the privileges therein granted to telephone corporations, which was done in the year 1905 by a repeal of the section and its re-enactment by the same act in such a form as to expressly include telephone corporations. The ultimate question in this case is whether this section grants any right to plaintiff in regard to the streets of the city of Los Angeles in addition to the rights therein granted by the act of Congress, which right so granted by the section has been accepted and is being exercised by plaintiff. If this question be answered in the affirmative, it is clear that plaintiff has under the section a right in the streets of the city of Los Angeles, in the nature of a franchise, granted by the state, constituting property assessable as other property in the place where it is situated. Stockton Gas, etc., Co. v. San Joaquin Co., supra. If, on the other hand, this question is answered in the negative, it appears necessarily to follow that plaintiff has no franchise granted by the state. The question of the effect of section 536 of the Civil Code with relation to telegraph corporations operating under the provisions of this act of Congress, has never been determined by this court, except in so far as it was determined in Western Union Tel. Co. v. Visalia, 149 Cal. 744, 751, 87 Pac. 1023. In San Francisco v. Western Union Tel. Co., 96 Cal. 140, 31 Pac. 10, 17 L. R. A. 301, it was assumed that the assessment was on the federal franchise, and it was one of the things taken as granted that the company "has derived no franchise from the state of California." In Western Union Tel. Co. v. Visalia, supra, the assessment was on "a franchise granted by the city of Visalia." The company had erected and was using its lines of poles and wires through what were afterwards streets of the city of Visalia before the city was incorporated, and had ever since used the same. The city of Visalia in the year 1892 purported to grant to the company by ordinance the right to use its streets for its poles and wires. The city was then existing under a special act of the Legislature which made sections 4354 to 4456, Political Code, a part of the charter. Stats. 1873-4, p. 171. The majority opinion held that, in so far as the ordinance of Visalia purported to grant any rights, it merely attempted to give to plaintiff that which it already had and was of no legal effect whatever. It was not expressly decided by that opinion what was the source of the company's rights in that regard, the federal act or the state law. The opinion of Justice McFarland, concurred in by Justice Lorigan, did say that the company had the right to operate a telegraph line along the streets of the city "not only from the act of Congress above referred to, but also from section 536 of our Civil Code," but there was no expression of opinion therein as to whether said section 536 granted any rights that were not already possessed by the company under the act of Congress.

[3] The case, however, did necessarily decide that in view of the act of Congress and section 536, Civil Code, the right of the company to use the streets of a city organized and existing under the general laws of the state relating to municipal corporations contained in sections 4354 to 4456, Political Code, where it had established its system therein prior to the incorporation of the city, existed independently of any grant by the city, and that the city could not add to its right in that behalf. It also necessarily decided that, if there was anything enjoyed by the company that was not covered by the act of Congress, its rights in that behalf were derived from section 536, Civil Code.

[4] The question of the extent and character of the rights granted by the federal act is, of course, exclusively a federal question, upon which the decisions of the United States Supreme Court are necessarily final. There is apparently considerable difference in the views of learned counsel appearing in this case, and also in the views of different judges, both federal and state, as to the effect of various decisions of the United States Supreme Court touching this question. But we think there can reasonably be no difference of opinion as to the meaning of those decisions so far as all questions necessary to the determination of this case are concerned. It was clearly and definitely established by the decision of that court in St. Louis v. Western Union Tel. Co., 148 U. S. 92, 13 Sup. Ct. 485, 37 L. Ed. 380, that the privilege conferred by the act of July 24, 1866, on telegraph companies to construct, maintain, and operate lines of telegraph over such post roads as are public streets or highways of a state, is subject to the right of the state to charge and receive compensation from the telegraph company for the use by it of so much of the street or highway as is exclusively devoted to its purposes. That case involved the validity of a charge imposed by the city of St. Louis, held to represent the state, upon telegraph companies, for the privilege of using the streets of the city of a certain amount per annum for each pole erected or used by them in such streets, and the right to impose such a charge, held to be in the nature of rental for the use of property belonging to the city, was upheld. The court having considered the nature of the use made by the company, showing that such use differed from that of the general public, which was temporary and shifting, in that it is "in respect to so much of the space as it occupies with its poles, permanent and exclusive," effectually and permanently dispossessing the general public as if it had destroyed that amount of ground, proceeded to consider the claim of the telegraph company that, by reason of the provisions of the act of July 24, 1866, it had the right to so occupy the streets with its poles free of charge on the part of the state or city. Upon this point the court, after declaring that it is a misconception to suppose that the franchise or privilege granted by the act of 1866 carries with it the unrestricted right to appropriate the public property of a state, and that a grant from one government cannot abridge any property rights of a public character created by the authority of another sovereignty, said: "No one would suppose that a franchise from the federal government to a corporation, state or national, to construct interstate roads or lines of travel, transportation or communication, would authorize it to enter upon the private property of an individual, and appropriate it without compensation. No matter how broad and comprehensive might be the terms in which the franchise was granted, it would be confessedly subordinate to the right of the individual not to be deprived of his property without just compensation. And the principle is the same when, under the grant of a franchise from the national government, a corporation assumes to enter upon property of a public nature belonging to a state. It would not be claimed, for instance, that under a franchise from Congress to construct and operate an interstate railroad the grantee thereof could enter upon the statehouse grounds of the state, and construct its depot there, without paying the value of the property thus appropriated. Although the statehouse grounds be property devoted to public uses, it is property devoted to the public uses of the state, and property whose ownership and control are in the state, and it is not within the competency of the national government to dispossess the state of such control and use, or appropriate the same to its own benefit, or the benefit of any of its corporations or grantees, without suitable compensation to the state. This rule extends to streets and highways. They are the public property of the state. While for purposes of travel and common use they are open to the citizens of every state alike, and no state can by its legislation deprive the citizens of another state of such common use, yet when an appropriation of any part of this public property to an exclusive use is sought, whether by a citizen or corporation of the same or another state, or a corporation of the national government, it is within the competency of the state, representing the sovereignty of that local public, to exact for its benefit compensation for this exclusive appropriation. It matters not for what that exclusive appropriation is taken, whether for steam railroads or street railroads, telegraphs or telephones, the state may, if it chooses, exact from the party or corporation given such exclusive use pecuniary compensation to the general public for being deprived of the common use of the portion thus appropriated."

These views were reaffirmed and applied in Postal Tel. Co. v. Baltimore, 156 U. S. 210, 15 Sup. Ct. 356, 39 L. Ed. 399, and approved in Richmond v. Southern Bell T. & T. Co., 174 U. S. 771, 19 Sup. Ct. 778, 43 L. Ed. 1162, and they have not been modified by any subsequent decision.

[5] It thus appears to be settled by the decisions of the court of last resort on such questions that, even if a state has no power to absolutely prohibit such exclusive use of portions of its public highway by a telegraph company operating under said act (see, however, Western Union Tel. Co. v. Pennsylvania, etc., Co., 195 U. S. 540, 25 Sup. Ct. 133, 49 L. Ed. 312), it nevertheless has a property interest in its public highways which is not divested by a grant of the United States to the telegraph company, and which may be the subject of grant from the state to the company. Notwithstanding the act of Congress, the telegraph company cannot appropriate to its exclusive use portions of such highways without being subject to charges on behalf of the state by way of compensation for such use.

[6] It is obvious, then, that, if the state grants to such a company the right to such exclusive possession of portions of its public highways without compensation, the company obtains thereby something not acquired by it under the act of Congress, and that such right so acquired by the company is nothing more nor less than a franchise, within a well-recognized meaning of that term, granted by the state, having for purposes of assessment a local situs, and being assessable in the particular city or county in which the streets so occupied are situated. Stockton, etc., Co. v. San Joaquin Co., supra.

[7] It is also clear that, where there is a valid law of the state purporting to grant such right to telegraph companies generally, the exclusive occupation by a company of portions of public highways for the authorized purposes is an acceptance by it of the offered franchise. Stockton, etc., Co. v. San Joaquin Co., supra.

[8] In the light of what we have said, it appears that the case of Western Union Tel. Co. v. Visalia, 149 Cal. 744, 87 Pac. 1023, does necessarily decide that section 536, Civil Code, was effectual to grant this right as to all highways lying outside of municipalities, and that where such a grant was accepted by a company the subsequent inclusion of a highway so occupied by a municipality existing under such laws relating to municipal corporations as were contained in sections 4354 to 4456, Political Code, would not operate to impair the effect of such grant. Section 536, Civil Code, has, however, never been confined in terms to highways outside of municipalities, but always purported to apply to all public highways in the state. The term "public highways" includes streets in cities. Pol. Code, § 2618. It is not claimed that at any time prior to the construction of its telegraph system by plaintiff in the city of Los Angeles the state had vested in that municipality any right of control over public highways therein, except in so far as the Legislature had empowered the common council of any city, among other things, "to regulate the streets, wharves, piers and chutes in the city and the use thereof." Section 4408, Pol. Code. Manifestly this provision, when considered in connection with section 536, Civil Code, adopted at the same time, cannot be construed as conferring any greater power than that of doing such things in regard to the streets and the use thereof as were justified in the legitimate exercise of the police power, and would not have warranted the municipality in attempting to exclude a telegraph company from such use of its streets as was expressly authorized by section 536, Civil Code, or in exacting compensation for such use. It warranted such regulation of the use as was incident to a proper exercise of the police power, and nothing more.

[9] It is universally recognized that the state in its sovereign capacity has the original right to control all public streets and highways, and that except in so far as that control is relinquished to municipalities by the state, either by provision of the state constitution or by legislative act not inconsistent with the Constitution, it remains with the state Legislature to be exercised in any manner not prohibited by the state Constitution.

[10] From what we have said it is apparent that the case of Western Union Tel. Co. v. Visalia, supra, necessarily determined material questions arising in this case in such a manner as to sustain the validity of the assessment involved. In other words: If that decision is to be followed, section 536, Civil Code, constituted a grant to telegraph companies of rights in regard to the streets of cities, in addition to the rights given by the act of Congress, which to the extent that they were accepted and availed of by any company, constituted a franchise granted by the state and accepted by the company. This so-called state franchise included the right to such exclusive occupation by the company of portions of the streets as is maintained for the purpose of its system, leaving nothing in that behalf to be granted by the municipality. Under that decision, so far as the telegraph company holds these rights, it holds them solely under and by virtue of section 536, Civil Code. It is proper to say that there is no question in this case of any attempted revocation or modification by either state or city of any privilege purported to be granted by the state to plaintiff, and that the city of Los Angeles has never purported to grant any of such privileges to plaintiff, but has apparently acquiesced in the claim of plaintiff that it is entitled to use its streets, subject only to the lawful exercise by the city of such rights in regard to such use as it has under the police power. What those rights are is a question in no way involved in this case.

It is earnestly urged by counsel appearing as amici curiæ that section 536, Civil Code, is either unconstitutional or cannot be construed as it was in the Visalia Case, and that, if neither of these contentions be upheld, it nevertheless must be held that the section has been repealed by implication so far as the city of Los Angeles is concerned. As to the latter claim, it is sufficient to say that none of the laws upon which the claim of repeal by implication is based was enacted prior to 1883, which was long after the construction of plaintiff's system along the streets of the city of Los Angeles. Assuming that section 536, Civil Code, was a grant of the right to such use of the streets, we are of the opinion that it must be held, to use the language of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals in Sunset Tel. & Tel. Co. v. Pomona, 172 Fed. 837, 97 C. C. A. 251, that the maintenance and operation of such system "was an acceptance by it of the provisions of that statute, which thereby became a contract between the company and the state, secured by the Constitution of the United States against impairment by any subsequent state legislation." In this connection it should be said that learned counsel for plaintiff assert that inasmuch as it constructed its lines in the streets of Los Angeles in the year 1870, prior to the adoption of section 536, Civil Code, it never manifested any acceptance of the rights offered by the statute and has exercised no franchise thereunder.

[11] Of course, the grant of the right to "construct" and "erect" contained in the section necessarily implied the right to maintain.

[12] Although the construction was before the adoption of the Civil Code section, the continued maintenance of exclusive possession of portions of highways without compensation was a sufficient acceptance. It once being established that the act of Congress did not give the right to such exclusive possession without compensation, the maintenance of such possession by plaintiff was necessarily under the Civil Code section, and cannot be attributed to any other authority.

Returning to the points made as to the proper construction of section 536, Civil Code, and its constitutionality if it be given the effect attributed to it in the Visalia Case: While there is some conflict in the authorities cited from other states, we are of the opinion that the weight of authority and the better reasoning support the construction given by the Visalia Case, viz., that the section was a grant by the state to all telegraph corporations accepting the same, of the rights therein specified. The reasons given by learned counsel in support of a contrary construction do not appeal to us as having much force in the face of the clear and unambiguous language used. And to the extent that the offer of the state contained in the section was accepted by a telegraph company by actual occupation of highway prior to any repeal, modification, or suspension of the section, no right of revocation having been reserved, such telegraph company has vested rights that cannot be taken away by state or city without compensation.

In this connection, learned counsel claim that a right to revocation was reserved, basing their claim on the constitutional provision that all laws passed pursuant to the section providing for the formation of corporations may be altered from time to time or repealed (section 31, art. 4, Const. 1849; section 1, art. 12, Const. 1879), and on section 327, Political Code, providing that a statute may be repealed at any time except when otherwise provided therein, and that persons acting thereunder are deemed to have acted in contemplation of this power of repeal. The effect of similar provisions was learnedly discussed by Justice Cooley in City of Detroit v. Detroit, etc., Co., 43 Mich. 140, 5 N. W. 275, where it was sought, under express authority of an act of the Legislature of the state, to deprive a plank road company of its right acquired under a prior statute to maintain a toll gate within the existing corporate limits of the city of Detroit. It was there concluded that the effect would be to deprive the company of property lawfully acquired, and that there was no well-considered case in which it had been held that a Legislature, under the general power to amend a charter, might take from a corporation any of its substantial property or property rights. A distinction is made in the opinion between the cases involving the question of the liability of corporations to the control of the general police laws and cases involving acts passed solely in the exercise of the reserved general power to amend and repeal charters of corporations. Of course, the liability of plaintiff to all such reasonable regulations as is warranted in the proper exercise of the police power cannot be disputed. In fact, this is expressly stipulated by the provisions in section 536, Civil Code, that the system of the telegraph company must be constructed "in such manner and at such points as not to incommode the public use of the road or highway." But in so far as actual occupation of a highway by a telegraph company was taken or had under section 536, Civil Code, we are of the opinion that a vested right resulted, subject only to the proper exercise of the police power, and that it must be held that there was no such reservation as warranted such right being taken away without compensation.

We are satisfied, too, that there was nothing in the old Constitution of this state which was in force at the time of the adoption of the Codes and up to the year 1880 that prohibited the granting of such rights to telegraph corporations.

[13] The only provision referred to by learned counsel is section 11 of article 1 of that Constitution, which provided that "all laws of a general nature shall have a uniform operation." We do not see that this provision is at all applicable.

[14] The claim is that the grant made by section 536, Civil Code, is void because it is limited to "corporations," and does not include natural persons or partnerships. It is not to be doubted that a grant of such rights to a single telegraph corporation would have been valid under the old Constitution, which contained no inhibition whatever against special legislation. Section 536 was such a grant to all corporations, and was no more objectionable so far as legal prohibition is concerned, than a grant to a single corporation. But we are not prepared to hold that the section is violative of the provisions of our present Constitution relating to special legislation. We may reasonably assume that good and sufficient reasons may be apparent to the Legislature why the right to exclusively occupy portions of the public highways for the purposes specified should be confined to corporations organized and existing for the purpose of doing a telegraph business, and why such corporations constitute a class to which such a grant may properly be restricted without violating our constitutional provisions against special legislation.

[15] If it may reasonably be so assumed, the legislation must be upheld, for it is well settled that to warrant a court in adjudging legislation void on this ground it must clearly appear that there was no sufficient reason to warrant the legislative department in finding a difference and making the discrimination. Every presumption is in favor of the validity of an act of the Legislature, until its invalidity is made to appear. See Ex parte King, 157 Cal. 161, 106 Pac. 578, and cases there cited.

It is suggested that section 536, Civil Code, was repealed upon the adoption of the Constitution of 1879 by reason of section 6, article 12, contained therein, declaring that "all existing charters, grants, franchises, special or exclusive privileges, under which an actual and bona fide organization shall not have taken place, and business been commenced in good faith, at the time of the adoption of this Constitution, shall thereafter have no validity." As we have seen, the repeal of section 536, Civil Code, even by a constitutional provision, could not be held to have affected the rights of plaintiff in so far as it had already acquired vested rights under section 536.

[16] But we are satisfied that this provision of the Constitution cannot reasonably be construed as affecting section 536, Civil Code, at all. So far as any company had not at such time availed itself of and thus accepted the provisions of section 536, there was no "existing" grant or franchise to be annulled, and there was never any "special or exclusive" privilege given by the section. The constitutional provision in question was in no way applicable.

[17] It follows from what we have said that plaintiff's exclusive occupation of portions of the streets of the city of Los Angeles without liability for compensation to the extent at least to which its system was constructed therein at the time of the adoption of section 536, Civil Code, and its right to such occupation free of charge by the city are based solely on the last-named section, and that as to such occupation and right this section constitutes a grant in the nature of a franchise accepted by it, constituting property located within this state and assessable in the county of Los Angeles. The claim of plaintiff that taxation of this franchise is in any way taxation of its federal franchise is utterly without basis. The tax is one solely on valuable property within this state, viz., the right to the permanent and exclusive use of portions of the public streets of the city of Los Angeles, free of compensation—a tax differing in no material respect from one levied on its poles and wires located within such city. See generally Central Pac. R. R. Co. v. California, 162 U. S. 91, 118, 16 Sup. Ct. 766, 40 L. Ed. 903.

No other point is made against the validity of the assessment here involved. There is, of course, no question presented by this record as to the correctness of the valuation placed upon the property by the assessor.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: SLOSS, J.; LORIGAN, J.; HENSHAW, J.; MELVIN, J.

SHAW, J., deems himself disqualified to act in this case, by reason of relationship to one of the attorneys of record.

(160 Cal. 124)

WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH CO. v. LOS ANGELES COUNTY. (L. A. 2446.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 5, 1911.)

1. TAXATION (§ 8*)—FEDERAL FRANCHISES.

A federal franchise acquired by a corporation under a federal statute is not subject to state, county, or municipal taxation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. § 21; Dec. Dig. § 8.*]

2. TAXATION (§ 117*)—CORPORATE FRANCHISES.

A state franchise acquired by the corporation is taxable under Pol. Code, § 3628, requiring the taxation of franchises.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. § 214; Dec. Dig. § 117.*]

3. TAXATION (§ 319*)—PRESUMPTIONS—REGULARITY OF ACTS OF OFFICERS.

An assessment for taxation is presumptively valid, independent of any statutory pro-

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r indexes visions, in view of the general presumption that public officers are presumed to regularly perform their duties, and the burden of showing the invalidity of an assessment is on the party aggrieved.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Dec. Dig. § 319.*]

4. TAXATION (§§ 425, 319*)—FRANCHISES—ASSESSMENT—VALIDITY—PRESUMPTIONS.

Where a corporation has two franchises, one obtained from the state and taxable by the state, and one obtained from the federal government and not taxable by the state, an assessment simply of "franchise" without other words of description or identification is not invalid for want of a proper description; and, in the absence of any showing to the contrary, the court will presume that the assessment includes only the franchise granted by the state.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. §§ 713, 714; Dec. Dig. §§ 425, 319.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; George H. Hutton, Judge.

Action by the Western Union Telegraph Company against the County of Los Angeles. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

J. D. Fredericks, Dist. Atty., and Hartley Shaw, Chief Deputy, for appellant. Beverly L. Hodghead (Brown & Wells, of counsel), for respondent. J. P. Wood, City Atty., and Wm. J. Carr, Asst. City Atty., amici curiæ.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an action by plaintiff to recover $550, taxes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, paid under protest. Judgment was in favor of plaintiff and defendant appeals therefrom. Except that the taxes were for a different year, the material facts are the same as were the facts in the case of Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Hopkins, L. A. 2,445, 116 Pac. 557, this day decided, with the single exception that the description of the property assessed in the case at bar is, "Right to occupy the streets of the city of Los Angeles," without other words of description or identification, the valuation thereof for purposes of assessment being placed at $50,000.

By Western Union Tel. Co. v. Hopkins, L. A. No. 2,445, 116 Pac. 557, it is decided that plaintiff had at the time of this assessment a right in the nature of a franchise in the streets of the city of Los Angeles, viz., the right to the exclusive occupation without compensation of portions thereof used for its poles and wires and underground conduit, derived from and held under section 536 of the Civil Code, which constituted no part of its federal franchise, and which was taxable for state and county purposes in the county of Los Angeles. If the assessment in the case at bar was exclusively of that right, it follows from the views announced in that case that the tax was valid. The only difficulty in this case arises from the wording of the description in the assessment.

[1, 2] It is admitted that plaintiff has certain rights in regard to the streets of the city of Los Angeles by virtue of its federal franchise acquired under Act July 24, 1866, c. 230, 14 Stat. 221, and, of course, that franchise cannot be assessed by state, county, or municipality. It is claimed by plaintiff that its federal franchise is included in this assessment, and, if so included, that the entire assessment must fall as illegal, because the values of the two rights, federal and state, are so blended together that the unlawful part cannot be separated from the lawful part. If the first of these claims is well founded, the second necessarily follows. California v. C. P. R. R. Co., 127 U. S. 1, 29, 45, 8 Sup. Ct. 1073, 32 L. Ed. 150. Plaintiff alleged in its complaint that the assessment was upon its federal franchise. By its answer defendant fully denied the allegations in this behalf, denying that the assessment was intended to or did impose any burden or tax on any federal franchise, and alleging that the only franchise or right assessed was that derived by plaintiff from the state of California, under section 536 of the Civil Code. No evidence was introduced by either side on this issue, the case being submitted for decision upon the pleadings and upon a stipulation as to the facts, which stipulation is silent upon this proposition. There were no findings of fact.

We are satisfied that it must here be held that the assessment was limited to rights in the streets of Los Angeles derived by plaintiff from the state of California, and not covered by the federal franchise, and that the description was not so imperfect as to invalidate the assessment. Under the views announced in Western Union Tel. Co. v. Hopkins, L. A. 2,445, 116 Pac. 557, the pleadings and stipulated facts in this case show that plaintiff owned certain rights of occupation in regard to the streets of Los Angeles that were derived from the state of California and were not included in the federal franchise. These constituted taxable property which it was the duty of the assessor to assess. Pol. Code, § 3628. It is not to be assumed in the absence of evidence that the assessor has included in this assessment, which in express terms certainly includes plaintiff's rights granted by the state, other property which he had no right or power to assess. The wording of the description does not necessarily imply the inclusion of any such property, but is entirely consistent with the idea that the thing assessed was the right of exclusive occupation without compensation of portions of the public streets of Los Angeles, granted by the state and owned by plaintiff. It cannot be doubted that the presumption is always in favor of the validity of an assessment, and that the burden of showing the contrary is on the person claiming to be aggrieved.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[3] Independent of special statutory provisions relative to presumptions in favor of assessments, the general presumption that public officers have regularly performed their duties and that official duty has been regularly performed (subdivision 15, § 1963, Code Civ. Proc.) applies to official action in tax matters (1 Cooley on Taxation [3d Ed.] p. 447, and note). "The presumption in all proceedings relating to taxes is in favor of regularity." Chamberlain v. City of St. Ignace, 92 Mich. 335, 52 N. W. 635. In People v. Central Pacific R. R. Co., 105 Cal. 576, 38 Pac. 905, the assessment was upon the "franchise" of the defendant. It was claimed by the defendant in that case that the assessment was void because it included its franchise received from the United States. The court said: "We have seen that the state franchise is property susceptible of valuation, and, as the State Board of Equalization is directed to assess the franchise of the appellant, it must be assumed, in the absence of any other evidence than the assessment itself, that the board has acted upon property within its jurisdiction, rather than upon property which it has no power to include in the assessment." In that case there was a finding of the trial court that the federal franchise was not included, and it was said that section 3670, Political Code, a section not materially differing in its provisions from those of section 3789, Political Code, as to the effect of the assessment book or delinquent roll as prima facie evidence, would sufficiently sustain this finding, even if there were no other evidence. These views so expressed are assailed as dicta, because in that case there was other evidence which the court considered and held sufficient to sustain the finding. If we assume them to have been dicta, we nevertheless are of the opinion that they are correct. There is nothing in California v. Central Pacific R. R. Co., 127 U. S. 1, 8 Sup. Ct. 1073, 32 L. Ed. 150, opposed to this conclusion. In that case, according to the opinion of the United States Supreme Court, there was a finding of the trial court that the assessment made by the State Board of Equalization included the full value of all franchises and corporate powers held and exercised by the defendant, which necessarily included its federal franchise. The court assumed this finding to be correct, and, proceeding upon that assumption, considered the questions whether the defendant held any federal franchise, and whether such a federal franchise was assessable by the state. In a later case—Central Pacific R. R. Co. v. California, 162 U. S. 91, 16 Sup. Ct. 766, 40 L. Ed. 903, being the same case reported in 105 Cal. 576, 38 Pac. 905, which was taken by writ of error to the United States Supreme Court—the same court sustained a similar assessment of "franchise," upon the finding by the trial court that the assessment was only upon the state franchise and did not include the federal franchise.

[4] The two decisions in this case, that of the Supreme Court of the United States and that of the Supreme Court of California, are certainly authority upon the proposition that where the taxpayer has two franchises, one taxable by the state and one not so taxable, an assessment simply of "franchise" without other words of description or identification, is not invalid for want of a proper description. See, also, Stockton, etc., Co. v. San Joaquin Co., 148 Cal. 313, 83 Pac. 54, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 174, and San Francisco v. Oakland Water Co., 148 Cal. 331, 83 Pac. 61. The opinion in the case of San Francisco v. Western Union Tel. Co., 96 Cal. 140, 31 Pac. 10, 17 L. R. A. 301, is not in point for the reason that it was there assumed, in accord with an undisputed finding or stipulation of the parties, that the company "has derived no franchise" from the state of California, and the court considered only the question of the right to assess the federal franchise. The question presented is very different from that of a description of land in an assessment, of such a nature that it could apply to either of two parcels equally within the jurisdiction of the assessor, and the authorities cited on that proposition are not applicable in this controversy. In the absence of any showing to the contrary, the presumption that the assessing authorities in assessing plaintiff's franchise have included only property within their jurisdiction obtains, and sufficiently identifies the particular franchise assessed.

From what we have said it follows that the assessment must be held valid.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: SLOSS, J.; LORIGAN, J.; HENSHAW, J.; MELVIN, J.

SHAW, J., deems himself disqualified to act in this case by reason of relationship to one of the attorneys of record.

160 Cal. 129

POSTAL TELEGRAPH-CABLE CO. v. LOS ANGELES COUNTY. (L. A. 2,559.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 5, 1911.)

1. TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES (§ 10*)—FRANCHISES—STATUTES.

The provisions in the general municipal corporation act of 1883 (St. 1883, p. 93), governing the powers of councils of cities and towns existing under the act, as to the regulation of streets therein, do not apply to a city existing under a special charter containing no such provisions, and do not impliedly suspend the operation in such city of Civ. Code, § 536, empowering telegraph companies to erect lines over public highways.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Telegraphs and Telephones, Dec. Dig. § 10.*]

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

2. TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES (§ 10*)—
FRANCHISES—STATUTES.

Under Const. art. 11, §§ 6, 8, as originally enacted, declaring that charters of cities shall be subject to and controlled by the general laws, etc., the Los Angeles freeholders' charter of 1889 (St. 1889, p. 455) does not impair the effect of Civ. Code, § 536, empowering telegraph corporations to construct lines over public highways, which is a general law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Telegraphs and Telephones, Dec. Dig. § 10.*]

3. TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES (§ 10*)—
RIGHTS IN STREETS—FRANCHISES.

Neither the franchise act of 1893 (St. 1893, p. 288), nor any subsequent act, affects Civ. Code, § 536, empowering telegraph corporations to erect lines over public highways, so far as it relates to a telegraph company which installed in a city its system prior to the act of 1893.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Telegraphs and Telephones, Dec. Dig. § 10.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frederick W. Houser, Judge.

Action by the Postal Telegraph-Cable Company against Los Angeles County. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

J. D. Fredericks, Dist. Atty., and Hartley Shaw, Chief Deputy, for appellant. Hunsaker & Britt, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This, like the action of Western Union Tel. Co. v. County of Los Angeles, L. A. No. 2,446, 116 Pac. 564, is an action to recover taxes paid by plaintiff under protest for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, upon an assessment upon its "right to occupy the streets of the city of Los Angeles," the assessment valuation being $30,000, and the tax thereon $330. Plaintiff had judgment, and defendant appeals from such judgment.

There is no material difference between this case and the Western Union Telegraph Company Case just referred to. This plaintiff, a telegraph company organized in the year 1886 under the laws of the state of New York, accepted the terms of Act Cong. July 24, 1866, c. 230, 14 Stat. 221, on April 16, 1886, and did not construct its system in the city of Los Angeles until the year 1889, at which time that city had become organized under its freeholders' charter approved by the state Legislature January 31, 1889. Stats. 1889, p. 455. This difference, however, is not material. There was no express repeal of section 536 of the Civil Code until the year 1905, when that section was repealed and immediately re-enacted with express provision for telephone companies, and we have found no statute enacted prior to the construction of plaintiff's system in the city of Los Angeles that can be held to have impliedly repealed or suspended the effect of that section so far as that city is concerned.

[1] Provisions of the general municipal corporation act of 1883 (St. 1883, p. 93), relating to the powers of boards of trustees and city councils of towns and cities existing thereunder in regard to the control and regulation of streets therein, referred to by amici curiae, cannot be given such effect. Howsoever they may be construed, they were never applicable to the city of Los Angeles, for that city was never organized under the general municipal corporation act. Up to the time of the going into effect of its freeholders' charter it existed under a special legislative charter, containing no such provisions as those in the general municipal corporation act that are so referred to.

[2] It is immaterial, also, in this case what construction be given to certain provisions of the freeholders' charter as they existed at the time of its approval in 1889. However they be construed, they could not impair the effect of section 536 of the Civil Code, which was a general law. See section 6, art. 11, Const.; section 8, art. 11, Const., as amended in 1887; Davies v. City of Los Angeles, 86 Cal. 37, 24 Pac. 771; Banaz v. Smith, 133 Cal. 102, 104, 65 Pac. 309. It is to be borne in mind that the "municipal affairs" amendment of section 6 of article 11 of the Constitution was not adopted until the year 1896.

[3] Nor is it necessary in this case to consider the effect on section 536 of the Civil Code of the so-called franchise act of 1893 (St. 1893, p. 288), or any subsequent act, as the system of plaintiff was installed in the city of Los Angeles during the year 1889.

In view of the considerations stated above, this case is governed by the case of Western Union Tel. Co. v. County of Los Angeles, L. A. No. 2,446, 116 Pac. 564.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: SLOSS, J.; LORIGAN, J.; HENSHAW, J.; MELVIN, J.

SHAW, J., deems himself disqualified to act in this case by reason of relationship to one of the attorneys of record.

159 Cal. 366

BOHN v. BOHN. (L. A. 2,846.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 30, 1911.)

APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 373*)—UNDERTAKING ON APPEAL.

Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 941a, 941b, an appeal to the District Court of Appeal from a superior court was properly taken without any undertaking by the mere filing of a notice of appeal; an undertaking under section 940 not being necessary.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 373.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; Z. B. West, Judge.

Action by Samuel Bohn against John L. Bohn. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff and from an order refusing a change of venue, defendant appealed, and the appeals were dismissed by the District Court of Appeal. Application for an order that the cause be heard by the Supreme Court. Motion to dismiss the appeals denied, and the cause transferred to the District Court of Appeal for determination on the merits.

See, also, infra.

Winslow P. Hyatt, for appellant. Williams & Rutan, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The application for an order that this cause be heard and determined by the Supreme Court is granted, and it is accordingly ordered that the same be transferred from the District Court of Appeal of Second district to the Supreme Court for hearing and determination.

As the decision of the District Court was not upon the merits and the argument is set forth in the briefs, the matter may as well be summarily disposed of and the case again transferred to the District Court. There were two appeals, one from the judgment, the other from an order refusing a change of venue. The District Court dismissed both appeals upon the ground that the undertaking required by section 940, Code of Civil Procedure, to make an appeal effectual was fatally defective. The appeals were taken in June, 1910, by filing in the clerk's office a notice of appeal in due form. Under sections 941a and 941b, Code of Civil Procedure, the appeals were well taken without any undertaking and by the mere filing of the notice as stated. Mitchell v. California, etc., Co., 154 Cal. 731, 99 Pac. 202; Estate of McPhee, 154 Cal. 385, 97 Pac. 878. The decision of the District Court was clearly erroneous.

Appellant states in his application that because of occupation in other cases he was unable to prepare a petition to the District Court for a rehearing, in the time limited. The District Court evidently overlooked the decisions above cited, and its order was inadvertently made. There is no occasion for further delay to allow the motion to be formally presented. It must be denied.

It is ordered that the motion to dismiss the appeals be denied, and that the cause be transferred to the District Court of Appeal for the Second district, for hearing and determination on the merits.

16 Cal. App. 179

BOHN v. BOHN. (Civ. 881.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. May 6, 1911. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court July 5, 1911.)

1. VENUE (§ 84*)—CHANGE OF PLACE OF TRIAL—NOTICE—WAIVER.

Where plaintiff's counsel appeared and resisted defendant's motion for a change of venue without asking for time to present counter affidavits or claiming that he desired to contest the statements of defendant's affidavits, he waived the written notice under Code Civ. Proc. § 1005, providing for service of written notice of motion, it being assumed that the section is applicable to a motion for a change of venue.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Venue, Cent. Dig. §§ 146, 148; Dec. Dig. § 84.*]

2. VENUE (§ 63*)—CHANGE OF VENUE.

Where the county wherein an action is commenced is not the proper county, as disclosed by an affidavit of merits, accompanied by a demand in writing for a change of venue, filed with demurrer or answer, the court must order the change whether or not notice in writing of the time of the presentation of the application for a change has been served on plaintiff.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Venue, Dec. Dig. § 63.*]

3. VENUE (§ 63*)—CHANGE OF VENUE—"MOTION."

An application to change the place of trial of an action commenced in the wrong county is not a motion within Code Civ. Proc. § 1005, providing for service of written notice of a motion, though under section 1010 the action of the court on a demand for a change of venue is an order, and though the application made on the demand is designated a motion, but the motion goes on the calendar to be called for hearing in the regular order of business.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Venue, Dec. Dig. § 63.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 5, pp. 4609, 4610.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; Z. B. West, Judge.

Action by Samuel Bohn against John L. Bohn. From a default judgment, and from an order refusing to change the place of trial, defendant appeals. Reversed, and cause remanded.

See, also, 116 Pac. supra.

Winslow P. Hyatt, for appellant. R. Y. Williams and Williams & Rutan, for respondent.

ALLEN, P. J. Plaintiff on the 19th of April, 1910, filed his complaint against defendant, alleging ownership of and right of possession to each of 28 head of cattle in defendant's pasture in Los Angeles county, Cal.; further alleging wrongful detention thereof by defendant, with demand, and a prayer for judgment for the possession, or the value if the same could not be had. Process was regularly served upon defendant, and within due time, to wit, on the 22d day of April, 1910, defendant filed a demurrer to the complaint, and at the same time filed an affidavit setting forth that defendant was at the time of the commencement of the action and at the date of the filing of the affidavit, and for many years previous thereto had been, a resident of Los Angeles county; filed in addition thereto an affidavit of merits, with a demand in writing that the action be transferred from the superior court of Orange county to the superior court of Los Angeles county. A copy of these affidavits and demand were upon the same day served upon counsel for plaintiff. The clerk of the superior court of Orange county placed said motion upon the regular law and motion calendar for hearing Friday, April 29, 1910, at which date defendant presented the motion for change of place of trial. Plaintiff's counsel, being present, objected on the ground of insufficiency of the notice, and at the same time filed a counter affidavit showing that counsel for defendant was a resident of Los Angeles county and counsel for plaintiff of Orange county at the time of the serving of the copy of the motion. The court proceeded to hear the motion for change of place of trial and denied the same, and on the same date overruled the demurrer of defendant to the complaint. Thereafter, on the 3d day of June, 1910, the court entered a judgment against defendant by default. From this judgment and from an order refusing to change the place of trial defendant appeals.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

The motion for change of place of trial was denied because 10 days' notice had not been given plaintiff's counsel of the time and place of hearing the motion. This upon the authority of section 1005 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provides: "When a written notice of a motion is necessary, it must be given, if the court is held in the county in which at least one of the attorneys of each party has his office, five days before the time appointed for the hearing; otherwise, ten days." Assuming, without deciding, that a written notice is necessary upon an application for change of place of trial, or any notice other than that shown to have been given in this case, nevertheless, it appears that at the time specified in the motion plaintiff's counsel appeared and resisted the application.

[1] We think this was a waiver of written notice, were such required. This effect has been given an appearance and contest to a notice for the vacation of a judgment in Acock v. Halsey, 90 Cal. 220, 27 Pac. 193, in which case it is said the object of giving the notice was fully accomplished without giving it, citing authorities in support of such proposition. It may be conceded that if in the opinion of the court the time between the service of the copy of the motion and affidavits and the date of the application for hearing was insufficient in order to afford plaintiff opportunity to file counter affidavits, the court could have continued the hearing for a reasonable time within which plaintiff might have been given an opportunity to present counter affidavits, if he so desired. Plaintiff asked for no such time, made no claim that he desired to contest the statements made in the affidavits filed by defendant, but relied solely upon the technical proposition that the full time provided by section 1005 had not elapsed. We think, under the circumstances of this case, and upon the authorities cited, that if any irregularity existed in the notice it was waived by the appearance and conduct of plaintiff's counsel at the hearing. The affidavits being uncontested, defendant possessed the right to have the cause transferred for trial and the superior court of Orange county had no jurisdiction or authority, in the absence of a counter showing, to deny the transfer or to proceed further with the case.

The court erred in denying the order for change of place of trial, and in overruling the demurrer and rendering a judgment.

The judgment and order are reversed and cause remanded.

SHAW, J. [2, 3] I concur in the judgment. Where the county wherein the action is commenced is not the proper county for the trial thereof, and such fact is made to appear by an affidavit of merits, accompanied by a demand in writing that the place of trial be changed to the proper county, filed with the demurrer or answer, it is the duty of the court to make the order for change as demanded, regardless of whether or not a notice in writing of the time when the application will be presented has been served upon plaintiff. The right to such change of the place of trial is not limited to cases in which notice in writing of the time when the matter will be presented for hearing is served upon opposing counsel. Under the provision of section 1010, Code of Civil Procedure, the action of the court upon the demand is an order, and the application made upon the demand is designated a motion, but it is not a motion as to the making of which notice in writing is required to be given to plaintiff, within the meaning of section 1005, Code of Civil Procedure. Like a demurrer filed, it goes upon the calendar to be called for hearing in the regular order of business.

I concur: JAMES, J.

16 Cal. App. 280

McKERNAN v. LOS ANGELES GAS &
ELECTRIC CO. (Civ. 972.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. May 17, 1911. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court July 15, 1911.)

1. TRIAL (§ 165*)—NONSUIT—EVIDENCE.

The court, in passing on a motion for nonsuit at the close of plaintiff's case, must assume the truth of plaintiff's testimony.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 373, 374; Dec. Dig. § 165.*]

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 706*)—LAW OF THE ROAD—INJURIES TO TRAVELERS—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

Whether a person, struck by a vehicle not on the right side of the street as required by the law of the road, was guilty of contributory negligence held for the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 706.*]

3. JURY (§ 85*)—APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 968*)—DISCRETION OF COURT—CHALLENGES TO JURORS.

The court, in passing on challenges of jurors, has considerable discretion, and unless prejudice results to the party complaining of the improper allowance of challenges, appellate courts will not review the rulings.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Jury, Cent. Dig. § 405; Dec. Dig. § 85;* Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3843; Dec. Dig. § 968.*]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1045*)—HARMLESS ERROR—ERRONEOUS RULINGS ON CHALLENGES TO JURORS.

The error of the court in excusing jurors on the mere statement that they were customers of defendant, a gas and electric company, is not prejudicial to defendant where it was not thereby prevented from securing a jury of qualified and impartial men.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4124-4127; Dec. Dig. § 1045.*]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1066*)—HARMLESS ERROR—INSTRUCTIONS.

Where, in an action for personal injuries the evidence showed that $100 had been paid to physicians by plaintiff, but there was no evidence that any additional charge for medical attendance had been incurred, the error in a charge directing the jury, in computing the damages, to consider any medical expenses incurred, though not paid, was not prejudicial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4220; Dec. Dig. § 1066.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; W. R. Hervey, Judge.

Action by Michael McKernan against the Los Angeles Gas & Electric Company. From a judgment for plaintiff and from an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Wm. A. Cheney and Le Roy M. Edwards, for appellant. Frank L. Perry, for respondent.

JAMES, J. Plaintiff sued to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by the negligent acts of defendant. Trial before a jury was had, resulting in a verdict in favor of plaintiff for the sum of $2,750, upon which verdict judgment was entered. Defendant appeals from the judgment and from an order denying its motion for a new trial.

Errors assigned: First, that the court should have granted the motion of defendant for a judgment of nonsuit at the conclusion of the introduction of testimony for plaintiff; second, that challenges for cause interposed by plaintiff as to certain jurors, were improperly allowed; third, that the court erred in giving an instruction to the jury on the question as to what damages might be recovered against defendant.

Plaintiff on the 9th day of April, 1907, was a laborer engaged in working upon the streets of the city of Los Angeles. On the evening of that day after quitting his work he rode on the wagon of one Bachman, a teamster, to the corner of Ninth and Los Angeles streets. Bachman drove westerly along Ninth street, and as he neared the corner of Los Angeles street he drew his team and wagon close to the curb on the north side of Ninth street and stopped the team in order to allow plaintiff to alight. Plaintiff had been sitting on the driver's seat with Bachman and on the left-hand side of the seat, and he proceeded to climb down over the front wheel of the wagon. Before doing so, he testified, he looked down Ninth street and saw no car or vehicle approaching; that after he stepped upon the ground he was suddenly struck by the wheel of a wagon then being driven by an employé of defendant, and was thrown down, one wheel of the wagon passing over his shoulder, breaking the collar bone and causing other bruises and injuries. Bachman, the driver of the wagon upon which plaintiff had been riding, testified that as plaintiff was in the act of alighting he (Bachman) saw the wagon of defendant coming diagonally across the street. Noting that plaintiff was clear of his wagon, he let off the brake and started to drive on. That when he looked again plaintiff was lying upon the ground bleeding from the cuts and bruises which he had received.

[1] Taking this testimony to be true, as the trial court was obliged to assume it to be at the time of the making of the motion for judgment of nonsuit, it did not show that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law.

[2] Upon this evidence it became a question of fact for the jury to determine as to whether or not plaintiff had acted, under all of the circumstances of his position and the surrounding conditions, as a reasonable man might have acted when similarly placed. Plaintiff, even though the wagon of defendant had been seen by him to be approaching, would have been justified in alighting at the place where he did alight, observing ordinary precautions in so doing to escape injury. The testimony of Bachman tended to show that the wagon of defendant was not traveling on the right side of the street in its west-bound course, as the law of the road would require, but that it came diagonally from the opposite side of the street below the point of intersection of Los Angeles street with Ninth street. The trial court committed no error in denying the motion for judgment of nonsuit.

Certain members of the jury panel, when called and examined for cause, stated that they were customers of the defendant, and upon objection being made by plaintiff, they were excused. Appellant's counsel argue that the examination of the jurors did not show that the relation of debtor and creditor existed between defendant and these jurors, and that error was therefore committed in allowing the challenges. Defendant made no examination of the jurors at all to determine the fact as to whether as a result of their business dealings with defendant they at that time actually owed money to defendant for gas furnished to them by it. By the answers made to the questions asked of them, these jurors disclosed the fact that their relations as customers or patrons of defendant then existed and had not been terminated.

[3] In passing upon challenges interposed to jurors for cause, considerable latitude of discretion is allowed the trial court, and unless it is made clearly to appear that prejudice has been worked to the complaining party by reason of error committed in improperly allowing such challenges, appellate courts will not review the rulings. Grady v. Early, 18 Cal. 110; Lawlor v. Linforth, 72 Cal. 205, 13 Pac. 496.

[4] Conceding that the trial court was not justified in excusing the jurors upon the mere statement that they were consumers of gas furnished by the defendant, still it cannot be said, on the record as it is presented, that the rulings prejudiced defendant at all, or that it was thereby prevented from securing a jury of qualified and impartial men.

[5] But one instruction given to the jury is complained of. By instruction No. 18 the jury were told that if they found a verdict in favor of plaintiff, in computing the amount of damages they might consider "any medical expenses incurred, although not paid." The evidence showed that $100 had been paid to physicians by the plaintiff, and there was no evidence that any additional charge for medical attendance had been incurred. It cannot be assumed that the jury made allowance on account of any charge which was not shown by the evidence to have been incurred, for they were very fully instructed as to their duty to consider in arriving at a verdict only such facts as were established by the evidence in the case. Upon the authority of the decision in the case of Melone v. Sierra Railway Co., 151 Cal. 114, 91 Pac. 522, it was not prejudicial error for the court to give the instruction in the form it was given.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; SHAW, J.

16 Cal. App. 277

PEOPLE v. MESEROS. (Cr. 318.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. May 15, 1911. Rehearing Denied June 14, 1911. Denied by Supreme Court July 14, 1911.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 112*)—VENUE—EMBEZZLEMENT.

Where one, obtaining in one county the possession of a pay check to cash the same, took it to another county, where he cashed it and converted the proceeds to his own use without returning to the former county, the venue of the charge of embezzlement of the proceeds was in the latter county, though he conceived the intent in the former county to appropriate the check to his own use.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 223; Dec. Dig. § 112.*]

2. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 175*)—VARIANCE—VENUE.

The venue of an offense must be proved as charged.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. §§ 544-547; Dec. Dig. § 175.*]

3. EMBEZZLEMENT (§ 35*)—ISSUES, PROOF AND VARIANCE.

Proof of the embezzlement of a check does not support a charge of embezzlement of money.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Embezzlement, Cent. Dig. §§ 55-59; Dec. Dig. § 35.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Wm. S. Wells, Judge.

Spuros Meseros was convicted of embezzlement and he appeals. Reversed.

W. R. Dunn, for appellant. Attorney General Webb, for the People.

HALL, J. Defendant was convicted of the crime of embezzlement and moved for a new trial, which being denied and judgment rendered, he took an appeal to this court from the judgment and order denying his motion for a new trial.

It is charged in the information that defendant, as the servant and agent of Michael Eftimakis, at the county of Alameda, on the 7th day of July, 1910, came into the possession of $88.60 in lawful money of the United States of the personal property of said Eftimakis, and then and there at said county of Alameda did fraudulently embezzle and appropriate the same to his own use. The defendant introduced no evidence at the trial.

The testimony of the prosecution tended to prove without conflict that defendant was given by the prosecutor two pay checks, issued by the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, for the purpose of having them cashed. The checks were each for the sum of $44.30. Defendant, by direction of the prosecutor, indorsed each of the checks by signing the name of the payee thereon. He then took them to San Francisco, where he disposed of each of them. He transferred each of them to a different storekeeper in payment for articles that he purchased for his own use, and secured a balance in cash upon each transaction. Each check was disposed of by defendant in San Francisco, and whatever money he received upon the checks was received in San Francisco. He was subsequently arrested on this charge in San Francisco; and there is not one word of evidence in the record that he ever returned to Alameda county until taken there in custody of the arresting officer; and certainly there is no evidence in the record that tends to show that he ever took any of the money into Alameda county or embezzled any of the money in said county.

[1] Under this state of the evidence appellant contends that the evidence is insufficient to support the charge made in the information, for the reason that the evidence shows that the money was both received and embezzled in San Francisco and not in Alameda county. This contention must be sustained.

[2] The venue must be proved as charged. People v. Parks, 44 Cal. 105; People v. Roach, 48 Cal. 382; People v. Bevans, 52 Cal. 470; People v. Murphy, 51 Cal. 376; People v. Aleck, 61 Cal. 138. There is in the record no evidence of either the receipt or appropriation of any money in Alameda county. True, the pay checks were intrusted to defendant in Alameda county, and it may be that he conceived the intent in Alameda county to appropriate the checks to his own use. But he was not charged with the embezzlement of checks, but with the embezzlement of money.

[3] Proof of the embezzlement or larceny of a check will not support a charge of embezzlement or larceny of money. Carr v. State, 104 Ala. 43, 16 South. 155; State v. Hanley, 70 Conn. 265, 39 Atl. 148; State v. Mispagel, 207 Mo. 557, 106 S. W. 513; Lancaster v. State, 9 Tex. App. 393; Goodhue v. People, 94 Ill. 37. See, also, State v. Bacon, 170 Mo. 161, 70 S. W. 473; Com. v. Howe, 132 Mass. 250; Com. v. Gately, 126 Mass. 52.

The cases of People v. Whalen, 154 Cal. 472, 98 Pac. 194, and People v. Leavens, 12 Cal. App. 185, 106 Pac. 1103, relied on by respondent, are not in point. In the first of these cases, Whalen, by false pretenses, obtained from the prosecutor, at Sacramento, a check drawn on a New York bank. It is perfectly apparent from the reading of the opinion in the case, that the court was of the opinion that the evidence justified the conclusion that the check was in due course cashed and the money returned to the defendant at Sacramento. But however that may be, some of the criminal acts, to wit, the false pretenses, were committed at Sacramento. The case in no wise justifies the contention that checks are money.

The Leavens Case was one of obtaining money by false pretenses, in which the defendant procured a check by false pretenses at San Francisco, drawn on a bank at San Francisco, and cashed it at said bank.

The judgment and order are reversed.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

16 Cal. App. 267

FIRST NAT. BANK OF REDLANDS v.
CONSOLIDATED LUMBER CO.
(Civ. 885.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. May 15, 1911. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court July 14, 1911.)

1. GUARANTY (§ 35*)—LIABILITY—"CONTINGENT LIABILITY"—"ABSOLUTE LIABILITY."

The liability incurred by a corporation, transferring a note payable to it and guaranteeing payment thereof at maturity, or at any time thereafter, waiving demand, notice of nonpayment, and protest, is an "absolute," and not a "contingent," liability, created at the date of the making of the guaranty, though the right of the transferee to enforce it depends on the default of the maker; for a contingent liability is dependent on the happening of the event which creates the liability, while the right to enforce an absolute liability may be contingent on the happening of an event.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Guaranty, Dec. Dig. § 35.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 2, p. 1501.]

2. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 58*)—STOCKHOLDERS' LIABILITY—ENFORCEMENT.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 359, requiring the bringing of actions to enforce stockholders' liability within three years after the liability is created, an action against a stockholder of a corporation, guaranteeing the payment of a note at maturity, is barred in three years from the date of the guaranty; the liability of the corporation being created at that time.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. § 327; Dec. Dig. § 58.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; F. E. Densmore, Judge.

Action by First National Bank of Redlands against the Consolidated Lumber Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals on a bill of exceptions. Reversed.

W. W. Middlecoff and Horace S. Wilson, for appellant. Halsey W. Allen, for respondent.

SHAW, J. The Newport Lumber Company, a corporation, owned a negotiable promissory note, dated August 16, 1905, which by its terms was payable on February 16, 1906.

On August 31, 1905, the corporation sold and transferred the note to plaintiff, and at the same time, and in consideration of plaintiff purchasing the same, executed and indorsed upon the back of said note a guaranty of the payment thereof as follows: "For value received, we hereby guarantee the payment of the within note at maturity, or at any time thereafter, with interest at the rate of eight per cent. per annum until paid, waiving demand, notice of nonpayment and protest." At the time of the execution of this contract of guaranty, defendant was a stockholder of said corporation, Newport Lumber Company. The makers of the note failing to pay the same in full, plaintiff, on February 13, 1909, instituted this action to recover upon the statutory liability of defendant by reason of said contract of guaranty made by said Newport Lumber Company, of which defendant was a stockholder. Plaintiff obtained a judgment, and defendant appeals therefrom upon a bill of exceptions.

The only point involved on the appeal is whether or not the action was barred by the statute of limitations, as declared in section 359, Code of Civil Procedure, which provides that actions against stockholders of a corporation to enforce a liability created by law shall be brought within three years after the liability is created. The question presented for determination is the time when the liability incurred by the Newport Lumber Company, under the terms of the written instrument, was created; appellant insisting that it was at the time of the purchase of the note, on August 31, 1905, in which case the action was barred (section 359, Code Civ. Proc.), while respondent contends that it was created at the time of the maturity of the note. At a former hearing of this appeal, the court accepted the latter view, but upon further consideration we are not satisfied with the conclusion then reached.

[1] It is quite true that the liability incurred by the Newport Lumber Company was not enforceable until the maturity of the note and default made by the makers thereof. It cannot, however, be said that the liability was not created until such time. Liability does not depend for its existence upon the fact that it is immediately enforceable. It may exist without the right of immediate enforcement. White v. Green, 105 Iowa, 176, 74 N. W. 928; Hunt v. Ward, 99 Cal. 615, 34 Pac. 335, 37 Am. St. Rep. 87. In the latter case it is said: "A liability may be absolute or contingent; it may be unconditional or limited; it may be presently enforceable by action, or there may be time given for its performance; but, whatever its character, it is created by the consummation of the contract, act, or omission by which the liability is incurred." Under the terms of the contract, the liability incurred by the Newport Lumber Company was absolute, although the right of the plaintiff to enforce such liability depended upon a contingency, namely, the default of the makers of the note; but this fact did not render the liability contingent. There is a marked distinction between a contingent liability and the right contingent upon the happening of an event to enforce an existing liability. In the one case there is no liability until the happening of the event, the occurrence of which creates the liability, while in the other the liability exists, but the right to enforce it depends upon the contingency. Here there was an existing indebtedness in a sum specified in the note, which the makers promised to pay to the holder thereof. By its contract of guaranty, the corporation agreed that it would pay this indebtedness when the same was due, if the makers of the note failed to pay it.

[2] It follows, we think, that the liability was created on August 31, 1905, at the time when the corporation by contract obligated itself to make the payment. If this be true, the cause of action to enforce defendant's statutory liability as a stockholder of the Newport Lumber Company was barred in three years from said date.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; JAMES, J.

16 Cal. App. 183

BENNETT v. POTTER. (Civ. 899.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. May 6, 1911. Rehearing Denied June 5, 1911; Denied by Supreme Court July 5, 1911.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 338*)—TIME FOR APPEAL FROM JUDGMENT.

Appeal from the judgment, which Code Civ. Proc. § 939, allows to be taken within six months after entry of judgment, is too late; notice thereof being subsequent to such period.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 338.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 867*)—SCOPE OF REVIEW—APPEAL FROM DENIAL OF NEW TRIAL.

Whether the complaint states a cause of action, or the findings support the judgment, cannot be considered on appeal from an order denying a motion for new trial, but only on appeal from the judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3476-3486; Dec. Dig. § 867.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1050*)—PREJUDICIAL ERROR—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

The cause of action made by the complaint being for breach of a contract of purchase of an automobile for $3,650, defendant having refused to accept and pay for it, though title had passed to him, under Civ. Code, § 1141, by plaintiff offering it to him, with intent to pass the title, and that plaintiff had retained possession of it as a depository, as required by section 1503, in which case the measure of damages is, under section 3310, the contract price, and the defense being merely an alleged effective countermand of the order, which the court found against, admission of plaintiff's evidence of a sale by him, just before the trial, of the automobile for $1,800, not made with notice to defendant, as required by sections 3002, 3049, in case of sale to enforce the lien for the price, and of which sale defendant had no notice before the trial, was prejudicial error; no issue as to the value of the machine at the time of the sale having been tendered, and the result of its admission being to compel defendant to accept, in lieu of damages for conversion, the price obtained at such sale.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 1050.*]

On rehearing. Modified and affirmed.

For former opinion, see 113 Pac. 885.

JAMES, J. The complaint in this action contained three counts. At the trial plaintiff elected to proceed upon the third count, which stated a cause of action for breach of contract, consisting in the refusal of defendant to accept and pay for a certain automobile purchased by the latter from the plaintiff. Judgment was in favor of plaintiff and against defendant for the sum of $1,775 and interest. Defendant appealed from the judgment and from an order denying her motion for a new trial.

[1] The appeal from the judgment was taken too late. Notice of appeal was filed more than seven months after judgment was entered; hence that appeal should be dismissed. Code Civ. Proc. § 939; Robinson v. Eberhart, 148 Cal. 496, 83 Pac. 452.

[2] The appeal from the order denying defendant's motion for a new trial presents for review the matter as to the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the findings, and the further question as to whether or not the court erred in the admission of certain testimony which was objected to by defendant. The complaint must be treated as sufficiently stating a cause of action, and the findings cannot be examined for the purpose of determining whether or not they support the judgment. Those questions could only be considered on the appeal from the judgment. Swift v. Occidental M. Co., 141 Cal. 165, 74 Pac. 700; Sharp v. Bowie, 142 Cal. 467, 76 Pac. 62; Coburn v. California Portland Cement Co., 144 Cal. 82, 77 Pac. 771; Jenson v. Will & Finck Co., 150 Cal. 413, 89 Pac. 113.

[3] Plaintiff in his third cause of action—the one upon which the trial was had—alleged that defendant, on December 26, 1906, purchased from him an automobile for the price of $3,650; that a written agreement of purchase was executed by defendant. This agreement was set out in full in plaintiff's complaint. It recited that defendant agreed to purchase the automobile for the price stated, as soon as plaintiff had received the machine and had it ready for delivery. The agreement contained the further statement that $75 was then paid by defendant as first payment, and that the balance of the purchase price was to be paid in two installments, $425 to be paid on January 1, 1907, and the remainder thereof upon notice being given to defendant that the automobile was ready for delivery.

Plaintiff alleged that the automobile was received by him from the factory, and that he notified defendant that it was at his place of business and "delivered in accordance with the agreement of sale," and that defendant had paid no part of the purchase price, except the sum of $75. He further alleged that he had continued to hold possession of the automobile for defendant's use and benefit, and subject to her order, and that at no time after its arrival could defendant not have had the free and unrestricted use of the said automobile. The trial court found all of these allegations to be true. Plaintiff's cause of action, therefore, was one for damages for breach of contract, where the vendee had refused to accept and pay for personal property purchased, title to which had passed to such vendee. "Title is transferred by an executory agreement for the sale or exchange of personal property only when the buyer has accepted the thing, or when the seller has completed it; prepared it for delivery, and offered it to the buyer, with intent to transfer the title thereto, in the manner prescribed by the chapter upon offer of performance." Civ. Code, § 1141. Plaintiff here alleged a delivery of the automobile, and the court found that delivery had been made according to the agreement. Plaintiff elected to treat the title as having passed. He not only affirmed that fact by alleging delivery, but alleged further that he had held possession of the automobile and stored it for defendant's use and benefit, and that she could at any time after its arrival at his business place have had the "full and unrestricted use thereof."

Over the objection of defendant, the trial court allowed plaintiff to show that a few days before the trial of the action he had sold the automobile for the price of $1,800, which he asserted was the best price obtainable in the then market. In arriving at the amount of judgment to be entered against the defendant, credit for the sum of $1,800 was allowed against the remaining balance of the contract price. In the decision rendered prior to rehearing granted in this cause, it was said that the admission of evidence showing that plaintiff had sold the automobile a few days prior to the trial did not seem to be prejudicial to the rights of defendant. A further examination of the question has led us to the conclusion that the error was prejudicial. Under the cause of action stated in the third count of plaintiff's complaint, the matter of the value of the automobile was immaterial. The measure of plaintiff's damage in the case made by him is stated in section 3310, Civil Code, as follows: "The detriment caused by the breach of a buyer's agreement to accept and pay for personal property, the title to which is vested in him, is deemed to be the contract price." Another section of the same

Code determines the obligation of the vendor with respect to property which is treated by him as belonging to the vendee, as was the automobile in this case. Section 1503 provides as follows: "The person offering a thing, other than money, by way of performance, must, if he means to treat it as belonging to the creditor, retain it as a depository for hire, until the creditor accepts it, or until he has given reasonable notice to the creditor that he will retain it no longer, and, if with reasonable diligence he can find a suitable depository therefor, until he has deposited it with such person."

It is true that plaintiff might have sold the automobile to satisfy his vendor's lien thereon, but he did not proceed as vendors in such cases are required to proceed. Property subject to a vendor's lien must be sold in the same manner as pledged property is sold, and reasonable notice must be given to the vendee of the time and place of the sale. Sections 3049 and 3002, Civil Code. Defendant was given no notice before trial by the plaintiff that the automobile had been sold, and no issue as to its value at the time of such sale had been tendered to him, and which he might have been prepared to meet, had it been so properly tendered. If the automobile belonged to defendant and title thereto had passed, as alleged by plaintiff and found by the court, then the act of the plaintiff in selling it amounted to a conversion of defendant's property, damages for which might be recovered.

Allegations appearing in plaintiff's complaint, to the effect that the automobile had no market value, tendered no issue material to the cause of action stated against defendant. Defendant rested her defense upon the claim that she had made an effective countermand of the order for the purchase of the automobile. She had the right to assume that in the event the case went against her on that issue, as it did, that she could rely on the assertion of plaintiff, expressed in his complaint, that he held the automobile subject to her order, and that if she was required to pay the price she might have the thing contracted for. She could assume, too, properly, that if any sale of the automobile was contemplated to be made by the plaintiff to satisfy his vendor's lien that she would be given a notice of the time and place of sale, as the Code sections require. As the effect of the admission of the testimony, showing sale of the property had just before the trial, would be to compel defendant to accept, in lieu of damages for conversion, the price claimed to have been obtained for the automobile, and which the court credited her with, it cannot be said that the error in admitting that evidence was without prejudice. The court did not find that the sale was made with defendant's consent.

The findings are sustained by the evidence, but because of the error complained of, made on the admission of testimony, the order denying defendant's motion for a new trial must be reversed.

The appeal from the judgment is dismissed. The order denying defendant's motion for a new trial is reversed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; SHAW, J.

16 Cal. App. 262

WEST RIVERSIDE 350-INCH WATER CO.
v. ROGERS et al. (Civ. 981.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District,
California. May 15, 1911.)

RECEIVERS (§ 55*)—COMPENSATION—LIABILITIES OF PARTIES.

Where the canal furnished by defendant, under obligation to furnish a canal suitable to carry the quantity of water to which plaintiff had a prior right, was ample and safely carried more than that quantity, the court, at the suit of plaintiff, was without authority to appoint a receiver to repair the canal, and the costs of the receiver appointed were properly charged to plaintiff.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Receivers, Cent. Dig. §§ 94, 400; Dec. Dig. § 55.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Riverside County; George H. Hutton, Judge.

Action by West Riverside 350-Inch Water Company against C. W. Rogers and another. From a judgment charging the expense of a receivership to plaintiff, it appeals. Affirmed.

Collier, Carnahan & Craig, for appellant. Lafayette Gill and Purington & Adair, for respondents.

JAMES, J. Appeal by plaintiff from a judgment entered in favor of defendants. The North Riverside & Jurupa Canal, located in the county of Riverside, is an aqueduct used for the purpose of supplying a large number of persons with water for domestic and irrigating purposes. Plaintiff at the time of the commencement of this action was engaged in furnishing water to its stockholders and other patrons, and was the owner of a right, by way of perpetual easement, to have 350 miner's inches of water, measured under 4-inch pressure at the point of delivery, conveyed through said canal. The canal at its upper extremity consisted of a wooden flume about 2,000 feet in length, which crossed the Santa Ana river from the point of intake. The water was conducted into the flume by siphons and again emptied by siphons from the flume into a concrete conduit, which latter formed a channel for its conveyance to the distributing systems of the owners of the water. At the time this action was commenced, defendant Rogers was the owner of at least that portion of the canal which was constructed as a flume, subject to the right of the plaintiff as mentioned, and also subject to another easement termed the "Salazar water right." Whether Rogers owned the entire conduit or not does not appear, and it is immaterial, as plaintiff's cause of complaint concerns only the flume and its accessory siphons.

The conditions prompting plaintiff to commence this action, as alleged in its complaint and found by the court, were briefly as follows: Two of the siphons at the easterly end of the flume and two at the westerly end thereof had become filled with sand and debris, so that no water could be conducted through the same. There remained but two siphons, one at either end of the flume, which were available for the purpose for which they were constructed. At that time defendants were pumping into the aqueduct about 150 miner's inches of water, and another water owner, under the Salazar water right, was pumping 75 inches of water into the flume. Plaintiff was entitled to have 360 inches of water carried in the canal at its starting point, so that, allowing for evaporation and shortage by waste, it might have delivered through the aqueduct the 350 inches, as was provided by the grant to it of the right of way. Plaintiff was then pumping 272 inches of water into the canal. Because of the impaired condition of the siphons, the water in the flume could not find ready exit, and the effect was to cause it to be collected therein to a greater depth and of a greater weight than it would have collected, had the siphons at the westerly end been freed from the obstructions. The flume was old, and plaintiff could not pump into it the full amount of water which it was entitled to have carried, in addition to the quantity already conducted therethrough, without running the risk of causing the flume to break. Such a break would have entailed great expense, and would have deprived all of the users of water who derived their supply from that source of water until repairs could be made. Defendant Rogers had refused to repair the conduit or clear the siphons, and he had also refused to stop pumping operations long enough to allow plaintiff to make the repairs necessary then to be made. Upon this state of facts, plaintiff asked, first, for a restraining order requiring defendant to cease pumping water until further order of court; and, second, that a receiver be appointed and directed to clear the siphons and flume, so that plaintiff's 350 inches of water could be safely carried therein; and further that the expense of the work and costs of the proceeding be made a charge against the flume and siphons. After the filing of the complaint, upon ex parte application, a restraining order was issued by the court, and a receiver appointed. The receiver was directed by the order of appointment to do the work of clearing the siphons, and this he did within a few days, and was discharged. The restraining order was vacated at the same time. The issue presented to the trial court for determination was as to the right of plaintiff to have the expense of the receivership made a charge against the property of defendant. The court found, in accordance with the allegations contained in defendant's answer, that plaintiff had refused, prior to the commencement of the action, to pay its proportion of the expense of maintaining the conduit, as was required of it under the terms of the conveyance of the right of way, and that therefore, agreeable to the maxim that he who seeks equity must do equity, no relief should be awarded to it. Judgment was accordingly entered for defendants.

On behalf of appellant it is argued that the equitable rule referred to was improperly invoked in bar of a recovery by the plaintiff for various reasons assigned, chief among them being: That no account of charges for maintenance had been furnished by defendant Rogers to appellant prior to the commencement of the action; that no claim on behalf of Rogers on that account existed as a fact; that, if such charge did exist, the matter of the adjustment thereof would not constitute a condition precedent to the right of plaintiff to have the canal kept in such a condition of repair as to make it possible to have the full 350 inches of water owned by plaintiff delivered through the same, without danger of the flume giving way.

Any inquiry as to the validity of these contentions is rendered unnecessary, when certain facts set out clearly in the complaint, and which are admitted by the answer to be true and so found by the court, are taken into consideration. We refer to the facts alleged by plaintiff in its complaint, in paragraph 6 thereof: "That there is at present flowing in said flume 75 miner's inches of Salazar water, hereinabove described; that the said C. W. Rogers and said Rogers Development Company are pumping about 150 inches of water and discharging it into said flume; that this plaintiff is entitled to pump and to discharge through said flume 360 inches of water, and has a prior right to so discharge said water over and above either the said Salazar Company or the said Rogers Development Company and C. W. Rogers." The flume, according to plaintiff's allegations, was safely carrying at the time of the commencement of this action 150 inches of the Rogers water, 75 inches of the Salazar water, and 272 inches of water of the plaintiff, making a total of 497 inches then being conducted through it. Plaintiff's only complaint was that more water could not be pumped into the flume, without causing damage. It is alleged, admitted, and determined that plaintiff had the prior right over all persons using the canal to have its 350 inches of water carried in the flume and conduit. The flume could safely have carried all of plaintiff's water, and also all of the Salazar water. The query then suggests itself, What was the remedy to which plaintiff was entitled, if any, under these conditions?

Plaintiff had no concern to so act as to preserve the safe carrying capacity in the canal for the water then being conducted through it by defendant Rogers and by the Salazar right holders. The obligation of defendant Rogers was to furnish a canal suitable for the carrying of the quantity of water which plaintiff was entitled to have carried under the terms of the grant made to it. If the safe carrying capacity of the canal was ample to secure to plaintiff all that it was entitled to, then it could not say to Rogers, "You must make the canal sufficiently safe to enable it to carry, not only our water, but also the Salazar water and your own." If damage to plaintiff's right was threatened, which was of such a nature as to warrant equitable interference, that interference would only go to the length and extent of enjoining defendant from carrying such an excess in quantity of water over the 350 inches as would make danger of damage and great loss imminent. The facts stated in plaintiff's complaint seem sufficient to entitle it to this precise relief, but by the act of the receiver the cause for complaint was removed, so that it no longer existed at the time the trial was had. Under the showing made by the complaint, the court was not authorized to appoint the receiver, and the costs of the receivership were chargeable against the plaintiff alone. The judgment of the court on the facts as alleged and found was therefore right. That this judgment was prompted by the finding made by the court, that plaintiff could not recover because it had failed to make payment of the amounts of money due from it on account of expenses of the maintenance of the canal, is not material.

It follows, under this view of the case, that the judgment should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; SHAW, J.

16 Cal. App. 270

Ex parte McLAUGHLIN. (Cr. 200.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California, May 15, 1911.)

1. VAGRANCY (§ 1*)—ELEMENTS OF OFFENSE—"VISIBLE OR LAWFUL BUSINESS."

The words "visible or lawful business" in Pen. Code, § 647, subd. 6, defining as a vagrant "Every person who wanders about the streets at late or unusual hours of the night without any visible or lawful business," are used in the sense of good and sufficient reason, and refer to the reason why he is roaming the street, rather than to any business or avocation in life from which support is derived.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vagrancy, Cent. Dig. § 1; Dec. Dig. § 1.*

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 8, pp. 7267-7269.]

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 211*)—AFFIDAVIT OF COMPLAINT.

The affidavit of complaint for being a vagrant under Pen. Code, § 647, subd. 6, must negative the existence of a reason or necessity for the person being on the street at a late hour at night.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 425; Dec. Dig. § 211.*]

Application of Frank McLaughlin for writ of habeas corpus. Granted, and petitioner discharged.

S. Wyman Smith and Wm. B. Ogden, for petitioner.

PER CURIAM. Petitioner was arrested, tried, and convicted of the crime of vagrancy. The affidavit of complaint upon which the warrant of arrest was issued, and upon which he was tried, charged that the defendant at Bakersfield, etc., "did then and there have no visible means of livelihood, and then and there did wander about the streets of the said city of Bakersfield at late and unusual hours of the night." The question presented, therefore, is, Does such a complaint state a public offense?

[1] By subdivision 6 of section 647, Penal Code, one of the definitions of a vagrant is: "Every person who wanders about the streets at late or unusual hours of the night without any visible or lawful business." As we construe this subdivision, the words "visible or lawful business" must be held as referring to the reason why such person is roaming the streets, rather than any business or avocation in life from which support is derived. In other words, the offense is complete under subdivision 6 if, without good or sufficient reason, one roams at late or unusual hours of the night, and he is a vagrant without reference to his means of livelihood or vocation.

[2] This affidavit of complaint does not negative the fact that a reason or necessity existed which called him upon the street at a late hour of the night, but merely that he was so roaming, and for aught that appears in the affidavit of complaint, he may have had a legitimate and proper reason for being upon the streets at the time complained of.

We are of opinion that no offense is stated under the purview of this section, and the prisoner should be discharged; and it is so ordered.

16 Cal. App. 188

STRAIT v. WILKINS et al. (Civ. 971.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. May 6, 1911.)

1. EXCHANGE OF PROPERTY (§ 3*)—FRAUDULENT REPRESENTATIONS—STATEMENT OF VALUE—RELIANCE ON STATEMENT.

Where each party to a trade of real estate put excessive values on his own lands as understood by both, the representations of one as to the value of his lands was not relied on by the other in the sense required to make a statement of value one of fact, which may be a fraudulent representation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Exchange of Property, Cent. Dig. § 3; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

2. EXCHANGE OF PROPERTY (§ 3*)—FRAUDULENT REPRESENTATIONS—STATEMENT OF PRICE—OPPORTUNITY.

The rule that a statement of value by a party to a trade may be one of fact, constituting a fraudulent representation, has no application where each party has equal opportunity to determine value.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Exchange of Property, Cent. Dig. § 3; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

3. EXCHANGE OF PROPERTY (§ 3*)—FRAUDULENT REPRESENTATION—"CONSIDERABLE TIME."

Statement of one trading property that the mortgage thereon had a "considerable time" to run was not false; it not being due for six months.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Exchange of Property, Cent. Dig. § 3; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 2, pp. 1444-1447; vol. 8, p. 7612.]

4. EXCHANGE OF PROPERTY (§ 3*)—FRAUDULENT REPRESENTATIONS—OPINION.

Statement of one trading property, on which was a mortgage, that the mortgage could be renewed indefinitely could be but an expression of opinion, and not a fraudulent representation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Exchange of Property, Cent. Dig. § 3; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

5. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 345*)—ACTION FOR VENDOR'S REFUSAL TO PERFORM—DEFENSES—OWNERSHIP.

Whether or not the property defendant contracted to sell was hers or community property is immaterial, in an action for breach of her contract to sell it, as a married woman, like any one else, could contract to sell property not her own, and failing to perform would be liable for a breach.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 1036-1038; Dec. Dig. § 345.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; George H. Hutton, Judge.

Action by J. H. Strait against Mary Wilkins and her husband. From a judgment for defendants and from an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded for further proceedings.

Eugene C. Campbell, for appellant. John E. Daly, for respondents.

ALLEN, P. J. Action to recover damages for breach of contract to convey real property.

The case presented by the record is somewhat unique. Plaintiff, the owner of certain premises at Redlands, entered into an agreement in writing, on June 19, 1907, with defendant Mary Wilkins to exchange the same at an agreed value of $6,500 for other property at Covina, the agreed value of which was fixed at $10,500. In such agreement defendant agreed to assume a mortgage of $3,000 on the Redlands property, and plaintiff agreed to pay defendant $500 in cash and execute a mortgage to defendant for $6,500 on the Covina property. Defendant, on June 28th, gave notice of the repudiation of the contract, on the ground that the Covina property was community property, over which she had no control, and further that the written instrument was insufficient in form to constitute a valid agreement of sale and transfer. Thereupon this action for damages, on account of defendant's failure and refusal to carry out the contract, was commenced. Plaintiff, with the evident purpose of enhancing damages, alleged that his property at Redlands was of the market value of $5,000 only at the time of making the contract, while the property of defendant so agreed to be exchanged was of the value of $12,000. Defendant, having the matter of damages in view, alleged that plaintiff's property at the time of the transfer was of the value of $6,500, while her property at Covina was worth only $9,500. By a separate defense, defendant alleges that the property of plaintiff was only worth $6,000; that plaintiff represented to her that the mortgage of $3,000 had a considerable time to run before maturity; and that the holder would extend the time of payment as long as defendant might desire. She alleges that plaintiff's representations as to the value of $6,500, the fact that the mortgage had a considerable time to run, and that the mortgagee would renew, were statements false, and by plaintiff known to be false when made. The trial court found the value of plaintiff's property to be $5,000, in contradiction of defendant's admission, and that the representations as to the value and statements as to the mortgage were untrue, and known by plaintiff to be untrue when made, and that defendant relied upon such representations in making the exchange. Judgment was rendered in favor of defendant, from which judgment and an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals.

The findings of the court as to the false character of the representations in relation to value, and the reliance of defendant thereon, are sufficient to sustain the judgment under the rule that, "wherever a party states a matter which might otherwise be only an opinion, and does not state it as the mere expression of his own opinion, but affirms it as an existing fact material to the transaction, so that the other party may reasonably treat it as a fact and rely and act upon it as such, then the statement clearly becomes an affirmation of fact within the meaning of the general rule, and may be a fraudulent misrepresentation." This is approved in Crandall v. Parks, 152 Cal. 776, 93 Pac. 1018. The question, therefore, for determination upon this appeal is as to the sufficiency of the evidence to support these findings.

[1] It appears from the bill of exceptions that at and before the execution of the written contract defendant and her husband were at Redlands; that they each examined the property of plaintiff; that defendant made independent inquiry as to value, and was advised that the price fixed by plaintiff was in excess of what other property in the vicinity was worth. Defendant further stated that she was putting in her property at Covina for $2,500 in excess of its market value; that when plaintiff questioned the value of $10,500 placed by her upon the Covina property the defendant replied to him that it was worth that sum, if his property was worth $6,500. In other words, as testified by the husband of defendant, the values were made the basis of the trade; plaintiff not believing that defendant's property was worth the price asked for it in the trade. A case is presented where each party fixed excessive values upon the property sought to be included in the trade—a fact understood by all. It is evident that defendant did not rely upon plaintiff's representations in the sense required to render a statement of value one of fact.

[2] The wholesome rule heretofore referred to in relation to such statements comprehends instances where opportunity is not at hand to ascertain value otherwise than from statements. It was never intended to establish a rule that, where parties have an equal opportunity to determine value, one might neglect the opportunity and, if subsequently to his interest, avoid a contract, merely because an inflated value was fixed by the other party to the exchange. To apply such rule generally in the ordinary affairs of life, when opportunity exists to ascertain the truth, would be to encourage, rather than to prevent or punish, fraud.

[3] As to the findings in relation to the statements with reference to the mortgage, it clearly appears that no false statement was made. It was stated that a considerable time elapsed. This was true. The mortgage was not due for six months, which, in the ordinary affairs of life, may be said to be a very considerable time. In addition, the mortgage was of record. Defendant admits that immediately after signing the paper (whether before delivery or not does not appear) she sent a messenger to the recorder's office to ascertain the exact time of maturity, and it appears that she sought to make a contract with a local bank for a loan to take up the mortgage when due.

[4] The statement that the mortgage could be renewed indefinitely could not in the nature of things amount to more than an expression of opinion. Defendant must be held to know that a stranger could not control the action of the mortgagee with reference to his contract of mortgage. It is obvious from a reading of the record that the matter of fraudulent representations is an afterthought, urged by defendant after she had determined that a right of repudiation avoiding damages did not exist, simply because the Covina property was that of the community. We are of opinion that there is no evidence in the record tending to show that the contract was made in reliance upon any statement of fact thereafter found to be false. [5] This action being one for damages, it is immaterial as to the character of the property agreed to be conveyed by defendant. Although a married woman, she might contract to sell property, whether of her own or of some one else, and if she is unable to comply, and neglects and refuses so to do, is liable in damages for the breach.

In our opinion the trial court erred in denying the motion for a new trial, and such order is reversed and cause remanded for further proceedings.

We concur: JAMES, J.; SHAW, J.

16 Cal. App. 284

FRESNO HOME PACKING CO. v. HANNON. (Civ. 940.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. May 23, 1911.)

1. ATTACHMENT (§ 349*)—BOND TO PREVENT—ACTION ON—COMPLAINT—SUFFICIENCY.

In an action on a bond to prevent attachment levy, allegation that on delivery of the bond to the sheriff he refrained from levying the attachment and accepted the bond in lieu of levy sufficiently shows that the bond induced the sheriff to withhold levy, though another bond for the same purpose was previously given.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Attachment, Cent. Dig. §§ 1257-1271; Dec. Dig. § 349.*]

2. ATTACHMENT (§ 350*)—BOND TO PREVENT—ACTION ON—PROOF REQUIRED.

One suing on a bond given to prevent attachment levy need not show that when the bond was given defendant in attachment had property within the county subject to levy.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Attachment, Dec. Dig. § 350.*]

3. ATTACHMENT (§ 333*)—BOND TO PREVENT—CONSIDERATION.

A sheriff's act in refraining from levying under an attachment writ is sufficient consideration for a bond to prevent the attachment, and it will be presumed when defendant gives such bond that some benefit accrues to him sufficient as a consideration to support the contract of his sureties.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Attachment, Dec. Dig. § 333.*]

4. ATTACHMENT (§ 353*)—LIABILITY OF SURETIES.

In a suit on a bond to prevent attachment, which expressly makes the undertaking joint and several, dismissal as to one surety does not affect plaintiff's right to judgment against the other.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Attachment, Dec. Dig. § 353.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Curtis D. Wilbur, Judge.

Action by the Fresno Home Packing Company against Franke A. Hannon. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

McNutt & Hannon, for appellant. Haas, Garrett & Dunnigan, for respondent.

JAMES, J. A judgment for the recovery of the principal sum of $1,104.15 was entered against defendant, from which judgment he appeals.

The action was one brought upon an undertaking executed by defendant and one John Hickson, as sureties, and given for the purpose of preventing a levy being made under a writ of attachment issued in an action wherein the plaintiff here was the plaintiff and the Hickson-Hannon-Burns Company was defendant. Defendant Hannon, after being duly served with summons, made no appearance in this action, and the judgment taken was entered upon his default.

The contentions of appellant are: First, that the complaint shows that an undertaking had been given to prevent a levy being made under the writ of attachment prior to the time that the undertaking upon which appellant became surety was furnished to the sheriff, and that therefore the second undertaking was void and of no effect, because the levying of the writ had already been stayed; second, that no consideration for the giving of the second undertaking is shown, for the reason that it does not appear that the Hickson-Hannon-Burns Company had at the time such undertaking was executed any property upon which the writ of attachment might have been levied; third, that the undertaking was not sufficient in form, under the provisions of section 540 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to create any liability against appellant; fourth, that because the plaintiff herein elected to dismiss the action as against appellant's cosurety he thereby discharged also the obligation of appellant, for the reason that the undertaking was joint, and not several.

[1] An examination of the complaint shows very clearly that but one undertaking to prevent the writ of attachment being levied was given, and that that undertaking was the one executed by appellant and Hickson as sureties. If the contention of appellant be conceded, to wit, that it is alleged that the Hickson-Hannon-Burns Company gave an undertaking to prevent the levying of an attachment prior to the giving of the undertaking executed by appellant, still it is sufficiently shown by the allegations of the complaint that the sheriff, in consideration of the giving of the last-mentioned undertaking, refrained from executing the writ. The allegation referred to is as follows: "That upon the delivery of said undertaking to said sheriff of Los Angeles county, the said sheriff of Los Angeles county refrained from levying the said attachment and enforcing the said writ of attachment, and accepted said bond in lieu of the levy of said attachment."

[2] It was not necessary for the plaintiff to allege that, at the time the undertaking was given, the Hickson-Hannon-Burns Company had property within the county of Los Angeles subject to being levied upon under the writ of attachment.

[3] The act of the officer in refraining from enforcing the writ, or attempting to make a levy, was a sufficient consideration for the giving of the bond, and it will be presumed, where the defendant in such a case furnishes an undertaking to prevent the execution of a writ, that some benefit accrues to him sufficient as a consideration to support the contract of his sureties.

[4] The recitals in the undertaking were entirely sufficient to show the purposes for which it was given, and the obligation assumed by the sureties. In express terms the undertaking was made joint and several, and therefore the dismissal of the action as to the defendant Hickson in no way impaired the right of the plaintiff to a judgment against this appellant.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; SHAW, J.

16 Cal. App. 271

PEOPLE v. FISHER. (Cr. 191.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. May 15, 1911.)

1. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 125*)—DUPLICITY.

An information is not bad as charging more than one offense, through using language which may seem to describe the offense of embezzlement, not under one section alone of the Penal Code, but under several of them.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. §§ 334-400; Dec. Dig. § 125.*]

2. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 110*)—LANGUAGE OF STATUTE—INFORMATION.

An information charging embezzlement in the language of the statute, or substantially so, is sufficient.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. §§ 289-294; Dec. Dig. § 110.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 811*)—INDORSEMENTS ON WRITTEN INSTRUCTIONS.

Though the written instructions went to the jury with the words "charge of the court" at the head thereof, and the words "requested by defendant and given," on a later page, at the head of some of them, the jury could not well be given the impression that the former heading applied only to the instructions preceding the second heading, and so have attached more importance to them.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1969-1972; Dec. Dig. § 811.*]

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 829*)—INSTRUCTIONS—REPETITION.

The court having given the general instructions that each material allegation of the information must be proved, beyond a reasonable doubt, before there could be a conviction properly refused instructions treating each of such allegations separately, and presenting in that form the same injunction to the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2011; Dec. Dig. § 829.*]

5. EMBEZZLEMENT (§ 11*)—DEMAND FOR RETURN OF PROPERTY.

Where one received property on the statement that he had a customer therefor and would return it or its price, the next day and never did either, but failed to reappear, and immediately left the state, demand for return of the property, or the price, was not necessary for prosecution for embezzlement.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Embezzlement, Cent. Dig. §§ 9, 10; Dec. Dig. § 11.*]

6. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 351*)—EVIDENCE—FLIGHT—CRIMINAL LAW.

Flight of one accused of embezzlement may not only be considered as a circumstance tending to show a consciousness of guilt, but, he having taken the property with him, is evidence of his intent to commit the crime, and of the crime itself.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 779; Dec. Dig. § 351.*]

7. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 829*)—INSTRUCTIONS—DUTY OF JURORS—AGREEING ON VERDICT.

The general instructions are enough; and it is not error to refuse to instruct that each individual juror should not, in order that an agreement may be reached while a reasonable doubt of defendant's guilt remains, vote for a conviction, merely because a majority of the others have determined on that verdict.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2011; Dec. Dig. § 829.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; George R. Davis, Judge.

Allen R. Fisher was convicted of embezzlement, denied a new trial, and appeals. Affirmed.

Paul W. Schenck, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and George Beebe, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

JAMES, J. Defendant was convicted of the crime of embezzlement, and appeals from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

On June 3, 1910, the Diamond Credit Company, a copartnership, intrusted the defendant with two diamond rings. Defendant had sold a ring for the copartners on a prior date. He stated to Alexander Lippert, one of the proprietors of the business, that he had a customer for another ring. He selected two from the stock, and promised that he would either return the rings, or the price agreed upon, the following day. It was understood that a commission of 10 per cent. would be paid to defendant in the event a sale was made of either or both of the rings. Defendant did not return the property on the following day, or at all; neither did he appear himself at the place of business of complainants at any time subsequent to the day when he received the rings. Inquiry was made among people with whom he had been in the habit of associating, but no trace of defendant was secured for some time. In August following he was located at Detroit, Mich., and brought back under extradition warrant to Los Angeles for trial.

[1] The information as filed by the district attorney did not charge more than one offense, as contended for by defendant, and it did state facts sufficient to constitute the offense of embezzlement as defined by section 508 of the Penal Code. In chapter 6 of the Penal Code are grouped several sections, all dealing with the subject of embezzlement; they all define one and the same crime or offense. If, perchance, language is used which may seem to describe the crime under several of these sections, the information will not be held bad, if it is complete in its charge under either of the sections. The situation is no different than it would be where a number of different acts are described in a single section, in which case the commission of any one of such acts will constitute the crime. It has been held that different crimes are not charged, where the information embraces a description of the several acts included in the terms of a section. People v. Gosset, 93 Cal. 641, 29 Pac. 246, People v. Thompson, 111 Cal. 242, 43 Pac. 748; People v. Gustl, 113 Cal. 177, 45 Pac. 263.

[2] An information which charges the offense of embezzlement in the language of the statute, or substantially in such language, is sufficient. People v. Ward, 134 Cal. 301, 66 Pac. 372; People v. Gordon, 133 Cal. 328, 65 Pac. 746, 85 Am. St. Rep. 174. Tested by the measure given in these authorities, the information in this case was not subject to the objection made to it by appellant.

[3] Defendant complains of the giving of several instructions, and also of the refusal of the court to give others requested by him to be given. It is first pointed out in the printed argument that the jury might have been misled because some of the instructions given were headed, "Charge of the court," while others were indorsed, "Requested by defendant and given." The latter sentence, excepting the last word thereof, was written upon the instructions by defendant's counsel, and the instructions went to the court bearing that indorsement. The trial judge added the word "given" in the blank left thereon, and signed his name in the usual manner. Assuming (what the record does not show to be a fact) that the written instructions were given to the jury upon their retirement to the jury room, it cannot be said that the defendant was prejudiced by the act of the court in allowing the words quoted to appear upon the instructions. Counsel for defendant suggests that the jury would be likely to attach more importance to those portions of the instructions under the head, "Charge of the court," than they would to those marked with the phrase, "Requested by defendant and given." An examination of the clerk's transcript shows that the heading, "Charge of the court," appeared at the top of the first sheet of the instructions and under the title of the case; it was a general heading to all of the instructions given. The jury examining the papers, if they did examine them, could not well be given the impression that the term last quoted was intended to apply only to those instructions of the court which did not bear upon them the words "Requested by defendant and given."

[4] It was not error for the court, after giving the general instructions in which the jury were told that each material allegation of the information must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt before the defendant could be convicted, to refuse to give instructions which treated all of the allegations separately, and presented in that form the same injunction to the jury as had been fully covered by the general instructions. Instructions which iterate and reiterate features of a charge of the court to the jury necessarily, by reason of their number, tend to confuse the jury, and the giving of them cannot serve any useful legal purpose. It is little wonder that the criticism is so often heard that jurors disregard instructions of the court, when it is considered how often the charge given them is composed of such a mass and number of instructions as to make its proper analysis a matter of almost impossibility to a jury of laymen. Brevity in the giving of instructions cannot be too much commended.

[5] Under the circumstances of this case, it was not error for the court to refuse to instruct the jury that, before the defendant could be convicted of embezzlement, it would be necessary for the prosecution to show that prior to the filing of the complaint demand had been made upon defendant to either return the rings, or the money agreed as the purchase price thereof. The defendant failed to bring back the jewelry, as he had promised to do, and it appears that he left the state almost immediately thereafter. His action in taking the property out of the state in the manner he did and retaining it, at the same time attempting to place himself beyond the reach of any inquiry from the owners of the property, rendered a demand unnecessary, and furnished very satisfactory evidence of the embezzlement. People v. Ward, 134 Cal. 301, 66 Pac. 372. The effect of these acts, under all of the circumstances of the case, tended to show that the intent of defendant was to keep, not only his person, but also the diamond rings, out of the reach of the complainants. Evidence of the embezzlement was, therefore, clear and sufficient.

[6] The instruction included in the charge of the court to the jury, as to the effect to be given evidence of flight of an accused person, was substantially the same as that approved in the case of People v. Giancoli, 74 Cal. 642, 16 Pac. 510. By the instruction here complained of, the jury were told that the flight of defendant could be considered as a circumstance tending to show a consciousness of guilt. The jury might properly have been told that proof that defendant fled from the state, carrying the property of complainants with him, was evidence of the intent of the accused to commit the crime charged, and of the embezzlement itself.

[7] Defendant offered an instruction to the effect that each individual juror should not vote for a verdict of guilty, merely because a majority or all of the remaining jurors determined upon that verdict, in order that an agreement might be reached, and while a reasonable doubt of defendant's guilt was entertained. This subject was fully covered in the general instructions of the court, and, as was said in the case of People v. Rodley, 131 Cal. 259, 63 Pac. 358: "They (the jury) should not be lectured by the court to make them strong and steadfast in their individual opinions; neither should they be exhorted to reach an agreement; and while it is probably true that each juror must decide the matter for himself, yet he should do so only after a consideration of the case with his fellow jurors, and he should not hesitate to sacrifice his views or opinions of the case when convinced that they are erroneous, even though in so doing he defer to the views or opinions of others." Cited, also, in People v. Perry, 144 Cal. 748, 78 Pac. 284.

It was clearly shown that the defendant was a sales agent for the complainants in dealing with the rings. The amount of his commission had been agreed upon as being 10 per cent. of the selling price. On the evidence offered on behalf of the prosecution, no question could arise as to the fiduciary capacity occupied by defendant toward complainants in the transaction. The testimony of the complainants was nowhere contradicted by any evidence, and the defendant introduced no witnesses to testify in his behalf; neither did he himself testify in contradiction of anything stated by the witnesses for the people. No prejudicial error appears to have been made by the court in its rulings on the admission of testimony, and other errors assigned are not such as to require particular notice. The defendant was properly convicted on the case made out against him, and the trial court saw to it that he had the benefit of all the rights to which the law entitled him.

The judgment and order are, therefore, affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; SHAW, J.

16 Cal. App. 256

SEGERSTROM v. SCOTT. (Civ. 786.)
(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 12, 1911.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 529*)—RECORD—JUDGMENT ROLL.

An amended answer, filed without leave of court after the time within which plaintiff is authorized to file a demurrer to the original answer, cannot be treated as a pleading in the case and a part of the judgment roll, on appeal from the judgment on the judgment roll alone.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2389-2393; Dec. Dig. § 529.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 934*)—RECORD—PRESUMPTIONS.

Where there was no bill of exceptions or other like record, disclosing that an amended answer was filed without leave of court after the time within which plaintiff could demur to the original answer, the court on appeal must, as against the extrajudicial declaration of counsel for plaintiff that it was so filed, presume that the amended answer was properly filed, and thus presume in favor of the validity of the judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3777-3781; Dec. Dig. § 934.*]

3. JUDGMENT (§ 279*)—RECORD—"JUDGMENT ROLL."

An order granting leave to amend an answer is no part of the judgment roll, within Code Civ. Proc. § 670, subd. 2, declaring what shall constitute the judgment roll, and it need not be entered thereon.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 546-551; Dec. Dig. § 279.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 4, p. 3847; vol. 8, p. 7697.]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 545*)—RECORD—JUDGMENT ROLL.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 950, defining what papers may be used on appeal from a judgment, the papers which may be used on an appeal from a judgment are a copy of the notice of appeal, of the judgment roll and bill of exceptions or statement of the case, but where there is no bill or statement, but the appeal is on the judgment roll alone, the orders of the court allowing or refusing amendments to pleadings are not a part of the record which the court on appeal may review.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 545.*]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 662*)—QUESTIONS REVIEWABLE—AMENDED PLEADINGS—PRESUMPTIONS.

A declaration in an amended answer that the same is filed by leave of court, first had and obtained, must be accepted as a verity by the court on appeal, in the absence of an affirmative showing to the contrary, nothing appearing in the judgment roll on which the appeal is taken inconsistent with such declaration.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 662.*]

6. PUBLIC LANDS (§ 144*)—STATE LANDS—RIGHT TO PURCHASE.

An amended answer in a contest to determine conflicting claims to the right to purchase state land, which alleges that on a designated date defendant was a female citizen of the United States and a resident of the state, of lawful age, and was entitled to purchase and hold real estate in her own name, shows her qualifications to purchase and hold the real estate at that time, which was the date of her application to purchase.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Public Lands, Dec. Dig. § 144.*]

7. PUBLIC LANDS (§ 144*)—STATE LANDS—RIGHT TO PURCHASE.

A female applying for the purchase of state lands must show by her affidavit, and not merely state the fact, that she is entitled to purchase and hold real estate.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Public Lands, Dec. Dig. § 144.*]

8. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 934*)—JUDGMENT—VALIDITY—PRESUMPTIONS.

Every presumption is in favor of the validity of the judgment appealed from, and any

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes condition of facts consistent with its validity presumptively exists.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3777-3781; Dec. Dig. § 934.*]

9. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 934*)—JUDGMENT—VALIDITY—PRESUMPTIONS.

The court on an appeal from a judgment on the judgment roll alone must make all inferences in support of the judgment, and all proceedings necessary to its validity will be presumed to have been regularly taken, and any matters which might have been presented to the trial court which would have authorized the judgment will be presumed to have been presented, in the absence of anything in the record to the contrary.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3777-3781; Dec. Dig. § 934.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Calaveras County; A. I. McSorley, Judge.

Action by Eric J. Segerstrom against M. J. Scott. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

C. H. Segerstrom, for appellant. Will A. Dower, for respondent.

HART, J. This is an appeal from the judgment on the judgment roll alone. The action was instituted, under section 3495 of the Political Code, for the purpose of determining the conflicting claims of the parties to the right to purchase from the state the lands described in the pleadings.

It appears from the complaint that, on the 25th day of November, 1908, the "defendant filed with the surveyor general of the state of California her application, numbered 3501, Sacramento Land District, to purchase of said state, under the provisions of sections 3494 and 3495 of the Political Code, the land" described in said complaint. It also likewise appears that on the 19th day of March, 1909, the plaintiff filed with said surveyor general an application to purchase the same land. Upon the hearing of the contest, the court below found in favor of the defendant upon all the essential issues of fact, and, accordingly, rendered and caused to be entered a judgment establishing defendant's superior right to purchase the land in dispute.

The single question involved in the attack upon the judgment is based upon the contention that the defendant, in her answer, failed to state facts sufficient to constitute an affirmative defense, upon which, if properly pleaded, her right to purchase the land in controversy must necessarily and solely rest. It is, therefore, claimed that the judgment in favor of defendant is without support.

It appears that, in the original answer, the defendant, being a female, pleaded no facts disclosing that she is and was, at the time of filing her application with the surveyor general for the contested land, "entitled to purchase and hold real estate in her own name," a showing which, in the case of a female applicant, section 3496 of the Political Code requires to be made, in the form of an affidavit, before the surveyor general, when such application is filed with that official, and which, manifestly, must also be made in her pleading in a contest of this character in order to state either a cause of action in her own behalf or an affirmative defense against the claim of one contesting her right to purchase state lands.

The plaintiff did not demur to the answer but, after the time within which he might have done so, the defendant filed an amended answer to whose averments, as they appeared in the original answer, she added others disclosing that she was qualified and "entitled to purchase and hold real estate in her own name."

It is asserted that the amended answer was filed without leave or permission of the court, and that, having been so filed after the time within which the plaintiff might have interposed a demurrer thereto, it cannot be considered as any part of the pleadings and, therefore, does not legally constitute a part of the judgment roll. See Tingley v. Times-Mirror Company, 151 Cal. 1, 89 Pac. 1097. That case, inquiring into the meaning of section 472 of the Code of Civil Procedure, by which it is provided that, under certain circumstances therein indicated, "any pleading may be amended once by the party of course," etc., holds that "this right to amend, while applying to the pleadings of both parties, has its limitations as to the time within which either party may exercise it under the section, and such time is not extended in behalf of the defendant beyond final joinder on the issues of fact in the case."

[1] And it is undoubtedly true that if there were any evidence before this court, authenticated in the proper way, that the defendant, without leave or authority from the court so to do, filed her amended answer after the time within which the plaintiff was authorized, if he so elected, to file a demurrer to the original answer, said amended answer could not be considered nor treated as a pleading in the case, nor, per consequence, a part of the judgment roll.

[2] But the appeal here, as seen, is from the judgment on the judgment roll alone, and there being no bill of exceptions or other like record disclosing that, as charged by the appellant, the amended answer was filed, under the circumstances as stated, without permission from the court to file it, the declaration of counsel that it was so filed is entirely extrajudicial, and, of course, cannot prevail or even be considered as against the presumptions in favor of the judgment.

The answer, in the vital particular in which it was amended, reads: "That, on the 25th day of November, 1908, said defendant was a female citizen of the United States, and a resident of the state of California, of lawful age, and was entitled to purchase and hold real estate in her own name." In the consideration of the record we are confined to the judgment roll in the absence of a bill of exceptions or a statement of the case or the stenographer's transcript of the proceedings had at the trial.

[3] An order granting leave to a party to amend his answer is no part of the judgment roll and is not, therefore, required to be entered thereon. Subdivision 2, § 670, Code Civ. Proc.; Livermore v. Webb, 56 Cal. 492.

[4] The papers which may be used on an appeal from a final judgment are a copy of the notice of appeal, of the judgment roll, and of any bill of exceptions or statement in the case upon which the appellant relies (section 950, Code Civ. Proc.), but where, as here, there is no bill of exceptions or statement of the case, or other like record, the appeal being upon the judgment roll alone, the orders of the court, allowing or refusing amendments to the answer, do not, as before stated, constitute any part of the record which an appellate court may review.

[5] The amended answer itself declares that the same was filed by leave of the court "first had and obtained," and there is nothing appearing on the judgment roll inconsistent with this statement of the amended answer. In the absence of an affirmative showing to the contrary, this declaration of the amended answer must be accepted as verity, and even if it contained no such declaration, and there was no proper affirmative showing that it was not true, this court would be compelled to indulge the presumption that the amended answer was duly filed, or filed with the trial court's permission. Riverside County v. Stockman, 124 Cal. 222, 56 Pac. 1027.

The court found that at the time defendant made her application to the surveyor general for the land described in the pleadings, she was of about the age of 30 years, and, in fact, possessed all the qualifications entitling her to purchase and hold real estate. The court further found that the affidavit accompanying her application to the surveyor general to purchase said land contained a statement disclosing her qualifications in that respect.

[6] The averments of the amended answer are sufficient to show defendant's qualifications to purchase and hold real estate. Price v. Beaver, 73 Cal. 630, 15 Pac. 356; Henshall v. Marsh, 151 Cal. 302, 90 Pac. 693; Dean v. Dunn, 9 Cal. App. 358, 99 Pac. 380.

[7] The law requires that a female applying for the purchase of state lands shall show by her affidavit, and not merely state the fact, that she is entitled to purchase and hold real estate, and the presumption from the findings is that her affidavit fully met this requirement.

[8] "Every presumption is in favor of the validity of the judgment, and any condition of facts consistent with the validity of the judgment will be presumed to have existed, rather than one which will defeat the judgment." Canadian, etc., Co. v. Clarita, etc., Co., 140 Cal. 674, 74 Pac. 301, and cases cited.

[9] Indeed, as to the entire proceedings in the trial court culminating in the judgment from which the appeal here is prosecuted upon the judgment roll alone, every presumption and every intendment is in favor of the regularity of such proceedings. "Upon an appeal from a judgment, upon the judgment roll alone, all intendments will be made in support of the judgment, and all proceedings necessary to its validity will be presumed to have been regularly taken, and any matters which might have been presented to the court below which would have authorized the judgment will be presumed to have been thus presented, if the record shows nothing to the contrary." Von Schmidt v. Von Schmidt, 104 Cal. 550, 38 Pac. 361. See, also, Johnston v. Callahan, 146 Cal. 214, 79 Pac. 870; Galvin v. Palmer, 134 Cal. 427, 66 Pac. 572; Butler v. Soule, 124 Cal. 73, 56 Pac. 601; In re Eichhoff, 101 Cal. 605, 36 Pac. 11; Eichhoff v. Eichhoff, 107 Cal. 42, 40 Pac. 24, 48 Am. St. Rep. 110; Siehler v. Look, 93 Cal. 601, 29 Pac. 220.

Neither the case of Tingley v. Times-Mirror Company, supra, nor that of Wood v. Brush, 72 Cal. 224, 13 Pac. 627, is authority for the proposition that this court may review an objection to a judgment where there is no showing whatever in the record on appeal that the objection is or may be well taken. In the first-mentioned case there was, in addition to the judgment roll, a bill of exceptions. In the last-mentioned case the judgment itself recited that the court denied the application for leave to file a proposed supplemental answer.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

16 Cal. App. 103

O'BRIEN v. O'BRIEN et al. (Civ. 847.)
(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 26, 1911.)

1. VENUE (§ 68*)—CHANGE OF VENUE—RESIDENCE—EVIDENCE.

On an application for a change of the place of trial on the ground that defendant was a resident of another county to which the venue was sought to be changed, plaintiff's affidavits in resistance held not to contradict defendant's declaration that at the commencement of the action he was a nonresident of the county where the suit was brought, and resided in the county to which the change was sought.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see venue, Cent. Dig. § 121; Dec. Dig. § 68.*]

2. DOMICILE (§ 2*)—RESIDENCE—"LIVE"—"RESIDENCE."

Statement of a witness that he lived at a certain street and number in a specified city was not inconsistent with his "residence" in another county, since a person may "live" in one place, and have a legal residence in another.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Domicile, Cent. Dig. § 2; Dec. Dig. § 2.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 5, pp. 4189-4191; vol. 7, pp. 6151-6161; vol. 8, p. 7788.]

3. VENUE (§ 68*)—CHANGE OF VENUE—AFFIDAVITS.

Affidavits in resistance of an application for a change of venue reciting that the affiant was "certain" that defendant had gone to another county on business matters for a limited time, but not to establish a residence there, and that she was "convinced" that his legal residence was still in the county where the suit was brought, without stating the facts by which she became "certain" or had been "convinced" of such fact, were insufficient.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Venue, Cent. Dig. § 121; Dec. Dig. § 68.*]

4. VENUE (§ 66*)—CHANGE OF VENUE—AFFIDAVIT—"RESIDED AND NOW RESIDES."

Where defendant applied for a change of venue because of his alleged residence in another county, and made affidavit that at the time of the commencement of the action he "resided and now resides" in such other county to which the venue was sought to be changed, such averment, though in a sense involving a legal conclusion, should be regarded in case of an affidavit made by the defendant himself as a statement of a probative fact when made without qualification or facts to support the same, and as carrying with it all the essentials of a legal residence, though such would not be the effect of a similar averment in an affidavit made by a party other than the defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Venue, Cent. Dig. § 112; Dec. Dig. § 66.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Thos. F. Graham, Judge.

Action by Elizabeth A. O'Brien, as special administratrix of the estate of Joseph A. O'Brien, deceased, against Charles F. O'Brien individually and as surviving partner of a previously existing firm doing business under the name of Charles F. O'Brien & Co. From an order denying defendant's motion for a change of place of trial, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Frank James, E. C. Chapman, and Frank W. Taft, for appellants. Lent & Humphrey, for respondent.

HART, J. This is an appeal from an order denying defendant's motion for a change of the place of trial from the city and county of San Francisco to the county of Los Angeles. The suit by the plaintiff is for an accounting of the partnership transactions between the defendant and the deceased and for a judgment for one-half of such net profits accruing from the business conducted by defendant and said deceased as such accounting may disclose.

[1] It appears from the complaint that the defendant and the deceased, Joseph A. O'Brien, in the year 1907 established themselves into a copartnership for the purpose of conducting the business of selling, for a commission, lands and suburban properties situated in the neighborhood of the city of San Francisco; that said partners were to share equally in the profits of said business; that, up to the time of his death, the deceased carried out and performed each and all the terms of the agreement upon which said partnership was to be conducted, "and thereby became entitled to receive as a member of said partnership, and as his proportionate share of the net profits arising from the conduct of said business one-half of such net profits."

On the 29th day of December, 1908, Joseph A. O'Brien died in the city of San Francisco, leaving a last will and testament, "in and by which he named the said Charles F. O'Brien as executor of said will with the request that he be not required to give a bond as such executor." The complaint shows that defendant, in due time, qualified as such executor and that letters testamentary were issued to him. It is alleged that defendant, after the death of Joseph A. O'Brien, continued in the possession of said partnership business and the property thereof. It is charged that defendant, in the execution of his duties as such executor, willfully failed to account in his inventory filed by him in the matter of said estate for the interest of the deceased in said partnership, and that he did not at any time have such interest appraised; that for the neglect so charged the defendant, after due proceedings, was on the 8th day of October 1909, suspended by the court as such executor, and that on the 22d day of October, 1909, the court appointed plaintiff as special administratrix of said estate, "with full power to take charge and management of and enter upon and preserve said estate and the property thereof from damage, waste, and injury and for such purpose and all necessary purposes to commence, maintain, and defend suits or other legal proceedings."

The complaint alleges that plaintiff is the widow of the said Joseph A. O'Brien, deceased; that no children were born to their marriage; and that she is the sole legatee and devisee under his said will of all property and estate of which he died seised or possessed. The complaint was filed on the 30th day of October, 1909. On the 18th day of November, 1909, the defendant served on plaintiff and filed a general demurrer to the complaint, a demand for a change of the place of trial of said action, a notice of motion to change the place of trial and an affidavit of merits. The notice stated that the motion would be made upon the affidavit of the defendant and upon the papers and pleadings on file in said action, and upon the ground that the defendant, neither at the time of the commencement of said action resided "nor now resides, in the said city and county of San Francisco; and that the defendant, at the time of the commencement of said action resided and now resides in the county of Los Angeles, in said state." The affidavit of merits filed by defendant declares, among other things, "that at the time of the commencement of said action he resided and now resides in the county of Los Angeles, state of California; that affiant neither at the time of the commencement of the action resided, nor now resides, in said city and county of San Francisco," etc.

In rebuttal of the affidavit filed by plaintiff in resistance to the motion, which we shall later examine, and in corroboration of the allegations contained in his affidavit of merits of his residence in Los Angeles at the time of the commencement of this action, the defendant, at the hearing of the motion, introduced in evidence a petition, verified by the plaintiff on the 4th day of June, 1909, praying for the removal of defendant as executor of the estate of the deceased, and in which, inter alia, she alleges, upon information and belief, that the defendant "moved from the city and county of San Francisco, state of California, to the city of Los Angeles, and is engaged in business in the said city of Los Angeles, state of California, and in Mexico," etc. The court, as the basis of its order removing defendant from the office of executor of the will of deceased, made findings of fact from the proof adduced in said proceedings for removal, and said findings were, by defendant, introduced at the hearing on this motion. Among other findings, the court made the following: "That the said Charles F. O'Brien has moved from the city and county of San Francisco, state of California, to the city of Los Angeles, state of California, and is engaged in business in said city of Los Angeles, county of Los Angeles, state of California, and in Mexico." The order made suspending the defendant from the position of executor was made on the 8th day of October, 1909, 22 days prior to the institution of this suit.

[1] The affidavit filed by the plaintiff in resistance to the motion, after reciting in detail the history of the alleged mismanagement of the estate by defendant and the proceedings leading to the order removing him as executor of the last will of deceased, alleges: "During the proceedings taken in the matter of said estate and particularly on the 29th day of January, 1909, the said Charles F. O'Brien appeared in Department 9 of this court before Judge Coffey, and testified under oath as follows: 'What is your name?' A. 'Charles F. O'Brien.' The Court: 'Mr. O'Brien, where do you live?' A. Why, at this time I live at 1560 Sacramento street.' And at various times after, until very recently, the said Charles F. O'Brien has testified that his residence is in the city and county of San Francisco." It is further alleged in said affidavit that during the lifetime of the deceased, and after his death, "the principal business carried on by the partnership of O'Brien & Garrett (of which firm defendant and deceased were members) was the sale of lands situate in the Yaqui valley, Mexico, and said firm of O'Brien & Garrett acted as agents of David Richardson & Co. for the sale of said lands, the principal place of business of said company being in Los Angeles, and said Joseph O'Brien, and Charles F. O'Brien made many and varied trips to the city of Los Angeles in connection with the said business, but throughout said time both kept and maintained their residence in the city and county of San Francisco. * * * I am certain that Charles F. O'Brien has gone to Los Angeles on business matters for a limited time, as he has often done heretofore, but has not gone there to establish a residence nor to abandon his local residence in San Francisco, and his purpose in going to said city of Los Angeles is to avoid the trial of this action in said city and county of San Francisco, and to annoy, harass, and inconvenience me as plaintiff herein, and to prevent me from prosecuting this action. * * * The said Charles F. O'Brien repeatedly told me that if I crossed him in any way in this estate that he would see that I never received a cent, and I would lose any property that I might have, and I am convinced that his residence is still in the city and county of San Francisco and that he is pretending that his residence is in Los Angeles, in pursuance of the threats aforesaid and for the purpose of harassing and annoying me and causing me great expense."

Briefly, the foregoing is a recapitulation of all the statements contained in the affidavit of plaintiff that can be construed to bear, either directly or indirectly, upon the question at issue on this motion, and in our judgment they do not contradict in the slightest degree the unqualified declaration of the defendant in his affidavit of merits that he was, at the time of the commencement of this action, and is now, a resident of the city of Los Angeles. The rule as to the conflict of evidence upon the question of defendant's residence cannot, therefore, be invoked here. All the evidence worthy of the name, is one way, and, obviously, under such circumstances, there can be no conflict.

[2] The only part of plaintiff's affidavit that may be said to tend to support her contention upon the question of defendant's residence is where it is made to appear that defendant, about nine months prior to the date of the commencement of this action, testified. "At this time I lived at 1560 Sacramento street," from which testimony it might reasonably be inferred that he meant to say that in January, 1909, he resided on a street of that name in the city of San Francisco, although he did not say so in direct terms. A person may "live" at a place and still not be a "resident" thereof in the legal sense of that term. But, assuming that he intended to say that, at the time he answered the question then propounded to him, he was a resident of San Francisco, which is by no means clear, or let it even be assumed that, in point of fact, he did reside there then, still there is nothing in his testimony then given, nor would there be in the fact of his residence there then, inconsistent with the statement in his affidavit of merits that, on the 30th day of October, 1909, when this action was instituted, he was a resident of the county of Los Angeles.

[3] The averments of plaintiff's affidavit, "I am certain that Charles F. O'Brien has gone to Los Angeles on business matters for a limited time, * * * but has not gone there to establish a residence nor to abandon his local residence in San Francisco," and "I am convinced that his residence is still in the city and county of San Francisco," etc., involve the statement of no fact, but are mere conclusions of the affiant. She does not set forth any facts by which she has become certain or has been convinced that defendant's residence is or was, when this action was brought, in the city of San Francisco. It was for her to present facts that would produce certainty in the mind of the court to which the application for the change was made, and convince it that the defendant resided within its jurisdiction when the complaint was filed. It might transpire that facts that would convince affiant that the defendant was a resident of San Francisco might not be of sufficient probative value to so convince the court. And, of course, it was for the court and not for the affiant to be convinced of the truth of the ultimate fact submitted for determination by this motion, hence the necessity and importance of disclosing by her affidavit, if she has not so disclosed them, all the facts which she declares had made it certain to her defendant was, at the time of the commencement of this action, a resident of San Francisco. If she has set forth in her affidavit all the facts available to her on the proposition, then, as stated, while, looking at them from her point of view, they may possess much power of persuasion in the direction to which they are addressed, they are not, in our opinion, of such a character as to overcome or even to directly contradict defendant's unqualified declaration that he then resided in the city of Los Angeles. They, in other words, fall far short of showing that defendant resided in San Francisco at the time referred to.

Moreover, defendant's affidavit of merits is to some extent corroborated, as has been seen, by the statement contained in plaintiff's petition, verified by her on the 4th day of June, 1909—a little over four months prior to the institution of this action—praying that defendant be ousted as executor of her deceased husband's will, that, on her information and belief, defendant had moved from the city and county of San Francisco to the city of Los Angeles, and had engaged in business in said last-mentioned city. This, it may be here observed, was one of the grounds upon which she based her prayer for the removal of defendant from the office of executor of the last will of deceased, the petition alleging that by reason of his absence from the city of San Francisco, he was unable to properly attend to his duties as such executor, "all of which is to the serious damage and detriment of said estate and the property thereof." And the court (presided over in that proceeding by a judge other than the judge who heard and determined this motion) found, on the 8th day of October, 1909, in said proceeding to remove defendant, as already seen, that "the said Charles F. O'Brien, has moved from the city and county of San Francisco, state of California, to the city of Los Angeles, state of California, and is engaged in business in said city of Los Angeles," etc. The foregoing, as we have already shown, was made only 22 days antedating the day on which this action was begun.

It is not clear whether, by said allegation in plaintiff's petition to oust defendant from the office of executor and by the finding of the court as to the fact involved in said allegation, it was intended by the plaintiff to declare and by the court to find that defendant had then established his residence in the city of Los Angeles. Of course, a person may move to a place for temporary purposes and may engage in business there without establishing a legal residence at such place or an intention to do so; yet, vernacularly, the phrase "moved to the city of Los Angeles" would be accepted as carrying with it an intention to take up a permanent abode in said city, and we have little doubt that such was the meaning plaintiff intended to convey by the use of that language in her petition to remove the defendant. At any rate, whatever may be the real import of the allegation and finding referred to, if they are entitled to any weight at all in the consideration of the question here, it is in support of defendant's contention that he was a resident of the county of Los Angeles when this action was begun.

[4] It is true that the defendant merely declares, in his affidavit, "that at the time of the commencement of said action he resided and now resides in the county of Los Angeles, state of California; that affiant neither at the time of the commencement of the said action resided, nor now resides, in said city of San Francisco." These allegations may, in a sense, involve a legal conclusion, the proposition whether he "resided and resides" in the City of Los Angeles and not in the city of San Francisco being the very question at issue and submitted by this motion for the court's decision. But we think that, on a motion of this character, in the case of the defendant's affidavit, wherein, without qualification, he states his residence to be at a certain place, without giving other facts to support the statement, such allegation should be construed to be and treated as the statement of a probative fact—that is, that it is intended to and does carry with it all the essentials of a legal residence. The defendant himself knows better than any other person whether he has established a legal residence in a particular city or a county. He knows or must be assumed to know what his intention is with respect to becoming or not becoming a resident, in the legal sense, of a place to which he “moves.” The defendant here knows much better than any other person could know whether, in going to Los Angeles and establishing himself in business there, his intention was then to make or not to make that city his permanent place of residence. Therefore, as stated, when he deposed that, at the time this action was commenced, he resided and still resides in Los Angeles, it must be assumed that he thus deposed with full knowledge of the legal import of those terms or of all the requisites of a legal residence, and that he intended that his affidavit should be so construed and understood. Indeed, there can be no doubt but that he intended that his affidavit should be so understood and that it should be accepted as bearing such meaning. Viewed in this light, his affidavit is sufficient to make, in his behalf, upon the question of residence, a prima facie showing, which, unless overthrown in a proper way by a countershowning on behalf of plaintiff, must stand as the basis of the order on this motion. As declared, the plaintiff has signally failed to overcome the showing made by defendant.

It is true that we held in the case of Bernou v. Bernou, 114 Pac. 1000, that the affidavit of a party, other than the defendant, filed in behalf of the latter on his motion for a change of venue, and in which it was merely alleged that the affiant “of his personal knowledge knows that defendant has been and is a bona fide resident of the city of San Francisco,” without alleging the facts upon which he based such “knowledge,” was without any probative value whatsoever. And to that proposition we still adhere. But, in our opinion, there should be much more required in an affidavit made by a party other than the defendant himself, and used as a basis for a motion of the character of the one involved here than in an affidavit to be used for the same purpose, made by the defendant, whether the affidavit of such other party is for or against the defendant. The affidavit of a party other than the defendant himself should, to be of any value as proof addressed to the question of residence, on a motion of this kind, state some fact or facts by which the court may be aided in forming some conclusion of its own upon the question of defendant's residence. In other words, the mere declaration by an affiant, other than the defendant himself, that the latter “resides” in or is a “resident” of a county other than that in which the action has been instituted would constitute a conclusion of the witness as well as of law, pure and simple, for he could know nothing of the defendant's intention with respect to the establishment of his place of residence, except from extrinsic circumstances, upon which alone he must base his conclusion as to the question whether the defendant has or has not become a resident, in the legal sense, of the particular place referred to in his affidavit. With the circumstances by which such affiant has arrived at his conclusion the court should be made acquainted and itself thus afforded an opportunity to pass upon their weight and value as proof of the fact to be decided. As we stated, when referring to the affidavit of plaintiff, a fact or circumstance which might appear to the lay mind to possess much force, might, under judicial scrutiny, be found to be of no probative significance whatsoever.

However, we are, as declared, of the opinion that the court below made a mistake in denying the motion on the showing disclosed here, and the order appealed from must therefore be reversed, and it is so ordered.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

16 Cal. App. 193

O'BRIEN v. O'BRIEN et al. (Civ. 848.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 9, 1911.)

1. PARTNERSHIP (§ 258*)—DISSOLUTION—ADMINISTRATRIX OF SURVIVING PARTNER—ACTION—NATURE—PARTIES.

Where the special administratrix of a deceased partner sued the surviving partners alleging that one of them as executor of the deceased partner had failed to inventory his deceased partner's interest as a part of the assets of the estate, and for this had been removed, also that plaintiff had been refused any information with reference to her decedent's interest in the firm and prayed an accounting as to all the dealings and transactions of the partnership, and that the net profits of the business be ascertained, and the amounts that had been paid to the several partners and all moneys due and paid to or to become due and payable to the firm be disclosed, the action was for an accounting of the partnership business as to which both surviving partners were necessary parties.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partnership, Cent. Dig. §§ 564-598; Dec. Dig. § 258.*]

2. VENUE (§ 22*)—CODEFENDANTS—RESIDENCE OF PARTIES.

That a resident surviving partner properly joined in an action by the administratrix of the deceased partner for an accounting, united with his nonresident codefendant in an application for a change of venue, and by affidavit averred that he, the resident defendant, was not in possession of the property or assets of the firm, and was but a nominal party with no substantial interest in the defense of the action, did not affect plaintiff's right to have the action tried at the place where the resident defendant resided.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Venue, Dec. Dig. § 22.*]

3. PARTNERSHIP (§ 258*)—ACCOUNTING—SURVIVING PARTNERS—NOMINAL PARTIES.

Where, in a suit against surviving partners for an accounting, the complaint averred facts showing that the nonresident defendant was the party chiefly delinquent, but also showed that the resident defendant had been connected with his codefendant in the management and control of the business since the death of plaintiff's decedent, and was withholding from plaintiff the information sought, and was in some degree responsible for the surviving partner's failure to account to her or to her testator in his lifetime for his interest in the concern, he was an actual and not a mere nominal defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partnership, Cent. Dig. §§ 564-598; Dec. Dig. § 258.*]

4. VENUE (§ 72*)—CHANGE OF VENUE—MERITS.

The court will not go into the merits of the action on a motion for a change in the place of trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Venue, Cent. Dig. § 127; Dec. Dig. § 72.*]

5. VENUE (§ 22*)—RESIDENCE OF CODEFENDANT.

Where one of two codefendants resided in the county of plaintiff's residence, she was entitled to a trial in that county under Code Civ. Proc. § 395, providing that plaintiff may have the cause tried in the county where either of the defendants resides.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Venue, Cent. Dig. §§ 35-37; Dec. Dig. § 22.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Thos. F. Graham, Judge.

Action by Elizabeth A. O'Brien, administratrix of Joseph A. O'Brien, deceased, against Charles F. O'Brien and another, as survivors of the firm of O'Brien & Garrett. From an order denying defendants' motion for a change of place of trial, they appeal. Affirmed.

Jordan, Rowe & Brann, for appellant Garrett. Frank James, E. C. Chapman, and Frank W. Taft, for appellant O'Brien. Lent & Humphrey, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. The purpose of this appeal is to review the order of the trial court denying defendants' motion for a change of the place of trial. The complaint is quite a voluminous document and only such of its averments will be stated as will show the nature of the action and serve to disclose the reasons for denying defendants' motion.

It is alleged that in his lifetime plaintiff's testate, Joseph A. O'Brien, and defendants, Charles F. O'Brien and William T. Garrett, were partners, under the firm name of O'Brien & Garrett, doing business in the city of San Francisco as agents for the sale of land located in the republic of Mexico; that on December 28, 1908, the said Joseph died testate, naming defendant his brother Charles as executor of his last will; that he duly qualified as such executor, but, because of certain neglect of duty, he was removed from his office as executor, and plaintiff, who was sole devisee and widow of Joseph, was appointed special administratrix of the estate of deceased; that Charles, while such executor, had failed to account to said estate with respect to Joseph's partnership interest in said firm, and had failed to mention it in his inventory of said estate; that neither of defendants, as surviving partners, ever accounted to said executor of said estate and neither has accounted to plaintiff, although she has demanded of them that such accounting be made since her appointment as special administratrix of said estate; that ever since the death of said Joseph the "defendants continued in the possession of said partnership and partnership property and undertook the settlement of said partnership business." The complaint then sets forth with some particularity the nature, extent and value of the business transacted, the profits of which amounted, as she avers, to over $25,000, and that there remains due to her testate, as a member of said firm, a large amount of money, the exact amount she is and has been unable to ascertain, "because of the incomplete condition of the accounts of said firm, and of the failure and refusal of defendant Charles F. O'Brien and of said William T. Garrett to furnish to plaintiff information with reference to the accounts of said partners with said firm, and as to the amounts to which the estate of plaintiff's husband, Joseph A. O'Brien, is entitled, as the share of said Joseph A. O'Brien in the net profits of said business, as is hereinafter more particularly set forth; that said defendants, as surviving partners of the partnership of O'Brien & Garrett, ever since the death of said Joseph A. O'Brien, continued to transact the business of said partnership for the purpose of settling its affairs and concluding its affairs with the exception of collecting outstanding commissions"; that about the ——— day of March, 1909, and since the death of said Joseph A. O'Brien, the defendants have collected, on account of said partnership business, including collections prior to the death of said Joseph, as plaintiff is informed, more than $42,500, and there remains due said partnership about the sum of $25,000, "the exact amount of which plaintiff is unable to state, as the books of said partnership are in the possession of and under the absolute control of said Charles F. O'Brien"; that the said Charles F., ever since the death of said Joseph, "has been and still is acting as the managing partner of said partnership and has all the books and accounts of said partnership"; that the said partners were to share equally the expenses and earnings of said partnership; that "all the commissions and profits collected or paid to said firm were received by the said Charles F. O'Brien, as representing said firm, upon the understanding and agreement between the members thereof that after paying the expenses of conducting said business the net profits would be divided among said partners in equal proportions as provided in said agreement of partnership"; that of the amount of net profits as aforesaid payable to the said Joseph and to his estate none thereof has been paid except the sum of about $1,800; that since the death of Joseph, the said defendant Charles F. O'Brien has had the principal charge of said business and the control of the receipts and expenditures, relating to transactions both before and since the death of Joseph; that he has kept the books in a negligent and incomplete manner and so as not to fully show the moneys received on account of said firm, or the amounts to which it is entitled and that it is not possible from said books to ascertain the true condition of the partnership affairs and that an accounting is necessary to ascertain the respective rights and interests of the members; that the said defendant Charles is misusing said funds and diverting them to his own personal gain in fraud of plaintiff's rights, and he denies that plaintiff has any rights in or to any of said partnership property.

An accounting is prayed for of all the dealings and transactions of the said copartnership, and, among other things, that the net profits of said business be ascertained and the amounts that have been paid to the several partners "and all moneys due and paid to, or to become due and payable to, the said firm."

[1] It seems to us too plain to require the citation of authorities that the action is for an accounting of the partnership business among the members of a copartnership, presumably dissolved by the death of one of the partners, and that enough facts are sufficiently averred to show that both Charles F. O'Brien and William T. Garrett are necessary parties.

[2] Appellant contends that the complaint shows on its face that defendant Garrett is united in interest with the plaintiff, and, if made a party at all, should have been made a coplaintiff or, if having refused his consent to be joined as a plaintiff, he should then and then only have been made a defendant, as provided in section 382 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and that he has been made a defendant for the purpose of enabling plaintiff to name the place of trial and prevent defendants from causing the place of trial to be changed to the place of residence of defendant Charles F. O'Brien. Furthermore, it is claimed that Garrett is only a nominal defendant. Defendant Garrett joined in the demand for a change of venue and in the general demurrer to the complaint, and he made an affidavit in which he stated that "affiant is not in possession of the property or assets of said alleged copartnership, is a nominal party only to said action, and has no substantial interest in the defense thereof." He also says: "That affiant has a good and substantial defense on the merits to said action and to the whole of plaintiff's demand therein alleged." The fact that Garrett joined in the demand did not affect plaintiff's right to have the cause tried at his place of residence. Hearne v. De Young, 111 Cal. 373, 43 Pac. 1108; Hellman v. Logan, 148 Cal. 58, 82 Pac. 848.

[3] There are some averments of the complaint showing that defendant O'Brien is the party chiefly delinquent, but there are averments showing also that defendant Garrett has been connected with defendant O'Brien in the management and control of the business since the death of plaintiff's testate, and is withholding from plaintiff the information she seeks, and in some degree at least is responsible for the failure to account to her or to her testate in his lifetime. In his affidavit Garrett declares that he has a good defense "to the whole of plaintiff's demand therein alleged," which would carry with it the defeat of plaintiff's action if successful. His declaration that he "is a nominal party only" is not conclusive.

[4] The court will not go into the merits of the action on a motion to change the place of trial. McKenzie v. Barling, 101 Cal. 459, 462, 36 Pac. 8. Appellant's claim that Garrett was joined as defendant "for no other purpose than to block if possible the right of O'Brien to secure a transfer of the trial to the county of his residence," has not so much support, as the converse claim of plaintiff, that Garrett has come to his codefendant's relief for the purpose of depriving her of a right claimed by her. We think Garrett was properly joined as a defendant.

Such being our view of the nature of the action and of the parties necessary thereto, the correctness of the order denying the motion to change the place of trial from San Francisco to Los Angeles is easily disposed of.

[5] Defendant Charles F. O'Brien deposed that he was at the commencement of the action a resident of Los Angeles, and that his codefendant was then a resident of San Francisco. It has been decided by the Supreme Court that, under section 395 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the plaintiff has the right to have the cause tried in the county where either of the defendants resides. Hearne v. De Young, 111 Cal. 373, 43 Pac. 1108; Greenleaf v. Jacks, 133 Cal. 506, 65 Pac. 1039; Greenleaf v. Jacks, 135 Cal. 154, 67 Pac. 717; Hellman v. Logan, 148 Cal. 58, 82 Pac. 848.

In the case of the same plaintiff as here versus Charles F. O'Brien, No. 847, 116 Pac. 692, recently before this court, the order denying the motion to change the venue was reversed on the ground that the defendant, without substantial conflict, showed his residence to be in Los Angeles at the commencement of the suit. The evidence on the issue was not materially different from that submitted on the motion in the present case. But in that case Charles F. O'Brien was the sole defendant, and the partnership alleged was that of Charles F. O'Brien & Co., composed of Thomas A. O'Brien and Charles F. O'Brien engaged in the business of selling lands located in the neighborhood of San Francisco. Here the partnership is composed of three persons, under a different firm name and engaged in selling lands located in Mexico. The question of the residence of Charles F. O'Brien is immaterial inasmuch as it is conceded that his codefendant resides in the city and county of San Francisco, where the action was brought.

The order is affirmed.

We concur: HART, J.; BURNETT, J.

16 Cal. App. 253

SNELL v. CLARK CONST. CO. (Civ. 833.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 12, 1911. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court July 11, 1911.)

MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 115*)—MATERIALS FURNISHED SUBCONTRACTOR.

One who has furnished material to a subcontractor is entitled to a mechanic's lien, the owner having notice thereof, and not having paid the contractor, though the contractor had fully paid the subcontractor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. §§ 150-159; Dec. Dig. § 115.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. J. Van Nostrand, Judge.

In the matter of the submission of controversy between E. L. Snell, as plaintiff, and the Clark Construction Company, as defendant. From an adverse judgment, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Frohman & Jacobs, for appellant. J. J. Webb, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The controversy was submitted to the superior court on a statement of agreed facts, except as to one matter, concerning which, on conflicting evidence, the court found against appellant. Daisy Hamburger, as owner, caused a residence to be erected by Clark Construction Company, as contractor, on a lot in San Francisco. No question was raised as to the validity of this contract. The said contractor sublet the plastering and lathing to Ira M. McKenzie, on an agreement that the latter should furnish all the material and perform all the labor required for the sum of $1,300. McKenzie completed the plastering, and he was paid therefor in full by the Clark Construction Company. The said E. L. Snell furnished to said McKenzie, for use on said building, and which were actually used in its construction, plasterer's supplies amounting to $202.50. Not having been paid, a claim of lien therefor was duly filed and recorded in the office of the county recorder. The said Daisy Hamburger fully paid to said Clark Construction Company all moneys due on their contract when the same became due, excepting only that she withheld from said company a sufficient amount to satisfy the lien of said Snell, and said amount was deposited in court under stipulation to abide the judgment in the matter under submission, it being agreed that, "if on the ultimate decision of this controversy said amount is awarded to said Snell, said Clark Construction Company will have to lose the amount so awarded, and the question to be decided is whether, under the circumstances, said Clark Construction Company should bear said loss or said Snell should lose the benefit of his lien aforesaid."

Counsel use a little different form of expression to state the proposition, but the question involved may be put in the language of respondent: "Is a lien by a materialman who furnishes materials to a subcontractor chargeable to the owner of the building in which said materials were used, where the owner has not fully paid the contractor and has notice of the materialman's lien, although the contractor has fully paid his subcontractor pursuant to the agreement, made and entered into by and between said contractor and subcontractor, without notice of the claims of the materialman?"

We are treated to an interesting and learned discussion of the subject by both parties; but it is conceded that the question has been decided by the Second District Court of Appeal, in the case of Los Angeles Pressed Brick Company v. Los Angeles Pacific Boulevard & Development Company, 7 Cal. App. 460, 94 Pac. 775, in which cause a rehearing was denied by the Supreme Court. Therein it is directly held that, notwithstanding the payment by the contractor to his subcontractor, in accordance with the terms of their agreement, yet the materialman was entitled to payment for materials furnished, since the owner had funds in his possession due the contractor. We agree with the conclusion reached in said decision, and the case, as we understand the situation, has not been overruled. The evils suggested by appellant as likely to ensue from this view of the law are more imaginary than real. In most cases the contractor will know whether he can safely trust the subcontractor. At any rate, he can easily protect himself from a loss in this manner, as declared in the aforesaid decision, "by exacting of the subcontractor a contract which would require him to show that his labor and material bills were paid before the money was paid to him, or provide that the contractor might see that the sums paid to the subcontractor were applied to the payment of such bills."

Appellant complains that the aforesaid decision "touches only the surface of the problem and that it is not a well-considered case," but we understand this to be not altogether an uncommon complaint on the part of dissatisfied attorneys; and be it also said, to their credit, that when the decision is favorable they are just as likely to pronounce it faultless, and to exclaim, "Most rightful judge! Most learned judge!" We do not agree with appellant, and, in addition, it would seem that the question should be deemed stare decisis.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

16 Cal. App. 287

KRITZER v. TRACY ENGINEERING CO.
et al. (Civ. 973.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. May 23, 1911.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 931*)—PRESUMPTION—WAIVER OF FINDINGS.

In the absence of affirmative showing to the contrary by bill of exceptions or in other appropriate manner, it will be presumed that findings, not having been made by the trial court, were waived, as permitted by Code Civ. Proc. § 634.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3728, 3762-3771; Dec. Dig. § 931.*]

2. JUDGMENT (§ 279*)—JUDGMENT ROLL.

A minute entry made by the clerk is, under Code Civ. Proc. § 670, enumerating the constituents of the judgment roll, no part thereof, it relating neither to an order striking out pleading, nor one made on demurrer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 546-551; Dec. Dig. § 279.*]

3. JUDGMENT (§ 525*)—RECITALS OF JUDGMENT—CONCLUSIVENESS.

The recital of the judgment that findings of fact were waived by failure of defendant to appear and participate in the trial is conclusive, in the absence of a showing to the contrary.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 982½; Dec. Dig. § 525.*]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 883*)—REVIEW—CONSENT JUDGMENT.

One cannot complain that the judgment was against law because of the overruling of a demurrer, where it was overruled by consent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3611; Dec. Dig. § 883.*]

5. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 161*)—COMPENSATION FOR WORK—TRAVELING EXPENSES.

The amount paid by one for his transportation to and from the place of work is part of the compensation agreed to be paid him, as regards his right to a lien therefor, the agreement of his employer, the contractor, having been to pay him a certain amount per month and such traveling expenses.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. §§ 280-283; Dec. Dig. § 161.*]

6. BANKRUPTCY (§ 209*)—FORECLOSURE—NECESSARY PARTIES—TRUSTEE OF BANKRUPT.

The action being one merely to foreclose an existing lien, no personal judgment being demanded of defendant, presence of its trustee in bankruptcy, though after the filing of its answer it was adjudged a bankrupt, was not necessary to a complete determination of the controversy, within Code Civ. Proc. § 389, providing that, when such a determination cannot be had without the presence of other parties, the court must order them to be brought in.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bankruptcy, Dec. Dig. § 209.*]

7. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 149*)—FILING CLAIM—AMOUNTS DUE ON SEPARATE PROPERTIES.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1188, providing that, where a claim for mechanic's lien is filed against more than one piece of property it shall designate the amount due claimant on each of such properties, has no application where there is but a single improvement on both pieces of property done for a gross sum, and the work done by claimant, an employé of the contractor, was under a single contract for superintending the entire work.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. §§ 256-259; Dec. Dig. § 149.*]

8. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 149*)—FILING CLAIM—AMOUNT DUE ON SEPARATE PROPERTIES.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1188, requires a claim for mechanics' lien against more than one piece of property to designate the amount due claimant on each piece only as against other lien claimants, so that it is unnecessary where there is but one such claimant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. §§ 256-259; Dec. Dig. § 149.*]

9. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 107*)—PERSONS ENTITLED TO LIENS—FOREMEN.

A foreman is entitled to a mechanic's lien under Code Civ. Proc. § 1183, as a person who performs labor in the improvement.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. § 139; Dec. Dig. § 107.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; George H. Hutton, Judge.

Action by W. H. Kritzer against the Tracy Engineering Company and others. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant Orange Blossom Mining & Milling Company appeals. Affirmed.

Sidney J. Parsons and Charles L. Allison, for appellant. Cryer & Tuttle and R. E. Bledsoe, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Action to foreclose a mechanic's lien.

Judgment went for plaintiff, from which the defendant Orange Blossom Mining & Milling Company appeals upon the judgment roll alone. It appears from the complaint: That at the times in question the Orange Blossom Mining & Milling Company owned ten contiguous mining claims consolidated and operated as one mine, known as the Orange Blossom Mine, and also owned a mill-site located at Bagdad Station, nine miles distant from said mine. That defendant entered into a contract with the Tracy Engineering Company, whereby the latter, for the gross sum of money therein specified, agreed to erect and construct a power plant upon said millsite and erect and construct, upon the mining claim known and designated as the Orange Blossom Claim, a stamp mill and install certain mining machinery, appurtenances, and fixtures, together with a transmission line extending from the power plant at Bagdad Station to the power house and improvements to be constructed upon the Orange Blossom Mining Claim, and to furnish the materials and labor necessary in the construction and completion of said work. That said Tracy Engineering Company employed plaintiff to act as foreman of the construction work so undertaken and agreed to be performed by it, under the terms of which employment plaintiff was to render services as foreman and superintendent in the construction of said work and improvements, and in consideration for such services the Tracy Engineering Company promised and agreed to pay plaintiff therefor the sum of $200 per month while so employed, together with his traveling expenses from the city of New York to Bagdad, Cal., and return therefrom to New York upon the completion of the plant. That plaintiff entered upon said work, and between the 24th day of March, 1908, and the 24th day of November, 1908, performed the work and labor of superintending the erection, construction, and installation of said improvement so agreed to be constructed and installed by the Tracy Engineering Company, and in the capacity of such foreman and superintendent performed eight months' labor thereon, which said work and labor actually entered into the construction of said improvements so made upon said millsite and mining properties, and that the reasonable value of the labor and services so done and performed was the amount so agreed upon, to wit, $200 per month and his traveling expenses to and from New York City, amounting to the sum of $226.08, and making a total of $1,826.08 due to him for such work and labor so performed, upon which there was paid the sum of $201.81 and no more; that said work and improvements were fully completed and possession thereof delivered to the defendant Orange Blossom Mining & Milling Company on November 22, 1908, followed by sufficient allegations of the filing of a duly verified claim of lien in form and containing a statement of the matters and things required by statute.

[1] 1. Appellant assigns as error the fact that the court made no findings, and it insists that they were not waived. We cannot presume that mere absence of findings constitutes error. Every intendment goes to support the judgment, and, since findings of fact may be waived (section 634, Code Civ. Proc.), then, in the absence of some affirmative showing to the contrary, by bill of exceptions or in other appropriate manner, the presumption arises that they were waived. Mulcahy v. Glazier, 51 Cal. 626; Campbell v. Coburn, 77 Cal. 36, 18 Pac. 860.

[2] Appellant directs our attention to a minute entry made by the clerk, a copy of which is brought up in the transcript. This, however, is no part of the judgment roll, for the reason that it relates neither to an order striking out pleading, nor one made on demurrer. Section 670, Civ. Code Proc. Even were it so regarded, it does not show that findings were not waived.

[3] Moreover, the judgment states that findings of fact and conclusions of law were waived by the failure of the defendant Orange Blossom Mining & Milling Company to appear and participate in the trial. This recital by the court must, in the absence of any showing to the contrary, be regarded as conclusive.

[4] 2. It is next contended that plaintiff could have no right to a lien for his traveling expenses to and from New York, and that including the amount of such expenses in his claim of lien rendered the same void. Therefore it is contended the complaint was obnoxious to the general demurrer interposed by defendant and rendered the judgment against law. As to this point it is sufficient to say that the demurrer was overruled by consent. Hence, if the judgment was erroneous by reason of being against law, defendant, having consented thereto, cannot be heard now to complain upon such ground. Erlanger v. Southern Pac. R. R. Co., 109 Cal. 395, 42 Pac. 31; Estate of Lorentz, 124 Cal. 495, 57 Pac. 381.

[5] Neither does the record disclose any fact which renders the lien void. The complaint sets forth the contract made between plaintiff and the Tracy Engineering Company, from which it appears that the latter agreed to pay him for eight months' labor and work performed the sum of $1,826.08; that the sum of $201.81, and no more, had been paid thereon, leaving a balance unpaid of $1,624.27. This sum of $1,826.08 included the sum of $226.08 paid by plaintiff for transportation to and from New York, but it was as much a part of the compensation agreed to be paid to him under the terms of the contract as was the $200 per month. He claimed no lien for it as traveling expenses, but claimed a lien for the full amount on account of the labor and work performed by him pursuant to the terms of the contract, alleging said sum to be the reasonable value of the services performed, and the court so found. A different case would be presented if those who furnished the transportation were claiming, or seeking to enforce, a lien therefor.

[6] 3. Section 389, Code of Civil Procedure, provides that, "when a complete determination of the controversy cannot be had without the presence of other parties, the court must then order them to be brought in, and to that end may order amended and supplemental pleadings, or a cross-complaint to be filed, and summons thereon to be issued and served." It is claimed that at the time of the trial defendant had been adjudicated a bankrupt. Appellant insists that before proceeding with the trial, it was the duty of the court, as provided in said section 389, to make an order bringing in the trustee in bankruptcy as a party defendant. There is no pleading and nothing of record showing that defendant had been adjudicated a bankrupt, or that a trustee in bankruptcy had been appointed. Conceding, as claimed by appellant, that such fact appears from the minute entry made by the clerk, a copy of which is printed in the transcript, nevertheless, as heretofore stated, this minute entry is no part of the judgment roll, and cannot be considered upon this appeal for any purpose. Assuming as true, however, the alleged fact that defendant had been adjudicated a bankrupt subsequent to the filing of its answer, we are unable to perceive why the presence of the trustee was necessary to a complete determination of the controversy, since the action was merely to foreclose an existing lien held by plaintiff, there being no demand for a personal judgment.

[7] 4. Another alleged error assigned is the fact that the court decreed a foreclosure of the lien upon two separate and distinct pieces of property—the Orange Blossom Mine and the millsite. This contention is based upon section 1188, Code of Civil Procedure, which provided that: "In every case in which one claim is filed against two or more buildings, mining claims, or other improvements owned by the same person, the person filing such claim must at the same time designate the amount due to him on each of such buildings, mining claims, or other improvements; otherwise the lien of such claim is postponed to other liens. The lien of such claimant does not extend beyond the amount designated, as against other creditors having liens * * * upon the land upon which the same are situated." As appears here, the improvements made by the Tracy Engineering Company upon both the mine and millsite constituted one plant, and for which the defendant agreed to pay the gross sum specified in the contract for the construction of the same as a whole. The work done and performed by plaintiff was under and by virtue of one contract for the performance of labor upon the entire work, and therefore it was impossible to designate the amount due to plaintiff for work and labor performed upon each of such properties; and, hence, nothing could be due him upon each thereof. His claim was upon the entire plant covering all the improvements. Southern Cal. Lumber Co. v. Peters, 3 Cal. App. 478, 86 Pac. 816.

[8] Moreover, even if this was not true, and conceding the work was done upon distinct and separate properties under separate contracts, nevertheless, since there were no other lien claimants, whose rights could be affected, it was not a matter which concerned defendant as owner of the property, and hence, in no event, has it a cause for complaint. Booth v. Pendola, 88 Cal. 36, 23 Pac. 200, 25 Pac. 1101; Dickenson v. Bolyer, 55 Cal. 285.

[9] 5. It is finally contended that plaintiff could have no lien upon the property for work and labor performed in the construction of the plant so contracted to be erected upon the property by the Tracy Engineering Company, for the reason that said work and labor was done and performed as foreman. The complaint states a cause of action, and, among other things, alleges that plaintiff in the capacity of foreman performed eight months' labor in the construction and installation of the power and milling plants, and that said work and labor was actually performed upon and entered into the construction of the same. Since the evidence is not before us, we must presume that it fully established the facts alleged in the complaint. This question was before the Supreme Court of Nevada (Capron v. Strout, 11 Nev. 310), and the court there said, Beatty, Judge, writing the opinion: "It is argued that the intention of the law was to secure those only who perform labor upon the mine with their hands; that to give it a wider construction, one that will make it include the wages of a foreman like Stuart, will make it cover the case of a general superintendent and other officers of a corporation, and thereby impair the remedy of those who are the special objects of the legislative care. * * * According to the findings, he certainly did work in the mine, though not with his hands, and it is clear that the direct tendency of his work was to develop the property. We think the foreman of work in the mine is as fully secured by the law as the miners who work under his direction." To the same effect is Cullins v. Mining Company, 2 Utah, 219, which is affirmed in same case, 104 U. S. 176, 26 L. Ed. 704. These cases were decided under statutes almost identical with section 1183, Code of Civil Procedure. See, also, Palmer v. Uncas Mining Co., 70 Cal. 614, 11 Pac. 666; Williams v. Hawley, 144 Cal. 97, 77 Pac. 762; Pendergast v. Yandes, 124 Ind. 159, 24 N. E. 724, 8 L. R. A. 849.

Appellant directs our attention to no ground justifying a reversal of the judgment. It is therefore affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; JAMES, J.

16 Cal. App. 169

PEOPLE ex rel. ESCALLE v. TOWN OF LARKSPUR. (Civ. 820).†

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California, May 5, 1911. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court July 3, 1911.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 914*)—REVIEW—PRESUMPTIONS.

Municipal Incorporation Act March 13, 1883 (St. 1883, p. 93) § 2, as amended by St.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

†For opinion on rehearing, see 116 Pac. 706.

1889, p. 371, provides that a petition for incorporation shall be presented at a regular meeting of the county board of supervisors and shall be published at least two weeks before presentation. A petition for the incorporation of a town was filed with the clerk of the board at a regular meeting and was reported to the board as having been received. The petition, together with a notice that it would be presented at the regular meeting of the board on a designated future date, was duly published, and the petition was then presented and favorably acted on. It did not appear by whom or on whose order the petition was published. Held, that the court on appeal in quo warranto must assume that the publication was under proper authority.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3693-3698; Dec. Dig. § 914.*]

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 12*)—INCORPORATION—HEARING OF PETITION—ADJOURNMENT—STATUTES.

The provision in Municipal Incorporation Act March 13, 1883 (St. 1883, p. 93) § 2, as amended by St. 1889, p. 371, providing that the board of supervisors may adjourn the hearing of a petition for incorporation from time to time, not exceeding two months, is not mandatory, and an adjournment from day to day because of unavoidable circumstances is a mere continuation of the regular meeting, and the action of the board receiving a petition on November 4th in continuing the hearing from time to time until January 13th, at which time the board granted the petition, did not invalidate the proceedings; the adjournment not being for an unreasonable period and being presumptively for a good cause.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 22; Dec. Dig. § 12.*]

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 12*)—INCORPORATION—ELECTIONS—IRREGULARITIES.

Where a majority of the electors entitled to vote voted for the incorporation of a town, a violation of the statute regulating elections did not invalidate the election, in the absence of a statutory provision expressly declaring that a failure to comply with the statute shall render the election void.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 28; Dec. Dig. § 12.*]

4. ELECTIONS (§ 291*)—VALIDITY—BURDEN OF PROOF.

Where the statute regulating elections has been violated because of a shortening of the hours of election fixed by statute, the presumption is that the violation affected the result, and the party seeking to uphold the election must show affirmatively that it has not.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Elections, Cent. Dig. § 286; Dec. Dig. § 291.*]

5. QUO WARRANTO (§ 61*)—JUDGMENT—CONCLUSIVENESS.

Where, in quo warranto to test the legality of the incorporation of a town, the court, at the instance of both parties, inquired into the facts as to the validity of the election resulting in favor of incorporation, and determined them, both parties must abide by the determination supported by the evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Quo Warranto, Cent. Dig. § 72; Dec. Dig. § 61.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Marin County; Thos. J. Lennon, Judge.

Quo warranto by the State, on the relation of J. Escalle, against the Town of Larkspur. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Henry B. Lister, for appellant. Lucius L. Solomons, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. This is an action in quo warranto calling upon the corporation of the town of Larkspur to show cause for the exercise of the franchise under which it is acting, failing in which that an ouster be decreed. The defendant had judgment, from which plaintiff appeals.

It is alleged in the amended complaint: That the town of Larkspur is and has been, since March 2, 1908, a de facto (but not a de jure) municipal corporation, claimed to be a legally organized municipal corporation, by virtue of certain proceedings taken under the municipal incorporation act approved March 13, 1883 (St. 1883, p. 93), and amendments thereto, and by virtue of certain articles or an order of incorporation issued by the board of supervisors of the county of Marin and filed in the office of the Secretary of State, and that certain trustees have been elected and are now pretending to be the officers of said de facto municipal corporation and ever since said 2d day of March, 1908, "have usurped and intruded upon and municipally exercised the following franchise, to wit: That of assessing, levying, and collecting municipal taxes and exercising municipal and governmental control over the following described premises and real estate lying and being in the county of Marin, state of California, bounded and described as follows." Then follow the boundaries of the territory included within the limits of the said town. That the "same is now and during all said times was within the jurisdiction of and subject to be governed by the board of supervisors of said Marin county, and was in truth and in fact not incorporated for municipal purposes, and the said territory is in truth and in fact not municipal territory."

It is not necessary to set out the averments of the complaint and answer. The court, in its findings, deals with the issues in a way to make clear the controverted questions.

The court found: (1) That the facts alleged in the complaint relating to the claim of defendant to be a de facto corporation and exercising municipal franchises as such were true. (2) That the board of supervisors, on March 2, 1908, passed an order declaring the territory, described in the complaint, to be a municipal corporation. (3) And on said day said order was filed in the office of the Secretary of State. (4) That relator was at all times a qualified elector in said territory. (5) That on October 7, 1907, a petition for the incorporation of said municipal corporation was filed with the clerk of the board, at a regular meeting and "by said clerk reported at said meeting to said board of supervisors as having been received." But (6) the said petition, at the time it was so filed, had not been published in any newspaper. (7) That on October 10, 1907, said petition was published in a newspaper published in said county, together with a notice that the same would be presented to the board at its regular meeting to be held November 4, 1907, and the said publication of said petition and notice was made continuously for more than two weeks next preceding said last-named date. (8) That on said last-named date said petition was presented to said board at a regular meeting held on said day "and was received by them and the hearing thereof continued from time to time; and on the 6th day of January, 1908, the said day being the regular monthly meeting of the said board of supervisors, the said petition was again taken up and considered and continued from time to time until the 13th day of January, 1908, the said board in the meantime adjourned its regular monthly meeting from day to day to and including the said 13th day of January, 1908, on which said day said board of supervisors granted said petition and made an order of election in the words and figures following, to wit." Then follows a very full recital of the proceedings had up to that time, which need not be stated, as the legality of the procedure is questioned only in a few particulars which will be shown. It is recited that the petition "was duly published for two weeks before the time at which the same was presented as aforesaid, in the Tocsin of San Rafael, a newspaper published and printed in said Marin county, together with a notice stating the time of the meeting at which the same would be presented, to wit, the said 4th day of November, 1907. And whereas, upon such petition being so presented this board proceeded to hear the same and did adjourn such meeting from time to time and upon the final hearing thereof, to wit, at the regular meeting of this board on the 13th day of January, 1908, did," etc. It was also ordered that the clerk give notice of an election to be held February 27, 1908, prescribing the purpose of the election and the form and substance of the notice, said election to be conducted in accordance with the general election laws of the state and directing that the polls "shall be open at six o'clock of the morning of February 27, 1908, and shall be kept open until five o'clock of the same day when the polls shall be closed." (9) That said board provided that the polls should be opened as in said order stated. (10) That the polls did in fact close at 5 p. m., in accordance with the notice of election, without other reason than that the order so provided. (11) That the polls did not open at 6 o'clock a. m. and in fact were not open until the hour of 8:30 o'clock a. m. and remained open only 8½ hours instead of 12 hours as provided by law. (12) That the regular printed ballots did not arrive at the polls until 8:30 o'clock a. m., and that prior thereto 12 votes were cast by ballots entirely written by hand, and all said 12 votes were marked "for incorporation" and counted as valid ballots for incorporation. (13) That in said territory there were 297 persons whose names were duly enrolled upon the great register, "all of whom had at some time lived in said territory prior to the 28th day of December, 1908." Out of said 297, there were 276 "who were still living and whose names had not been canceled or erased from said register at the time of said election." (14) That the total vote cast was 147, of which there were 10 not voting on the question of incorporation. Of these 147 there were 36 ballots cast against incorporation and 101 for incorporation; but of these latter 12 were cast upon ballots written wholly by hand, as hereinabove set forth. (15) That the said board thereafter held an official canvass of the ballots, and made a finding that 147 votes had been cast and that 101 of said votes were for incorporation and 65 against incorporation, and upon said finding declared the said town of Larkspur and the said territory to be duly incorporated, and said order was subsequently filed with the Secretary of State. (16) That, between the hours of 6 o'clock a. m. and 8:30 o'clock a. m. on the day of the election, "a number of the qualified electors of the district appeared at the polls and demanded the right to vote and were refused because there were no ballots with which to vote." (17) That, between the hours of 5 o'clock p. m. and 6 o'clock p. m. of said day, "a number of qualified electors appeared at the polls for the purpose of casting their ballots and found the same closed. That all of said electors worked outside the territory hereinabove set forth, and some of them would have voted against incorporation." (18) That the following-named persons whose names appeared on the great register as above set forth were dead at the time of the election, naming four. That 17, naming them, had removed their residence from the said district prior to the election and their names had been canceled upon the great register. That 85, naming them, "had removed their residence from the said district prior to said election, never having returned thereto, but having left with the intention of abandoning their respective residences in said district, and have ever since resided outside thereof." That 10, naming them, legally qualified to vote at said election, refrained from voting thereat by reason of indifference or physical inability to attend at the polls, but were not in any way prevented from voting by reason of the hours of opening and closing the said polls. (19) That on March 2, 1908, at the regular meeting of the board, an order was unanimously adopted by said board declaring that a majority of the ballots at said election had been cast in favor of incorporation and that said territory was duly incorporated as a municipal corporation of the sixth class. (20) "That if the polls had been opened at 6 o'clock a. m. and closed at 6 o'clock p. m. and remained open during said interval on the day of said election, and all who were residents of the territory named for the said period of 60 days and who wished to vote had voted, the result of said election would have been in favor of the incorporation of the said territory by a majority of the ballots cast." (21) "That the total number of those who appeared at the polls between the hours of 6 o'clock a. m. and 8:30 o'clock a. m. and demanded the right to vote and were refused and did not vote at said election, added to the total number of those who appeared thereat between the hours of 5 o'clock and 6 o'clock p. m., and were unable to vote did not exceed in the aggregate thirty persons."

As conclusions of law the court found that defendant was entitled to judgment that said town of Larkspur "is a municipal incorporation of the sixth class lawfully exercising the functions imposed by law upon such municipal incorporations."

Plaintiff excepted to the decision on the ground of the insufficiency of evidence to sustain the findings of fact, and the plaintiff now specifies all that portion of the eighteenth finding which states "that certain named persons had removed from the district prior to said election, to wit, the following persons," specifying certain 41 names. The bill of exceptions states: "The following testimony was taken in connection with that portion of the eighteenth finding of fact by the plaintiff hereinafter excepted to." No testimony or other evidence is brought up except such as bore upon these 41 names. The only other specification is "that the findings of fact do not support the conclusions of law nor do they support the judgment." Let us, then, notice the points made in the briefs.

[1] 1. It is contended that after the petition was presented to the board it was too late to have publication made of the hearing. It appears from the findings that it was filed with the clerk on October 7, 1907, at a regular meeting of the board, and was reported to the board by the clerk as having been received. It does not appear by whose order or request it was published; but the court found that it was duly published, together with a notice that it would be presented at the regular meeting of the board to be held November 4, 1907, and it was then presented. Section 2 of the act of 1883, as amended by the act of 1889 (Stats. 1889, p. 371), provides, among other things, that: "Such petition shall be presented at a regular meeting of such board, and shall be published for at least two weeks before the same is to be presented. * * * When such petition is presented, the board of supervisors shall hear the same, and may adjourn such hearing from time to time, not exceeding two months in all," etc. In People v. Town of Linden, 107 Cal. 94, 40 Pac. 115, it was held that the publication of the petition by the petitioners was warranted by the statute. The record does not show by whom or upon whose order the petition was published. It was received by the clerk, and the board was so advised; but it was not presented to the board for action until after its due publication. We must assume that the publication was under proper authority, and, as it was not presented to the board for action until after due publication, we find no such irregularity in the proceeding as would invalidate the action of the board.

[2] 2. It is next contended that the board lost jurisdiction by failure to act upon the petition within two months from the time of its presentation, as required by section 2 of the act of 1883 as amended in 1889 (Stats. 1889, p. 371). The findings are that the petition was received by the board November 4, 1907, and the hearing thereof continued from time to time; and on the 6th day of January, 1908, at a regular monthly meeting, it came up again for hearing "and was taken up and considered and continued from time to time until the 12th day of January, 1908. The said board in the meantime adjourned its said regular monthly meeting from day to day to and including the said 13th day of January, 1908, on which said day said board granted the said petition," etc. The statute reads: "May adjourn such hearing from time to time not exceeding two months." The final hearing was had and the order made two months and one week after the 4th day of November, when the petition was presented. We do not regard the statute as mandatory. Unavoidable circumstances may have arisen making it imperative to adjourn the hearing from day to day. Such an adjournment was a continuation of the regular meeting. It is stated by respondent that "the action of the supervisors in adjourning the hearing was evidently done out of abundance of caution by reason of the fact that so-called legal holidays were being declared from day to day by the Governor at that time." The adjournment was not for an unreasonable period, and we must presume it was for good cause.

[3] 3. The validity of the election is challenged because the notice of election and the election itself did not comply with the law. The findings show a violation of the statute, but did it necessarily invalidate the election? Let us see what facts are found. There were 276 registered voters. Of these, 119 were eliminated by the court's findings, the correctness of which is not challenged, except as to 41 whom we shall show that the court was authorized to include among the 119. There were thus 157 registered voters qualified to vote. Of these, 10, through no fault of the board, did not appear at the polls, leaving 147 voters. Of these latter, 101 voted for incorporation, and 36 voted against incorporation, making a majority of 65 for incorporation. If we take from these the 12 written ballots, the majority is reduced to 53. The court found that there were not to exceed 30 who were deprived of their votes by reason of the short hours of the election. Deducting these, on the assumption that they would have voted against incorporation, we still have 23 majority. Again, there were 147 electors who voted. After deducting the 12 written ballots from the 101 cast for incorporation, there remained 89 for incorporation, which is a clear majority over the entire number of voters. So that, in any view of the facts, the expression at the polls showed that a majority of all the electors, who were entitled to vote, was in favor of incorporation. We are next to inquire whether, in such a case, the will of the majority is to be set aside on the ground now urged. We think the principles enunciated in the well-considered case of Kenworthy v. Mast, 141 Cal. 268, 74 Pac. 841, are decisive of the question.

[4] The general rule laid down in McCrary on Elections, § 165, is quoted approvingly, namely, that where there is no statutory provision expressly declaring that a failure, in the respect now being considered, shall render the election void, it will be regarded as directory only, and that, unless the deviation from the legal hours has affected the result, it will be disregarded, but that if such deviation is great, or even considerable, the presumption will be that it has affected the result, and the burden will be upon him who seeks to uphold the election to show affirmatively that it has not. That burden was successfully borne in the present case.

[5] 4. It is said that the finding of the board that there were 147 votes cast at the election, of which 101 were for incorporation and 65 against incorporation, "is certainly void for impossibility." Doubtless the entry was a clerical error, by confusing the majority for incorporation (65) with the vote cast against incorporation (36).

However, at the instance of both parties the court inquired into the facts and determined them, and both must abide by the result of the evidence.

5. It is urged that there is no evidence to support the eighteenth finding as to certain 41 names once on the great register. We have examined the testimony and find abundant evidence to warrant the finding. The testimony introduced by plaintiff was hardly sufficient to raise a conflict—certainly not as to most of the names.

We discover no error in the record.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: HART, J.; BURNETT, J.

16 Cal. App. 169

PEOPLE ex rel. ESCALTE v. TOWN OF LARKSPUR. (S. F. 5,448.)
(Supreme Court of California. July 6, 1911.)

In Bank. On rehearing.

For opinion on hearing in District Court of Appeal, see 116 Pac. 702.

PER CURIAM. Rehearing denied.

BEATTY, C. J. I dissent from the order denying a rehearing of this cause.

The electors of the territory claiming to be a corporation having been deprived by the misconduct of the election board of the opportunity of casting their votes which the law is intended to secure to them, the onus of proving that the result of the election would have been the same if the law had been strictly complied with was on the defendant. This proof the defendant undertook to make by showing that from the total number of registered voters within the territory affected (viz., 297) there must be deducted 4 who had died, 17 whose registry had been canceled, 86 removed from the territory, 10 who had voted but had not voted on the question of incorporation, and 10 who were indifferent and would not have voted under any circumstances, a total of 127, leaving but 170 electors to be considered, of whom 89—a majority—voted in favor of the incorporation. But conceding that the statute is not mandatory in respect to the hours during which the polls must be kept open (a proposition by no means clearly established), and that all of the 86 supposed removals were fully proven (a point vigorously contested by the appellant), and fully conceding the propriety of deducting the number of deceased electors, the number of canceled registrations, and the number of those voting but failing to vote for or against incorporation, it is still necessary to maintain that it was proper to exclude also the 10 voters who are said to have been so indifferent to the result that they would not have taken the trouble to vote if the polls had been kept open all day. For including them there would have been 180 electors to be considered, and of that number 89 is not a majority. Now there is in my opinion a very grave objection to making a precedent applicable to all special elections hereafter to be held, which, in case of a close contest, where the electors have been deprived by the misconduct of the election officers of a fair opportunity to cast their votes, will enable interested parties to give validity to the result of the canvass by inducing a small number of electors, who have not voted, to say that they would not have voted if the law had been complied with. Such a doctrine is subversive of the policy of the secret ballot, the aim of which is to take away all temptation to the use of bribery, and all effective means of coercive influence. Under its operation a bribe giver can never know that the goods will be delivered, and one who is dependent upon the good will or forbearance of another for his livelihood may safely disregard the demands of his employer in casting his vote. But an elector who is willing to accept a bribe to vote either way upon a given proposition would be very likely to forego the privilege of voting in the absence of any inducement to vote in a particular way, and after the election could be very easily induced to swear that he had never desired to vote, and—what is a much more serious evil—an elector who had been deprived of the opportunity of voting against a proposal might after the election be put to the alternative of risking the support of his family, or of swearing that he had never desired to vote. To preserve the integrity of the secret ballot against such practices as the doctrine of this case will sanction is vastly more important, in my opinion, than the validation of a municipal charter brought into existence by such dubious practices. If the people of Larkspur desire a charter, they can easily secure it by complying with the law.

I concur: SLOSS, J.

16 Cal. App. 198

LUITWEILER PUMPING ENGINE CO. v. UKIAH WATER & IMPROVEMENT CO. (Civ. 816.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California, May 9, 1911. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court July 8, 1911.)

1. SALES (§ 120*) — MACHINERY — IMPLIED WARRANTY—BREACH.

Where defendant purchased a pump from plaintiff after fully explaining all the requirements and plaintiff assured defendant that the pump would operate without pulsation, jar, or water hammer in the pipes as required, and, when installed, the pump would not carry a constant load and deliver water without pulsation, but caused water hammer in the pipes and was not reasonably fit for the purpose intended, there being a breach of both an express and implied warranty contemplated by Civ. Code, §§ 1763-1766, 1770, and 1786, and, there being evidence justifying a reasonable inference that it was intended that such warranties should be regarded as a condition precedent to the sale, defendant was entitled to rescind and recover the money paid.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. § 294; Dec. Dig. § 120.*]

2. SALES (§ 261*)—"WARRANTY"—WHAT CONSTITUTES.

Any distinct assertion or affirmation by the seller as to the quality or character of the thing sold during negotiations which may reasonably be supposed is intended to induce the purchase and was relied on by the purchaser is a warranty, unless accompanied by an express statement that it is not intended as such.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 727-735; Dec. Dig. § 261.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 8, pp. 7396-7405; vol. 8, p. 7833.]

3. EVIDENCE (§ 410*) — PAROL EVIDENCE — WRITTEN CONTRACT.

Where reference was required to a series of conversations and correspondence between the parties to find all the terms of a contract for the sale of machinery, there was no written contract sufficient to preclude the admission of parol evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 1846-1854; Dec. Dig. § 410.*]

4. EVIDENCE (§ 417*) — PAROL EVIDENCE — WRITTEN CONTRACT.

Whether a writing contains an entire agreement so as to exclude parol testimony is a question to be determined not merely from the face of the instrument, but from all the facts and circumstances connected with it, and is usually for the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 1874-1899; Dec. Dig. § 417.*]

5. CONTRACTS (§ 169*) — CONSTRUCTION — EXTRINSIC CIRCUMSTANCES.

While parol evidence is inadmissible to contradict or vary a written agreement, the court may look, not only to the correspondence evidencing the transaction, but to the subject-matter of the agreement and to the surrounding circumstances to be placed as nearly as practicable in the position in which the contracting parties were when they made the contract in order to ascertain their intention.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. § 752; Dec. Dig. § 169.*]

6. SALES (§ 126*)—BREACH OF WARRANTY—RESCISSION—TIME.

A buyer's retention of a pump and use thereof beyond the stipulated time was not a waiver of a right to rescind where the pump was retained and used at the instance of the seller or to enable the seller to remedy the defects.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 313-317; Dec. Dig. § 126.*]

7. SALES (§ 442*) — WARRANTY—BREACH—DAMAGES.

Damages recoverable for breach of warranty of machinery purchased for a specific purpose are not confined to the difference between the value of the machinery as warranted and as proved to be, but includes such consequential damages as are the immediate and probable result of the breach.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 1284-1301; Dec. Dig. § 442.*]

8. SALES (§ 447*)—WARRANTY—BREACH—DAMAGES—FINDINGS.

Where, in an action for the price of pumping machinery, defendant pleaded a rescission for breach of warranty which the court sustained, and found that defendant's damage was the amount paid on the purchase price and the freight, such finding was not inconsistent with a further finding that defendant had not sustained damages in the erection and operation of the pump or otherwise, or in any other sum, since it should be construed to refer to consequential damages only.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. § 1318; Dec. Dig. § 447.*]

9. EVIDENCE (§ 539*)—EXPERTS—COMPETENCY.

A witness, who was superintendent of defendant's waterworks, was familiar with the system, and had been directing its operation for more than two years, was properly allowed to state whether such system required a pump that would not produce water hammer in the pipes.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 2349-2352; Dec. Dig. § 539.*]

10. SALES (§ 291*)—WARRANTY—BREACH—RESCISSION—RECOVERY OF PRICE PAID.

On breach of a warranty of the fitness of a pump to satisfy defendant's requirements, defendant, having rescinded and tendered a return of the pump to plaintiff, was entitled to a return of a part of the price paid without proof of an agreement to repay.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 1110-1127; Dec. Dig. § 391.*]

11. EVIDENCE (§ 151*)—STATE OF MIND—RELIANCE.

Where, during negotiations for the purchase of a pump, plaintiff produced a catalogue containing statements with reference to the operation of the pump purchased, and, after underscoring certain of the representations, wrote defendant that no written warranty was required because defendant was bound by the representations in the catalogue, evidence that defendant's president in purchasing the pump relied on the representations in the catalogue was admissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 440; Dec. Dig. § 151.*]

12. EVIDENCE (§ 594*)—WEIGHT—CONCLUSIVENESS.

Where defendant claimed breach of warranty in the sale of a pump, the evidence of defendant's president that he relied on the representations in plaintiff's catalogue was not conclusive of such fact, but should be considered with the other facts and circumstances in the case.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 2431; Dec. Dig. § 594.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Mendocino County; J. Q. White, Judge.

Action by the Luitweiler Pumping Engine Company against the Ukiah Water & Improvement Company. From an order denying plaintiff's motion for new trial, it appeals. Affirmed.

Rehearing denied in Supreme Court (116 Pac. 712).

J. E. Pemberton and Thomas & Thomas, for appellant. Robert E. Duncan, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The action was brought to recover $600 as a balance due on the purchase price of a pump. The defense is a breach of warranty. It is claimed that the pump was totally unfit for the purpose for which it was procured, and that the representations made concerning it by plaintiff and upon which defendant relied were false. An offer to return the pump was also pleaded and a demand was made for the return of $1,000 which had been paid by defendant on account. Plaintiff appeals from the order denying its motion for a new trial.

There is evidence to justify the following statement of facts, which we make substantially in the language of respondent, some of which, indeed, are not disputed: The appellant was engaged in the manufacture and sale of pumps and pumping machinery, having its principal place of business in Los Angeles. S. W. Luitweiler was the president of the company. The respondent was the owner of a water system which supplies the city of Ukiah and its inhabitants with water and J. H. Brush of Santa Rosa was the president, and his son, Irving H. Brush, was the secretary and general manager of the company. One C. H. Dwinell was the agent of appellant for the purpose of selling or soliciting orders for its pumps and pumping machinery. Early in the year 1907 Mr. Dwinell called upon Mr. J. H. Brush at Santa Rosa, and recommended the purchase of a pump from appellant. Certain correspondence was then had between Mr. Brush and the pumping company, and thereupon Mr. Luitweiler, the president thereof, paid a personal visit to Mr. Brush at Santa Rosa, and the latter explained in detail the character and situation of the plant and the workings and operation of the water system in Ukiah. Among other facts, it was stated that the water was pumped directly through the mains of the city from which the inhabitants and the city were supplied, and he exhibited to him a map and plan of the whole system. Mr. Brush also impressed upon Mr. Luitweiler the difficulties of pumping under the conditions there and told him that the Simmons Saw Company had put in one of their pumps and that it had utterly failed to do the work. He stated to Mr. Luitweiler that it was necessary to have a pump that would be steady in its operation, that would throw a stream without pulsation, and that would have no jar or vibration or water hammer in the pipes. Mr. Luitweiler had one of his catalogues with him which he exhibited to Mr. Brush, and he pointed out certain statements therein, and he underscored the same with ink, and he assured Mr. Brush that he could supply him with a pump that would meet all the requirements and he left the catalogue with him. Later there was considerable correspondence in regard to the matter; Mr. Brush and his son requesting information as to the capacity of their pumps, and also furnishing information concerning the needs of the situation at Ukiah. This correspondence was begun in February, 1907. On April 19, 1907, respondent gave an order for a certain sized pump, and it was agreed that respondent should have the privilege of testing the same for a period of 10 days after it was placed in operation. The pump was not shipped until May 29, 1907. When it arrived, it was discovered that it could not be placed in the old well of the water company so that a new well was dug within a few feet of the old where the conditions were similar. On account of the necessary delay, the pump was not put into operation until about the middle of October, 1907. In the meantime quite a number of letters passed between the parties, the pumping company insisting upon payment and the water company replying that it had not yet had time to test the pump and also insisting upon a written guaranty. On the day that the pump was first operated Mr. Brush sent to the pumping company a check for $1,000, stating in his letter that he had seen the pump run for about two hours just before dark, but could not tell what it would do when limbered up, that there were some changes to be made, and they were to send him the directions for the same, but had not done so. Mr. Brush in his testimony declares that he sent the check because he supposed the pump, when certain changes were made, would do the work and he felt safe in sending the money.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

In one of the letters written by the pump company, on August 28, 1907, occurs this passage: "Mr. Dwinell writes us that you have not put the pumping engine into use, but that you are putting down a new well and having bad luck with it, and also that you have not paid us because you have no guaranty. We want to call your attention to the fact that we are bound by the statements in our catalogue and as to our guaranty you have on page 39 all facts stated in the catalogue and no other guaranty is required." Among the qualities which Mr. Luitweiler claimed the pump possessed and which were underscored in the catalogue in his conversation with Mr. Brush and referred to in his letter are the following: "It is the only pump that has a constant load. It delivers water without pulsation. Luitweiler pumps are balanced. They have no water hammer in pipes. They have no jar or vibration." When in operation, it was found that the pump would not do the work required and that it did not possess the qualities that were claimed for it. In support of this certain facts appear in the reported testimony of witnesses for defendant, and it is furthermore recited in the transcript that "the defendant produced the engineers who had charge of the operation of said Luitweiler pump, and Mr. I. H. Brush, the secretary of defendant corporation, who testified that the Luitweiler pump delivered a pulsating stream when pumping water out on the ground directly from the pump without being connected with the water mains, and that there was great jar and vibration in the pipes during the operation of said pump. The engineers further testified that in their opinion the Luitweiler pump was entirely unfit for use in the Ukiah water system, and that the faulty working of the pump and delivery of water thereby was caused by the imperfect construction of the pump." The pumping company was notified of the various defects in the pump and there was much correspondence between the two companies, the pumping company suggesting various methods to overcome the defects. The suggestions were adopted, but without success, and the water company finally demanded of appellant that it send some one of its engineers to see if he could make it work. This was declined unless the water company would send $75 to defray his expenses, the same to be at the cost of the water company if the defect was the fault of installation, and to be at the cost of the pumping company if the defect was in the pump. Mr. Brush did not answer this letter. The water company used the pump for about three months. Very shortly after putting it in operation, however, Mr. Brush verbally offered to return the pump and requested the money to be paid back. Later on, after the commencement of this suit, and at the suggestion of his counsel, the same offer was made again in writing. The delay and continued use of the pump were due to the hope that the difficulties might be overcome and the pump so adjusted that it would do the work.

None of the officers of the water company had ever seen one of these Luitweiler pumps, and never had an opportunity to see one. They knew nothing about its construction, and were compelled to rely and did rely upon the assurance and representations made by the pumping company and its officers that the pump would do the work demanded by the system of Ukiah, and that it had the qualities represented in the catalogue and underscored by Mr. Luitweiler. We must conclude, also, from the record that respondent's officers were acting in perfect good faith, that they made no misrepresentations, practiced no deceit, and made a genuine effort to operate the pump successfully. In accordance with the foregoing facts and inferences, which are fully warranted by the evidence, the court found: "That said defendant fully informed said plaintiff in regard to said water system, and what would be required of said pump, and the said plaintiff warranted the said defendant that said pump was reasonably fit for said purpose; that the said plaintiff further represented and warranted said defendant that said pump in operation carried a constant load in the delivery of water, and would deliver water without pulsation, and that said pump had and would have no vibration or jar; * * * that said defendant relied upon all of said representations made by said plaintiff; that said plaintiff agreed to deliver said pump to said defendant for the sum of $1,600, and further agreed that the said defendant should have the right and privilege to test said pump before paying for the same in order to determine whether or not the said representations and warranties made by said plaintiff were true, and whether or not said pump was reasonably fit for the purpose required by said defendant; that said defendant tested the same during the month of October, 1907; that each and all of the representations and warranties hereinbefore set forth and made by said plaintiff to said defendant were false; that said pump did not and would not carry a constant load, and would not deliver water without pulsation, said pump had or caused water hammer in pipes and there was extraordinary jar and vibration when said pump was in operation; that said pump was entirely unfit for the purpose for which it was ordered, and for which it was used and to be used." Then follow the findings that defendant notified plaintiff of the foregoing facts, and that it held said pump for plaintiff, and that prior to the testing of the pump and before it had knowledge of its defects respondent paid $1,000 on account and that said defendant had demanded the return of said sum but that no part of it had been paid.

Is there any consideration of good morals or any provision of the statute or decision of the Supreme Court that would preclude the trial judge from reaching a conclusion from the foregoing facts that respondent was entitled to the relief claimed in its answer and counterclaim? There is certainly nothing unconscionable in the inference from the established facts that defendant should be restored to its former condition. As far as it can be avoided, the innocent should not, of course, suffer for the wrongdoing of another in whom confidence has been misplaced.

[1] Under the view of the evidence taken by the trial court, we find also a breach of warranty, both express and implied, as contemplated by sections 1763-1766 and 1770 of the Civil Code. The court was justified in concluding that there were latent defects in the pump, that it was not "reasonably fit for the purpose" for which it was bought, and especially that there was a violation of the express warranty by which the seller assured to the buyer certain facts and qualities of commanding importance to the latter. There was also reasonable ground for the inference that it was intended by the parties that these warranties should be regarded as a condition precedent to the sale, and therefore rescission was proper. Section 1786, Civ. Code.

Turning to some of the cases, we find, in Polhemus v. Heiman, 45 Cal. 573, that the action was brought to recover the balance of the purchase price for a large quantity of wool. It was held that there was an express warranty that the wool should not be in an unmerchantable condition by reason of dirt and burs and that the account returned by the defendant, after the wool was received, would not necessarily defeat the claim for damages, the court saying that: "If made with a knowledge of the alleged defects, it would be evidence only tending to show that the wool when accepted met the requirements of the contract, and that the present claim is an afterthought to avoid payment. If, however, the account was made in ignorance of the true condition of the wool, the defendants would not thereby be prevented from obtaining any relief which they would otherwise have been entitled to."

In Hoult v. Baldwin, 67 Cal. 610, 8 Pac. 440, the action was to recover the purchase price of a harvesting machine. When the machine arrived at the railway station nearest to defendant's ranch, it was carefully taken from the car and the detached parts were put together. An attempt was then made to haul it away, but before it had gone more than 40 or 50 feet from the depot, upon a dry, hard and level road, a part of the machinery broke so that the harvester could be moved no further. A telegram was immediately sent to the plaintiffs, notifying them of the break, and they at once forwarded a duplicate casting to take the place of the broken one. The new casting was put in place and another effort was made to haul the machinery to the ranch, but, before it had gone many feet, the new casting also broke. The defendant then declined to accept the machine, and offered to return it to the plaintiffs. The Supreme Court declared that, "Having taken the machine under a warranty, whether it be that expressed in the writing or provided by the Code or both, the defendant had the right, if there was a breach of the warranty, that is, if in any respect the machine was not what it was warranted to be, to rescind the sale by returning or offering to return it to the plaintiff."

In Fox v. Harvester, etc., Works, 83 Cal. 333, 23 Pac. 295, it was held that it was proper to submit to the jury whether certain representations made in reference to the working of a harvesting machine were intended as warranties; the complaint being broad enough to include such warranties.

[2] The rule, indeed, seems to be well settled that "any distinct assertion or affirmation as to the quality or character of the thing to be sold, made by the seller during the negotiations for the sale, which it may reasonably be supposed was intended to induce the purchase and was relied on by the purchaser, will be regarded as a warranty unless accompanied by an express statement that it is not intended as such." 30 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, p. 136. And it seems that the general tendency of the later authorities is to construe liberally in favor of the buyer language used by the seller in making affirmations respecting the quality of his goods and to treat such affirmations as warranties when such an inference is at all reasonable. Id. p. 138. There is a very great difference between the positive affirmation of the qualities already referred to and the mere expression of an opinion upon a matter about which the buyer is supposed to exercise his own judgment. Applying the test generally recognized by the authorities, it must be held here that the representations made by the seller were of facts upon which it may be fairly presumed the seller expected the buyer to rely and upon which a buyer would ordinarily rely, and, indeed, the evidence shows that the buyer actually did rely upon the representations. Undoubtedly, therefore, they operated to create a warranty.

The specific objections of appellant to the action of the trial court, to which some further consideration may be devoted, are as follows: (1) All previous oral conversation and negotiations are deemed merged in the written contract and therefore the conversation between the presidents of the two companies was improperly admitted in evidence. (2) If the testimony of oral statements had been admissible, they proved no warranty. (3) No attempt at rescission of contract was made until after suit was begun, which was certainly entirely too late. (4) A purchaser relying on a warranty and a right to rescind thereunder must act promptly on discovery of the breach. (5) One cannot rescind for an immaterial breach of a warranty; i. e., one not causing any damage. The court expressly found that defendant suffered no damage whatever. (6) Incompetent expert evidence was admitted. (7) There is no evidence to support the finding that "said payment of $1,000 was made with the understanding that the same was to be repaid to said defendant in case said representations and warranties were untrue or said pump was unfit for the purpose for which it was intended." (8) J. H. Brush was improperly allowed to testify that he relied upon the representations in plaintiff's catalogue.

[3] No doubt the rule of law as to oral negotiations is properly stated by appellant. Section 1625, Civ. Code. We think, however, it has no application here. There was no formal contract entered into between the parties. After the negotiations and correspondence to which we have already referred, the pump was finally ordered by letter. It is as plain as anything can be that you must look through the record of conversations and correspondence to find all the terms of the contract. The language of the court in Kreuzberger v. Wingfield, 96 Cal. 251, 31 Pac. 109, is therefore in point, wherein it is said: "The rule is, of course, a familiar and salutary one, that, when a contract has been reduced to writing, parol evidence is not admissible for the purpose of cutting down or adding to its terms, but in order for the rule to have any application, the writing must be one which, by legal construction, shows upon its face it was intended to express the whole contract between the parties." The case here in this regard is also quite similar to Snyder v. Holt Manufacturing Co., 134 Cal. 324, 66 Pac. 311, wherein it is held that it was proper for the trial court to allow testimony as "to previous negotiations," they being a part of the surrounding circumstances necessary to explain the contract. Section 1647, Civ. Code.

[4] Whether the writing contains the entire agreement is a question to be determined not merely from the face of the instrument, but from all the facts and circumstances connected with it, and is usually for the jury. Ehrsam v. Brown, 64 Kan. 466, 67 Pac. 867.

[5] While parol evidence is not admissible to contradict or vary the written agreement, the court may look not only to the language of the correspondence evidencing that transaction, but also to the subject-matter of the agreement and the surrounding circumstances, in order to be placed, as nearly as practicable, in the position in which the contracting parties were when they entered into the agreement. Bagley, etc., Co. v. Saranac River Pulp, etc., Co., 135 N. Y. 626, 32 N. E. 132.

Of course no one familiar with elementary principles would for a moment contend that the foregoing rule would permit a new term to be added to a written contract containing in itself all the essentials of a complete agreement by resort to the antecedent oral negotiations of the parties.

What we have already stated covers the point as to the sufficiency of the oral testimony to establish the warranty. It may be added that, of course, the written and the oral testimony and the provisions of the statute must be considered together.

[6] The delay in the rescission of the contract has also been adverted to and was excusable for the reasons mentioned. "If the return of the machine warranted to do good work and found upon trial to be unfit for use is delayed at the request of the manufacturer, he thereby waives the right to require prompt delivery by the purchaser on discovery of the fact that it does not do the work guaranteed." Fox v. Stockton, etc., Works, supra. The buyer's retention and use of the article beyond the stipulated time will not operate as a waiver of the benefits of the warranty when it was at the instance of the seller or his agent or when it was for the purpose of giving the seller or his agent an opportunity to remedy defects. 30 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, p. 188.

Damage must, of course, be caused by the breach of the warranty to justify a recovery by the vendee. The contention of appellant as to this point is based upon the finding of the lower court "That it is not true that said defendant has sustained damages in the sum of four hundred dollars in the erection and operation of said pump or otherwise or in any other sum. And the court finds and decides that said defendant is not entitled to any damages by reason thereof." But this obviously refers to what is characterized as "consequential damages."

[7] The familiar rule is that the damages recoverable for the breach of warranty of machinery purchased for a known purpose are not confined to the difference between the machinery as warranted and as it proves to be, but include such consequential damages as are the direct, immediate, and probable result of the breach. New York, etc., Min. Syndicate, etc., v. Fraser, 130 U. S. 611, 9 Sup. Ct. 665, 32 L. Ed. 1031.

[8] Here the court found, as already indicated, that the damage was the amount paid on the purchase price together with the freight charges for the shipment of the pump to Ukiah. The findings are consistent as to the damages, but the court found against defendant as to its claim for injury caused by the operation of the pump.

[9] The court was justified in overruling the objection to the following question propounded to Irving Brush, the superintendent of the waterworks: "In your system is it necessary to have a pump that will not produce any water hammer in the pipes?" He was familiar with the system, he had been directing its operation for more than two years, and he was competent to answer the question. A careful observer for that period of time of the workings of the water plant would be in a position to state what the effect would be of this concussion in the pipes and the answer and explanation of the witness show that he was capable of enlightening the jury as to this somewhat technical consideration.

[10] There was no direct evidence to sustain the finding as to the understanding about the repayment of the thousand dollars, but the finding is not necessary to support the judgment as, from the other facts found, the law requires the return of the money. Indeed, the buyer has the choice of two remedies. He may return the article and sue for damages or rescind the contract and recover the amount of the purchase price paid. He may not pursue two inconsistent remedies. If he chooses to exercise the special remedy by returning the article to the seller, he is then confined to a recovery of the purchase money paid. Abraham v. Browder, 114 Ala. 287, 21 South. 818.

[11] It was proper to allow Mr. Brush to state that he relied upon the representations in plaintiff's catalogue. The question involved a very important circumstance and the buyer may be asked whether in buying he relied upon his own judgment or upon the seller's representations. Milwaukee Rice Machinery Co. v. Hamacek, 115 Wis. 422, 91 N. W. 1010.

[12] The court, of course, would not be bound by his answer, but it should be considered with the other facts and circumstances in the case.

We perceive no prejudicial error, and the order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial is affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

16 Cal. App. 198

LUITWEILER PUMPING ENGINE CO. v. UKIAH WATER & IMPROVEMENT CO. (Sac. 1936.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 8, 1911.)

EVIDENCE (§ 442*)—PAROL EVIDENCE—WRITTEN CONTRACT—NEW TERM.

A new term cannot be added to a written contract containing within itself the essentials of a complete agreement by resort to the antecedent oral negotiations regarded as surrounding circumstances.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 1874-1899; Dec. Dig. § 442.*]

In Bank. On petition for rehearing. Denied.

For former opinion, see 116 Pac. 707.

PER CURIAM. In denying a rehearing of this cause we wish to say that if the opinion of the District Court of Appeal can be construed as holding that a new term can be added to a written contract containing in itself all the essentials of a complete agreement, by resort to the antecedent oral negotiations of the parties, regarded as surrounding circumstances, we do not approve that doctrine, and do not regard it as essential to sustain the judgment of affirmance.

16 Cal. App. 223

YUBA CONSOL. GOLDFIELDS v. HILTON. (Civ. 804.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 10, 1911. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court July 8, 1911.)

1. EASEMENTS (§ 36*)—EVIDENCE—PRESUMPTIONS—PRESCRIPTION.

Where a clearly marked road across plaintiff's unoccupied lands was used openly, continuously, and without hindrance or molestation for at least 20 years, and the then owner of the servient tenement was seen on the land several times, though there was no direct evidence as to whether the use was adverse, it will be presumed that the owner had knowledge of the user, and that the use was under a claim of right and adverse, and a prima facie right by prescription is thereby established.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Easements, Cent. Dig. §§ 88-93; Dec. Dig. § 36.*]

2. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 95*)—RIPARIAN RIGHTS—SHORES AND BANKS—DRIFTWOOD.

The owner of a bank of a river has an absolute ownership of the driftwood which lies on its banks, or at least a qualified, possessory title good as against a trespasser or stranger to the title, and which is the subject of grant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Cent. Dig. § 95; Dec. Dig. § 95.*]

3. EASEMENTS (§ 5*)—CREATION AND EXISTENCE—PRESCRIPTION.

In the absence of statutory provisions to the contrary, all easements which may be acquired by grant, except that of light and air, may also be acquired by prescription, subject to the limitation that the right claimed must be reasonable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Easements, Cent. Dig. § 26; Dec. Dig. § 5.*]

4. EASEMENTS (§ 2*)—CREATION AND EXISTENCE—PRESCRIPTION—RIGHT TO TAKE DRIFTWOOD.

Under Civ. Code, § 801, subd. 5, which provides that the right of taking water, wood, minerals, and other things may attach to other lands as incidents or appurtenances, called easements, the right to take driftwood from other land may be acquired by prescription.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Easements, Cent. Dig. § 3; Dec. Dig. § 2.*]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 209*)—GROUNDS FOR REVIEW—EVIDENCE.

Where no objection is made to evidence, a judgment conforming thereto will not be disturbed on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 1290; Dec. Dig. § 209.*]

6. EASEMENTS (§ 36*)—PROCEEDINGS—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

Evidence, in an action to quiet title to land in which defendant claimed an easement of way, as to how many people were living within a mile of plaintiff's land, which was unoccupied, was properly excluded as immaterial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Easements, Cent. Dig. §§ 88-93; Dec. Dig. § 36.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Yuba County; K. S. Mahon, Judge.

Action by Yuba Consolidated Goldfields, a corporation, against H. G. Hilton. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Rehearing denied in Supreme Court, 116 Pac. 715.

A. F. Jones and W. H. Carlin, for appellant. M. T. Brittan and J. E. Ebert, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The action was brought to quiet title to a certain tract of land known as lot 2. The court found that plaintiff was the owner of the land, but adjudged it to be subject to an easement in favor of defendant for a right of way, in width that of an ordinary farm wagon, for the purpose of hauling thereover driftwood from the north bank of the Yuba river. It was provided that said roadway was "to be used and enjoyed by means of and with a good and sufficient gate to be maintained on the line separating said lots one (1) and two (2), said gate to be kept closed except while passing through the same."

The main contention of appellant is that the evidence is insufficient to support the finding of adverse use of the roadway by defendant. Respondent has pointed out the principal part of the testimony as follows: The defendant Hilton testified that he owned lot 1 for about 15 years; that when he began living there lot 2 was owned by P. George; that there is a roadway leading from lot 1 down through lot 2 to the Yuba river; that he used the roadway for going down to the river for driftwood; that it is the only way he has of getting down to the river; that he has used the roadway for said purpose every year for said period of time; that there is a visible track or roadway, and that it has been visible all the time; that there was no interruption of his use of the road until just before plaintiff brought the present action; that the wood which he took was driftwood, which had lodged on plaintiff's land, lot No. 2, or on government land, and that he had at times used the road for getting wood off of the upper end of his own land.

Mr. Gleason testified that he was 33 years of age and had known the land ever since he could remember, and during that time the road was used for the purpose of hauling driftwood.

Mr. Grass testified that he formerly owned lot 1; that he bought it in 1886 and owned it about eight years, and sold it to defendant; that the road was there then, and that he used it frequently every year to haul water and driftwood from the river.

The witness Ransom testified that he had known of the defendant's land for 25 years. That he at one time owned a one-half interest in it before Mr. Grass owned it. The road was in existence then, and he used it every year to haul driftwood out of the river. That it was an open road, and "you could go down there handy with a wagon and haul out a good load."

Mr. Striker testified that he knew of the existence of the road for 22 years; that the road was used by every one living on defendant's land; that defendant used the road every year for hauling driftwood out of the river, and that he also saw defendant haul water; that the road has been used by every one living on lot No. 1.

In fact, there was no dispute as to the use of the road, and no evidence offered by plaintiff in reference to it; counsel stating, in reply to a question asked by the court, that "it is not disputed that there was a single-track road cut through the brush and used for hauling driftwood, and in regard to the existence of that road, as testified to by Mr. Grass, we are not going to put on any testimony."

[1] It appears, therefore, without conflict, and it is virtually admitted by appellant, that the road was used openly, continuously, and without hindrance or molestation for a period of at least 20 years. The only question that could arise would be whether the use was in hostility or in subordination to the title of appellant. As to this there is no direct evidence, but, under the circumstances shown, it is presumed that the use was under a claim of right and adverse, and a prima facie title by prescription is thereby established. Washburn on Easements (4th Ed.) p. 156; 14 Cyc. 1147; Kripp v. Curtis, 71 Cal. 66, 11 Pac. 879; Franz v. Mendonca, 131 Cal. 209, 63 Pac. 361; Fleming v. Howard, 150 Cal. 28, 87 Pac. 908.

In the Fleming Case, supra, is quoted with approval the following from Jones on Easements, § 186: "A presumption that the use was under a claim of right and adverse arises from an undisputed use of an easement for the established period of prescription, and the burden is upon the party alleging that the use had been by virtue of a license or permission to prove that fact by affirmative evidence. * * * Where an open and uninterrupted use of an easement for a sufficient length of time to create the presumption of a grant is shown, if the other party relies on the fact that these acts or any part of them were permissive, it is incumbent on such party, by sufficient proof, to rebut such presumption of a nonappearing grant; otherwise the presumption stands as sufficient proof and establishes the right."

These facts carry, also, of course, the presumption that the owner of the servient estate had knowledge of the use of the roadway. It is asserted by appellant that "there isn't a particle of evidence in the record that P. George, who owned lot 2 for perhaps 40 years up to about 1907, ever saw this road or knew it was there." It is true that no one testified that George saw the road, although witness Striker declared he had seen George on lot No. 2 several times; George was probably the only one who could testify positively as to whether he had seen the road, and he was not put upon the stand. It may be said, also, that no one was residing on said lot No. 2, and the road was encompassed on both sides by willows; but it was clearly marked and in use for such a length of time that the inference is reasonable and urgent that George had knowledge of its use. The presumption should be indulged more readily in view of the ease with which appellant might have overcome the presumption, if in fact the owner of lot No. 2 had no knowledge of the roadway.

It is claimed by appellant that respondent could not acquire a right to the driftwood that lodged on plaintiff's premises, and that there is no finding nor decree purporting to give him such a right. Therefore it is contended that the judgment burdens plaintiff's land with an easement for a road and gate at the line fence for an utterly futile purpose.

[2] As to the driftwood, it will probably not be disputed that when it lodges upon the land plaintiff has either a qualified or an absolute ownership in it. It must be true, as stated by appellant, that the true owner, if he could trace and identify it, would be entitled to remove it, but when on the land it is in possession of the owner of said land, and this possessory title is good as against a trespasser or stranger to the title. It is admitted that the right to take this wood could be created by grant, but it is insisted that it is not subject to prescription.

[3] The rule seems to be, however, as stated in 22 American & English Encyclopedia of Law, p. 1186, that, "In the absence of statutory provisions to the contrary, all easements which may be acquired by grant may also be acquired by prescription, subject to the limitation that the right claimed must be reasonable." "An easement or servitude may be created by grant or prescription." American Co. v. Bradford, 27 Cal. 367; Wagner v. Hanna, 38 Cal. 116, 99 Am. Dec. 354.

There are certain exceptions and limitations to the foregoing doctrine an instance of which is the easement as to light and air. The courts of the United States are practically unanimous that the English doctrine does not apply here, and that the right to light and air cannot be acquired by prescription or adverse user. Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, supra, p. 1187. Among the reasons assigned for this view are that this rule is not considered to be adapted to the existing condition of things in the United States, and could not be applied to rapidly growing communities without working mischievous consequences to property owners, and also that in the nature of things there can be no adverse user of light or air, for the actual enjoyment of these elements by a property owner is upon his own land only, and involves no encroachment upon his neighbor's land, nor any interference with the latter's enjoyment of his own property to which he can object. The owner of the adjoining land, therefore, having submitted to no encroachment upon his own rights, cannot be presumed to have assented to such encroachment. Id. vol. 19, p. 119. This subject, it may be remarked, is of pressing importance generally in cities only and therein it is controlled by police and sanitary regulations. The cases cited by appellant belong to the foregoing class, and they are not controlling here. Among the various rights and easements that may be acquired by prescription, which are enumerated in volume 22, page 1187, of the American & English Encyclopedia of Law, we do not find specifically the one in question here, but there are several, not dissimilar to the one before us; for instance, the right to take ice from a pond, seaweed from a beach, and the right to dig and carry away ore.

[4] But we need not go beyond the terms of the statute, for the particular easement in controversy is expressly included in the specifications in section 801 of the Civil Code. It provides that: "The following land burdens, or servitudes upon land, may be attached to other land as incidents or appurtenances, and are then called easements. * * * 5. The right of taking water, wood, minerals and other things." We can see nothing unreasonable in the claim of respondent, and, since it is admitted that the right to take the wood could be acquired by grant, and the general rule is that what may be acquired by grant may be acquired by prescription, and, furthermore, there is nothing to show that the instance before us furnishes an exception to the rule, and as the statute expressly enumerates this as one of the easements that may be attached to other land as an appurtenance, and the evidence being sufficient, we think the court did not err in finding that defendant was entitled to this right.

While the right to take the wood was not directly put in issue or found by the court, it seems to be clearly implied in the allegations of the answer and the findings of the court. The answer was probably demurrable for uncertainty in that respect, but the averment that defendant Hilton has had the actual possession for a period of more than 14 years last past, and "has exclusively, openly, notoriously, peaceably, continuously, uninterruptedly, adversely to plaintiff and its predecessor in interest, and with knowledge and acquiescence of plaintiff and its predecessors in interest, and under a claim of right and title thereto, used and traveled over said roadway for the purpose of going to said Yuba river on the lands of said plaintiff to gather driftwood from and on said Yuba river, and to haul the same therefrom over said roadway to his own land, as aforesaid," certainly carries with it the implication that he did haul said driftwood under a claim of right for that length of time. The same observation may be made in reference to the corresponding finding, which follows the foregoing allegation.

[5] The judgment does not limit the right to haul driftwood from the land of plaintiff, the easement being "to that certain right of way * * * for the purpose of hauling thereover driftwood," but of this appellant cannot complain as the evidence showed without objection that the road was used, also, to haul driftwood from government land and from the land of defendant.

[6] There was no error in the court's ruling sustaining an objection to the question asked of plaintiff on cross-examination, as to how many people were living within a radius of a mile of his home. This would not affect the question of the elements required to constitute title by prescription, nor change the presumption created by open, continuous, and unchallenged occupancy. As far as plaintiff's land is concerned, though, it does appear that it was unoccupied, but whether the community was thickly or sparsely settled seems immaterial.

We observe no prejudicial error, and the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

16 Cal. App. 228

YUBA CONSOL. GOLDFIELDS v. HILTON.
(Sac. 1,854.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 8, 1911.)

JUDGMENT (§ 747*)—RES JUDICATA—QUESTIONS DETERMINED.

A judgment, in an action to quiet title on a finding that plaintiff was the owner of the land, but that it was subject to an easement in favor of defendant for a right of way to haul driftwood from the bank of a river, merely establishes defendant's right of way for the purpose of hauling driftwood from the river, and determines nothing as to defendant's right to driftwood in the river, since such right was not in issue.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Dec. Dig. § 747.*]

In Bank. Action by Yuba Consolidated Goldfields, a corporation, against H. G. Hilton. A judgment for defendant was affirmed on appeal by the Third appellate district (116 Pac. 712), and plaintiff petitions for an order to transfer the cause to the Supreme Court for a rehearing. Petition denied.

PER CURIAM. The petition for an order transferring this cause to the Supreme Court for rehearing is denied. We do not, however, approve that part of the opinion of the district court of appeal concerning the right of the defendant to take driftwood from the land of the plaintiff. The judgment of the lower court merely establishes the right of the defendant to a way through plaintiff's land, for the purpose of hauling thereover driftwood from the Yuba river, not from plaintiff's land. It declares nothing in regard to the right or title the defendant may have, or may obtain, to such driftwood in the river. That right or title was not in issue, and it does not appear to be any concern of plaintiff, unless defendant takes driftwood to which plaintiff has a better right or title, in which case the judgment will not be an estoppel against plaintiff or in favor of defendant.

160 Cal. 268

BURR v. MACLAY RANCHO WATER
CO. (HILL et al., Interveners).
(L. A. 2,284.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 22, 1911.
Rehearing Denied July 22, 1911.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1040*)—RULINGS ON PLEADINGS—HARMLESS ERROR.

Where plaintiff in a suit to enjoin defendant from pumping water from its wells on its lands adjacent to plaintiff's lands for irrigation of remote lands did not claim that any underground stream existed, and the parties dealt with the case as one involving relative rights to percolating waters only, the error, if any, in overruling a demurrer to the complaint, alleging that the water-bearing strata existing under the lands of the parties were in streams or subterranean bodies and were in a state of continuity, on the ground that it was uncertain whether plaintiff claimed as an owner of land overlying the common supply of percolating water, or as a riparian owner of land on an underground stream, was not reversible error.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4089-4105; Dec. Dig. § 1040.*]

2. TRIAL (§ 404*)—FINDINGS—CONSTRUCTION.

Findings must be construed, if possible, to support the judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 957-962; Dec. Dig. § 404.*]

3. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 107*)—UNDERGROUND PERCOLATING WATERS—FINDINGS.

The findings in a suit to enjoin defendant from pumping water from its wells on its lands adjacent to plaintiff's lands for irrigation of remote lands, that underlying the lands in controversy, including the lands of plaintiff and extending to the foot of the mountains, are water-bearing strata, that an almost impervious dike which extends across the tract arrests the progress of the water underlying plaintiff's land, that the subterranean waters are supplied by rains falling on the mountains, and find their way into the water-bearing strata and percolate through the same, that the waters in the water-bearing strata underlying the lands of plaintiff and other lands in the vicinity, including the lands in which defendant's pump is situated, are, in their natural state, under pressure from the head of the waters near the mountains, etc., show a common supply of percolating waters lying in continuous strata saturated with water and extending under the lands of the parties, and justify relief to plaintiff.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Cent. Dig. §§ 116, 117; Dec. Dig. § 107.*]

4. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 107*)—RIGHT TO PERCOLATING WATERS—PLEADINGS—ISSUES.

Where the complaint in a suit to enjoin defendant from pumping water from its wells on its lot 192, adjacent to plaintiff's lots 153, 190, and 191, to irrigate remote lands, alleged that underlying the lands were waters in a state of continuity from their sources to and under lot 192, that the waters were supplied by rains falling on the mountains, that the waters found their way into the water-bearing strata, that under the lands of the parties the waters were in the natural state under pressure and were retained therein by a dike, and that the water pumped by defendant was taken from the water-bearing strata underlying the lands of the parties, an answer which merely denied that the waters in the strata were in streams or subterranean bodies or in any state of continuity except as percolating waters were in such continuity, and denied that the water pumped by defendant was taken from the water-bearing strata underlying the lands of plaintiff, admitted, in effect, that there were water-bearing strata underlying the lands of the parties, and that the waters were under pressure in their natural state, and established the relative rights of the parties to percolating water in continuity and under pressure in the strata under their lands, and the existence of streams or bodies of water extending from plaintiff's lands to defendant's lands was not essential to the granting of relief.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Cent. Dig. §§ 116, 117; Dec. Dig. § 107.*]

5. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 101*)—RIGHT TO PERCOLATING WATERS—CORRELATIVE RIGHTS.

The existence of a common supply of water in a state of percolation of such a character that the taking from one overlying tract will substantially diminish the quantity available in another overlying tract gives correlative rights in the common supply, and creates a right in one landowner to prevent another from taking the water to distant lands not overlying the common supply, if such taking is injurious to him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Cent. Dig. §§ 110, 111; Dec. Dig. § 101.*]

6. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 107*)—PERCOLATING WATERS—WRONGFUL USE—EVIDENCE.

A defendant in a suit to enjoin it from pumping water from its wells on its lands adjacent to plaintiff's lands for irrigation of remote lands admitted a common supply of percolating waters under pressure, extending under the lands of the parties. Plaintiff proved that the pumping by defendant lowered the level of the water in the wells on plaintiff's lands, and the wells on plaintiff's lands obtained water from water-bearing strata admitted to exist. Held to support a finding of the existence of a common supply of percolating water under the lands of both parties, justifying relief.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Cent. Dig. §§ 116, 117; Dec. Dig. § 107.*]

7. PLEADING (§ 36*)—ADMISSIONS—CONCLUSIVENESS—ESTOPPEL.

A plaintiff suing to enjoin defendant from pumping water from its wells on its lands adjacent to plaintiff's lands for irrigation of remote lands, who introduced evidence, notwithstanding defendant's admission of the existence of a common supply of percolating water under pressure, extending under all the lands, to prove that the water taken by defendant came from the water-bearing strata underlying plaintiff's lands, and to prove the existence of a dike retaining the percolating waters under plaintiff's lands and under a part of defendant's lands, did not thereby estop himself from relying on the admission in support of a judgment in his favor, because it was necessary for him to prove such facts because disputed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 81-86; Dec. Dig. § 36.*]

8. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 156*)—DEEDS—RESERVATIONS—RIGHT TO PERCOLATING WATERS.

A deed of a tract of land to trustees required the trustees to deposit in a bank a specified sum as an improvement fund for the construction of dams, reservoirs, and pipe lines for storing and supplying water to the tract and for sinking artesian wells for developing a water supply. The trustees proceeded to expend the specified sum in the construction of a reservoir and wells on a lot subsequently conveyed to defendant, and in laying a system of pipe lines for carrying the water from the wells to the lots in the tract. The trustees conveyed parcels of the tract to purchasers subject to the reservation of the right to lay water pipes across the land, and of all artesian water that might be developed on the land and not used thereon. Plaintiff acquired tracts with knowledge of the wells on the land acquired by defendant, and of the claim to water from the wells thereon. Held that the reservations in the deeds embraced only such waters as were obtained by the expenditure of the improvement fund, in the absence of any notice of any purpose or claim of right to expend additional money and take additional water.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Cent. Dig. §§ 174-183; Dec. Dig. § 156.*]

9. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 143*)—APPROPRIATION—RIGHT OF PROPRIETOR.

One who acquires adjacent property after an appropriation of water has begun takes subject to the right the proprietor has, but the proprietor does not, because of his first taking, have any right to an additional quantity thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Cent. Dig. § 152; Dec. Dig. § 143.*]

10. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 152*)—RIGHTS TO PERCOLATING WATERS—PRESCRIPTION.

Evidence held not to show a prescriptive right to take percolating waters for irrigation of remote lands.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Cent. Dig. §§ 156, 157; Dec. Dig. § 152.*]

11. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 107*)—PERCOLATING WATERS—RIGHT TO USE—ESTOPPEL.

Evidence held to support a finding that an owner of land overlying percolating waters was not estopped by acquiescence from complaining of an adjacent owner pumping on his land such percolating waters for irrigation of remote lands.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Cent. Dig. §§ 116, 117; Dec. Dig. § 107.*]

12. EMINENT DOMAIN (§ 28*)—PUBLIC USE—USE OF WATER.

Water pumped from wells on land overlying percolating waters, extending under adjacent

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes lands, to fulfill private contractual obligations to deliver water to land sold with a water right, is not taken for public use, but is taken for a private use.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. § 75; Dec. Dig. § 28.*]

13. EMINENT DOMAIN (§ 276*)—PERCOLATING WATERS—RIGHT TO USE—ESTOPPEL.

The rule that one who knowingly allows his property to be taken for public use or who sees expensive works installed and a public service begun, and who has not protested, is estopped from suing in equity and is limited to an action at law for damages, rests chiefly on the inconvenience to the public if the service begun is interrupted by injunctive relief, and it does not apply to the taking of property for private use, and as to private use the general law of estoppel controls.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. § 774; Dec. Dig. § 276.*]

14. EMINENT DOMAIN (§ 276*)—RIGHT TO PERCOLATING WATERS—PUBLIC USE—ESTOPPEL.

An owner of land overlying percolating waters pumped the water and supplied it as a public use to persons residing in villages. An adjacent owner of lands overlying such percolating waters was not notified that the former proposed to take any additional water for use in the villages, and he did not see the making of preparations with knowledge of any such purpose. The previous supply had apparently been sufficient, and the new wells and pumps constructed by the owner were not constructed to secure water for the villages, but to supply third persons who had purchased from the owner land with water rights. Held, that the adjacent owner was not estopped in equity to restrain the pumping of water from the new wells on the theory of the taking of water for a public use.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. § 774; Dec. Dig. § 276.*]

15. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 107*)—PERCOLATING WATERS—CORRELATIVE RIGHTS.

Where, in a suit involving the right to percolating waters, the issue was whether defendant had the right to divert waters from his land to land not overlying the water-bearing strata, a decree for plaintiff should not deny to defendant any right to apply waters under his land to the use of his land over the waters, and, in view of the pleadings not raising the issue, the decree should not restrain defendant from receiving water from others from other sources.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Cent. Dig. §§ 116, 117; Dec. Dig. § 107.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; M. T. Allen, Judge.

Action by John Burr against the Maclay Rancho Water Company; R. H. Hill and others intervening. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant and interveners appeal. Modified and affirmed.

Cochran, Williams & Phillips and Williams, Goudge & Chandler, for appellant Maclay Rancho Water Co. Hunsaker & Britt, for other appellants. Harris & Harris and Stephens & Stephens, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. From the judgment in this action the plaintiff appealed on the judgment roll alone, and his appeal resulted in a modification of the judgment of the court below by this court. The report of the case is to be found in 154 Cal. 428, 98 Pac. 260. The appeal now before us is that of the defendant and the interveners from the judgment, and is presented on the judgment roll, together with a bill of exceptions. The nature of the case and many of the facts appear in the opinion filed in the matter of the plaintiff's appeal, and we shall not, therefore, undertake to make a new statement of the same matters.

[1] The appellants make the point that the court erred in overruling the demurrer to the complaint. The facts stated make out a case under the theory that the plaintiff and the defendant were the owners of land overlying a subterranean supply of percolating waters, and that the doctrine of Katz v. Walkinshaw, 141 Cal. 116, 70 Pac. 663, 74 Pac. 766, 64 L. R. A. 236, 99 Am. St. Rep. 35, applies. They are not substantially different from those appearing in the complaint in the Katz Case which was there held to state a case for unlawful interference with a supply of percolating waters common to both parties. There is an allegation that the water-bearing strata extending under the lands of plaintiff and defendant "are in streams, or subterranean bodies or chambers, and are in a state of continuity from their sources to the said dike." This, it is urged, makes it uncertain whether plaintiff is claiming as an owner of land overlying a common supply of percolating water, or as riparian owner of land upon an underground stream or lake. There is nothing in the complaint to indicate that the plaintiff was claiming as a riparian owner upon a lake or stream. A reading of the whole complaint shows plainly enough that the pleader, notwithstanding his somewhat vague use of the word "stream," was not undertaking to set forth the existence of a defined water course, but to allege that a body of percolating water was underlying the lands of the plaintiff and a part of the land of defendant. Beyond all this, there can be no question but that the defendant was not misled by any uncertainty in this respect, since the record shows conclusively that the plaintiff did not claim that any underground stream could be shown to exist, and that the parties throughout were dealing with the case as one involving relative rights to percolating waters. Even though the demurrer might have been sustained on this ground, its overruling furnishes no ground for reversal. Alexander v. Central, etc., Co., 104 Cal. 532, 38 Pac. 410; Jager v. Cal. Bridge Co., 104 Cal. 542, 38 Pac. 413; Rooney v. Gray Bros., 145 Cal. 753, 79 Pac. 523.

It is strongly urged by the appellants that the findings fail to show that the whole of plaintiff's lot 191, or any part of lots 153 and 190, overlie the underground basin or water-bearing strata from which the defendant pumps water, and that, if such findings are to be construed as showing that the supply of water claimed by plaintiff as extending under said lots is the same as that from which the defendant is pumping, they are without support in the evidence. The findings state that underlying the entire tract of 20,000 acres conveyed by Maclay to Widney and others as trustees in 1885, which includes all the lands in controversy, "including the lands of plaintiff and extending to the foot of the mountains on the north, about 3 or 4 miles northerly from the lands of the plaintiff, * * * are water-bearing strata of varying depths of sand, boulders, and coarse material, and lying over each of of these strata are impervious strata of clay or cement extending towards, but not entirely to, the said mountains; that at a distance of about — miles in a southerly direction from plaintiff's lands there extends across the said valley and across said 20,000-acre tract a dike which is almost or entirely impervious to water." Another finding states that the dike crosses the valley and passes through defendant's lot 192, and that it "arrests the progress of the water underlying plaintiff's land and the water underlying the northern part of lot 192." Another states that the subterranean waters extending through said water-bearing strata are supplied by the rains which fall upon the mountains to the north and east of said valley and "find their way into said water-bearing strata, and permeate the said strata" and percolate through the same underneath the "overlying stratum of clay or cement down to the said dike, by means of which the movement of said water is arrested, and the waters impounded, forming a subterranean basin wherein the said subterranean waters are retained." Also, "the waters in said water-bearing strata underlying the lands of plaintiff and other lands in the vicinity, including the lands in which defendant's pump is situated, are in their natural state under pressure from the head of the waters near said mountains, and are by nature restrained and retained in said strata by the said dike and the overlying strata."

[2] Findings are to be construed so as to support the judgment, rather than so as to overthrow it.

[3] It would require a very narrow and forced construction of these findings to hold that they do not show a common supply of percolating water, lying in continuous strata saturated with water and extending under the three lots of plaintiff and into and under that part of the defendant's lot 192 in which the defendant's wells and pumps are situated. We hold that they support the judgment in this particular.

[4] With respect to the sufficiency of the evidence, we think that, when taken in connection with the admissions made by the pleadings, the evidence is sufficient. There is, it is true, but little evidence that the water-bearing strata supplying defendant's pumps extends under lots 190 and 153, and that evidence is altogether circumstantial. But that exact point is covered by the admissions of the pleadings. Lot 190 adjoins lot 191 on its north-westerly side. Lot 153 corners with lot 190, lying almost due north of it. The slope of the land is from the north towards lot 192 through the three lots of plaintiff. The complaint avers that underlying the lands of the plaintiff and extending to the foot of the mountains on the north are water-bearing strata; that the waters therein are in streams or subterranean bodies or chambers, and are in a state of continuity from their sources to and under lot 192; that the waters are supplied by winter rains falling upon the mountains, which waters find their way into said water-bearing strata; that under the plaintiff's lands and defendant's lot 192, where its pumps are located, said waters are in their natural state under pressure and are restrained and retained in said strata by said dike; and that the water pumped by defendant is taken from said water-bearing strata underlying said lands of plaintiff and defendant. These allegations are all admitted, either expressly or by failure to deny them, except that it is denied that the waters in said strata "are in streams, or subterranean bodies or channels (chambers), or in any state of continuity except as all other percolating waters are in such continuity," and except that it is denied that the water pumped by defendant "is taken from the water-bearing strata underlying the lands of plaintiff." The effect is that the answer admits that there are water-bearing strata underlying the lands of the plaintiff and the defendant's lot 192 and extending from the latter, under plaintiff's lots, and some three miles northerly to the mountains, that the waters therein are under pressure, in their natural state, and are in a state of continuity as percolating waters, throughout said strata under the said lands of plaintiff and defendant. It does not deny the existence of percolating water in continuity and under pressure in the strata extending under all the lands. The existence of streams or bodies of water extending from plaintiff's lands to lot 192 is not essential to plaintiff's case.

[5] Under the doctrine established in Katz v. Walkinshaw, supra, and subsequent cases of similar effect, the existence of a common supply of water in a state of percolation of such a character that the taking from one overlying tract will subsequently diminish the quantity available in another overlying tract gives correlative rights in the common supply and creates a right in one such landowner to prevent another from taking the water to distant lands not overlying the common supply, if such taking is injurious to him.

[6] The existence of such common supply of percolating water under pressure extending under all the lands is admitted. To prove that the water taken by defendant came from the strata common to all, the plaintiff introduced evidence showing that the pumping complained of immediately lowered the level of the water in the wells on plaintiff's lot 191, adjoining lot 192 where the defendant was pumping. The wells on lot 191 obtained water from the water-bearing strata admitted to exist. The evidence that defendant's pumps lowered the water in plaintiff's wells, established the fact that the water pumped by defendant was taken from the water-bearing strata underlying the lands of plaintiff, which is the only material fact denied. This conclusion can be avoided only by assuming that the water-bearing strata from which water is pumped on the two lots, 191 and 192, do not extend beyond those lots, and are different strata from those common strata admitted to exist. That this would be a possible explanation of the fact that the plaintiff's wells were affected may be conceded. But it was more reasonable to infer that the water came from the admitted common water-bearing strata than from some other strata not shown to exist. The allegations of the complaint referred to the strata from which plaintiff obtained water by means of his wells on lot 191, and the admissions of the pleadings must be understood as referring to the same strata. The proof of a taking from the strata under lot 191 was evidence from which the trial court might infer a taking from the strata under the other lots. This court is bound by its conclusion. It follows that the findings are sustained by the evidence.

[7] Appellants claim that the plaintiff is estopped to claim these admissions, because, as they say, the case was tried below upon the theory that the facts admitted as above shown, were actually in issue. It may be conceded that a respondent, in whose favor the lower court has decided, may be estopped in this manner to claim the benefit of such admissions. Spers v. Duane, 54 Cal. 176; Rawlins v. Ferguson, 133 Cal. 470, 65 Pac. 957; Wiley v. Crocker Bank, 141 Cal. 518, 75 Pac. 106. But we do not think that it necessarily appears that the case was tried below upon that theory. The evidence introduced by plaintiff, and which it is claimed shows that he believed that the admitted facts were really denied, was all admissible to prove that the water taken by defendant came from the water-bearing strata underlying plaintiff's lands and to prove the existence of the alleged dike. It was necessary that the plaintiff should produce evidence to prove these disputed facts. Its introduction would not authorize the adverse parties to assume, or believe, or to act upon, the theory that the defendant was giving this evidence solely to prove the admitted facts. No declaration to that effect is pointed out. The circumstance that it may also have tended in some degree to prove the admitted facts would not justify any such conclusion by the adverse parties nor raise any estoppel to prevent the plaintiff from claiming the admission for the purpose of sustaining the judgment on appeal.

The appellants attack, also, the finding that there is a dike running through defendant's lot 192 and preventing the percolation of water beyond such dike. It will not be necessary to go at length into the evidence offered on this point. We think it sufficient to say that the finding is fully supported by the evidence of the natural conditions, together with the showing that the waters in the wells to the north and east of such supposed dike were diminished by defendant's pumping, while that of the wells lying on the other side remained unaffected thereby. The appellants concede in their reply brief "that there is some evidence showing the occurrence of a formation for a short distance, of the nature of a dike." While the exact location and extent of this dike were not clearly shown, there was evidence sufficient to justify the conclusion that it was of sufficient extent to prevent the percolation or passage of waters underlying plaintiff's lands to the lands upon which the waters pumped from block 192 were being used.

[8] The court found that the plaintiff originally acquired and now holds the title to his lands subject to a right in said trustees and the defendant, as their successor, to take from wells on lot 192 a flow of water equal to 30 miner's inches, for use on other parts of said Maclay rancho, but not subject to the taking of any larger quantity therefrom; that he had no notice of any plan of said trustees to devote the waters in said lot to use on other parts of the rancho, other than is set forth in the deed to the trustees to Maclay and the deed from the trustees to the plaintiff and his predecessors in interest; that the trustees did not take, use, or manage the wells on lot 192 in pursuance of any plan, except as shown in said deeds, that it was not the purpose of Maclay and the trustees that all the water that should be obtained from said wells was to be supplied for use on the lots in the rancho sold to interveners and others, except as manifested by said deeds; and that the trustees did not sell to purchasers of lots the right to receive water from said wells except as indicated by the deeds to the respective purchasers. It is claimed that these findings are contrary to the evidence, and that the effect of the several deeds and the acts and conduct of the trustees and purchasers of lots with water rights from them, including plaintiff, was to create an easement appurtenant to each lot to share in all the water that could by any means or at any time be obtained from lot 192, and to put a corresponding burden on lot 191 and other lots which might be affected by such taking, to suffer the consequent depletion of the percolating or other waters therein. Or, as otherwise stated by appellants, that the lots sold with the water right constitute the proximate body of land for the benefit of which the defendant has the right to pump water from lot 192.

The deed of Maclay conveying the 20,000 acres to the trustees provided that they should deposit in bank the sum of $20,000 as an improvement fund to be used in constructing dams, reservoirs, and pipe lines for storing and supplying water to the tract of land; also in sinking artesian wells and in such other means as should be advisable for developing and storing a water supply for said lands; also in surveying and platting the land and putting it on the market for sale. The trustees were to sell the lands in subdivisions, but the artesian wells, springs, and sources of water supply, reservoir sites, water pipes, and conduits were not to be sold except by the joint deed of all the trustees. No other provisions were made concerning water. In conveying the lots to the several purchasers, including the plaintiff, there was inserted in each deed a reservation of "the right to lay water pipes across the land," and of "all artesian water that may be developed on said land and not used thereon." The deeds to the interveners and that to plaintiff for lot 191 each also contained a specific grant of a right to a stated quantity of water; the usual description thereof being "the right to use fifty-four gallons per hour per acre on said land." Nothing was said in either of them as to the source from which this water was to come. Something over 3,000 acres were conveyed in this manner. The deed to lot 191 was made in 1886. The deeds to lot 153 and the northeasterly 20 acres of lot 190 were made in 1892 and each contained the reservation in regard to pipe lines and artesian water, but further declared that "no water right is hereby conveyed." This we understand to mean simply that the usual right to water from the defendant's system was not given. It does not constitute a reservation or limitation of the right of the grantees to use upon the lots the percolating or other water contained therein. The remainder of lot 190 was conveyed to Burr in 1893. The deed thereto did not mention water rights, but contained the afore-said reservations concerning artesian wells and pipe lines. The deeds to the lots of plaintiff were executed by all the trustees, and were therefore effectual to convey all the waters in the land not expressly reserved in the deeds. These comprise all the written provisions relating in any way to the alleged reservation or dedication of the waters of lot 192 to the use of other lots or land.

In pursuance of the plan contemplated by the deed of trust, executed in 1885, the trustees immediately proceeded to expend the $20,000 in the construction of a submerged dam in Pacoima creek and a reservoir on lot 192, in the boring of several wells on lot 192, in the laying of a system of pipe lines for carrying the water from the dam and the wells to the lots in the tract which were to be sold with an agreement to deliver water thereto, and in surveying, subdividing, and marketing the land. From the wells a natural flow of 30 miner's inches of water was obtained. The dam took from another distinct source and the supply from it varied from 22 inches in midsummer to 100 inches in midwinter. This development and expenditure was completed in 1890. From that time until about 1899 the water system thus established was operated and apparently the only water taken from the wells up to that time was the natural flow thereof, which, of course, was fluctuating. In 1896 the casings of some of the wells on lot 192 were cut down to a point 16 feet below the surface, which for some time increased the artesian flow to 40 or 50 inches. Of all these things the plaintiff was informed as they took place.

Manifestly his title to his lots was acquired with knowledge of the claim to the 30 inches of water taken from the artesian wells on lot 192 by the defendant, and the lots are held by him subject to the right of the defendant to continue that taking. The judgment gives it that right and to that extent it is conceded to be correct. But the provisions in these deeds do not operate to dedicate or reserve all the water which might be obtainable from lot 192 to the use of the other lots in the tract. There was no express reservation of any water in that lot. It is only by implication from the power given and the development under it that such dedication or reservation can be established. The dedication or reservation, such as it was, extended to and embraced only such waters as were obtained by the expenditure of the improvement fund. The effect of the provision regarding that fund was exhausted, so far as any appropriation of water is concerned, when the fund was all expended. There was no notice or declaration of any purpose or claim of right to expend additional money and take additional water over and above that which was obtainable from the wells sunk and the works installed with the original fund.

We do not find anything in the extraneous facts which, either of themselves or in connection with the writings, constitutes a declaration of trust, a reservation, or a dedication of all the waters obtainable from lot 192, in favor of the other lots sold with water rights, giving a right to them to use said water thereon. There was nothing in the conduct or practice of the trustees, even if it had all been disclosed to Burr, which evinced a design to set apart for the benefit of the water system they instituted any greater quantity of water from lot 192 than the 30 inches obtained by the original artesian wells. No declaration was made, either at the time his lots were purchased or afterwards, that the trustees intended at some future time to bore more wells on lot 192, or to take more water therefrom for the future necessities which might arise, or that the water supply in his lots was to be held by him subject to such further depletions as they might afterwards choose to make for the use of other lots in the tract. The reservation in each deed of all artesian water that might be developed on the lots and not used thereon implied an agreement that each purchaser might use such artesian water thereon, so far as necessary, and to that extent it was inconsistent with the existence of a right in the trustees to exhaust or deplete such waters by pumping on other lots to such an extent that there would not remain enough obtainable by reasonable effort from such lot for its use. That reservation clearly did not create any burden in favor of the wells on lot 192 against the adjoining lots. The appropriation of 30 inches from the supply in lot 192 had, in effect, already been made at the time his lots were purchased. The rule with respect to such an appropriation should be substantially like that regarding the appropriation from a surface stream.

[9] One who acquires adjoining property after the appropriation has begun takes subject to the right the appropriator then had, but the appropriator does not, because of his first taking, have any right to take an additional quantity thereafter. The increase of the natural flow in 1896 was an additional taking to which plaintiff was not bound to submit. It does not appear how long it continued and from the fact that a small pump was installed in 1899 it is to be inferred that the natural flow before that had fallen to at least the original 30 inches, especially as two extraordinarily dry years had intervened.

[10] The evidence does not show a prescriptive right in defendant to take the additional quantity obtained in 1896. Our conclusion is that the findings in question are sufficiently sustained by the evidence, and that the appellants have no paramount easement in the waters of lot 192 beyond the original 30 miner's inches.

[11] The appellants rely upon facts constituting, as they claim, an estoppel upon plaintiff to object to the pumping and diversion of additional water. In 1899 the defendant placed a pump in one of its wells, and from that time until 1902 pumped therefrom from 20 to 30 miner's inches of water in addition to the artesian flow therefrom, which was very small. This lowered the level of the water in the plaintiff's wells several feet, but not so as to prevent his pumps from obtaining sufficient water for his use. In 1902 defendant enlarged its pumping plant, and began taking 125 miner's inches of water. This large increase immediately lowered the water in plaintiff's wells so far that his pumps would not reach it. He had made no decided objection to the increase of 1899, although he did not consent thereto. But, when the increased pumping of 1902 began, he at once gave notice to defendant that it was injurious to him, and that he would hold defendant liable for all damages caused thereby. He had knowledge of the preparations made by the defendant and the installation of the new pumps for the purpose of increasing its taking. The defendant did not consult him about it, nor, so far as the evidence shows, rely on his consent or acquiescence, but proceeded with its work of its own motion, clearly manifesting an intention to disregard any rights of plaintiff. One of its operations on lot 192 was the sinking of a new well much deeper than any other in the vicinity. When it had reached a stratum of clay which had not been penetrated by any other well, the plaintiff said to the defendant's managers that he was anxious to see the well go through that stratum. It was obvious that he hoped that a new supply of water would be found, so that the strain on the known supply would be relieved. He testified that he did not encourage them to put in the new pumps, or to take more water from the existing supply.

The appellants on this point rely upon the rule stated in Katz v. Walkinshaw, supra, 141 Cal. 136, 70 Pac. 663, 74 Pac. 766, 64 L. R. A. 236, 99 Am. St. Rep. 35, in regard to an estoppel upon one who knowingly allows his property to be taken for public use, sees expensive works installed, and the public service begun therewith, without protest, and stating the rule to be that in such case he will be limited to the remedy of an action for damages. See Barton v. Riverside W. Co., 155 Cal. 515, 101 Pac. 790, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 331.

[12] The water taken by the defendants to supply the needs of the interveners is not taken for public use. It is not offered to the public generally, or to all who may want it within a certain territory. It is taken solely to fulfill the private contractual obligations of the defendants to deliver water to certain lots which it has sold with a water right. This is a private use. Hildreth v. Montecito, 139 Cal. 29, 72 Pac. 395; Barton v. Riverside, supra, 155 Cal. 518, 101 Pac. 790, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 331; Gilmer v. Lime Point, 18 Cal. 252.

[13] The rule concerning the establishment of public service with property of another taken without previous compensation has for its basis chiefly the inconvenience to the public if the service is interrupted by the issuance of an injunction to restrain the use. It does not apply to the taking of property for private use. With respect to private uses, the general law of estoppel controls. That the necessary elements of such an estoppel are lacking here will be seen by reference to the rule as stated in Lux v. Haggin, 69 Cal. 266, 4 Pac. 919, 10 Pac. 674, and comparing it with the facts above related. It is unnecessary to pursue this subject, since the appellants do not seriously claim such an estoppel. For a number of years prior to 1902, the defendant furnished water for domestic use to persons living in the villages of Pacoima and Fernando, whether as a public use or not is not clearly apparent.

[14] Conceding it to have been a public use, the facts do not bring the case within the rule stated in Katz v. Walkinshaw. There is no evidence that Burr was ever informed that the defendant proposed to take the additional water for use in said villages, or that he stood by and saw the preparations made with knowledge of any such purpose. The previous supply had apparently been sufficient for that purpose. The new wells and pumps were not constructed for the purpose of securing water for Pacoima and Fernando, but for the supplying of the interveners and others to whom lots had been sold with similar water rights. We do not think the facts proven show any abuse of discretion in the trial court in determining that the plaintiff was not estopped to maintain the action.

[15] It is urged that the judgment is erroneous, in that it does not allow the defendant to take water for use upon lot 192 itself. So far as that lot lies over the water supply, the defendant's rights are equal to and correlative with those of the plaintiff. Those rights were not, however, presented to the court, and it does not undertake to adjudicate them. The controversy between the parties was over the question whether the defendant had the right to divert waters from lot 192 to land beyond the dike and not overlying the water-bearing strata. Such division was the only use complained of in the complaint, and the pleadings on the part of the defendant and the interveners asserted the right to so divert the waters. At the same time the decree should not have been so broad as to deny to the defendant any right to apply the waters under lot 192 to the use of the land over those waters. Any injury resulting to the defendant in this respect may, however, be obviated by a modification of the judgment.

So, too, the decree, we think, goes beyond the issues in restraining the defendant from receiving water from any other persons from any water sources above the said dike. The pleadings afford no foundation for such restraint. The complaint alleged no threat to take water otherwise than by means of pumps installed in wells on lot 192.

Complaint is made of the provisions limiting defendant to the "natural flow from the artesian wells on lot 192, as the same existed * * * on May 9, 1904." If this clause be uncertain and indefinite, as is claimed, the ground of objection is removed by the judgment on the former appeal, whereby the decree was modified so as to permit the defendant to pump from lot 192, at the times when it is allowed to pump therefrom, a quantity of water which, added to the natural flow, will equal a flow of 30 inches. This clearly defines the extent of defendant's rights arising from its use of the waters prior to increased pumping commencing in 1902.

The appellants attack findings other than those to which we have adverted, but we think the findings so questioned are either amply supported by evidence or are not essential to the maintenance of the judgment. Except so far as indicated, we find, in the particulars in which the judgment is upon this appeal open to attack, no material error in the record.

It is ordered that the judgment be further modified as follows: (1) By adding thereto, immediately preceding the date line thereof, the following: "The portions of this judgment restraining the defendant from pumping water from lot 192 are to be construed as limiting its right to pump such water for transportation to and use upon lands lying to the south and west of the dike hereinbefore referred to. Nothing in this judgment is to be construed as limiting or defining the extent of the defendant's right to pump water from said lot 192 at all times for domestic use or irrigation upon the portion of said lot lying to the north and east of said dike." (2) By striking from paragraph V of said judgment the words: "By receiving water from any other persons, from any water sources above the said dike; and," as thus modified, the judgment shall stand affirmed.

160 Cal. 30

CLARK v. CITY OF LOS ANGELES et al.
(L. A. 2794.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 31, 1911.
On Rehearing, June 30, 1911.)

1. ELECTRICITY (§ 1½*)—ESTABLISHMENT BY MUNICIPALITY.

Los Angeles Charter, art. 1, § 2, subd. 7 (St. 1889, p. 457), as amended by Act March 12, 1909 (St. 1909, p. 1291), authorizing the city to supply the city and its inhabitants with electricity, etc., authorizes establishment, operation, and maintenance of works to supply the inhabitants with electricity for private use.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Electricity, Dec. Dig. § 1½.*]

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 911*)—BONDS—ELECTRIC WORKS—POWER TO ESTABLISH.

Proceedings to issue bonds to establish municipal electric works are not invalid on account of any invalidity of Los Angeles Charter, art. 1, § 2, subds. 7a, and 26 (St. 1889, p. 457), as amended by St. 1909, p. 1291, authorizing the city to sell surplus electric power to consumers outside of the city, where there is no showing that the city intends to engage in any such sale.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1899, 1901; Dec. Dig. § 911.*]

3. ELECTRICITY (§ 1½*)—ELECTRIC WORKS—PUBLIC USE.

Proposed dedication of contemplated municipal works to supply electric power to the inhabitants of a city for private use is a dedication to public use.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Electricity, Dec. Dig. § 1½.*]

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

4. FRANCHISES (§ 2*)—GRANT—CONSTRUCTION.

Grants of franchises and special privileges by the state to private persons or corporations are to be construed most strongly in favor of the public, and, where the privilege claimed is doubtful, nothing is to be taken by mere implication as against public rights.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Franchises, Cent. Dig. § 2; Dec. Dig. § 2.*]

5. FRANCHISES (§ 4*)—EXCLUSIVENESS—EXTENT OF RIGHTS.

Where a grant of such franchise by the state or some municipality thereof is not by its terms made an exclusive franchise, and the city in which it is to be exercised is not, by the law or ordinance granting it, forbidden or prevented from competing, then a city may establish its own works for the same purpose and engage in the same public service within the city, although it may thereby injure, or practically destroy, the business of the holder of such franchise.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Franchises, Cent. Dig. § 3; Dec. Dig. § 4.*]

6. ELECTRICITY (§ 1½*)—ESTABLISHMENT BY CITY—RIGHTS UNDER FRANCHISES.

Const. art. 11, § 19, providing that in any city where there are no municipal water or lighting plants, that any one on certain conditions may use the streets to lay conduits to supply the city and its inhabitants, etc., does not give an existing electric company an exclusive franchise so as to preclude the city from establishing a competing plant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Electricity, Dec. Dig. § 1½.*]

7. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 35*)—CONSTRUCTION OF PROVISIONS.

Const. art. 1, § 22, making the provisions of the Constitution mandatory and prohibitory, refers to the effect and not to the meaning of such provisions.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. § 34½; Dec. Dig. § 35.*]

8. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 918*)—BONDS—SUBMISSION OF QUESTION.

A question submitted to the electors, whether a city shall issue bonds to acquire and construct electric works, including acquisition of lands, water rights, rights of way, etc., states but a single object.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1919-1923; Dec. Dig. § 918.*]

9. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 918*)—ELECTRIC BONDS—PROCEEDINGS TO ISSUE.

Proceedings to issue bonds to establish municipal electric works need not state a precise location of the works.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 918.*]

10. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 918*)—ELECTRIC BONDS—PROCEEDINGS TO ISSUE.

A proposition to issue bonds to establish municipal electric works need not state when the bonds will mature.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1919-1923; Dec. Dig. § 918.*]

11. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 918*)—PUBLIC WORKS—BONDS.

Under Bond Act (St. 1907, p. 609) § 1, requiring an ordinance calling an election to recite the estimated cost of the proposed improvements for which bonds are to be issued, declaration that the estimated cost of a proposed improvement is a fixed sum is sufficient.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1920; Dec. Dig. § 918.*]

12. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 918*)—ORDINANCES—PUBLICATION—SUFFICIENCY.

Proceedings to issue municipal bonds to establish electric works are not invalid because the title to the ordinance is not published in black face type as directed by Pol. Code, § 4459.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1920; Dec. Dig. § 918.*]

13. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 935*)—BONDS—IRREGULARITIES—VALIDATION.

Any irregularities in proceedings to issue municipal bonds to establish electric works, in the omission of the proposition submitted to the electors to state when the bonds will mature, or on account of insufficient statement in the ordinance of the estimated cost of the proposed improvements, or on account of failure to publish the title of the ordinance in black face type in the official publication, are validated by Act March 21, 1911 (St. 1911, p. 421), declaring that all bond issues irregularly authorized shall be valid if they have received a two-thirds vote.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1951; Dec. Dig. § 935.*]

14. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 918*)—BONDS—WHEN DEBT CREATED.

A vote of electors to issue bonds for municipal improvements does not ipso facto create a debt, the debt arising when the bonds are issued, and become valid obligations in the hands of the holders; that is, when they are sold and delivered to the purchaser.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1923; Dec. Dig. § 918.*]

15. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 907*)—BONDS—STATUTES—RETROACTIVE EFFECT—DEBT LIMIT.

A municipal charter provision that the city debt must not exceed a specified sum, does not invalidate an issue of bonds voted in excess of that amount but not issued before an amendment fixing a new limit within which the issue falls.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1895; Dec. Dig. § 907.*]

16. EVIDENCE (§ 31*)—JUDICIAL NOTICE—AMENDMENT OF MUNICIPAL CHARTERS.

An amendment of the Los Angeles charter has the effect of law, and is a matter of judicial knowledge.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 40, 41; Dec. Dig. § 31.*]

On Rehearing.17. ELECTRICITY (§ 1½*)—ELECTRIC POWER WORKS—ESTABLISHMENT BY MUNICIPALITY.

Acquisition by a city of works to supply electricity for motive power does not exceed the scope of municipal purposes for which cities may be organized under Const. art. 11, §§ 6, 8.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Electricity, Dec. Dig. § 1½.*]

18. ELECTRICITY (§ 1½*)—ELECTRIC POWER WORKS—ESTABLISHMENT OF MUNICIPALITY.

Cities have no inherent power to administer works to supply electricity to the inhabitants, the power depending upon grant from the state.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Electricity, Dec. Dig. § 1½.*]

19. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 918*)—MUNICIPAL BOND ISSUE—ACQUISITION OF WORKS—"ACQUIRE."

The word "acquire," within a proposition to issue bonds to acquire electric works, has a broad meaning, including both purchase and construction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1919-1923; Dec. Dig. § 918.*

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 1, pp. 112-114; vol. 8, p. 7562.]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Monroe, Judge.

Action by Percy H. Clark against the City of Los Angeles, and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Scarborough & Bowen, for appellant. John W. Shenk, City Atty., Lester R. Hewitt, and W. B. Mathews, for respondents.

SHAW, J. This is an action by the plaintiff as a resident and taxpayer of the city of Los Angeles, against the city, the members of the city council, the mayor, clerk, and treasurer, to enjoin them from issuing and selling certain city bonds to the amount of $3,500,000 authorized by a vote of the electors of the city at an election held for that purpose on April 19, 1910, and to declare said bonds void. A general demurrer to the complaint was sustained and thereupon judgment was given for the defendants. The plaintiff appeals.

The resolution determining that such bond issue was necessary, stated that the creation of the bonded debt was necessary for the "purpose of acquiring and constructing a certain revenue producing municipal improvement, to wit, works for generating and distributing electricity for the purpose of supplying said city and its inhabitants with light, heat and power, including the acquisition of lands, water rights, rights of way, machinery, apparatus and other property, and the construction of electric generating works, substations, transmission and distributing lines, conduits and other works necessary therefor." The ordinance calling the election stated, in the same words, the purpose for which the debt to be voted on was to be incurred. The question, as stated on the ballot, described the purpose in the same language. The vote was in favor of the proposed bond issue. The defendants intend to and will sell the bonds so authorized, unless restrained by the court.

[1] 1. The main purpose stated in the proceedings, to which the money is to be applied, is to establish, operate, and maintain electric works wherewith to supply the inhabitants of the city with electricity for private use. It is contended that the city has no power to engage in such an enterprise, or to construct or operate works for that purpose. The contention is untenable. Subdivision 7, § 2, art. 1, of the Los Angeles charter (Stats. 1889, p. 457), as amended March 12, 1909 (Stats. 1909, p. 1291), provides that: "The said corporation shall have power: (7) To provide for supplying the city and its inhabitants with water, gas and electricity, or either or any thereof, or with other means of heat, illumination or power; and to acquire or construct and to lease or operate, and to regulate the construction or operation of conduits or of railroads, or other means of transportation, and of plants and equipments for the production or transmission of gas, electricity, heat, refrigeration or power, in any of their forms, by pipes, wires or other means; and to incur a bonded indebtedness for any of such purposes."

It is difficult to perceive how the power to supply electricity to the inhabitants of the city for their private use could be conferred in clearer or more appropriate terms. There seems to be no foundation for the argument that the power of the city to produce or produce water, gas or electricity, and supply it to the inhabitants is limited by this provision to the procuring of these substances for public uses alone, such as the watering of public streets, the flushing of public sewers, the lighting of public streets and buildings, or the running of elevators in public buildings and heating the rooms therein. The statement of the proposition, in connection with the provision above quoted, is a sufficient refutation of it. The case of Hyatt v. Williams, 148 Cal. 585, 84 Pac. 41, construes the provisions of the former charter of Stockton giving that city power to provide for lighting public streets, public places, and public buildings. With respect to private uses by the inhabitants or supplying light to inhabitants at all, except such as they got by going into public places and sharing the public lights, that charter was wholly silent. The decision not only fails to support appellant's position, it inferentially suggests the contrary as the proper and obvious construction of the Los Angeles charter. The decision of the District Court of Appeal for the Third district in Cary v. Blodgett, 10 Cal. App. 463, 102 Pac. 668, is substantially on all fours with the case at bar. The case was presented to the Supreme Court by a petition for rehearing upon this point, which was refused. It holds that the statute giving power to cities of the sixth class "to acquire, own, construct, maintain and operate street railways, telephone and telegraph lines, gas and other works for light and heat" (section 862 [St. 1906, p. 898] Mun. Cor. Act), authorized such cities to erect and operate an electric light plant, and thereby supply the inhabitants of the city with electricity for private use. It is practically a decision of this court on that point. The charter of the city of Los Angeles is much more explicit on this subject than section 862 aforesaid, and it clearly gives the city the power in question.

[2] 2. It is also suggested that the proceedings must be declared void because of the provisions of subdivisions 7a and 26, of section 2, art. 1, of the charter, as amended in 1909. These subdivisions authorize the city to sell surplus water or surplus electric power, belonging to the city, to other cities, or to consumers outside of the city of Los Angeles. It is argued that this, in effect, gives the city unlimited power to engage in the business of generating and supplying electricity throughout the state, as a commercial enterprise, in the same manner and to the same extent as any public service corporation or private person might do, and that this is not a municipal purpose and the exercise of it would be beyond the power of the city as a corporation for municipal purposes, within the meaning of the Constitution (article 11, § 6), citing Low v. Marysville, 5 Cal. 214. There is nothing in the ordinance calling the election, or in the resolution of intention preceding it, which suggests that the city intends to engage in any such enterprise, or even that it intends to sell any surplus of electricity over and above that needed by the city and its inhabitants. If it should attempt to engage in the business solely as a commercial enterprise for profit its power in that behalf can be tested when the attempt is made. These proceedings will not estop any citizen or taxpayer from making the objection at that time. Furthermore, the secret or avowed intention to do either of these things, even if without authority, would have no effect on the validity of bonds authorized and issued solely for the legitimate purpose of supplying electricity to the city and its inhabitants. The fact that such business was suggested in a report of the board of public works made to the council before the proceedings to issue the bonds were begun, does not make it a part of the proceedings nor affect the validity thereof.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[3] 3. There is no force or merit in the proposition that the proposed dedication of the contemplated works and the product thereof to the purpose of supplying electric power to the inhabitants of the city for their private use is not a dedication to public use. No substantial distinction can be drawn in that respect between the general distribution of electricity for power and its distribution for light or heat, or between the general distribution of electricity for power in private business, and the general distribution of gas or water for private use. We deem it unnecessary to discuss the question.

[4] 4. It is alleged in the complaint that the city of Los Angeles has not heretofore supplied to its inhabitants electricity or any other substance for light, heat or power; that there are and for many years have been certain public service corporations engaged in the business of supplying gas and electricity to the city and to its inhabitants, in general, for light, heat and power for private and public uses and purposes; that these corporations have invested large sums of money in that business and now have much valuable property devoted thereto and necessary therefor; and that they have for that purpose availed themselves of the general grant from the state contained in section 19, art. 11, of the Constitution, of the privilege of using the public streets of said city, and have, in pursuance thereof, laid and maintained in said streets mains, pipes, conduits, poles and wires for the transmission and distribution of gas and electricity to the city and its inhabitants, and now maintain and operate the same. It is earnestly insisted that the effect of the constitutional provision is to vest in these corporations a franchise which, so far as the city is concerned, is exclusive, or, at least, that it amounts to an undertaking or promise by the state, binding upon each city, respectively, that whenever any such corporation shall have accepted the offered franchise to use the streets and shall have laid therein its pipes and conduits, or erected its wires thereon, such city shall not thereafter engage in the same business therein in competition with such corporation, or use the streets for that purpose. The question is a new one in this court.

Section 19, aforesaid, is as follows: "In any city where there are no public works owned and controlled by the municipality for supplying the same with water or artificial light, any individual, or any company duly incorporated for such purpose under and by authority of the laws of this state, shall, under the direction of the superintendent of streets, or other officer in control thereof, and under such general regulations as the municipality may prescribe for damages and indemnity for damages, have the privilege of using the public streets and thoroughfares thereof, and of laying down pipes and conduits therein, and connections therewith, so far as may be necessary for introducing into and supplying such city and its inhabitants either with gaslight or other illuminating light, or with fresh water for domestic and all other purposes, upon the condition that the municipal government shall have the right to regulate the charges thereof."

It is a general principle of construction, too well established to require discussion, that grants of franchises and special privileges by the state to private persons or corporations are to be construed most strongly in favor of the public, and that, where the privilege claimed is doubtful, nothing is to be taken by mere implication as against public rights. Charles River B. Co. v. Warren B. Co., 11 Pet. 543, 547, 9 L. Ed. 773; Helena W. Co. v. Helena, 195 U. S. 392, 25 Sup. Ct. 40, 49 L. Ed. 245; Knoxville W. Co. v. Knoxville, 200 U. S. 33, 26 Sup. Ct. 224, 50 L. Ed. 353; Mayrhofer v. Board, 89 Cal. 112, 26 Pac. 646, 23 Am. St. Rep. 451; Skelly v. School Dist., 103 Cal. 655, 37 Pac. 643; Witter v. School Dist., 121 Cal. 350, 53 Pac. 905, 66 Am. St. Rep. 33. [5] It is also a settled rule founded upon the foregoing principle, and it is conceded by appellant, that where a grant of such franchise by the state or some municipality thereof is not by its terms made an exclusive franchise, and the city in which it is to be exercised is not, by the law or ordinance granting it, forbidden or prevented from competing, then a city may establish its own works for the same purpose and engage in the same public service within the city, although it may thereby injure, or practically destroy, the business of the holder of such franchise. Knoxville W. Co. v. Knoxville, supra; Helena W. Co. v. Helena, 195 U. S. 392, 25 Sup. Ct. 40, 49 L. Ed. 245; Joplin v. Light Co., 191 U. S. 156, 24 Sup. Ct. 43, 48 L. Ed. 127; Hamilton G. Co. v. Hamilton, 146 U. S. 268, 13 Sup. Ct. 90, 36 L. Ed. 963; Skaneateles W. Co. v. Skaneateles, 184 U. S. 363, 22 Sup. Ct. 400, 46 L. Ed. 585.

[6] The express grant made by section 19 is of the privilege, franchise, or easement to place in the public streets of a city the conduits necessary or convenient for the business of supplying light or power to the city and its inhabitants. It may be accepted by any person, or by any company duly incorporated to engage in that business. The section does not declare that such franchise or easement, when accepted, shall be exclusive. It implies the contrary, for it does not confine the grant to the first person or corporation to accept it and use the streets, but extends it to "any individual or any company." See Stockton, etc., Co. v. San Joaquin Co., 148 Cal. 318, 83 Pac. 54, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 174. The debates over its passage in the constitutional convention show that it was not intended to give a monopoly to the first company, or to encourage monopolies at all, but to prevent them, so far as the right to use the streets was concerned, by conferring the right upon any competitor against an established company. People v. Stephens, 62 Cal. 235. It is true the right is not given in cities which are operating municipal works for the same purpose. But there is nothing in the terms of the section which would prevent a city from granting to an opposition company a right to establish such works, nor anything in the nature of a declaration, promise, or assurance that cities which have no such public works shall not establish such works and use the streets therefor after a private company has availed itself of the privilege granted. Under the rule stated, therefore, this section should not be construed to grant an exclusive franchise in the streets, or to prevent a city from establishing and operating such public waterworks or light works, notwithstanding the fact that private persons or corporations are using the streets in operating works of the same kind.

In the Knoxville Case the city had stipulated that it would not grant a similar franchise to any other person. Yet it was held that the city was at liberty to establish and operate municipal works, regardless of the effect thereof on the grantee of the franchise.

The other cases cited are to the same effect.

The exact point here involved was decided by the United States Circuit Court for the Southern District of California in Madera Waterworks v. Madera (C. C.) 185 Fed. 281, decided by Wellborn, J., on September 12, 1910. It was there held that after private capital has, in a city of this state where there are no municipal waterworks, laid its main and pipes in the streets in pursuance of the constitutional grant, and while it continues to operate such works, the city itself may install and operate similar works in competition with the private works. The opinion is elaborate and exhaustive and it satisfactorily establishes the proposition.

[7] The statement in section 22 of article 1, that the provisions of the Constitution are mandatory and prohibitory, does not require a different interpretation of section 19, art. 11. It refers to the effect, not to the meaning, of the constitutional provisions, and declares that they are imperative and paramount, according to their true meaning, ascertained by the rules of construction otherwise applicable thereto. Section 22, as is well known, was inserted because of certain previous decisions holding that the provisions of the Constitution of 1849 regarding the titles of legislative acts were directory and not mandatory. Washington v. Page, 4 Cal. 388; Ex parte Newman, 9 Cal. 523; Pierpont v. Crouch, 10 Cal. 315; In re Boston M. Co., 51 Cal. 626. As there is no declaration, express or implied, in section 19, that cities shall not establish competing works, and use the public streets for that purpose, there is nothing on that point to which section 22, art. 1, can be applied.

It is suggested that from the fact that the right to use the streets is offered only in cities having no municipal works, an implication or inference arises that the city shall not establish municipal works after the constitutional offer to private parties has been accepted and used. The rule above stated, that nothing is to be taken by implication against public rights, that the public authorities will not be deemed to have been deprived of rights or powers unless the intent to that effect clearly appears, is a sufficient answer to this suggestion.

[8] 5. It is argued that the proceedings are void because the question voted on included two distinct and separate objects or purposes, while the law allows but one to be submitted. Conceding, for argument's sake, that the Constitution (section 18, art. 11) and the bond act (Stats. 1907, p. 609) require that each question submitted to a vote shall specify a single object or purpose only, as the thing for which the proposed indebtedness is to be incurred, we are of the opinion that the question, as submitted, does not transgress such rule. The question, as printed on the ballot, was as follows: "Shall the city of Los Angeles incur a bonded debt of $3,500,000 for the purpose of acquiring and constructing a certain revenue producing municipal improvement, to wit, works for generating and distributing electricity for the purpose of supplying said city and its inhabitants with light, heat and power, including the acquisition of lands, water rights, rights of way, machinery, apparatus and other property and the construction of electric generating works, substations, transmission and distributing lines, conduits and other works necessary therefor?" This states but a single object and purpose, namely, the establishment of the municipal improvement described. In order to accomplish this purpose and secure this object many things were, of course, necessary to be done, and they are also stated in general terms in the question. But by the question stated the money obtained from the proposed bonds is not to be used for any of the physical objects mentioned in the more detailed description, unless they are necessary for the principal purpose and object, that is, the works for supplying the city and its inhabitants with electricity. The words "acquiring and constructing" do not express the dual purpose of acquiring one improvement of this kind and constructing another, with the money obtained. They indicate the single purpose of acquiring all the property that may be found necessary for the proposed works, even including water rights, and constructing works with said property. To hold that the city must submit in one question the proposition to construct the electrical works and in another question, to be voted on separately, the proposition to acquire the property necessary to be used in such construction, would be to hold that the people might by one vote authorize the construction of the plant, and by the other defeat it by refusing authority to buy the property necessary for that purpose. It is practically imperative that the question put should include in one proposition everything necessary for the improvement.

[9] There is no provision of the bond act, or of the Constitution, which requires that the question shall state the precise location of the works to be provided out of the fund voted, or that they should be within the city limits. In the nature of things the construction of waterworks would require a large part of them to be situated outside of the city limits, and the city authorities must be given a wide discretion as to the location of public works in many cases, even after the money is obtained on the bonds. The question states the purpose with sufficient detail and certainty.

[10] 6. It is objected that the proposition submitted does not state when the bonds shall become payable. We find nothing in the Constitution or act aforesaid which requires the time of maturity of the bonds to be stated in the question voted on, or to be decided by the vote of the people. Section 2 of the act provides that the city council shall determine that question, and it plainly contemplates that it may be done either before or after the vote of the people is taken on the issuance of the bonds, and without action thereon by the people.

[11] 7. The objection that the council, before calling the election, did not make an estimate of the cost of the proposed improvement, is not sustained by the record. Section 1 of the bond act requires that the ordinance calling the election shall recite "the estimated cost of the proposed public improvements," and the provisions of the section authorize a bond issue when the cost of the improvement is too great to be paid out of ordinary annual revenues of the city. Both the original resolution of intention to establish the improvement and the ordinance calling the election declare that the estimated cost of the proposed improvement was $3,500,000. This was a sufficient compliance with the statute. It will be presumed from this recital, that the council did previously make the estimate stated.

[12] 8. Another objection is that the publication of the ordinance was insufficient because it was not preceded by words in black face type describing in general terms the purport or character of the notice intended to be given, as directed by section 4459 of the Political Code. See Derby v. Modesto, 104 Cal. 523, 38 Pac. 900. The ordinance was preceded by its title, which clearly described its purport. We do not regard the fact that it was not printed in black face type of sufficient importance to warrant a holding that the proceedings were thereby invalidated, even if the section cited was applicable to the election notice in question, which we do not decide.

[13] With regard to the points numbered 6, 7 and 8, it may be further remarked that even if the proceedings in the particulars mentioned had been irregular as claimed, they would be validated by the act of the Legislature of March 21, 1911, chapter 234, statutes of 1911. That act expressly declares that all bond issues irregularly authorized by any municipality in the state shall be valid, notwithstanding such irregularity or defect, if they have, at the election called for that purpose, received a two-thirds vote of the electors voting thereon. Chase v. Trout, 146 Cal. 358, 80 Pac. 81.

[14] 9. Lastly, it is contended that the proposed bond issue is invalid because the amount thereof exceeds the limit of indebtedness allowed by the city charter. It appears that at the same election, and by the same ordinance, there was submitted to the voters of the city a proposition to issue bonds to the amount of $3,000,000 to defray the cost of certain harbor improvements which the city proposed to make at Wilmington harbor, within the city, and that this proposition also carried. At the time of the election the charter of the city provided that the indebtedness of the city, exclusive of debts for waterworks, sewers and storm drains, "must not exceed the sum of five million dollars." The indebtedness previously existing, exclusive of that for waterworks, sewers, and storms drains, was $1,324,600. The bonds for the electric works would bring the indebtedness up to $4,824,600, which is a little below the limit. But if the harbor bonds are added, the total amount would exceed the limit. As both were carried by the people at the same election, it would be difficult to say that one preceded the other, or that the people preferred one to the other, so as to determine which should be declared valid in preference to the other. There were 406 more votes in favor of the electric works' bonds, and 300 less votes against them, than upon the harbor bond proposition, in a total of 14,041. We are not prepared to say that this would suffice to make the electric works' bonds valid and the harbor bonds void. We find it unnecessary, in view of a subsequent amendment of the city charter, to determine this question.

On March 6, 1911, an amendment of the charter on this subject was submitted to the voters of the city and ratified by them, and on March 20, 1911, the same was duly approved by the Legislature. This amendment provides that for the purpose of acquiring, constructing or completing electric light and power works, and certain other specified purposes, the city may incur an indebtedness not exceeding 12 per centum of the assessed value of all taxable real and personal property within the city, in addition to 3 per cent. allowed for certain other purposes. It is stipulated by the parties, as a fact to be considered in the decision of this appeal, that the total assessed value of the taxable property within the city in the year 1910 was $289,279,927, and that for the year 1911 it was $332,884,924. This places the proposed bonded debt far below the limit allowed by the amendment. The vote of the electors upon a proposition to issue bonds for municipal improvements does not ipso facto create a debt against the city to the amount authorized. The indebtedness of the city is not thereby increased. The increase occurs when the bonds are issued and become valid obligations in the hands of the holders, that is when they are sold and delivered to the purchaser.

[15] The provision of the charter, prior to the amendment, was that the indebtedness "must not exceed" five million dollars. It is obvious that this provision has not been violated, since the bonds here involved have not been issued, and the city indebtedness has not been increased by reason thereof. It still remains only $1,324,600. From this it follows that if, at the time the bonds are issued and become lawful debts, they do not raise the indebtedness above the legal limit, as then established, they will not be deemed void because of the fact that at the time the vote authorizing them was taken, the amount voted would have exceeded the then existing limit. The authorities so declare. Frost v. Central City, 134 Ky. 434, 120 S. W. 367; Austin v. Valle (Tex. Civ. App.) 71 S. W. 414; Dudley v. Lake, 80 Fed. 677, 26 C. C. A. 82; Corning v. Meade Co., 102 Fed. 57, 42 C. C. A. 154; Board v. National L. I. Co., 94 Fed. 328, 36 C. C. A. 278; Lake Co. v. Sutliff, 97 Fed. 281, 33 C. C. A. 167. The effect of the amendment, therefore, is to raise the limit existing at the time the vote was taken and to make the bonds valid if, at the time they are issued, they do not then increase the debt beyond the increased amount allowed. If the case had been submitted on appeal prior to the amendment of the charter aforesaid, the condition of the record at that time, and the then existing limit, would have required a decision with respect to the amount of the respective issues that could be considered valid. [16] But the amendment of the charter has the effect of law and is a matter of judicial knowledge. The stipulation of the fact as to the assessed valuations enables us to decide the case according to the law as it now exists and thereby to avoid the necessity for further litigation concerning the validity of the bond issues. They have not been issued and are not existing debts of the city. They do not exceed the present limit of indebtedness, and hence, so far as that objection is concerned, they are valid.

This concludes all the points urged in the briefs. We find no ground for declaring the bonds invalid.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SLOSS, J.; MELVIN, J.; LORIGAN, J.; HENSHAW, J.

On Rehearing.

Scarborough & Bowen, for appellant. John W. Shenk, City Atty., Lester R. Hewitt, and W. B. Mathews, for respondent. J. W. McKinley and Edward G. Kuster, amici curiae.

PER CURIAM. A petition for rehearing has been presented by certain persons as amici curiae, on behalf of corporations engaged in supplying electricity to the inhabitants of Los Angeles. We briefly notice the arguments therein not considered in the opinion heretofore filed.

[17] 1. It is contended that the business of supplying electricity for motive power is a private business not within the scope of municipal purposes for which, under the Constitution, municipal corporations may be organized as provided in sections 6 and 8 of article 11. We can see no ground for any distinction in this respect between the use of electricity for power and its use for heat and light, for which purposes counsel admit that cities may distribute it if authorized by law. It has come to be in common use in homes for the operation of light machines such as sewing machines and suction cleaners, and its supply for this use is also conceded to be a proper municipal purpose. The fact that it may also be furnished to persons desiring to apply it to larger machines for manufacturing or other business purposes is no sound reason for holding such distribution to be without the scope of municipal powers. The business of supplying water for irrigation, or for the watering of stock, is a purely business purpose, as distinguished from domestic use, but it has always been recognized as a public service in which cities may engage. Electricity for power comes within the same category. The Legislature has recognized this fact, and has granted the power of eminent domain to persons and corporations proposing to supply electricity for general use for power. Code Civ. Proc. § 1238. The following from the opinion of this court in Platt v. San Francisco, 158 Cal. 74, 110 Pac. 307, is applicable generally to all such purposes: "There is no provision of our state Constitution which either expressly or by implication forbids the acquisition, ownership, or operation of any such public utilities by a municipality, or prohibits the granting to a municipality of the power to acquire, own, and operate them."

2. With respect to the proposition that section 19 of article 11 of the Constitution, by necessary implication, forbids the granting of power to cities to engage in such public service where there are private systems of like kind already in operation, little need be said in addition to what we have said in the previous opinion. The purpose of the section was to prevent monopolies in the use of the streets for such purposes. It does not purport to grant the right to engage in the business of furnishing water, gas, or electricity for general use. It presupposes such power or right, and it merely gives the company or person having it the privilege of using the public streets as a way for its conduits.

[18] Cities have no inherent power to engage in administering such public utilities. They obtain such power by grant from the state. There is nothing in the language of section 19, or in the object which it was intended to accomplish, namely, to prevent the giving of the exclusive use of the streets to private persons or companies, which indicates that it was intended by that section to qualify or limit the power of the Legislature to confer upon cities the power to engage in such business, or any business properly within the scope of municipal purposes.

3. In support of the proposition that the question, as stated on the ballot used at the election, included two distinct and separate purposes, the petition cites Leavenworth v. Wilson, 69 Kan. 74, 76 Pac. 400, Elyria, etc., Co. v. Elyria, 57 Ohio St. 374, 49 N. E. 335, and Neacy v. Milwaukee, 142 Wis. 590, 126 N. W. 8, to the effect that a proposal to issue bonds to "purchase and erect," or "to purchase or erect," public works, is a proposal for a dual purpose. These decisions merely represent one side of a conflict of authority. The following cases hold the contrary: Farmers', etc., Co. v. Sioux Falls, 136 Fed. 732, 69 C. C. A. 373; Nash v. Council Bluffs (C. C.) 174 Fed. 182; Thomas v. Grand Junction, 13 Colo. App. 90, 56 Pac. 665; State v. Allen, 178 Mo. 555, 77 S. W. 868; State v. Allen, 183 Mo. 283, 82 S. W. 103. In this state the more liberal rule has been followed. People v. Counts, 89 Cal. 15, 26 Pac. 612; Oakland v. Thompson, 151 Cal. 576, 91 Pac. 387. It is not correct to say that the expression, "acquiring and constructing a certain revenue producing municipal improvement," particularly described, is necessarily a statement of a dual purpose.

[19] The word "acquire" has a broad meaning, including both purchase and construction. The expression does not indicate the purpose of acquiring two systems, one by purchase, the other by construction. In connection with the context, it means the acquisition of but one system, including the purchase of such property and the erection of such structures as may be necessary to accomplish that purpose.

The petition for rehearing is denied.

(160 Cal. 257)

FIRTH v. MAROVICH et al. (L. A. 2,642.)
(Supreme Court of California. June 21, 1911.)

1. DEEDS (§ 171*)—RESTRICTIVE COVENANTS—VALIDITY.

A condition in a deed providing that no building, except a private residence costing at least $1,500, and located not less than 20 feet from the front line of the lot, shall be erected, and that no barn, shed, or other building shall be located closer than 90 feet to such front line, is valid and enforceable by the grantor, so long as he continues to own any part of the tract for the benefit of which the restrictions were exacted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. §§ 537-542; Dec. Dig. § 171.*]

2. DEEDS (§§ 147, 149*)—CONDITIONS—REPUGNANCY—VALIDITY—RESTRAINT ON ALIENATION.

A condition subsequent in a deed forfeiting the title to the grantor in case of breach, such as breach of a building restriction, is not repugnant to the granting clause, and does not infringe the code prohibition against restraints on alienation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. §§ 475, 479; Dec. Dig. §§ 147, 149.*]

3. DEEDS (§ 171*)—BUILDING RESTRICTIONS—CONSTRUCTION.

Building restrictions in deeds are to be construed strictly against the grantor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. §§ 537-542; Dec. Dig. § 171.*]

4. DEEDS (§ 171*)—BUILDING RESTRICTIONS—EFFECT.

A restriction in a deed against erection of any building, except a private residence costing not less than $1,500, and located not less than 20 feet from the front lot line, with customary outbuildings, and against erection of any barn, shed, or other building closer than 90 feet to the front lot line, does not permit erection of a residence built of rough boards, batted, and costing only $800, though it was located more than 90 feet from the lot line.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. §§ 537-542; Dec. Dig. § 171.*]

5. WORDS AND PHRASES—"OUTBUILDING" OR "OUTHOUSE."

An "outbuilding" or an "outhouse" is a building adjoining or belonging to a dwelling house; "outbuilding" comprehends something used in connection with a main building.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 6, pp. 5118, 5119-5121.]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; George H. Hut-ton, Judge.

Action by Emil Firth against Mary Lena Marovich and others. From a judgment of nonsuit and from an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Sheldon Borden and George H. Kelch, for appellant. R. J. Adcock and Haas, Garrett & Dunnigan, for respondents.

SLOSS, J. On January 21, 1907, the plaintiff conveyed to Charles Scherer lot 2 in Walnut Park, in the city of Los Angeles, by a grant deed containing the following provisions: "This conveyance is made and said real property is sold subject to the following conditions: That no building whatever except a private residence with the customary outbuildings, including a private stable, shall be erected, placed or permitted on said premises or any part thereof, and that such building shall be used as a private residence only, and shall cost, and be reasonably worth, not less than fifteen hundred (1,500.00) dollars, and shall be located not less than twenty (20) feet from the front or street line of said lot, namely, on Vernon avenue, and it is further agreed that no barn or shed, or other building shall be built or located closer than ninety (90) feet from the front or street line of said lot. That any breach of the foregoing conditions, or any of them, occurring after the delivery of this deed, shall have the effect of forfeiting the title of the grantee and his assigns, and thereupon the title to said real property shall revert to the grantor."

The deed was duly recorded. Subsequently Scherer conveyed the lot to the defendant Mary Lena Marovich. The purpose of this action is to compel a reconveyance to plaintiff, who claims that the title conveyed by him has become forfeited by breach of the condition above quoted. Civ. Code, § 1109. At the trial, the court, upon motion of defendant, granted a nonsuit, and plaintiff appeals from the resulting judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

The complaint alleges, in addition to the facts already stated, that, at the time of the conveyance to Scherer, the plaintiff was, and that he is, the owner of other lots near the one in question, that said lots are in a residence district, and that their value is affected by the character of the improvements erected in their vicinity. Before and after the sale to Scherer, it is alleged the plaintiff made sales of some others of such lots by deeds containing conditions similar to those above set forth. These conditions were inserted pursuant to a general plan of building up said locality, and for the benefit of the lots and of purchasers thereof. At the time of the conveyance to Scherer, and of his conveyance to Marovich, there was no building upon lot 2, but shortly after defendant Mary Lena Marovich went into possession of said lot she erected thereon, without plaintiff's consent, a building to be used, and which ever since has been and now is used, as a dwelling, the cost and the reasonable value whereof does not exceed $800. Said building is unsightly and a detriment to plaintiff's remaining lots. Upon learning of the nature and cost of said building, he notified the defendant Mary Lena Marovich that it must be removed, but she has refused to comply, and has persistently used said building as a dwelling. Plaintiff has also demanded a reconveyance and the possession of said lot, which demand has been refused.

The answer admits many of the allegations of the complaint. It denies that the value of other lots is affected by the character of the improvements; denies, for want of information, that plaintiff sold other lots on similar conditions, or that such conditions were inserted pursuant to a general scheme, or for the benefit of the lots sold, or of other lots. The answer expressly admits the erection by defendant Mary Lena Marovich of a building which cost and was worth not more than $800, "to be used, and which ever since has been, and now is, used as a dwelling." (The words "to be used" in this part of the answer were subsequently, by leave of court, stricken out, but the amendment had no effect. The allegation of the complaint that the building was erected "to be used" as a dwelling was still admitted by the failure of the defendants to deny it.) The answer also contained a plea of estoppel, which is immaterial to the discussion of the present appeal, although it may become important upon a new trial.

The evidence introduced by plaintiff tended to support the controverted allegations of his complaint. Firth himself testified that he had bought and subdivided the tract, including lot 2; that he had placed similar restrictions in conveyances of other lots in the tract; that houses are built upon two-thirds of the lots of the tract; and that each of said houses (with the exception of that on lot 2), is worth at least $1,500. On none of the other lots is there any outbuilding worth less than $1,500, unless there be on the same lot a residence costing $1,500 or more.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

There was testimony that the building complained of (which was admitted to be over 100 feet back from the street line) was a one-story structure, covering a space of 24 by 26 feet, and built of rough boards, battened. It was partitioned into rooms, and contained a kitchen with a sink and other conveniences. It was furnished and occupied as a residence, and had been so occupied from the time it was built until shortly before the trial, a period which, it may well be inferred from the record, was between one and two years. In this state of the evidence, the defendants moved for a nonsuit on the ground "that there is no violation of this restriction in the deed. It has not been shown."

[1] The motion should not have been granted. It is not open to question that building restrictions of the kind contained in the deed from plaintiff to Scherer are valid and enforceable at the suit of the grantor, so long as he continues to own any part of the tract for the benefit of which the restrictions were exacted. Quatman v. McCray, 128 Cal. 285, 60 Pac. 855; Sanborn v. Rice, 129 Mass. 387; Evans v. Foss, 194 Mass. 513, 80 N. E. 587, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1039; Meigs v. Milligan, 177 Pa. 66, 35 Atl. 600; Boyden v. Roberts, 131 Wis. 659, 111 N. W. 701.

[2] A condition subsequent forfeiting the title to the grantor in case of breach is not repugnant to the granting clause, nor does it come within the terms of the Code sections prohibiting or limiting restraints on alienation. The power of alienation is not restrained. The grantee, Scherer, was at perfect liberty, at all times, to convey what title he had. In fact, he has conveyed it. But his title was limited to that of an estate subject to divestiture upon condition subsequent, and he could not enlarge this estate by conveying to a purchaser taking with notice. In view of the language of the clause providing for a forfeiture, there is no force in the respondents' contention that the clause in question should be construed as a personal covenant, rather than a condition subsequent.

[3] While restraints of this character are to be construed strictly as against the grantor (Civ. Code, § 1442; Rec. Dist. v. Van Loben Sels, 145 Cal. 181, 78 Pac. 638), they must be enforced when a case coming clearly within their terms is shown. Upon the testimony offered by the plaintiff, a finding that the structure erected on the lot did not comply with the requirements of the condition would, at the least, have been justified. The meaning and intent of the restrictive clause is plain. The purchaser is required, if he desires to put improvements upon the lot, to erect a residence, which shall cost and be worth not less than $1,500. Such residence may be accompanied by the "customary outbuildings, including a private stable." There is no provision governing the cost of such outbuildings. The residence is to be not less than 20 feet from the street line. The provision that "such building shall be used as a private residence only" of course refers to the main building, not to the stable or other outhouses.

[4] So far there is no room for doubt. The respondents point, however, to this clause, "and it is further agreed that no barn or shed or other building shall be built or located closer than ninety (90) feet from the front or street line of the building," and argue that it permits the erection, at a distance of 90 feet or more from the street line, of any building, whatever its cost, and for whatever use. This is an entirely inadmissible construction of the language. In view of the earlier provisions that no building, except a residence with outbuildings, should be erected on the premises, or any part thereof, the words "or other building" plainly have reference to the outbuildings permitted at the outset of the paragraph. This meaning is rendered more evident by the fact that this phrase is used in connection with and following the words "barn or shed." The effect of this final provision, reading it as a part of the entire restrictive clause, is to require outbuildings to be set back 90 feet from the street line, while the main residence building may be built at a distance of only 20 feet from the street.

[5] The word "outbuilding," or "outhouse," has been defined as "a building adjoining or belonging to a dwelling house." Bouv. L. D. "It is the subserviency of it to the mansion house that gives it the denomination of an outhouse." State v. Brooks, 4 Conn. 446. An outbuilding is "something which is to be used in connection with a main building." Blakemore v. Stanley, 159 Mass. 6, 33 N. E. 689. The structure erected by Mrs. Marovich was not an outbuilding. It was not an adjunct to any main building. So far as the evidence and the admissions of the pleadings show, it was built for no other purpose and put to no other use than that of a dwelling. Viewed as a residence, it did not comply with the requirements of the deed as to cost and value.

We are not called upon to decide whether it would be a violation of the conditions in this deed for the grantee to erect a stable or other outbuilding before constructing his residence, and to live in such outbuilding pending the construction of a residence. That question is not presented here. There is nothing to indicate that the structure complained of was designed or adapted for anything but a dwelling, or for any use to which an outbuilding could be put, or that the erection of a further residence was at any time contemplated. At any rate, the evidence would certainly have warranted a finding that it was a dwelling, and that alone. The right to erect a residence costing not less than $1,500, with customary outbuildings, did not authorize the erection of a residence costing no more than $800.

It must therefore be held that the plaintiff is entitled to a new trial.

The judgment and the order appealed from are reversed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.

160 Cal. 197

BANNERMAN v. BOYLE, Auditor.
(S. F. 5,758.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 8, 1911.)

1. STATUTES (§ 184*)—CONSTRUCTION—LEGISLATIVE INTENT.

The court, in construing an ambiguous statute, must consider the evil to be cured and the object to be accomplished.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. § 262; Dec. Dig. § 184.*]

2. OFFICERS (§ 95*)—DE FACTO OFFICERS—RIGHT TO SALARY.

Pol. Code, § 936, as amended in 1891 (St. 1891, p. 28), providing that when the title to an office is contested no warrant can thereafter be drawn for salary until the proceedings have been finally determined, but the provision shall not apply to any party holding a certificate of election or commission of office does not change the rule that a de facto officer cannot compel the public disbursing officer to pay salary, for the statute does not enact any rule governing a case where there is no contest.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Officers, Cent. Dig. §§ 134-139; Dec. Dig. § 95.*]

3. OFFICERS (§ 95*)—DE FACTO OFFICERS—RIGHT TO SALARY.

Pol. Code, § 937, as amended in 1891 (St. 1891, p. 28), providing that as soon as proceedings are instituted to contest an office the clerk of the court shall certify the facts to the officers required to draw warrants or pay salaries, etc., does not by implication declare that an intruder in a public office is entitled to the salary where no action concerning his title is begun, since positive legislation is necessary to change the established rule that a de facto officer cannot compel the payment of his salary.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Officers, Cent. Dig. §§ 134-139; Dec. Dig. § 95.*]

4. MANDAMUS (§ 107*)—COMPELLING PAYMENT OF OFFICIAL SALARY—QUESTIONS REVIEWABLE.

The court in mandamus to compel the payment of salary to a public officer must determine whether or not plaintiff holds the title to the office during the time for which he claims his salary.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Cent. Dig. §§ 225-234; Dec. Dig. § 107.*]

5. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 155*)—OFFICERS—REMOVAL.

Under San Francisco city charter (St. 1899, p. 317), providing for a board of education composed of school directors appointed by the mayor, empowering the mayor to remove for cause any appointed officer, requiring the mayor suspending an elected officer to present charges against him to the board of supervisors, and when removing an appointed officer to notify the board of supervisors thereof, the mayor's power to remove any appointed officer for cause is practically confined to the members of the several boards appointed by him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 155.*]

6. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 159*)—OFFICERS—APPOINTMENT—REMOVAL.

Under San Francisco charter (St. 1899, p. 317), empowering the mayor to remove for cause any appointed officer and requiring the mayor, on removing an appointed officer, to notify the board of supervisors thereof with a statement of the cause therefor, the mayor may only remove an officer for cause after notice and hearing, and the act of the mayor in merely giving the board of supervisors notice of the removal of an appointed officer with a statement of the cause therefor, but without having given notice thereof to the officer or an opportunity for a hearing, is insufficient to effect a removal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 159.*]

In Bank. Application for writ of mandate by Thomas R. Bannerman against Thomas F. Boyle as Auditor of the City and County of San Francisco. Peremptory writ issued.

Chas. S. Wheeler (J. F. Bowie and Thomas E. Hayden, of counsel), for petitioner. Edward F. Moran, Garret W. McEnerney and Andrew F. Burke, for respondent.

SHAW, J. This is an original proceeding in this court for a writ of mandate to compel the defendant to audit and approve plaintiff's demands against the city and county of San Francisco for his monthly salary as member of the board of education, for each month from March, 1910, to December, 1910, inclusive. The principal defense is that the plaintiff, during that period, had no right or title to the office, but was a mere usurper. It is conceded that he was in exclusive possession of the office as a de facto officer, and performed all the duties of the office during the time for which he claims his salary. The plaintiff claims that this gives him the right to the salary, regardless of the want of title, or of the fact that another person held title to the office.

Prior to the amendment of 1891 (St. 1891, p. 28) to sections 936 and 937 of the Political Code, it was the settled law of this state that, although no private person could question the title of one holding a public office and the official acts of a mere de facto officer were valid, as far as private rights affected thereby were concerned, nevertheless, as a de facto officer, he was not legally entitled to the salary fixed by law to be paid out of public funds, and he could not compel the public disbursing officer to pay such salary. The fact that he was not lawfully entitled to the office was a complete defense to any action or proceeding by him to compel payment to him of the salary thereof out of the public treasury. Dorsey v. Smyth, 28 Cal. 25; Stratton v. Oulton, 28 Cal. 51; Carroll v. Siebenthaler, 37 Cal. 195; People v. Potter, 63 Cal. 128; Burke v. Edgar, 67 Cal. 184, 7 Pac. 488; Ward v. Marshall, 96 Cal. 155, 30 Pac. 1113, 31 Am. St. Rep. 198; Adams v. Doyle, 139 Cal. 680, 73 Pac. 582. This is also the general rule in other states.

Mechem on Officers, § 331; Throop on Public Officers, § 517. "In any action by a person claiming to be a public officer for the fees or compensation given by law, his title to the office is in issue, and if that is defective and another has the real right, although not in possession, the plaintiff cannot recover. Actual incumbency merely gives no right to the salary or compensation." Dolan v. Mayor, 68 N. Y. 279, 23 Am. Rep. 168.

The plaintiff claims that this rule was changed and the contrary rule established by the amendment of sections 936 and 937 aforesaid. The amended section 936 is as follows, the amendment consisting of the proviso: "936. When the title of the incumbent to any office in this state is contested by proceedings instituted in any court for that purpose, no warrant can thereafter be drawn or paid for any part of his salary until such proceedings have been finally determined; provided, however, that this section shall not be construed to apply to any party to a contest or proceeding now pending or hereafter instituted, who holds the certificate of election or commission of office and discharges the duties of the office; but such party shall receive the salary of such office, the same as if no such contest or proceeding was pending."

Section 937 is as follows: "As soon as such proceedings are instituted, the clerk of the court in which they are pending must certify the facts to the officers whose duty it would otherwise be to draw such warrant or pay such salary, except in the cases included in the proviso to the foregoing section." The amendment of 1891 to this section merely added the words stating the exception.

[1, 2] In construing an ambiguous statute, the evil to be cured and the object to be accomplished are proper matters for consideration and often point clearly to the true meaning and application of the act. The provisions of sections 936 and 937, as they stood before 1891, were first enacted as statute law in 1860 (St. 1860, c. 140) but that act applied only to state officers. The rule generally prevailing in other states was that payment to the de facto officer would protect the public against a second payment to the rightful claimant, whose sole remedy was an action against the usurper. Chubbuck v. Wilson, 151 Cal. 164, 90 Pac. 524. But in Dorsey v. Smyth, supra, decided in 1865, and Carroll v. Siebenthaler, supra, decided in 1869, it was held that the rightful claimant of a county office was entitled to payment of the salary from the public funds, although it had been previously paid to an opposing claimant who had been in possession of the office and had performed the duties thereof during the litigation between them concerning the title thereto. The original Code sections, in 1872, to remedy this condition of the law, extended the statute of 1860 to local public officers. The object was to prevent the intruder into any office, the title to which was in litigation, from receiving the salary accruing during the litigation. It is clear that they did not apply, except where there was an action involving the title to the office, and only while it was pending.

If section 936, prior to the amendment of 1891, did not apply to an intruder whose title was not in litigation, but was merely a provision for withholding the salary accruing during litigation over the title, so that it might be afterwards paid to the person who finally prevailed in the action, it is manifest that the proviso added by the amendment does not enlarge its application or extend it to cases where no action has been instituted concerning it. The first clause of the proviso declares, in effect, that the section does not apply to a contest or proceeding, if the party who holds the certificate of election or commission, also discharges the duties of the office. It restricts the application of the entire section to the extent of the exception stated therein.

It is urged that the last clause of the proviso is broader, and that it enacts a general rule to the effect that if the person who discharges the duties of an office has the regular evidence of title thereto, he shall receive the compensation fixed by law, although there has been no action or proceeding to oust him or determine his title. There is no language indicating that this was the intent of the Legislature. The clause does not so declare. It says: "But such party shall receive the salary of such office, the same as if no such contest or proceeding was pending." This is not a declaration that if no proceeding or action to oust him or contest his title is pending, the de facto officer with color of title shall receive the salary thereof, whether the title he claims is valid or invalid. The use of the word "party," in connection with the preceding part of the section, limits its application to cases where a suit is pending to determine the title. It does not enact any rule applicable to a case where there is no contest. It merely declares that, if there is a contest, the party with the regular evidence of title shall have the same right that he would have if there was no contest, and is silent as to what his right would be in the latter case. The language of the entire section shows that the proviso was not intended to apply to this rule at all, except in the specified case where one party to litigation over the title to an office performs its duties and holds the regular color of title; that is, a certificate of election, or a commission. Under the terms of the section, if the claimant who obtains possession of the office and acts as such during the contest against him by the rightful owner is the one who does not hold the certificate or commission, the salary is withheld pending the contest. No right is given to such an incumbent by the section. The section does not declare what shall be done with the salary so withheld in such a case, if the rightful owner prevail. That question is to be decided by reference to the general rule aforesaid that the right to the salary goes with the title to the office. Not being within the exception made by section 936, the general rule controls, the intruder could not get any of the salary, and the person who held the certificate or commission finally adjudged to be valid, would be entitled to receive it, although he did not discharge the duties of the office.

[3] Counsel for plaintiff also contend that the clause in section 937, requiring the clerk to give notice of the institution of the action to the officers "whose duty it would otherwise be" to pay the salary, by implication declares that an intruder is entitled to the salary if no action concerning his title is begun. Positive legislation changing established rules of law is not made in this manner. The clause in question alludes merely to the fact that, but for the notice required, the warrants would in due course be drawn to the person appearing to be lawfully entitled to the office. It is obvious that it was not designed to, and does not, direct that the warrants must be drawn to the actual incumbent, regardless of his right.

There is nothing contrary to these conclusions in Wilson v. Fisher, 140 Cal. 188, 73 Pac. 850, Anderson v. Browning, 140 Cal. 222, 73 Pac. 986, Tout v. Blair, 3 Cal. App. 180, 84 Pac. 671, Merkley v. Williams, 3 Cal. App. 268, 84 Pac. 1015, or Chubbuck v. Wilson, 151 Cal. 162, 90 Pac. 524, cited by plaintiff's counsel. None of them involved the question here presented. They decide several of the questions which arise when there is a litigation to determine the title to an office, but nothing whatever concerning the withholding of payment, where no action or proceeding to determine such title has been instituted.

[4] There is some discussion in the briefs upon the proposition that the question of title cannot be raised in a suit for mandamus, referring to the well-known rule that mandamus will not lie to try the title to an office. This rule has no application. Rival claimants, it is true, cannot thus try their title. But this is not an action between rival claimants. It is an action by one asserting that he is the de jure officer to compel another public officer, not the claimant, to perform a duty pertaining to his office; that is, to audit and approve the plaintiff's demand for the salary. It is clearly within the terms of the statute authorizing mandamus. The court can try and decide any question in issue. It has the same power, in mandamus, to determine the truth of the allegation that the plaintiff holds the legal title to the office, as it has to determine whether or not the defendant Boyle is the auditor, and whether or not he has refused to approve plaintiff's demand. It has been recognized as a legitimate issue for determination in mandamus. Morton v. Broderick, 118 Cal. 474, 50 Pac. 644; Davenport v. Los Angeles, 146 Cal. 508, 80 Pac. 684; McKannay v. Horton, 151 Cal. 711, 91 Pac. 593, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 661, 121 Am. St. Rep. 146.

We conclude that the title may be questioned, under the facts assumed, by the auditor in a mandamus proceeding against him. This makes it necessary to determine whether or not plaintiff held the title to the office during the time for which he claims his salary.

The San Francisco charter provides that the board of education shall be composed of four school directors appointed by the mayor, whose terms of office shall be four years, so classified that the term of one of them expires each year. Stats. 1899, p. 317. Bannerman was appointed in 1909 to hold the remainder of an unexpired term ending on January 8, 1911. On February 15, 1910, the mayor without any notice or hearing, removed, or attempted to remove, him from said office, and appointed James E. Power to fill the vacancy assumed to have been caused thereby. Bannerman refused to vacate the office, and denies the validity of the act of removal.

[5] It is claimed that the charter of San Francisco confers this power upon the mayor. The provisions of the charter concerning the removal of officers are found in article 16 (Stats. 1899, pp. 361, 362). Section 18 is as follows: "Any elected officer, except supervisor, may be suspended by the mayor and removed by the supervisors for cause; and any appointed officer may be removed by the mayor for cause. The mayor shall appoint some person to discharge the duties of the office during the period of such suspension."

Section 19 provides that when the mayor suspends an elected officer, he must present charges against him to the board of supervisors and serve them upon the officer suspended, and that, after a hearing before the board, that body may remove him. There are additional provisions concerning appointed officers, as follows:

"Sec. 20. When the mayor shall remove an appointed officer from office, he shall immediately notify the board of supervisors of such removal, and furnish it with a statement of the cause therefor, which statement shall be entered in the record of its proceedings."

"Sec. 21. Unless otherwise provided by law or by this charter, any officer, board or department authorized to appoint any deputy, clerk, assistant or employé, shall have the right to remove any person so appointed."

The charter authorizes the mayor to appoint a secretary, an usher, a stenographer and a typewriter, and provides that they shall hold their positions "at the pleasure of the mayor." Some of the other principal officers have authority to appoint and remove at pleasure a secretary or other confidential officer. The only officers except the personal attachés above mentioned, who are to be appointed by the mayor, are the members of the several boards which control the respective departments of the municipal government, the board of education being one of them. There are eight of these boards. All other subordinate officers, deputies, clerks, and employes are chosen by the respective boards, or by the elected officers under whose supervision they serve, and the authority to remove them is, by section 21 aforesaid, lodged in the person or board which appoints them. We do not refer here to those who compose the classified civil service, concerning whose tenure and removal elaborate special provisions are made. This recital of the provisions of the charter clearly shows that the application of the provision of section 18 giving the mayor power to remove any appointed officer "for cause" practically confined to the members of the several boards appointed by him. It remains to inquire how this power may lawfully be exercised, whether by a summary removal without notice or hearing, or only by formulating the charges constituting the "cause," giving the officer notice thereof and affording him an opportunity to be heard in his defense, before conviction and removal.

[6] Upon this question the great weight of authority is to the effect that where an officer is appointed for a fixed term and it is provided that he may be removed during the term "for cause," without other qualifying words, such removal cannot be made except after notice and a hearing. Mr. Throop states it thus: "The doctrine that an officer can be removed only upon notice, and after a hearing, where the tenure of his office is during good behavior, or until removal for cause, or for a definite term, subject to be removed for cause, * * * may be regarded as settled law in this country." Throop on Public Officers, § 364. Mr. Mechem says: "Where the appointment or election is made for a definite term or during good behavior, and the removal is to be for cause, it is now clearly established by the great weight of authority that the power of removal cannot, except by clear statutory authority, be exercised without notice and hearing, but that the existence of the cause, for which the power is to be exercised, must first be determined after notice has been given to the officer of the charges made against him and he has been given an opportunity to be heard in his defense." Mechem on Officers, § 454. The same is said to be the rule by Mr. Dillon. Dillon, Mun. Corp. (4th Ed.) § 250. A large number of decisions are cited in support of this doctrine. The following apply the doctrine to cases like the present one, where the tenure is for a fixed term: Ham v. Boston, 142 Mass. 95, 7 N. E. 540; State

v. St. Louis, 90 Mo. 22, 1 S. W. 757; Field v. Com., 32 Pa. 484; Board v. Darrow, 13 Colo. 468, 22 Pac. 784, 16 Am. St. Rep. 215; Dullam v. Willson, 53 Mich. 407, 19 N. W. 112, 51 Am. Rep. 128; Page v. Hardin, 8 B. Mon. (Ky.) 672; State v. Bryce, 7 Ohio, 82, pt. 2; State v. Hoglan, 64 Ohio St. 532, 60 N. E. 627; State v. Smith, 35 Neb. 13, 33, 52 N. W. 700, 16 L. R. A. 791; Biggs v. McBride, 17 Or. 651, 21 Pac. 878, 5 L. R. A. 115; Singleton v. Charleston, 2 Bay (S. C.) 105; King v. Gaskin, 8 T. R. 209; Ramshay's Case, 18 Ad. & El. N. S. 190; Queen v. Archbishop, 1 Ell. & El. 545. Many of these are cases where the power to remove was qualified, as here, simply by the words, "for cause"; in others particular causes are specified, such as "official misconduct," "inability or misbehavior," and the like. The distinction is not material. The words "for cause," without more, imply good cause; the existence of some fact which would constitute a reasonable cause for the removal.

The defendant refers to the decision of this court in Matter of Carter, 141 Cal. 316, 74 Pac. 997, as establishing the rule that power to remove "for cause," without other qualification, authorizes a summary removal, without notice or hearing. The remarks to that effect therein go too far and were unnecessary to the decision. The law considered in that case was a provision in the charter of the city of San Diego. It provided that the mayor could "remove for cause" any officer appointed by him, but added that "in case of such removal" he should give written notice thereof, "stating the cause, to the person removed," and that he should immediately notify the common council of his action and the reasons therefor. What was really decided in that case on this point was that these additional provisions so qualified the words "remove, for cause," that the entire provision must be interpreted to mean that the removal might be made before the giving of the notice and without any hearing, and hence that it was not a judicial act. The clause requiring notice of the removal "to the person removed," being in the past tense, and being the only notice required, the language necessarily implied that the removal was to be made before the notice thereof was given to the officer. Section 18 does not contain such provisions and the decision in the Carter Case does not apply. The Carter Case is similar to O'Dowd v. Boston, 149 Mass. 443, 21 N. E. 949, where the members of the council were given power to remove officers "for such cause as they may deem sufficient and shall assign in their order for removal." This was held to imply a removal without notice or hearing, and on that ground the case was held not to come within the general rule above stated. The case of State v. Grant, 14 Wyo. 41, 81 Pac. 795, 82 Pac. 2, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 588, 116 Am. St. Rep. 982, cited by respondent, is of like effect. There the Governor was given power to remove for any cause deemed sufficient by him "provided, reason for such removal shall be filed in the office of the Secretary of State in writing, subject to inspection by any person interested." This was held to prescribe the procedure, and to imply that no previous notice to the officer, nor any hearing, was necessary. The court recognizes the general rule above stated, but declares this to be an exception because the statute makes it so. The cases of State v. Kennelly, 75 Conn. 316, 55 Atl. 555, and Sullivan v. Martin, 81 Conn. 585, 71 Atl. 783, also cited by the respondent in support of the proposition that the mayor's summary removal was valid, are not in point on that question. In each of them there was a notice, a hearing, and thereupon a removal. In the latter the hearing was expressly required by the statute. The point decided in each case was that the hearing and removal were not quasi judicial proceedings, but were executive acts; that the facts and evidence were not subject to review by the courts; and that only the regularity of the proceeding could be inquired into.

The provisions of section 20 do not bring it within the rule of the Carter Case and similar cases. They do not refer at all to the method of removal or the procedure thereon, but are directed to another object. The mayor is not required to make or keep any record of his acts. But for section 20, he might remove an officer without there being any record whatever to show the fact, or the cause thereof, and the other officers of the city, and citizens who might have to deal with the removed officer, would be without notice or means of definite and reliable information of the fact. It is obvious from the language of section 20 that its purpose was merely to require a public notice and record of a removal already made. It refers to the removal as a fact accomplished, but it does not prescribe a mode of procedure therefor. Every act it requires is an act to be done subsequent to the act of removal and not as a part of it. So understood, there is nothing in its terms which implies an intent to give to the clause conferring power to remove "for cause," any other than its well-established meaning; that is, a sufficient cause proven upon a hearing after reasonable notice.

Certain other provisions of the charter furnish strong additional reasons for this interpretation of the removal clause. As before stated, it applies only to the members of the several boards appointed by the mayor. The mayor's term of office is only two years. The members of these boards are appointed for fixed terms, in some boards for three years, and in others for four years, but in each case the terms begin in successive years so that one member is regularly to be appointed each year. Some boards have five members, with four-year terms, in which case two terms expire every fourth year. Thus the members holding over in each board are always in the majority. The obvious purpose was to have always on each board two or more members who were familiar with its affairs, and to prevent sudden changes of policy and secure stability and efficiency in the administration of the municipal affairs. No mayor could, in regular course, change the personnel of a majority of any board in less than two years from his advent, except in the case of the board of public works and the civil service commission, which have three members and three-year terms, making a change possible in a little over 12 months. This plain policy of the charter might be practically overthrown if the mayor were given power to remove the members summarily by the simple process of stating a cause in writing, with no investigation to show whether the cause existed in fact, or only in fancy, and with no notice to the officer or opportunity to prove himself not guilty of the alleged dereliction, incapacity, or incompetency. It would need much more explicit language than we find in the provisions concerning the removal of these officers to authorize an interpretation so destructive of this wise and important part of the plan of municipal government.

In this case the mayor gave the board of supervisors notice of the removal of Bannerman and furnished it with a statement of the cause alleged therefor, which was duly recorded. But no notice was given to Bannerman thereof, and he had no opportunity to make a defense. We are of the opinion that the act of removal was void. The cause alleged was that Bannerman had joined in appointing an ineligible person as secretary of the board and had approved the payment of his salary. We have assumed that this alone, without any allegation that it was done corruptly or in bad faith, was a sufficient cause. We have also assumed that it is competent for the charter of San Francisco to provide for the removal of a member of the board of education, although he may be, in law, an officer of the state, administering a branch of the state school system, and the Constitution (article 11, § 8½), it is claimed, does not expressly allow the city charter to do more than fix his term of office and the time and mode of appointment or election. We find it unnecessary to decide either of these propositions, and we express no opinion concerning them.

It follows that the petitioner had title to the office during the period in question, and that he is entitled to the mandamus.

Let a peremptory writ issue as prayed for.

We concur: SLOSS, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.; HENSHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.; MELVIN, J.

(160 Cal. 263)

UNION TRUST & REALTY CO. v. BEST.

(L. A. 2,665.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 22, 1911.)

1. INJUNCTION (§ 62*)—COVENANTS—ENFORCEMENT.

Restrictive covenants in deeds as to buildings or improvements will not be enforced, where enforcement would be inequitable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Injunction, Cent. Dig. §§ 124-127; Dec. Dig. § 62.*]

2. COVENANTS (§ 103*)—RESTRICTIONS—WAIVER OF OR ESTOPPEL TO ENFORCE RESTRICTIONS.

Defendant, under an agreement of purchase containing a covenant that the grantee should not erect any dwelling nearer than 20 feet from the street, received a deposit slip from the grantor's general agent, and under the direction of such agent erected a house on the lot before the execution of the deed to him; and the grantor from and after the time the house was commenced had full knowledge of its location, and received payments on the purchase price, and made no objection, until long after it was completed, the deed executed, and the purchase price paid. Held, that the grantor had waived his right to enforce the restriction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Covenants, Cent. Dig. § 169; Dec. Dig. § 103.*]

3. EVIDENCE (§ 467*)—PAROL EVIDENCE AFFECTING WRITINGS—EVIDENCE EXTRINSIC TO WRITING.

A waiver of a restriction contained in a deed may be shown by parol.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 2146; Dec. Dig. § 467.*]

4. INJUNCTION (§ 128*)—ACTION FOR NEGLIGENCE—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Evidence, in an action by a grantor for injunction to enforce a building restriction, held sufficient to sustain a finding that the grantee's house had been located on the lot by direction of the grantor's agent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Injunction, Dec. Dig. § 128.*]

5. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT (§ 173*)—RATIFICATION—EVIDENCE OF RATIFICATION—SUFFICIENCY.

Evidence, in an action by a grantor for injunction to enforce a building restriction contained in his deed, held sufficient to show a ratification by the grantor's general agent of the act of a subagent in locating the grantee's house, which under Civ. Code, § 2307, is equivalent to precedent authorization.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Agent, Dec. Dig. § 173.*]

6. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT (§ 169*)—RATIFICATION—IMPLIED RATIFICATION.

Ratification need not be express, but may be implied from the conduct of the principal reasonably tending to show an intention to ratify the acts of the alleged agent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Agent, Cent. Dig. §§ 636, 637; Dec. Dig. § 169.*]

7. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 194*)—REVIEW—ESTOPPEL TO ALLEGE ERROR—ISSUES.

Where an answer sufficiently showed the position defendant intended to maintain, and the parties went to trial upon the issues so presented, an objection first made on appeal that the answer was insufficient as to a particular outside the issues is too late.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1241-1246; Dec. Dig. § 194.*]

8. INJUNCTION (§ 127*)—ACTION FOR INJUNCTION—ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE.

In an action for injunction to enforce a building restriction contained in plaintiff's deed, testimony that plaintiff's subagent had built houses upon the tract not conforming to the restriction is inadmissible, since the fact to which it is directed is immaterial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Injunction, Dec. Dig. § 127.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; George H. Hutton, Judge.

Action by the Union Trust & Realty Company against John S. Best. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Percy B. Lhoyd, for appellant. Williams, Goudge & Chandler, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. The plaintiff appeals from a judgment in favor of defendant, and from an order denying a motion for new trial.

The action was brought to compel the enforcement of a building restriction contained in an agreement for the sale of a residence lot by plaintiff to defendant.

The complaint alleges that in May, 1906, the plaintiff became the owner of a tract of land in the city of Los Angeles, comprising 461 lots; that it was and is plaintiff's intention to sell said lots (with some exceptions not material here) for residence purposes, and to insert in every agreement for sale or conveyance made by it a covenant that the grantee or vendee would not, within five years, erect any dwelling on the lot conveyed closer than 20 feet to or from the front line of such lot. On May 19, 1908, it is alleged, plaintiff and defendant entered into an agreement for the sale to the latter of lot 226 of the tract for the sum of $573, payable in installments. Said agreement contained a covenant as aforesaid. On September 24, 1908, plaintiff executed a deed of the lot to defendant. It is alleged that defendant thereafter erected a dwelling within eight feet of the front line of said lot. The prayer is for an injunction restraining the defendant from permitting his dwelling to remain, at any time prior to May 20, 1913, closer than 20 feet to the front line of his lot.

The answer denies that defendant erected the building after the execution of the deed to him, and sets up as an affirmative defense that he purchased the lot from plaintiff through its agents, the Burck-Gwynn Company, on May 19, 1908, receiving from said agents a deposit receipt; that a building was located on said lot by defendant under the direction of plaintiff's agents, and the same was erected and completed before the execution of the deed to him. It is alleged that at the time of the commencement of the construction, and thereafter until completion, the plaintiff had full knowledge of the location of the building on the lot, and that it received payment of the various installments of the purchase price from defendant, and made its deed to him, with such knowledge. It made no objection regarding the location of the house until March 1, 1909, long after the payment of the purchase price, the making of the deed, and the expending by defendant of over $2,000 in the erection of his building.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

The court found in accordance with these averments of the answer. It also found that the agreement containing the covenant counted upon, although bearing date the 19th day of May, 1908 (the day when defendant made his deposit and took his receipt therefor), was executed on June 5, 1908; that the main body of the house built by defendant is 21 feet from the front line of the lot, and the porch and steps of the porch of the house are within 20 feet of said line. The conclusion of law was that plaintiff was entitled to no relief, and that defendant was entitled to judgment for his costs.

[1] Little argument can be required to show that if the facts be as found, the proper conclusion was drawn from them. This is a suit in equity to compel, by mandatory decree, the enforcement of a covenant restricting the defendant's right to use his own land. Such enforcement would, the court finds—and it is apparent without any finding—subject the defendant to considerable expense. Restrictive agreements of this kind will not be enforced, where, under all the circumstances of the case, the granting of the relief sought would be inequitable. 5 Am. & Eng. Enc. of L. (2d Ed.) 15; Columbia College v. Thacher, 87 N. Y. 311, 41 Am. Rep. 365; Conger v. N. Y., etc., R. Co., 120 N. Y. 29, 23 N. E. 983.

[2] No strong appeal to the discretion of a court of chancery is made by a plaintiff who, after inducing the defendant to violate a building covenant, makes no complaint until the improvements have been completed, and in the meanwhile, with full knowledge of the violation, accepts payment for his land and makes conveyance. In so far as the covenant was made for the benefit of the grantor, who alone is complaining here, it might be waived, and the facts found establish a clear case of waiver.

[3] The argument of appellant that evidence of an oral understanding regarding the location of the house cannot vary the terms of a written contract is not to the point. The facts pleaded in defense were not relied upon to prove that the agreement did not prohibit the construction of the building where located, but to establish a waiver of the covenant, or an estoppel to rely upon it. Such waiver or estoppel may be shown by parol.

[4] The only question of importance, then, is whether the evidence supports the findings under discussion. It is urged that the finding that the house was located on the lot by direction of the Burck-Gwynn Company, plaintiff's agents, is against the evidence. We think this claim cannot be sustained. There is testimony which, although contradicted, is sufficient to warrant a finding that the defendant, on the day following the making of his deposit, made preparations to build his house at a place which would leave the main body of the building over 25 feet, and the porch 21 or 22 feet, from the street line; and that, upon the representations of one Edmison that the body of the house should be set back not more than 20 feet from the street, he changed the stakes and erected his house upon the line indicated by Edmison. The appellant claims, however, that there is no evidence that Edmison had any authority to bind the plaintiff, or the Burck-Gwynn Company, by his declarations. There was testimony, given by an officer of the plaintiff, that the Burck-Gwynn Company, a copartnership, had always been plaintiff's agents for all purposes in connection with the tract, and that said company and its agents made all sales, and generally supervised the handling of the tract. Burck, one of the partners of the Burck-Gwynn Company, testified that Edmison was the company's "tract agent" on the tract, and Edmison gave testimony to the same effect. But Burck testified further that he had carefully explained to Edmison "what the building line restriction was—that is, that nothing should project over that line except the front steps—and had instructed him to see that the orders were carried out in that particular." The appellant's claim is that this evidence shows that Edmison's express authority was limited to requiring compliance with the restriction as plaintiff interprets it, and that he had no authority to waive such compliance.

[5] But if the soundness of this position be conceded, we find in the record further evidence which is ample to sustain an inference that the Burck-Gwynn Company subsequently ratified Edmison's acts. Such ratification is equivalent in effect to precedent authorization. Civ. Code, § 2307; Kraft v. Wilson, 37 Pac. 790.¹ The evidence tending to show ratification is that of the defendant, who testified as follows: "Soon after it (the house) was finished, I went to the office of the Burck-Gwynn Company to see about paying up the balance of my contract price for the lot, and Mr. Burck then said to me that he understood I had got my house out a little, and I replied that it was the first I knew of it, and I told him that the body of my house was set just as Mr. Edmison gave it to me, to which he replied that Edmison ought to know better than that, and he then said to me that they were not going to give me any trouble about it, so that I didn't put any more up that way."

[6] Ratification need not be express. It may be implied from conduct on the part of the principal "reasonably tending to show an intention to ratify the acts of the alleged agent." 31 Cyc. 1263; Pope v. Armsby Co., 111 Cal. 159, 43 Pac. 589; Rallard v. Nye, 138 Cal. 588, 72 Pac. 156. The statements of Burck, as detailed in the testimony just quoted, afford ample basis for an inference of ratification. While he expressed some criticism of Edmison's conduct as reported to him, his language manifested clearly an intent to adopt and approve that conduct and its results.

¹ Reported in full in the Pacific Reporter; reported as a memorandum decision without opinion in 104 Cal. xvii.

[7] Further points made by appellant require but brief notice. It is said that the answer fails to allege with sufficient particularity the purpose and extent of the agency of the Burck-Gwynn Company. No such point was made at the trial. The answer sufficiently showed that defendant relied upon the Burck-Gwynn Company's acts as binding the plaintiff, and the parties went to trial upon the issue so presented. The objection, if it be well founded, comes too late. Arnold v. Am. Ins. Co., 148 Cal. 660, 84 Pac. 182, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 6; Penrose v. Winter, 135 Cal. 289, 67 Pac. 772.

[8] Testimony that Edmison had built houses upon other lots in the tract, and that the porches of such houses did not extend beyond the 20-foot line, was properly rejected. The fact sought to be proven was entirely immaterial.

The judgment and the order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SHAW, J.

(160 Cal. 306)

CLARK et al. v. BEYRLÉ et al.
(L. A. 2,624.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 29, 1911.
On Rehearing in Bank, July 28, 1911.)

1. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 13*)—SUBJECTS OF LIEN—PUBLIC PROPERTY—TUNNEL.

No liens can be asserted on a tunnel constructed by a city as a public improvement.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. §§ 14, 15; Dec. Dig. § 13.*]

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 519*)—PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS—EXTENT OF LIEN—LIMITATION TO AMOUNT PAYABLE UNDER CONTRACT.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1184, which gives to a subcontractor a right to an equitable garnishment, a subcontractor who performed labor on tunnel construction on each of a number of sections all let to the same contractor, but upon separate contracts, has no right to compel the application of what is due under one of the contracts to the payment of demands which accrued under another of the contracts.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1220; Dec. Dig. § 519.*]

3. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 107*)—NATURE OF SERVICES RENDERED—COOK FOR LABORERS.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1183, which provides that mechanics, materialmen, contractors, subcontractors, artisans, and all persons and laborers of every class performing labor, etc., shall have a mechanic's lien, a cook for the laborers of a contractor has no lien for such services.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. § 139; Dec. Dig. § 107.*]

4. CONTRACTS (§ 187*)—PARTIES—BUILDING CONTRACTS—CONNECTED WITH SAID WORK."

Civ. Code, § 1559, provides that a contract made expressly for the benefit of a third person may be enforced by him. A contractor with a city for the construction of a tunnel agreed to protect it from "all claims and liens of any kind whatsoever, connected with said work," and authorized the city to withhold money due by him to his laborers or other workmen. Held, that a cook for the laborers engaged in the construction of the tunnel was not "connected with said work" and could not enforce the provisions of the contract as against the contractor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 798-807; Dec. Dig. § 187.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; Robert M. Clarke, Judge.

Action by Warren W. Clark and George E. Little, doing business as partners, etc., and others, against Robert Beyrle and others. Judgment favorable to defendants, and plaintiffs Norman W. Clark and others appeal. Affirmed.

Canfield & Starbuck, for appellants. B. F. Thomas, W. P. Butcher, Chickering & Gregory, and Louis H. Roseberry, for respondents.

SLOSS, J. The controversy in this action is over the right of the plaintiffs to receive payment of certain demands out of moneys due from the city of Santa Barbara to Robert Beyrle for work done in the construction of a tunnel.

The city of Santa Barbara undertook to construct a water conduit tunnel running in a northerly and southerly direction through the Santa Ynez Mountains for a length of some 19,000 feet. Contracts for the construction of the northerly 8,560 feet of the tunnel were entered into between the said city and Beyrle. For the purpose of doing the work, this part of the tunnel was divided into nine sections numbered respectively 20, 19, 18, 17, 16, 15, 14, 13, and 12. Section 20 was the first section from the northerly mouth of the tunnel, and the others ran successively southerly in the inverse order of their numbers. Section 20 was 560 feet in length, and each of the other sections 1,000 feet. The respective contracts were similar in form, specific prices being agreed upon for each cubic yard of excavation, and for each thousand feet of timbering, while the rate for hauling excavated matter out of the tunnel increased with the distance from the mouth in hundred feet lengths.

The complaint sets forth the making of a single contract and alleges that it was put in the form of nine several and separate agreements. It alleges further that Beyrle entered upon the performance of the contract and after completing section 20 made an agreement with T. A. McCullough whereby the latter was to complete the work as sub-contractor. The plaintiffs Clark & Little became associated with McCullough in the work and ultimately succeeded to all of his interest under his contract with Beyrle. Said Clark & Little continued to perform the contract between Beyrle and the city of Santa Barbara until February 13, 1908, when by reason of the alleged failure of Beyrle to keep certain terms of the contract between himself and McCullough said Clark & Little were compelled to abandon the work. Thereupon Beyrle re-entered upon the performance of the contract between himself and the city of Santa Barbara, and from February 13, 1908, to June 10, 1908, employed Warren W. Clark to superintend such performance. It is alleged that, while the work of construction was being carried on by the firm of Clark & Little, the plaintiff Norman W. Clark performed labor for said Clark & Little upon said tunnel, and that a balance of $1,395.50 remains unpaid to him on account of said work; that during the same time the plaintiff John G. Sanborn performed work for Clark & Little upon said tunnel; that a balance of $757.17 remains due to him; that during the same period Minnie Chant performed labor on said tunnel "as cook for the laborers and others engaged in the construction thereof"; and that a balance of $780.04 remains due to her.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes, Cal.Rep. 114-117 P.—45

On July 2, 1908, each of the claimants gave to the defendant city of Santa Barbara written notice that they had respectively performed said labor and notified the city to withhold from the defendant Beyrle sufficient money then due or to become due to him to answer the respective claims of said plaintiffs. The complaint alleges that there is due from the city for the unpaid portions of the completed work upon said tunnel the sum of $3,977.91, which the city is holding pursuant to said notices. Judgment is asked for the sums alleged to be due to the respective plaintiffs. The plaintiffs also seek to hold the defendant the Title Guaranty & Trust Company, which, as surety, signed a bond attached to the contract, and guaranteeing faithful performance by Beyrle.

The answers of the defendants contained a number of denials which need not be here detailed. Upon the issues so made the court made its decision. With reference to the contracts, the court found that nine separate agreements were made between the city of Santa Barbara and Beyrle for the construction of nine successive portions or sections of the tunnel; the terms of such agreements being as hereinbefore stated. It is found that the agreements were so severally executed for the purpose of enabling Beyrle to receive payments in full for the successive portions of said construction. The agreement with McCullough and the transfer of McCullough's rights to Clark & Little are found as alleged in the complaint. It is found that sections 20, 19, 18, and 17 of the proposed tunnel were completed and accepted by the city on January 5, 1905, November 23, 1905, February 25, 1907, and December 27, 1907, respectively, and all balances due to Beyrle from the city under the agreements providing for the construction of said sections were respectively paid to Beyrle by the city 36 days after the respective dates of completion and acceptance of the sections, and the defendant Title Guaranty & Trust Company was discharged by the city from all liability on account of said agreements. Between January 31, 1906, and February 13, 1908, the plaintiff Norman W. Clark performed labor upon the tunnel at the request of Clark & Little, and a balance of $1,395.50 remains due and unpaid to him. It is further found, however, that only $152.90 of this amount accrued after the 27th day of December, 1907 (i. e., the date of the completion of section 17 of the tunnel), and the last-named amount is all that accrued for labor performed on section 16. There are similar findings with respect to the plaintiff John C. Sanborn that a balance of $757.17 is due, but only $129.25 of this amount is due for labor performed in the construction of section 16. Likewise the court finds that Minnie Chant performed labor as alleged, but finds that only $76.45 of her claim accrued while the firm of Clark & Little was engaged in the construction of section 16. The court finds, further, that there is due from the city of Santa Barbara the sum of $3,977.91 on account of the construction of section 16 of the tunnel, and that the said city is holding this sum to abide the event of this action. The conclusions of law are to the effect that none of the plaintiffs is entitled to any judgment for labor performed on the tunnel prior to the completion of section 17 and that plaintiffs Norman W. Clark and Sanborn are entitled to judgments that the city of Santa Barbara pay them the amounts found to be due for labor performed on section 16; that is to say, $152.90 to the plaintiff Norman W. Clark, and $129.25 to the plaintiff John G. Sanborn. As regards the plaintiff Minnie Chant, the conclusion is that she is not entitled to any judgment.

There were also findings and conclusions of law in favor of a claim of Warren W. Clark; but, as the disposition of this claim is not disputed, we shall make no further reference to it.

On the foregoing findings and conclusions of law judgment was entered that the city of Santa Barbara pay plaintiffs Norman W. Clark and John G. Sanborn the amounts found to be due to them as aforesaid, and that the plaintiff Minnie Chant take nothing by this action. There is a further declaration in the judgment that the plaintiffs Norman W. Clark and John G. Sanborn "take nothing by this action except as hereinbefore adjudged."

The present appeal is taken by Norman W. Clark, John G. Sanborn, and Minnie Chant from those parts of the judgment which adjudged that said plaintiffs Clark and Sanborn take nothing by this action except as in said judgment adjudged and that said plaintiff Minnie Chant take nothing.

A preliminary motion to dismiss the appeals of Clark and Sanborn is made by the respondents. It is shown that on the 10th day of January, 1910, the day before the notice of appeal was filed, these plaintiffs accepted payment of the sums allowed by the judgment and acknowledged satisfaction of that part of the judgment which adjudged that the city of Santa Barbara pay them these sums. It is urged by the respondents that by receiving and accepting the amounts granted by the judgment and causing satisfaction to be entered these appellants waived their right of appeal from the judgment. There is a good deal of force in the argument of respondents that the judgment in question is not divisible in such manner as to permit a party to accept what it gives him and still appeal. Inasmuch, however, as we are satisfied that the judgment should be affirmed on the merits, we prefer to so dispose of it, rather than to have the case go off upon technical considerations affecting the right to maintain the appeal.

The appeals are presented on the judgment roll alone. No question of error in admitting or rejecting evidence, or of the sufficiency of the evidence to support the findings, is, therefore, raised. The only point made by the appellants is that, on the facts found, a different judgment should have been entered.

1. The claims of Norman W. Clark and John G. Sanborn.

These appellants performed labor on sections 19, 18, 17, and 16. The money remaining in the possession of the city, when Clark and Sanborn served their notices to withhold, and when the action was commenced, was due under the contract for the construction of section 16. All moneys payable for the construction of sections 20, 19, 18, and 17 had already been paid in accordance with the terms of the contracts covering those sections. The judgment allows to the claimants, out of the money on hand, payment for the work done by them on section 16, and denies recovery for so much of their claims as represents work done on other sections.

The claim of the plaintiffs rests upon an equitable garnishment, pursuant to section 1184 of the Code of Civil Procedure, of the fund owing by the city to Beyrlé, the contractor.

[1, 2] Inasmuch as the tunnel was a public improvement of the municipality, no liens could be asserted against it (Bates v. Santa Barbara, 90 Cal. 543, 27 Pac. 438), and the only remedy of the claimants under the mechanic's lien law was to intercept, by the method here pursued, the money due or to become due the contractor. The theory upon which the right to so intercept the contract price rests is analogous to that underlying the entire scheme of mechanics' liens, viz., that the laborers and materialmen who have added value to the property should be protected by making the property liable to them for the increased value which they have created. With respect to the remedy by notices to withhold, it was, no doubt, thought by the Legislature that those who had, by furnishing labor or materials, enabled the contractor to complete the construction and earn the contract price, should, in justice, be entitled to enforce payment of their demands out of any balance of such contract price properly due. But this does not carry with it the right to compel the application of what is due under one contract to the payment of demands which accrued in the performance of other contracts. The very purpose of the provision of section 1184, permitting the service of notices upon the owner, is to give to persons who have assisted in the performance of a contract a right to receive payment out of the money to be paid for the performance of that contract. If, then, the contracts for the construction of the nine sections comprising the northerly half of the tunnel were separate and distinct, in law and in fact, as they were in form, the judgment of the lower court was clearly right. The only contract price remaining unpaid at the time the notices were served was that which would become due on section 16. This amount was applicable to the payment of claims incurred in the construction of section 16, and no further. Sections 19, 18, and 17 had already been completed and paid for. If the claimants ever had the right to receive a part of the contract price payable for any of these sections, they should have asserted their right by giving notice before the city had paid the contractor.

Recognizing the force of these considerations, the appellants are driven to the contention that the nine contracts are, for the purposes of this case, to be treated as a single agreement for the construction of 8,560 feet of the tunnel. The complaint, as has been said, sets forth such single contract. But issue was joined as to this, and the court found that the city of Santa Barbara and Beyrlé made and entered into nine separate signed agreements providing respectively for the construction of nine successive portions or sections of a tunnel. Notwithstanding this finding, which on the present appeal is not attacked, the appellants argue that, because the nine sections of the tunnel were successive portions of a single and entire improvement, and because the various contracts were all entered into between the same parties, they must, for the protection of the rights of materialmen and laborers, be treated as constituting one indivisible contract for the doing of the entire work described in the nine papers. We are cited to no authority supporting this contention, and we think it cannot be maintained. It is not questioned that the city has the same right that a private owner would have to let separate contracts for the doing of different portions of a proposed work. It appears from the exhibits attached to the complaint that these contracts were let after inviting competitive bids, and that separate proposals for constructing the several sections were called for. It was quite possible that the nine contracts might have been let to nine different bidders. In such case, it certainly would not have been claimed that a claimant doing work on a section being constructed by one contractor could enforce payment out of the price due another contractor for the construction of a different section. The nine contracts would clearly have been separate and distinct. We do not see that their character is necessarily changed by the circumstance that a single bidder happened to secure all of the contracts.

It is argued that it would be a great hardship upon materialmen or laborers to permit the work to be separated so as to limit them in their right of recovery for work done upon any section to the contract price payable for that section. But each of the contracts was duly recorded, and thereby any claimant was given the opportunity to know what work was covered by the contract, and the terms and conditions of payment. There was nothing to prevent the appellants from serving notices to withhold the amount due them on the various sections before the contract price for the respective sections had been paid.

The further suggestion is made that, if the plaintiffs were entitled to mechanics' liens, their liens would extend to the entire improvement, even though there had been separate contracts for the construction, and it is urged that the right under notices to withhold should extend to any part of the contract price remaining unpaid. It is by no means clear that, in case of a private improvement, such as a tunnel, constructed under separate contracts in the manner here adopted, the liens of laborers or materialmen for labor done or materials furnished on one section would extend to the entire improvement. See Pacific R. M. Co. v. Bear Valley Irr. Co., 120 Cal. 94, 52 Pac. 136, 65 Am. St. Rep. 158. But, if we assume that the appellants are right on this point, their premise does not justify the conclusion. Where valid contracts are filed, the right of lienors is limited to the balance of the contract price due the contractor. Kellogg v. Howes, 81 Cal. 175, 22 Pac. 509, 6 L. R. A. 588; McDonald v. Hayes, 132 Cal. 490, 64 Pac. 850; Stimson Mill Co. v. Braun, 136 Cal. 124, 68 Pac. 481, 57 L. R. A. 726, 89 Am. St. Rep. 116; Hampton v. Christensen, 148 Cal. 729, 84 Pac. 200. The lien claimants derive their rights through the contractor. Where they have acquired a right to apply the balance due under a contract to the payment of their demands, this balance must be applied solely to the satisfaction of such demands as have arisen under the contract. Thus, if an owner erecting a house makes one contract for the brickwork, and another for plastering, the lien of one working under either contract would apply to the entire structure. But if the brickwork had been completed, and payment duly made in accordance with the contract covering that branch of the construction, a laborer in that branch, who had failed to file his claim of lien or to give notice in time, could not assert a right to have his claim paid out of the price payable under the contract for plastering. This would obviously be so if the contractors were different. The rights of claimants are not changed where both contracts, if in fact separate and distinct, are held by the same contractor. Accordingly, even if this were a case of lien, the question would come back to that first discussed, i. e., whether the agreements for the construction of the various sections of the tunnel were separate, or constituted a single agreement. As we have said, this question is answered by the finding of the court.

It must be remembered that the appellants are seeking payment, out of a fund due from the city to Beyrle, of demands for which neither the city nor Beyrle is personally liable. The work was done for subcontractors, and the only liability of the owner or the original contractor is that created by the statute. The contractor is equitably, as well as legally, entitled to insist that his money shall not be paid in satisfaction of claims to which it is not applicable.

2. The claim of Minnie Chant.

[3] This claim was for services rendered as cook for the laborers working in the construction of the tunnel. It is conceded that these services furnish no basis for relief under the mechanic's lien law. McCormick v. L. A. Water Co., 40 Cal. 185. They do not come within the terms of section 1183 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The contention is, however, that she is entitled to recover directly against the contractor (and, incidentally, against his surety) under the clauses by which the contractor agrees to protect the city from "all claims and liens of any kind whatsoever connected with said work" and authorizes the city to withhold "money due by him to his laborers or other workmen," and further agrees "to pay to the proper parties all amounts due for * * * labor * * * employed in the performance" of the contract. It is claimed that, under section 1559 of the Civil Code, this contract may be enforced by Minnie Chant as one made expressly for her benefit.

[4] It would require a highly strained interpretation of the contract to hold that it assumed to bind the contractor to pay the wages of a cook engaged in preparing meals for laborers. The agreement of Beyrle was to hold the city harmless against claims and liens "connected with said work." The work contemplated was the construction of a tunnel. This appellant was not engaged in any such work, and the city was not concerned in the payment or nonpayment of her claim. It is not to be supposed that the contract was designed to protect the city against a claim, which could not in any way affect its interests.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.

On Rehearing in Bank.

PER CURIAM. Rehearing denied.

BEATTY, C. J. I have dissented from the order denying a rehearing of this cause, partly for the reason that a question as to the right of Minnie Chant to recover upon the bond of Beyrle's surety for a portion at least of her demand is left undecided, and partly for the reason that the opinion of the court goes beyond the necessities of the case in stating a doctrine which imposes what in my opinion is an unauthorized and unjust restriction upon the right of garnishment in similar cases involving public improvements, and by consequence abridges the right of lien, as well as garnishment, in similar cases involving private improvements.

It is stated in the opinion of the court that "the appellants are seeking payment, out of a fund due from the city to Beyrle, of demands for which neither the city nor Beyrle is personally liable." And this seems to be true, except as to a part of the claim of Minnie Chant. So far as it is true that the appellants are seeking payment, out of a fund due Beyrle for work done on section 16, of claims for work done for his subcontractors on sections 17, 18, etc., I agree with the court that their position is untenable, and this, except as to the claim of Minnie Chant, was all that was necessary to be said in affirming the judgment of the superior court.

But the opinion of this court goes further, and will be cited hereafter as holding that where a single improvement—as, for instance, a house—has been constructed by the same contractor under separate contracts for different parts of the work, and the owner, in consequence of garnishments duly served, has withheld a sufficient amount of the money due the contractor to pay all claims in full, the fund must nevertheless be apportioned with reference to the application of previous payments to the one contract or the other, and if the result is that the fund assigned to one contract is insufficient to pay claims arising under that contract they must go unpaid, and the surplus in the fund apportioned to the other contract go to the contractor's general creditors. I find no warrant in the statute (Code Civ. Proc. § 1184) for this construction. The letter of the statute does not sustain it, and certainly it is opposed to the policy of the law, which, being remedial in its nature, demands a liberal construction in furtherance of its objects.

160 Cal. 283

BOGGS v. DUNN. (Sac. 1,871.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 27, 1911.)

1. JUDGMENT (§ 753*)—LIEN—STATUTES.

The lien of a judgment is wholly statutory.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 1312; Dec. Dig. § 753.*]

2. HOMESTEAD (§§ 103, 107*)—LIEN OF JUDGMENT—EXTENT.

Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 671, 674, making the docketing of a judgment a lien on the debtor's real property not exempt from execution, etc., a judgment is not a lien on property covered by a valid declaration of homestead, regardless of its value, but the judgment creditor may subject the excess above the statutory homestead exemption only by proceedings under Civ. Code, § 1245 et seq., defining proceedings on execution against homestead, and the levy of an execution thereon creates no lien, but merely serves as a foundation for the statutory proceedings to ascertain the value of the homestead and the procurement of an order for partition and sale thereof, and the application of the excess to the satisfaction of the judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homestead, Cent. Dig. §§ 157, 158; Dec. Dig. §§ 103, 107.*]

3. COURTS (§ 93*)—DECISIONS—STARE DECISIS.

The decisions of the Supreme Court that a judgment is not a lien on a homestead, without reference to its value, must be followed under the rule of stare decisis.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Cent. Dig. §§ 336-339; Dec. Dig. § 93.*]

4. BANKRUPTCY (§ 433*)—DISCHARGE IN BANKRUPTCY—EFFECT.

The right of a judgment creditor to proceed under Civ. Code, § 1245 et seq., to reach the excess above the statutory homestead valuation of the homestead of the debtor is destroyed by a discharge of the debtor in bankruptcy; the judgment being based on a claim provable in bankruptcy, and no proceeding having been initiated at the time of the discharge to reach the homestead.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bankruptcy, Cent. Dig. § 814; Dec. Dig. § 433.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Shasta County; J. E. Barber, Judge.

Action by M. H. B. Boggs, executrix, against R. G. Dunn. From an order perpetually staying execution of a judgment, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Herzinger & Herzinger and W. H. H. Hart, for appellant. Braynard & Kimball (William A. Kelly, of counsel), for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, J. On November 27, 1888, defendant being the owner of and residing with his wife and children on lots 3 and 4 of block 2, Breslau's addition to the city of Redding, county of Shasta, duly selected such property as a homestead, in accord with the laws of this state, and ever since such date he and his wife have continued to reside on such property. The homestead so selected has never been abandoned. On October 29, 1904, plaintiff recovered a judgment in this action, in the superior court of Shasta county, for $966, and $8.75 costs of suit, and on November 1, 1904, this judgment was duly docketed in the office of the clerk of said Shasta county. The claim of plaintiff thus reduced to judgment was not of such a character as to except the judgment from the effect of a discharge in bankruptcy, under section 17 of the bankruptcy act. No appeal was taken from this judgment. No part of the judgment has ever been paid. On March 15, 1906, defendant was adjudged a bankrupt under the United States bankruptcy act July 1, 1898, c. 541, 30 Stat. 544 (U. S. comp. St. 1901, p. 3418), and on January 23, 1907, by decree of the United States District Court in and for the Northern District of California, he was duly and regularly discharged from all debts and claims made provable by said act against his estate and which existed on the 15th day of March, 1906, excepting only such debts as are by law exempted from the operation of a discharge in bankruptcy. On October 28, 1909, the execution in question was issued on the judgment of October 29, 1904, and levied on the property described in defendant's homestead declaration. On November 17, 1909, plaintiff filed in the superior court her petition alleging that the value of such property exceeds the amount of $5,000, and is, in fact, $8,000, and asked that appraisers be appointed to appraise the same, with a view to the enforcement of the judgment against the property, in so far as it exceeded $5,000 in value. The superior court having fixed a time for the hearing of such petition, defendant, on November 29, 1909, made his motion to recall, quash, and set aside the execution and to perpetually stay execution of such judgment, and on April 29, 1910, the superior court made its order granting such motion. This is an appeal by plaintiff from such order.

It is not questioned that plaintiff's claim against defendant, evidenced by this judgment, was provable in the bankruptcy proceedings, or that the effect of the discharge granted to defendant in such proceeding was to bar enforcement of the judgment so far as any personal liability is concerned. Plaintiff claims that, by reason of her docketed judgment, she had a judgment lien on defendant's land, which may be enforced under section 1245 et seq. of the Civil Code against the homestead of defendant, to the extent that the same exceeds $5,000, in value, notwithstanding the discharge in bankruptcy.

[1] The lien of a judgment is purely the creature of the statute; no such lien having existed at common law. Ackley v. Chamberlain, 16 Cal. 181, 76 Am. Dec. 516; Lean v. Givens, 146 Cal. 741, 81 Pac. 128, 106 Am. St. Rep. 79. Our statute provides that from the time a superior court judgment is docketed by the clerk "it becomes a lien upon all the real property of the judgment debtor not exempt from execution in the county, owned by him at the time, or which he may afterward acquire, until the lien ceases," and that such lien continues for five years, unless the enforcement of the judgment be stayed on appeal by the execution of a sufficient undertaking, in which case it ceases. Section 671, Code Civ. Proc. The lien may be created as to real property not exempt from execution situate in another county, by filing a transcript of said docket in such county, being limited therein, however, to two years from the filing. Section 674, Code Civ. Proc.

We will pass without discussion a question not suggested by the briefs, viz., whether, assuming that plaintiff had a judgment lien as to this property, such lien did not wholly cease at the expiration of five years from the date on which the judgment was docketed (November 1, 1904), notwithstanding the levy of execution on October 28, 1909 (see Bagley v. Ward, 37 Cal. 121, 99 Am. Dec. 256), thus leaving plaintiff's judgment a mere personal judgment, unsecured by any lien.

[2] It is to be borne in mind that sections 671 and 674, Code of Civil Procedure, make the judgment a lien only on "real property * * * not exempt from execution." Under our decisions, property covered by a valid declaration of homestead is, regardless of its value, not within this class of property, either in whole or in part. While the excess above the statutory homestead valuation may be reached by a judgment creditor by proceedings under section 1245 et seq., Civil Code, there is no judgment lien as to such excess, and the judgment creditor's right to subject such excess to the satisfaction of his judgment is initiated by and finds its sole basis in the levy of execution provided for by section 1245, Civil Code; it being held, in Lean v. Givens, 146 Cal. 739, 81 Pac. 128, 106 Am. St. Rep. 79, that such levy establishes the lien for the purpose of such proceedings. This rule is not in accord with that adopted in some other states, where it is held that the excess above the statutory exemption is subject to the lien of a judgment against the homestead debtor. In his note to Vanstorsy v. Thornton, 34 Am. St. Rep. 505, Mr. Freeman discusses this question, strongly upholding the latter view, but says at the end of his note: "In California, a rule exactly contrary to that maintained in a majority of the states is firmly established. This rule is stated in Sanders v. Russell, 86 Cal. 119 [24 Pac. 852] 21 Am. St. Rep. 26, that, though a homestead is in value largely in excess of the amount allowed by law, the docketing of a judgment against the homestead owner, and the levy of an execution under such judgment upon the homestead, does not create any lien. The operation of the levy of such execution simply serves as a foundation for statutory proceedings for the ascertainment of the value of the property covered by the declaration of homestead and the procurement of an order of court for the partition and sale thereof, and the application of the excess to the satisfaction of the judgment. The same doctrine is announced in Barrett v. Sims, 59 Cal. 615, 618, and in Lubbock v. McMann, 82 Cal. 226 [22 Pac. 1145] 16 Am. St. Rep. 108."

In Barrett v. Sims, 59 Cal. 615, the judgment creditor sought by action to enforce his judgment against homestead property, on the theory that he had a lien thereon for the excess over $5,000, by virtue of a transcript of the judgment filed in the county where the land was situated. This court said: "Until such ascertainment (the ascertainment of value had in the manner provided by section 1245 et seq., Civ. Code), the property covered by the declaration is exempt from execution or forced sale. There is no lien of the judgment until the levy of an execution; and that levy creates no lien, except for the purpose of, and as a foundation for, instituting and carrying on proceedings to have an appraisal and sale under the statute." In Lubbock v. McMann, 82 Cal. 226, 22 Pac. 1145, 16 Am. St. Rep. 108, this court said, as to property covered by a valid homestead declaration: "A judgment creates no lien upon property thus affected, and a levy gives no right, except to inaugurate the proceedings for the admeasurement of such excess"—citing Barrett v. Sims, 62 Cal. 440. In Sanders v. Russell, 86 Cal. 119, 24 Pac. 852, 21 Am. St. Rep. 20, among the questions involved, the question whether a docketed judgment constitutes a lien as to the excess over $5,000 was squarely presented, and this court said: "Property impressed with the character of homestead, no matter what its value, is exempt from seizure and forced sale. There was no lien of the judgment, and the levy created no lien, but simply created a foundation for proceedings under the statute (Civ. Code, § 1245 et seq.) for the ascertainment of the value of the property covered by the declaration of homestead, and the procurement of an order of court for the partition or sale thereof, and the application of the excess to the satisfaction of the judgment"—citing Barrett v. Sims, supra, and Lubbock v. McMann, supra. In Lean v. Givens, 146 Cal. 739, 81 Pac. 128, 106 Am. St. Rep. 79, it was expressly recognized that the effect of the prior decisions is that a judgment constitutes no lien in such a case.

[3] So that, whatever might be our views if the question were a new one in this court, it is clear that the rule above set forth is too firmly established to be departed from. The question is of such a nature that the rule of stare decisis must be held to apply. What is said in Schoonover v. Birnbaum, 148 Cal. 548, 83 Pac. 999, on this point is applicable here. It may properly be noted, however, that the Supreme Court of Montana has reached the same conclusion as this court, on similar statutes, as to the nonexistence of a judgment lien in such a case. Vincent v. Vineyard, 24 Mont. 207, 216, 61 Pac. 131, 81 Am. St. Rep. 423.

[4] It necessarily follows that at the date of the discharge in bankruptcy plaintiff's judgment did not constitute a lien on the property embraced in defendant's homestead declaration, but was merely a personal liability, which was released by the discharge. See Loveland, Bankruptcy, § 285. There is no force in the claim made by learned counsel for plaintiff that, by reason of the docketing of the judgment, plaintiff had a vested right to the remedy afforded by section 1245 et seq., Civil Code, which was not affected by the discharge in bankruptcy. No proceeding under those sections had been initiated at the time of the discharge in bankruptcy, and, until the initiation of such a proceeding, certainly plaintiff, in view of what we have said, had no existing claim of any kind against the homestead property. She was simply a judgment creditor, whose judgment was not a lien, and a taking by levy of execution for the purposes of the proceeding given by section 1245 et seq., Civil Code, was essential to the creation of any lien. See Lean v. Givens, supra. Until the initiation of such a proceeding, the judgment was in no way secured by any kind of lien, so far as the homestead property was concerned, amounting, as we have said, to merely a personal liability, and the effect of the discharge was necessarily to bar any proceeding to enforce it.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: SLOSS, J.; SHAW, J.

160 Cal. 331

GJURICH v. FIEG. (Sac. 1,903.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 1, 1911.
Rehearing Denied July 25, 1911.)

1. COURTS (§ 57*)—STENOGRAPHER'S FEES— PREPARING TRANSCRIPT.

Code Civ. Proc. § 953a, provides that a person desiring to appeal, may file with the clerk a notice of appeal, requesting that a transcript be made, and the court shall require the reporter to transcribe the report of the trial and file with the clerk within 20 days after notice, and on the same being filed the clerk shall notify the attorneys that within five days the same will be presented to the judge for his approval; the transcript when allowed to become a portion of the judgment roll, and may be considered in lieu of a bill of exceptions. Section 953b declares that when the notice provided for in the preceding section is filed with the clerk the appellant shall file an agreement to pay to the clerk the cost of preparing the transcript. Held that, where a transcript has been ordered under such section, the stenographer must file the same without concurrent payment of his fees, which do not become due until approval of the transcript by the trial judge.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Dec. Dig. § 57.*]

2. MANDAMUS (§ 57*)—APPEAL—FAILURE TO FILE TRANSCRIPT.

Where, after a transcript had been demanded and the proper bond filed, as required by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 953a, 953b, the stenographer improperly refused to file the transcript until his fees had been paid, it was the duty of the appellant to compel such filing by mandamus, within a reasonable time, to avoid the dismissal of the appeal for delay.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Cent. Dig. §§ 68, 114-120; Dec. Dig. § 57.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; W. B. Nutter, Judge.

Action by Emanuel Gjurich against Fanny Fieg. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. On motion to dismiss. Denied.

A. H. Carpenter, for appellant. Webster & Webster and Charles Light, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. [1] This is a motion to dismiss an appeal upon the ground that the transcript has not been filed within the time limited by law. The question involves a consideration of certain portions of sections 953a and 953b of the Code of Civil Procedure. The appeal was taken under the new alternative method. Appellant filed his notice, as required by section 953a, and gave the bond exacted by the clerk in the penal sum fixed by that officer as contemplated by section 953b. The stenographic reporter in due time prepared his transcript of the matters required and tendered the same to the clerk of the trial court with a demand for the payment of his fee. No moneys being in the hands of the clerk with which to pay this fee, the reporter refused to leave the transcript, did not in fact leave it, and the clerk never since has had possession of it. Upon this state of facts, respondent insists that the appeal should be dismissed, contending that the purpose of the undertaking contemplated by section 953b is to secure the clerk only until such time as the reporter has made the transcript, and the amount of the fee or charge therefor has become definitely known.

If such were the true construction, then the long delay which has resulted in this case, if unexplained, would afford ample ground for the dismissal sought. But we do not so construe the provisions of the law. It is made the duty of the stenographic reporter, not only to make his transcription, but to "file the same with the clerk of said court." It becomes the clerk's duty immediately upon such filing to give notice to the attorneys that the transcript has been filed, and that within the time limited by law he will cause it to be presented to the judge for approval. At the time so specified in this notice of the clerk to the attorneys, the clerk shall so present the transcript to the judge for his approval, and the judge is to review it and see that the same is full, true, and fair. When so satisfied, the judge certifies to the truth and correctness of the transcript, and when so certified it "becomes a portion of the judgment roll." Nothing in all of this contemplates that the stenographic reporter has the right to withhold delivery of the transcript until the payment of his charge. Everything in the section tends to a contrary construction. Thus it is made the duty of the stenographic reporter, not alone to make his transcription within 20 days after notice, but to file this transcript with the clerk of the court. This filing is as much a duty imposed upon him by law as is the making of the transcription, and he can no more refuse to do the one, without prepayment of his charge, than he can the other. Moreover, it is provided that the judge shall review the transcript and approve it only when to his satisfaction it is established that it is full, true, and correct. This may involve the striking out by the judge of superfluous matter ordered in appellant's notice (for the cost of the transcription of which, of course, appellant would be liable), but it may equally well involve the mistaken insertion by the stenographic reporter of matters not ordered by the appellant, and for the transcription and insertion of which, of course, appellant should not be compelled to pay. To say that the law contemplates the payment of the demand of the stenographic reporter at the time when the transcript is presented to the clerk for filing is to deprive the appellant of any right to object to the fees charged, or by objecting force the appeal to await the final determination of this controversy between the stenographic reporter and the appellant. The law desires and urges a speedy determination of appeals, and it is not to be supposed that it ever contemplated either such injustice to an appellant, or the delaying of an appeal to settle such a minor separate controversy. The true, and we think the obvious, construction of the statute is that the undertaking given to the clerk is security until such time as the exact amount due to the reporter can be known, and that this cannot be known until the final approval of the transcript by the judge. Thereupon and thereafter the appellant becomes liable for the just fees of the stenographic reporter so determined and upon his failure to pay them recourse may be had against him and the sureties on his undertaking filed with the clerk.

[2] In this view of the law, it was, of course, within the power of the appellant to have had mandate issued against the stenographic reporter to compel him to file his transcript with the clerk as the law contemplates, and in ordinary cases appellant's failure to do this within a reasonable time might be construed to be such lack of diligence as to justify the dismissal of an appeal. But the practice being new and this question being presented to the court for the first time, appellant should be allowed a reasonable time after this determination within which to proceed to perfect his appeal in the manner here intimated, or in such other manner as may be thought appropriate.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

The motion to dismiss is, therefore, denied.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.; MELVIN, J.; LORIGAN, J.

160 Cal. 209

BOBRICK CHEMICAL CO. v. PREST-O-LITE CO. (L. A. 2,692.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 19, 1911.
On Application for Rehearing, July 17, 1911.)

1. SALES (§ 273*)—CONTRACTS—WARRANTY.

Under Civ. Code, § 1770, providing that one manufacturing an article under an order for a particular purpose warrants by the sale that it is reasonably fit for that purpose, a seller contracting to manufacture and deliver an article invented by him, designed to accomplish a particular purpose, warrants that the article is reasonably fit for that purpose, the parties contracting on the theory that it would accomplish such purpose.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. § 773; Dec. Dig. § 273.*]

2. SALES (§ 126*)—RESCISSION—TIME FOR—REMEDY OF BUYER.

Where a buyer of a designated number of sets of an appliance to be manufactured by the seller, who is the inventor thereof, receives and pays for an installment and discovers that the appliance has not been sufficiently perfected to accomplish the purpose contemplated by both parties, he may at once rescind and refuse to go on with the contract, and he need not wait until the seller has manufactured and offered for delivery the balance of the sets.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 313-317; Dec. Dig. § 126.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Monroe, Judge.

Action by the Bobrick Chemical Company against the Prest-O-Lite Company. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

J. W. McKinley, for appellant. Woodruff & McClure, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This action was instituted by plaintiff corporation, which is the assignee of G. A. Bobrick of a contract for a term of three years under which Bobrick agreed to furnish defendant, an Indiana corporation, 11,000 sets of parts of tire-inflating apparatus (each set consisting of one valve, one coil and one bushing), for a specified price per set, the defendant agreeing to order and pay for 5,000 of said sets during the first year of the term, and 3,000 of said sets during each of the second and third years of the term. The contract was dated December 6, 1906. By a provision contained therein, defendant at once ordered 3,000 of said sets, at the scheduled price of $4.45 per set. On June 4, 1907, it notified both Bobrick and plaintiff that it canceled this agreement, and would not receive any more goods thereunder. It had then received 1,137 of the 3,000 sets ordered, which it retained and paid for. This action was brought to recover $8,290.35 for the remaining 1,863 sets of the 3,000 sets ordered, which defendant refused to receive or pay for and $23,600 loss of profits on the remaining 8,000 sets, caused by defendant's refusal to go on with the contract, making an aggregate of $31,890.35. Judgment went for defendant, and we have here an appeal by plaintiff from such judgment.

The appliances referred to in this agreement were the result of an invention of Mr. Bobrick, constituting, according to his claim, a great improvement in the appliances then in use for the inflation of tires, and one that could be manufactured and sold for considerably less than a device which defendant was then using, under a contract with the United States Liquid Air & Oxygen Company, a California corporation, which contract was dated February 21, 1906. The appliances were to be manufactured by him, or under his order, and delivered by him ready for use to defendant. The contract between the defendant and the United States Liquid Air & Oxygen Company was also for the term of three years. The last-named contract granted to defendant the exclusive right to sell the tire-inflating devices manufactured by the United States Liquid Air & Oxygen Company, which will hereafter be designated herein as the Air & Oxygen Company, in all of the states and territories of the United States except nine. Under paragraph 12 of its contract with the Air & Oxygen Company defendant was obligated to order and pay for each year at least 1,000 of the devices described therein, and, further, not to order such devices or any part thereof, from any other source than the Air & Oxygen Company.

There was evidence sufficient to sustain conclusions that the devices covered by Bobrick's later contract with defendant involved some features that were the product of an earlier invention by him which he had conveyed to the Air & Oxygen Company; that these features were contained in the devices covered by the contract of the Air & Oxygen Company with defendant; that this contract was defendant's sole authority for the sale of any device containing such features, and that it was therefore essential to defendant's being able to sell the device covered by the Bobrick contract, that the Air & Oxygen Company contract should remain in force. It was also important that said contract should remain in force to protect it from competition in the sale of such devices as were covered thereby. At the same time, it is clear that defendant considered it absolutely necessary that it should be relieved from the burden imposed by paragraph 12 of that contract, if it was to assume the burden proposed to be created by the Bobrick contract. Bobrick was, at the time of the negotiations preceding the execution of his contract and at the time of such execution, a director and vice president and mechanical engineer of the Air & Oxygen Company, and had been sent east from California by such company on its business, and, among other things, to confer with defendant company and endeavor to settle certain difficulties that had arisen in regard to the contract of February 21, 1906. Although there is some conflict on the point the evidence was certainly sufficient to support the conclusion that defendant insisted that the contract proposed by Bobrick could not be entered into by it unless the Air & Oxygen Company contract was modified by the elimination of paragraph 12 thereof, and, as so modified, continued in force, and would enter into the new contract only on such understanding. The evidence was also legally sufficient to support the finding of the trial court that Bobrick, for the purpose of inducing the execution of the contract, represented to defendant that he, as an officer and one of the principal owners of the stock of the Air & Oxygen Company, could and did, to a large extent, control said company, and as such officer, etc., orally promised and agreed with defendant that if defendant would enter into said agreement with him, for the purchase and sale of his device for inflating tires, he would cancel or cause to be canceled and eliminated from the Air & Oxygen Company contract paragraph 12, and that said agreement with the exception of paragraph 12 should remain and continue in full force, and that the elimination of paragraph 12 of said contract would be a part of the consideration for entering into the new agreement with him. The written agreement between Bobrick and defendant contained no reference to this matter.

The evidence was also ample to support the conclusion that defendant relied on such assurances, and would not have entered into the Bobrick agreement except therefor.

Bobrick endeavored to obtain this modification of the Air & Oxygen Company contract, but the directors of that company at first refused to grant the same, with the result that, defendant refusing to comply with the provision thereof requiring it to order and pay for at least 1,000 of the devices referred to therein, on April 24, 1907, a resolution was adopted by said directors annulling such contract and directing formal notice of such annulment to be sent to defendant. Such notice was given to defendant, whereupon defendant, on May 28, 1907, notified Bobrick thereof by telegram, further notifying him that unless the contract was at once renewed with paragraph 12 eliminated, it would cancel its contract with him, inasmuch as it was advised that it could not sell the Bobrick device without infringing the patents owned by the Air & Oxygen Company. On May 29, 1907, it again telegraphed him that not having received any answer, it canceled its contract with him, and again, on June 4, 1907, it gave notice to both him and plaintiff to the same effect. On June 12, 1907, the directors of the Air & Oxygen Company reconsidered the matter and unanimously voted to reinstate its contract with defendant, with paragraph 12 eliminated, and notified defendant thereof, and defendant at once notified the Air & Oxygen Company that it had already accepted such annulment as final and acted thereon, that it would adhere to such position and was now entirely out of the "tire tank business."

The trial court further found, in accord with allegations contained in defendant's pleadings, that the device to be furnished by Bobrick under his contract failed to do and perform the work it was sold to do and perform, that it was defective, and would not cause the liquid gas contained in the tanks to enter the tire in a gaseous condition, but the same would freeze up, so that said liquid contained in the tanks would not enter the tire in a gaseous condition, and that the valves in said device were also defective, and would leak after using the same a few times by the operator.

It appears to be conceded that it was necessary, in order to render the device reasonably fit for the particular purposes contemplated by all parties, that the liquid gas should be wholly changed into gas while passing through the appliance and should enter the tire to be inflated solely in the form of gas. While it is true that from the time of the very first delivery by Bobrick under his contract to the time of the attempted rescission there were many complaints by defendant in regard to the working of the appliances furnished, the evidence indicates that defendant did not know until after its cancellation of the contract how unsatisfactory they proved to be to those purchasing from it. It was in evidence on behalf of defendant that at the time of the trial it still had on hand, including those that had been returned as unsatisfactory, over 900 of the 1100 odd sets that had been delivered by Bobrick. We must accept the finding of the trial court as a conclusion by it that there was some defect in the device itself, as invented, perfected, and constructed by Bobrick up to that time, that prevented it being reasonably fit for the particular purpose intended, rather than a conclusion that the particular sets furnished were not constructed in accord with the device invented. While Mr. Bobrick earnestly insisted that there was no basis for any such claim, we are of the opinion that it must be held that the evidence on this point was of such a nature that we cannot say, as matter of law, that the finding of the trial court is without sufficient support.

Taking up the finding last discussed, we are of the opinion that it furnished sufficient basis for a judgment for defendant in this action to recover damages for refusal on its part to take any further sets under the contract of December 6, 1906. Aside from its claim that this finding is not sufficiently sustained by the evidence, a claim that we have concluded cannot be maintained, the only point made by plaintiff is that, if the sets offered were defective, the only remedy of defendant was to refuse to accept them and insist upon the delivery of sets complying in all respects with the contract, and that it could not, while accepting and paying for a portion of the goods, base a refusal to accept further goods upon defects in those already accepted. This contention is supported by the authorities in so far as a mere failure of the vendor to deliver articles of the quality and character stipulated for is concerned. See Guernsey v. West Coast Lumber Co., 87 Cal. 249, 25 Pac. 414; Valens v. Tillmann, 103 Cal. 191, 37 Pac. 213. In the first of the cases just cited, the contract was for the sale and purchase of lumber, and the complaint was that the lumber delivered was cut "too thin," and in the other case the claim was that cigars delivered under a contract for the sale and purchase of cigars, did not come up to the sample that had been furnished and constituted a part of the contract. But, as we have seen, the finding here implies a material defect in the device itself, as distinguished from a failure of the articles manufactured and furnished to accord with the device as invented and constructed by Mr. Bobrick. The sets furnished were manufactured in accord with the device and plan of Bobrick but although so manufactured were not reasonably fit for the particular purpose intended. The device itself had not been sufficiently perfected to accomplish the purposes intended and contemplated by both parties, and any set of appliances to be furnished in the future which was in accord with such device would not be reasonably fit for the purpose intended.

[1] We think that the facts of this case were such as to make section 1770, Civil Code, applicable. That section provides that "one who manufactures an article under an order for a particular purpose warrants by the sale that it is reasonably fit for that purpose." The articles to be manufactured in accord with his invention and delivered by Bobrick to defendant were designed to accomplish a particular purpose, and the parties contracted upon the theory that articles so constructed would be reasonably fit to accomplish that purpose.

[2] If it is made apparent that the articles to be furnished by the vendor cannot come up to this standard, by reason of some defect in the plan or device according to which they are to be made, which we must assume to be the case here in view of the finding referred to, no reason is apparent why the vendee may not refuse in advance to go on with the contract, instead of waiting until plaintiff has manufactured and offered for delivery the sets still to be furnished, and then refusing to accept the same. The latter course would hardly be consonant with fair dealing where it is apparent that goods to be manufactured by the vendor at great expense would be unsatisfactory to an extent warranting and in fact compelling their rejection when offered.

It follows that the conclusion of the trial court upon this question furnishes sufficient basis for the judgment in favor of defendant.

The finding in regard to the parol understanding as to the elimination of paragraph 12 of the Air & Oxygen Company contract, which is also sufficiently sustained by the evidence, presents a case in which it would appear exceedingly unfair to require defendant to proceed with the Bobrick contract unless the Air & Oxygen Company contract was modified in the respect stated, and as so modified continued in force. No such modification was made prior to defendant's cancellation of the contract. There is, however, some question whether such parol understanding could avail defendant in view of the fact that it was in no way a part of the written contract between Bobrick and defendant, and the doubt whether the statements of Bobrick found by the court to have been made constituted such false representations as may be the basis for a rescission. It is unnecessary to decide this question in view of our conclusion upon the effect of the finding already discussed, and it is likewise unnecessary to consider the question whether, in view of the finding as to the matter of the elimination of said paragraph 12, the Bobrick agreement was void as to defendant as against public policy because of the relationship of Bobrick to the Air & Oxygen Company.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.

On Application for Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. The decision in this case was placed by the opinion solely on the ground that the device to be furnished by Bobrick under his contract failed to do and perform the work it was sold to do and perform, etc. Upon this point, we see no reason for receding from the views set forth in the opinion. The opinion is erroneous in stating that there was evidence sufficient to sustain the conclusion that the devices covered by Bobrick's contract with defendant involved some features that were contained in the devices covered by the contract of the Air & Oxygen Company with defendant, and that the latter contract was defendant's sole authority for the sale of any device containing such features. In view of the sole ground upon which the decision is based this error is not material, and does not warrant a rehearing.

The petition for a rehearing is denied.

160 Cal. 288

WILCOX v. ENGBRETSEN et al.
(L. A. 2,656.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 28, 1911.)

1. TIME (§ 10*)—OBJECTIONS TO IMPROVEMENT—FILING.

Gen. Laws 1909, Act 3930, § 38, relating to street improvements, provides that if no objection to a change of grade is filed with the clerk of the council within 30 days from the first publication of the ordinance or resolution of intention, the council shall have power to declare the grades to be changed. Held that, where the first publication of the resolution of intention to change the grade of a street was made on January 24, 1908, and February 23d, the last of the 30 days, fell on Sunday, the time was extended to Monday by Pol. Code, § 13, Civ. Code, § 11, and Code Civ. Proc. § 13, so that objections filed on Monday were in time.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Time, Cent. Dig. §§ 34-52; Dec. Dig. § 10.*]

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 324*)—STREETS—CHANGE OF GRADE—PETITION—SUFFICIENCY—DETERMINATION.

Since, under Gen. Laws 1909, Act 3930, § 38, providing that no change of an established street grade shall be ordered by city council, except on petition of the owners of a majority of the property affected by the proposed change, a petition for such change, signed by the requisite number of competent property owners, is a condition precedent to the making of an order for a change, and the city council has no power to order a change until a sufficient petition is filed, and since such an improvement directly affects private property an order of the council directing the improvement was not a conclusive adjudication that a sufficient petition had been filed, there being nothing in the statute giving the order such effect, so that, if the petition was not sufficient to confer jurisdiction, it was subject to collateral attack in any action involving the validity of the proceedings.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 847-849; Dec. Dig. § 324.*]

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 278*)—STREETS—GRADE—ILLEGAL CHANGE.

Where a change of street grade was not legally established, a subsequent proceeding to grade the street to that grade would be unauthorized.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 738; Dec. Dig. § 278.*]

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 401*)—STREETS—GRADE—CHANGE—DAMAGES—ASSESSMENTS.

Gen. Laws 1909, Act 3930, §§ 39, 40, 44, 46, 48, 49, provide that within 30 days after the first publication of a resolution of intention to change a street grade an abutting property owner may claim damages by the proposed change, if completed, whereupon the commissioners must assess the benefits, damages, and costs, and report the assessment to the council. The council is then required to give notice that the report will come up for confirmation on a date named, at or before which time written objections to the confirmation may be filed, and on the hearing the assessment may be confirmed, corrected, modified, or rejected, and a new assessment ordered. When finally confirmed and delivered to the street superintendent, the assessment becomes a lien on the property assessed. Held that, where plaintiff objected to a change of street grade in front of his property and claimed damages, and after confirmation of the report of the commissioners that his property would be benefited by the change as much as it would be damaged, he refused to abide by the decision and gave notice that he claimed damages, notwithstanding the confirmation of the report, but no award was ever made to him or steps taken to assess his damages, the city had no power to proceed with the work on the theory that plaintiff was bound by the commissioners' report, and that no suit in condemnation or payment of damages was necessary.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 956-968; Dec. Dig. § 401.*]

5. JURY (§ 19*)—STREET GRADE—CHANGE—ABUTTING PROPERTY OWNERS—DAMAGES—RIGHT TO TRIAL BY JURY.

The right of an abutting property owner claiming damages by reason of a change of a street grade depends on Const. art. 1, § 14, providing that private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation having been first made to or paid into court for the owner, which compensation shall be assessed by a jury, unless a jury is waived, and not on Gen. Laws 1909, Act 3930, § 38, regulating the procedure for change of street grade, and therefore it is not material that the statute makes no provision for a condemnation suit, except where damages are awarded to the owner, and he is not willing to accept the amount allowed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Jury, Cent. Dig. § 115; Dec. Dig. § 19.*]

6. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 404*)—STREET GRADE—CHANGE—RIGHTS OF ABUTTING OWNERS—INJUNCTION.

Where an abutting owner claims damages in proceedings for change of the grade of a street, he is entitled to enjoin the prosecution of the work until his damages have been legally ascertained and paid in the manner prescribed by the Constitution.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 989-999; Dec. Dig. § 404.*]

7. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 404*)—STREETS—CHANGE OF GRADE—INJUNCTION—COMPLAINT.

Where a complaint for an injunction to restrain the alteration of a street grade until damage to plaintiff's abutting property was ascertained and paid alleged that the elevation of the street with respect to plaintiff's property would be seven feet lower at one end and five feet higher at the other if the contemplated change was carried out than it would be if the street conformed to the previously established grade, and that in consequence thereof plaintiff's ingress and egress to and from the lot would be impeded and interfered with, it sufficiently alleged that plaintiff would be substantially damaged by the work, though it did not allege the amount of damage in money that would be sustained.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 993; Dec. Dig. § 404.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; W. R. Guy, Judge.

Suit by H. W. Wilcox against John Engbretsen and others. Judgment for defendants and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Ward, Wells & Ward, for appellant. Haines & Haines and W. R. Andrews, City Atty., for respondents.

SIIAW, J. This is an action by an abutting property owner to enjoin the city council of San Diego and Engebretsen, as contractor under a street grading contract, from proceeding to reduce the street surface in front of the plaintiff's property to the established grade.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

It is alleged that if the level of said street is made to conform to the established grade, as proposed, the plaintiff's property, at the east end, will be 15 feet above the level of the street, and that at the west end the street will be 11 feet higher than the surface of his property, and that the consequence of the doing of the work will be to interfere with and impede plaintiff's ingress and egress from the property, and thereby cause great injury and damage thereto. The official grade to which the street is to be made to conform is not the grade originally established, but is a grade claimed to have been established by an ordinance of the council purporting to change the previously established grade. The effect of the change proposed is to reduce the official grade of the street level seven feet at the east end, and to raise it five feet at the west end. The allegation is to the effect that this proposed change of grade will cause the damage alleged. The suit for an injunction is based in part on the alleged invalidity of the ordinance making this proposed change of grade. Judgment was given in the court below for the defendants, after sustaining a general demurrer to the complaint. The plaintiff appeals.

The proceedings to change the grade appear to be invalid. The allegations of the complaint are admitted by the demurrer to be true. The proceedings were taken under the act of March 9, 1893 (Stats. 1893, p. 89; Deering's General Laws of 1909, p. 1307). Section 38 of this act provides that the city council shall have power to change or modify the grade of any public street, and that before ordering such change it shall pass an ordinance or resolution of intention to do so, and shall publish the same in a newspaper for ten days and post notices thereof for five days. It then proceeds as follows: "If no objection to the said proposed change * * * shall be filed with the clerk of the council within thirty days from the first publication of the ordinance or resolution of intention hereinbefore mentioned, the city council shall have power to declare such grades to be changed and established in conformity to said ordinance or resolution; provided, that no change of an established grade shall be ordered except on petition of the owners of a majority of the property affected by the proposed change of grade."

[1] The resolution of intention was passed on January 20, 1908, and the first publication thereof was on January 24, 1908. The 30 days allowed for filing objections would have expired on February 23, 1908, but for the fact that that day fell on a Sunday. The time was thereby extended to February 24th. Pol. Code, § 13; Civ. Code, § 11; Code Civ.

Proc. § 13. The decision in Derby v. Modesto, 104 Cal. 522, 38 Pac. 900, does not hold to the contrary. The plaintiff and others interested filed written objections to the change of grade on February 24, 1908. If the filing of objections were necessary to the point made in opposition to the resolution, these objections were filed within the time allowed by law for that purpose.

The objections stated were, first, that the public interest and convenience did not require the change, and, second, that the petition upon which the council acted in passing the resolution was not signed by owners of a majority of the property affected by the change of grade proposed in the resolution. The council did not fix any time for hearing said objections, nor give any notice of such hearing. No hearing or opportunity to be heard was given by the council to the plaintiff or to the persons signing the said objections, or any of them. The council took no action thereon, and failed and neglected to hear or pass upon the same. The complaint alleges that the owners of the majority of the property affected by said change of grade did not petition therefor.

The ordinance declaring the grades changed in conformity with the resolution of January 20th was passed on July 20, 1908, five months after the filing of the aforesaid objections. It is claimed by the defendants that the action of the council in declaring the grade changed was, in effect, an adjudication by it that the petition for such change was in fact signed by the necessary majority of the owners, and that such adjudication is conclusive. In support of this claim counsel cite Spaulding v. Homestead Ass'n, 87 Cal. 40, 24 Pac. 600, 25 Pac. 249; People v. Los Angeles, 133 Cal. 338, 65 Pac. 749; German, etc., Socy. v. Ramish, 138 Cal. 130, 69 Pac. 89, 70 Pac. 1067; and Chase v. Trout, 146 Cal. 370, 80 Pac. 81. In opposition to this claim plaintiff cites Mulligan v. Smith, 59 Cal. 206; Kahn v. Board, 79 Cal. 396, 21 Pac. 849; Zeigler v. Hopkins, 117 U. S. 683, 6 Sup. Ct. 919, 29 L. Ed. 1019; and Dyer v. Miller, 58 Cal. 585. These apparently conflicting decisions make it necessary to deal with the question at some length.

[2] It is necessary at the outset, to state some fundamental distinctions which have not always been noted, and which serve to explain some of the decisions. Where a statute requires such a petition to be filed as a condition precedent to the making of such order, the board or council has no power to make the order until a sufficient petition has been filed. This is settled by the cases of Turrill v. Grattan, 52 Cal. 97, Dyer v. Miller, supra, Mulligan v. Smith, supra, and Kahn v. Board, supra, and as to that point there is no dispute. But the necessity for such petition is the creature of the statute. It is not required by any constitutional guaranty. From this it follows that the statute may dispense with such requirement, or it may provide that the decision of the board or council as to its sufficiency, or any subsequent act depending upon it, such as the issuance of the bonds, shall be conclusive evidence of the fact that a sufficient petition has been filed. Such provisions will be upheld as valid. Chase v. Trout, supra, 146 Cal. 356, 80 Pac. 81. In the case just cited, and in German, etc., Socy. v. Ramish, supra, the conclusive evidence clause of the street improvement bond act of 1893 cured all such defects. Another distinction is to be made between the proceedings of a board or council acting in pursuance of some delegated legislative authority in creating or extending a political subdivision of the state, as a county or a city, a proceeding which does not directly affect private property, and proceedings to open, grade, regrade, or improve a street, which do directly change or affect private property. People v. Ontario, 148 Cal. 632, 634, 84 Pac. 205; People v. Loy-alton, 147 Cal. 779, 82 Pac. 620; Dean v. Davis, 51 Cal. 412; In re Madera Irr. Dist., 92 Cal. 323, 28 Pac. 272, 675, 14 L. R. A. 755, 27 Am. St. Rep. 106. The creation of a city and the annexation of territory thereto are matters delegated to the Legislature, acting by means of general laws, by which some board or council is invested with authority in that behalf. If the statute provides that such proceeding may be begun by the filing of a petition with the particular board or council having the authority, the fact that such body acts upon a petition which does not appear bad upon its face, and proceeds thereon according to law, is usually held to be conclusive of the sufficiency of the petition against any collateral attack. People v. Los Angeles, supra, was a case of this character. It was in quo warranto to test the validity of the annexation of territory to the city. It is obvious that everything there said concerning the conclusive effect of the ex parte action of the council would be entirely obiter, if attempted to be applied to proceedings against or directly affecting private property. It has been sometimes cited in cases of the latter class without noting the distinction. See German, etc., Socy. v. Ramish, supra, 130 Cal. 138, 69 Pac. 89, 70 Pac. 1067; Chase v. Trout, supra, 146 Cal. 369, 80 Pac. 81.

In German, etc., Socy. v. Ramish, the declaration that the making of the order changing the grade was conclusive evidence of the sufficiency of the petition is obiter dictum. The question presented was whether or not it was prima facie evidence and good, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary. In Chase v. Trout, the passage was quoted from German, etc., Socy. v. Ramish, to the effect that such order was conclusive evidence, but the passage was not expressly approved, and the opinion immediately proceeds to show that the point was not involved in the case. In both the cases, as above stated, the curative clause of the bond act operated to cure all such defects in previous proceedings. In Spaulding v. Homestead Ass'n, supra, the court was considering a statute which provided for a hearing upon the sufficiency of the petition in this respect, and declared that the decision upon such hearing should be final and conclusive. The decision was expressly put upon that ground, and it was thereby distinguished from Mulligan v. Smith and Kahn v. Board, supra, in which cases the statute did not provide for such hearing or decision. Inasmuch as the Legislature was not bound by any constitutional mandate to require the previous filing of such petition, it follows that its declaration that the subsequent decision of the board should foreclose further inquiry on the subject would be valid and controlling.

In this case, as we have seen, objections to the sufficiency of the petition in this respect were filed, but no hearing thereon was allowed. The part of the statute above quoted does not require or provide for such hearing. There is no provision declaring that any subsequent act, ordinance, or order shall be final or conclusive as to such objections. If the resolution of intention merely calls for the change of the official grade and does not declare an intention to do the work of grading the street to the proposed grade, and no claim for damage as provided in section 39 is filed, the simple making of the order, after the expiration of 30 days, terminates the proceeding and establishes the official grade. Section 39 provides for the filing of a petition, within the 30 days, by any property owner, claiming that his property will be damaged "by the proposed change if completed." Thereupon commissioners must assess the benefits, damages, and costs (section 40) and report the assessment to the council (section 44). The council must give notice that said report will come up for confirmation on a day named, at or before which time written objections to the confirmation thereof may be filed. Upon the hearing of such objections, the assessment may be confirmed, corrected, or modified, or rejected, and a new assessment ordered. Section 46. When finally confirmed by the council and delivered to the street superintendent, the assessment becomes due and constitutes a lien on the property assessed. Section 48. Such lien may be enforced by a sale of the lots in the same manner as in the case of delinquent tax sales. The street superintendent's deed is made prima facie evidence of the regularity of all proceedings. Section 49. This is the only provision in the act declaring any presumption of regularity. It does not make such deed conclusive, and, of course, the deed does not have any effect until it is executed. The act of 1893 is amendatory of the act of 1891 (Stats. 1891, p. 116), which was declared to be supplementary to the act of March 18, 1885 (the Vrooman act; St. 1885, p. 147). Section 52 of the amendatory act of 1893 declares that all other provisions contained in the Vrooman act shall apply to all the matters in the supplementary act, if not in conflict therewith. This, of course, does not include subjects covered by the supplementary act itself. The Vrooman act provides for work upon streets, and does not provide for the establishment of official grades, nor for the assessment and payment of damages caused thereby. We find nothing in that act that could be applied to a change of grade and which would operate to make the order changing such grades conclusive of the sufficiency of the petition therefor. We have, therefore, no legislative declaration that such order is, or shall upon any event become, conclusive.

In this state of the law, the authorities on the point in question are clear. The establishing of the official grade affects the property abutting thereon. Whatever conditions for the protection of the property owner are prescribed by the statute, as essential to the power of the local board to make the change, must be complied with, or the power will not exist. If no mode is provided for the ascertainment of the existence of such conditions precedent and for the adjudication thereof, the jurisdictional fact must remain open for inquiry whenever the validity of the order is lawfully called in question. In Mulligan v. Smith, supra, the act of 1872 (St. 1871-72, p. 911), for the opening of Montgomery avenue in San Francisco, was involved. That act authorizes the proceeding only upon the petition of the owners of the majority of the frontage of the property to be affected. It was held (page 230 of 59 Cal.) that such petition was jurisdictional; that neither the certificate of the mayor that it was sufficient, nor his action under it, nor that of the board of public works, nor the judgment of the county court in confirming the assessment subsequently made in the proceeding, were conclusive of the fact that the owners of the majority frontage had signed the petition, and that a property owner could show that it was not thus signed, in a suit against him in ejectment founded upon a deed made upon a sale under the assessment lien. In Kahn v. Board, supra, the same question was presented in an action by the holder of bonds issued in the proceeding; it being a suit in mandamus to compel the levy of a tax to pay said bonds. It was there held, following and approving Mulligan v. Smith, supra, that the board of supervisors in such suit could show that the original petition was not signed by the owners of a majority of the frontage, and that this fact thus shown rendered the proceedings invalid. In Zeigler v. Hopkins, supra, the question of the validity of the Montgomery avenue bonds came before the Supreme Court of the United States, and that court followed and approved Mulligan v. Smith and Kahn v. Board, supra, on that point.

Mr. Dillon states the rule as follows: "Where the power to pave or improve depends upon the consent or petition of a given number or proportion of the proprietors to be affected, this fact is jurisdictional, and the finding of the city authorities or council that the requisite number had consented or petitioned is not, in the absence of legislative provision to that effect, conclusive; the want of such assent makes the whole proceeding void, and the nonassent may be shown as a defense to an action to collect the assessment, or may, it has been held, be made the basis of a bill in equity to restrain a sale of the owner's property to pay it"—citing a large number of authorities.

The case of Miller v. Amsterdam, 149 N. Y. 288, 43 N. E. 632, is exactly in point. The suit was a collateral attack upon a proceeding under a statute substantially the same as that here involved. Referring to a similar petition by property owners, the court said: "There was no express authority (in the statute) to decide upon its sufficiency. While it was the duty of the council to consider it, there was no implied authority to base a judicial decision upon it. Implied authority that may deprive a man of his property is not favored by the law. There is nothing in the statute, which conferred all the powers possessed by the council, to suggest judicial action on the part of that body with reference to the subject." And, quoting from Sharpe v. Speir, 4 Hill (N. Y.) 88, in a similar case: "The defendant insists that the petition conferred jurisdiction on the trustees * * * provided they should judge that a majority of the persons intended to be benefited had signed; that by maintaining the petition and proceeding with the work the trustees adjudicated upon the question and determined that a majority had petitioned, and that this judgment of the trustees is conclusive upon all persons, so long as it remains unreversed. It is impossible to maintain that in this matter the trustees were sitting as a court of justice with power to conclude any one by their determination. True they were called upon to decide for themselves whether a case had arisen in which it was proper for them to act, but they acted at their peril. They could not make the occasion by resolving that it existed. They had power to proceed if the majority petitioned, but without such petition they had no authority whatever. They could not create the power by resolving that they had it." See, also, Graves v. Otis, 2 Hill (N. Y.) 466; Jex v. Mayor, 103 N. Y. 539, 9 N. E. 39; Corry v. Gaynor, 22 Ohio St. 593; Campbell v. Park, 32 Ohio St. 544; McVey v. Danville, 188 Ill. 428, 58 N. E. 955; State v. Mayor, 62 N. J. Law, 621, 43 Atl. 578.

[3] Upon these authorities and for these reasons we hold that, according to the allegations of the complaint, the change of grade was not legally established. Consequently a subsequent proceeding to grade the street to that grade would be unauthorized. As the defendant may, however, take issue on this allegation and plaintiff may not establish it on the trial, we think it necessary to consider a question arising upon the subsequent steps in the proceedings.

[4] The commissioners to whom was referred the plaintiff's claim for damages from the change of grade, reported that the change would cause no damage to plaintiff's property in excess of the benefits it would receive therefrom, and the report awarded him no damages. He objected to the report on this ground, but his objections were overruled and the report was confirmed by the council. Thereupon plaintiff informed the council that he refused to abide by the decision, and gave notice to the council and all the officers of the city that he claimed damages on account of the said change of grade, notwithstanding such confirmation.

The statute authorizes an assessment upon the property benefited to pay the damages awarded, and provides that when the money is collected thereon the owners to whom damage is allowed are to be notified that they will be paid accordingly, and that if any such owner refuse to accept the amount in satisfaction of his damages the city may have the damages assessed by regular proceedings in condemnation under the Code of Civil Procedure. No money was ever tendered to plaintiff in satisfaction of the damages, and no condemnation suit was begun against him. In March, 1909, the proceeding to do the work of reducing the street to the grade claimed to have been established by the aforesaid order changing the grade was begun, and under it the defendants now propose to do that work. The theory of the defendants is that plaintiff is bound by the report of the commissioners, as confirmed by the council after he was fully heard in regard to it, declaring that he was not damaged, and that when the report, as confirmed, is to the effect that no damage will be caused by the grade established, no suit in condemnation or payment of damages is necessary before doing the work which may cause such damage.

[5] This theory cannot be upheld. The statute is intended to provide a mode by which the damage to private property caused by the public improvement may be ascertained to the satisfaction of the owners and paid over to them, without the delays consequent upon a suit at law. If such mode succeeds and the owner accepts the amount awarded, that is an end to the matter. The Legislature, however, understood the force of the constitutional provision "that private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation having been first made to, or paid into court for, the owner, * * * which compensation shall be ascertained by a jury, unless a jury be waived, as in other civil cases in a court of record, as prescribed by law." Article 1, § 14. The statute recognizes the right of the abutting owner under this provision to refuse the award made by the council, and to insist upon submitting the question of his damage to a jury, and accordingly it expressly provided that he might do so. He cannot be deprived of this constitutional guaranty by the decision of a city council that he is not damaged. His right to a trial by jury does not depend upon the provisions of the statute, but upon the Constitution. The fact that the statute makes no provision for a condemnation suit, except where damages are awarded to the owner, and he is unwilling to accept the amount allowed, does not deprive him of the right to a jury trial in cases where no damages have been awarded him in the proceedings. Under the Constitution, the ascertainment and payment of such damages in the mode there prescribed is a condition precedent to the right of the city to do the public work which will cause the damage.

[6] It follows that the property owner has the right to enjoin such work until his damages have been lawfully ascertained and paid in the manner prescribed by the Constitution. Guerkink v. Petaluma, 112 Cal. 306, 44 Pac. 570; Bigelow v. Ballerino, 111 Cal. 559, 44 Pac. 307; Duncan v. Ramish, 142 Cal. 694, 76 Pac. 661; Eachus v. Los Angeles, 103 Cal. 620, 37 Pac. 750, 42 Am. St. Rep. 149; 2 Lewis on Eminent Domain, §§ 618, 634, 638. Consequently, if it should turn out that the change of grade was lawfully ordered, the plaintiff would still be entitled to enjoin the work until his damages, if any, in excess of benefits shall have been lawfully ascertained and paid.

[7] It is claimed that there is no sufficient allegation that the plaintiff's property would be damaged by the proposed work. The actual amount of damage in money is not stated, but it does appear from the facts stated that the elevation of the street with respect to plaintiff's property will be seven feet lower at one end and five feet higher at the other end than it would be if the street conformed to the previously established grade, and that in consequence thereof plaintiff's ingress and egress to and from the lot will be impeded and interfered with. This sufficiently shows that the plaintiff will be substantially damaged by the work complained of if it is allowed to proceed to completion.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SLOSS, J.

160 Cal. 300

Ex parte BURKE. (Cr. 1,609.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 28, 1911.)

1. STATUTES (§ 77*)—SPECIAL LEGISLATION—CLASSIFICATION.

A statute regulating the sale of intoxicating liquors is not to be condemned as special legislation, merely because the class to which it applies consists of one unit, individual, or entity; the Legislature, in the exercise of its vested right to classify, being entitled to a wide discretion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. §§ 79–82; Dec. Dig. § 77.*]

